PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Richard G. RISER, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5896.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
Dec. 31, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 30, 1957.

Defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree. The Superior Court of Stanislaus County, Frank C. Damrell, J., entered judgment and order adverse to the defendant, and the defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that where it was not reasonably probable that jury, if faced with excluded statements showing that certain eyewitnesses for the prosecution had allegedly made inconsistent statements to the police, would have chosen to believe unsupported testimony of defendant that he had not been at the scene of the homicides, error of Superior Court in vacating subpoena duces tecum to compel production of such statements by prosecution was not a miscarriage of justice and did not require reversal.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Carter, J., dissented.

See also Cal., 305 P.2d 18.

1. Jury ⇐108

Where prospective juror stated in voir dire examination in murder prosecution that he did not believe in capital punishment, Superior Court properly sustained the State's challenge to the prospective juror for implied bias under the Penal Code, though prospective juror stated that nothing would prevent his finding defendant guilty if the evidence warranted a finding of guilt. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 190, 1074, subd. 8.

2. Criminal Law ⇐404(4)

In prosecution for murders committed with a .38 caliber revolver, court properly admitted in evidence special .38 caliber shells, which contained bullets that were coppercoated factory loads, and which were found in the automobile of one of the defendants, where there was expert testimony that the loads resembled in weight and shape a factory-load bullet found at the scene of the crime and were of the same type and from the same manufacturer, though he could not say that they came from the same box as the special shells in question.

3. Criminal Law ⇐404(4)

In prosecution for murders committed with a .38 caliber revolver, special .38 caliber shells, which contained hand-cast lead bullets, and which were found in automobile of one of the defendants, were properly admitted, where there was expert testimony, based on spectroscopic analysis of metal in bullets, that those introduced in evidence were probably poured from the same batch of lead as hand-cast bullets found at scene of crime.

4. Criminal Law ⇐404(4)

In murder prosecution, wherein expert evidence established that murders were committed with a Smith and Wesson .38 Special revolver, court properly admitted in evidence a holster, which was found in the automobile of one of the defendants, and which, according to experts, once carried a Smith and Wesson .38 Special revolver.

5. Criminal Law ⇐404(4)

When specific type of weapon used to commit a homicide is not known, it may be permissible to admit into evidence weapons found in defendant's possession some time after the crime if they could have been the weapons employed, and there need be no conclusive demonstration that the weapons were the murder weapons.

6. Criminal Law ⇐349

When the prosecution relies on a specific type of weapon as murder weapon, it is error to admit evidence that other weapons were found in possession of defendant, since such evidence tends to show, not that defendant committed the murder, but only that he is the sort of person who carries deadly weapons.

7. Criminal Law ⇐404(4)

In prosecution for murders committed with a Smith and Wesson .38 Special revolver, it was error to admit in evidence a Colt .38 caliber revolver found in possession of one of the defendants, and holsters, belts, and .22 caliber shells found in the automobile of one of the defendants.

8. Criminal Law ⇐1169(1)

Where .38 caliber shells and holster, which had been used for a Smith and Wesson .38 Special revolver were properly admitted in prosecution for murders committed with a Smith and Wesson .38 Special revolver, defendants were not prejudiced by the erroneous admission in evidence of a Colt revolver, two other holsters, belts, and box of .22 caliber shells.

9. Criminal Law ⇐369(2), 372(1)

Evidence of other crimes is not admissible when its sole effect is to show a criminal disposition, but if it tends logically and by reasonable inference to establish any fact material for the prosecution, or overcome any material fact sought to be proved by the defense, it is admissible, though it may connect the accused with an offense not included in the charge.

10. Criminal Law ⇐369(2)

In prosecution for murders committed with a Smith and Wesson .38 Special revolver, evidence that defendants prior to the murders had a revolver of unknown make was admissible to show that defendants had the means to commit the murders, though such evidence also showed the commission of another crime by defendants.

11. Criminal Law ⇐824(5)

Where trial court, throughout trial of murder prosecution, whenever requested to do so, instructed clearly at length that statements made by one defendant were not evidence against another defendant who was not present, and trial court repeated such warning in general instructions at close of trial, failure of trial court without a request to give such an instruction immediately when evidence was introduced concerning a statement of one of the defendants, outside of the presence of the other defendant, concerning other crimes allegedly committed by the defendants, was not error.

12. Criminal Law ⇐486

Party relying on expert analysis of demonstrative evidence must show that it is in fact the evidence found at the scene of the crime, and that between time of receipt and analysis there has been no substitution or tampering, but it is not necessary to negative all possibility of tampering.

13. Criminal Law ⇐486

Burden on party offering evidence concerning expert analysis of demonstrative evidence is to show to satisfaction of trial court in criminal prosecution that, taking all circumstances into account, including ease or difficulty with which particular evidence could have been altered, that it is reasonably certain that there was no alteration, and requirement of reasonable certainty is not met when some vital link in chain of possession is not accounted for, but when there is the barest speculation that there was tampering, it is proper to admit the evidence and let what doubt remains go to its weight.

14. Criminal Law ⇐404(4)

Where deputy sheriff took articles, on which there were fingerprints, from scene of the crime and locked them in sheriff's identification truck, and about 4:00 a. m. or 5:00 a. m. he placed the articles in unlocked office that he shared with another police officer, and the articles remained there until about 8:30 a. m. when they were removed and kept under lock and key or in custody of specific persons, it was not error to admit articles in evidence in murder prosecution, in absence of any showing by defendant how his fingerprints could have been forged or that any one had tampered with the articles while they were in the unlocked office.

15. Homicide ⇐289

Where overwhelming evidence in murder prosecution was that homicides had been committed in the perpetration of a robbery, trial court properly instructed that, though there are two degrees of murder, defendants were either guilty of murder in the first degree or were innocent, and that murder, which is committed in perpetration or attempt to perpetrate robbery, is murder of the first degree, whether the killing was intentional, unintentional, or accidental. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 189.

16. Criminal Law ⇐857(1)

Though jury may not weigh the possibility of pardon or parole in determining guilt of an accused, it may consider such consequences in exercising its discretion to choose between different punishments.

17. Criminal Law ⇐863(2)

Where jury during deliberations in murder prosecution returned to court room and inquired if defendants would be eligible for parole if jury recommended life imprisonment, it was not error for trial court to inform jury that a person convicted of first degree murder and sentenced to life imprisonment may be eligible for parole after he has served seven calendar years. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 3040–3065, 3048.

18. Criminal Law ⇐1211

Provision of the Penal Code that minimum terms of sentence and imprisonment for a person previously convicted of a felony, either in California or elsewhere, and armed with a deadly weapon, is 10 years, is concerned with the length of sentences and the fixing thereof, and not with how much of a sentence must be served before a prisoner is eligible for parole. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 3024(b), 3040–3065, 3048.

19. Pardon ⇐3

An adjudication cannot be made under section of the Penal Code limiting eligibility for parole when a defendant has been adjudicated an habitual criminal, unless the prior convictions, on which it is to be based, have been charged in the indictment. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 3048.

20. Criminal Law ⇐700

In murder prosecution, evidence was insufficient to justify conclusion that identification of defendant by eyewitness was the result of an idea planted in the mind of the eyewitness by the prosecution.

21. Criminal Law ⇐627½

On a proper showing, defendant in a criminal case can compel production of evidence in possession of the prosecution, when it becomes clear during the course of the trial that the prosecution has in its possession relevant and material evidence.

22. Criminal Law ⇐627½

In absence of some governmental requirement that information be kept confidential for purposes of effective law enforcement, State has no interest in denying accused access to all evidence that can throw light on issues in the case, and it has no interest in convicting on testimony of witnesses, who have not been rigorously cross-examined and as thoroughly impeached as evidence permits, and to deny flatly to accused any right of production of evidence in possession of prosecution, on ground that an imbalance will be created between advantages of prosecution and defense loses sight of true purpose of criminal trial, which is the ascertainment of facts.

23. Criminal Law ⇐627½

Impeachment of prosecution's witness, which will justify production of evidence in possession of the prosecution, is not necessarily restricted to impeachment by prior inconsistent statements to the exclusion, for example, of impeachment for bias.

24. Criminal Law ⇐627½

The proper test for determining whether motion by defendant for the production of evidence in possession of the prosecution must be granted is not whether the evidence has been conclusively proved admissible but whether there is good reason to believe that evidence, when produced, will be admissible in evidence for some purpose in the case.

25. Criminal Law ⇐627½

In order to justify granting of motion of defendant for the production of evidence in the possession of the prosecution, there must be more than a mere possibility that the evidence, when produced, will contain contradictory matter and be in such a form that evidence can be used to impeach witness for the prosecution, but the chance that it may turn out eventually that evidence cannot be used for impeachment, should not block production at the threshold.

26. Criminal Law ⇐627½

Where prosecution, in murder prosecution, never denied that statements by witnesses for the prosecution to the police existed and were in possession of the prosecution or the police, and it was probable that such statements were inconsistent with testimony of witnesses at trial, and defendant was unable to prove conclusively that statements were in a form warranting their use for impeachment only because prosecution kept statements in its exclusive control, and prosecution could not claim that necessities of law enforcement required that statements be kept confidential, trial court erred in vacating subpoena duces tecum commanding production of statements.

27. Criminal Law ⇐1166½(1)

The Supreme Court, in determining whether error of trial court in vacating subpoena duces tecum seeking to require the production of statements made to the police by witnesses for the prosecution, was prejudicial, was required to determine whether there was a reasonable certainty that jury would have reached a different verdict had defendant been allowed to obtain and introduce in evidence prior inconsistent statements of the witnesses for the prosecution.

28. Criminal Law ⇐566

Fingerprint evidence is the strongest evidence of identity, and is ordinarily sufficient alone to identify defendant.

29. Criminal Law ⇐1186(4)

Where it was not reasonably probable in murder prosecution that jury, faced with excluded statements showing that certain eyewitnesses for the prosecution had allegedly made inconsistent statements to the police, would have chosen to believe unsupported testimony of defendant that he had not been at the scene of the homicides, error of Superior Court in vacating subpoena duces tecum to compel production of such statements by prosecution was not a miscarriage of justice and did not require reversal. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

William H. Coburn, Jr., Albany, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Doris H. Maier, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Richard G. Riser and his brother Roscoe R. Riser were charged by indictment with the murder of Earl and Pauline Hastings. The jury returned verdicts of guilty of murder in the first degree, without fixing the punishment at life imprisonment in the case of Richard G. Riser. The court denied his motion for a new trial and sentenced him to death. His appeal to this court is automatic under section 1239(b) of the Penal Code.

Just before midnight on July 11, 1955, Earl and Pauline Hastings, proprietors of the Hilltop Cafe near Oakdale in Stanislaus County, were shot and killed during the course of a robbery of their cafe. Mr. Basford, a customer, left the cafe about 11:30 p. m. On his way out he passed two men who remarked that they were going in to have a beer. He was unable to identify either of the men, but thought that they had driven up to the Hilltop in a two-tone Chrysler, Buick, or Pontiac.

When these men entered the cafe, the only persons present were two customers, Mrs. Burgess and Mr. Pantel, both seated at the bar, and the Hastings. The men sat on stools at the end of the bar away from the other customers and ordered beers. After they had ordered a second round of beers, the shorter of the two rose from his stool, drew a gun, and announced, "This is a stick-up." The other man, who was also armed, silently took a position by the front door, while his companion went behind the bar where the Hastings were. In an attempt to prevent the robbery, Mr. Hastings seized a bottle and attacked the gunman. In the ensuing struggle Hastings was struck several times on the forehead and shot. The same gunman then shot and killed Mrs. Hastings, apparently as she was trying to reach a gun. Then he stepped over Mr. Hastings' body, rifled the cash register, and departed with the gunman at the door.

The police arrived shortly after midnight, removed the bodies, and searched and photographed the premises. They recovered several bullets fired by the gunman, and dusted for fingerprints bottles and glasses found on the bar in front of the stools used by the two men.

Mrs. Burgess identified Richard and Roscoe Riser as the two gunmen and testified that Richard had done the shooting. She admitted that she had been in the bar since 7:30 p. m. and had had five beers, that the bar was quite dark, and that she could not see one of the men too well. Mr. Pantel testified that he thought Richard was the man who did the shooting, but was not positive; that he had not seen Roscoe before the police lineup at Stockton, and that the man at the door appeared to be of Filipino or Mexican extraction. Expert witnesses testified that fingerprints found on a bottle and a glass removed from the bar were the fingerprints of Richard Riser, and that bullets found in a brief case in Roscoe's Chrysler were similar in composition to bullets found at the scene of the crime. The killing had been done with a Smith and Wesson .38 Special revolver. This gun was never recovered, but according to expert testimony a holster found in Roscoe's car had once carried a Smith and Wesson .38 Special revolver. The brothers' defense was an alibi: that they had been in Stockton on the night of July 11th.

During the voir dire examination of jurors, Hardy M. Dunavin stated that he did not believe in capital punishment, that nothing would prevent his finding defendant guilty if the evidence warranted it, but that in no event would he vote for the death penalty. In response to the court's question whether he entertained conscientious scruples that would prevent his finding defendant guilty if the offense charged could be punishable with death, he replied, "No." On the basis of these answers, and over defendant's objection, the court sustained a challenge by the prosecution under section 1074(8) of the Penal Code.

Section 1074(8) provides that: "A challenge for implied bias may be taken for all or any of the following causes, and for no other * * * 8. If the offense charged be punishable with death, the entertaining of such conscientious opinions as would preclude his finding the defendant guilty; in which case he must neither be permitted nor compelled to serve as a juror." Defendant contends that, although this provision requires the exclusion of jurors whose determination of guilt would be affected by their views of capital punishment, neither its language nor its policy require the exclusion of those whose assessment of punishment alone would be influenced, and that section 190 in providing that a person found guilty of murder in the first degree "shall suffer death, or confinement in the state prison for life, at the discretion of the jury * * *" has made the determination of guilt and the assessment of punishment separate questions. The prosecution contends that the statute and decisions of this court require exclusion even when scruples go only to the assessment of punishment.

In support of its position the prosecution cites People v. Ah Chung, 54 Cal. 398, 402, and People v. Amaya, 134 Cal. 531, 535, 66 P. 794 where this court upheld challenges under section 1074(8). In neither of those cases, however, would the effect of the juror's opinion have been confined to the assessment of punishment. Because the jurors stated that they would not find the defendants guilty on the basis of circumstantial evidence alone when the penalty might be death, it was clear that although they were not unqualifiedly opposed to capital punishment, their views of its seriousness would affect their weighing the evidence in the determination of guilt. See also People v. Warner, 147 Cal. 546, 550, 82 P. 196.

Likewise distinguishable is People v. Cebulla, 137 Cal. 314, 317, 70 P. 181, because the juror there stated that his conscience would not permit him to bring in a verdict of guilty. Since the practical effect of permitting such a juror to serve would be to assure acquittal, the distinction between his state of mind and that of juror Dunavin in the present case is not merely verbal. For the same reason People v. Sanchez, 24 Cal. 17, 22, People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 346, 19 P. 161, and People v. Miller, 177 Cal. 404, 407, 170 P. 817, are not direct authority in the present situation. In each of these cases the juror stated that his conscientious opinion would affect his determination of guilt. The Sanchez case came at a time when the jury had no discretion to fix the punishment, so that the only way a juror could effectively express his opposition to capital punishment was by finding the defendant not guilty. Similarly in the Goldenson and Miller cases, although the jury had by then been given discretion to choose between death and life imprisonment, it was not yet clear that one juror acting alone could prevent imposition of the extreme penalty. Before People v. Hall, 199 Cal. 451, 453–458, 249 P. 859, it was widely thought that the death penalty remained the norm, and that a unanimous jury was needed to reduce the penalty to life imprisonment, so that the juror's only course was to find the defendant not guilty.

People v. Rollins, 179 Cal. 793, 795–796, 179 P. 209, also came before People v. Hall, and may be distinguished on the same ground as these other cases. But the court articulated a broad reason for excluding from the jury those who are opposed to the death penalty, even though their scruples would not prevent their finding the defendant guilty: "[T]he discretion given to the jury [by section 190] to provide for life imprisonment in such a case is not an arbitrary discretion to be exercised without regard to the circumstances of the particular case, but only where it appears to the jury that there is some circumstance that warrants or justifies the imposition of the lesser punishment." 179 Cal. at page 796, 179 P. at page 210. General views of the social desirability or moral permissibility of capital punishment could logically have no place among the factors influencing the exercise of a discretion so conceived. See also People v. Collins, 105 Cal. 504, 512, 39 P. 16; People v. Majors, 65 Cal. 138, 148, 3 P. 597; cf. People v. Tanner, 2 Cal. 257, 258–260. Our decisions since the Rollins case have without discussion systematically excluded jurors opposed to the death penalty, apparently accepting the reasoning of the Rollins case in regard to the relation between sections 190 and 1074(8). People v. Riley, 35 Cal.2d 279, 284, 217 P.2d 625; People v. Hoyt, 20 Cal.2d 306, 318, 125 P.2d 29; People v. Kynette, 15 Cal.2d 731, 744–745, 104 P.2d 794, certiorari denied 312 U.S. 703, 61 S.Ct. 806, 85 L. Ed. 1136.

We have recently criticized this interpretation of section 190 in People v. Green, 47 Cal.2d 209, 302 P.2d 307, holding it error to instruct a jury that it must find mitigating circumstances in a case to justify fixing the punishment at life imprisonment. Section 190 does not impose the death penalty, leaving discretion with the jury to substitute a lesser penalty; it imposes neither death nor life imprisonment, but with a perfectly even hand presents the two alternatives to the jury. The Legislature, perhaps because of the very gravity of the choice, has formulated no rules to control the exercise of the jury's discretion.

We did not suggest in the Green case, however, that section 190 did not require of the jurors a meaningful choice between these alternatives, a choice fundamentally based on the evidence and made during and not before deliberation on the verdict. The statute calls for the exercise of a legal discretion, not for the unswerving application of views formulated before trial that will compel a certain result no matter what the trial may reveal.

[1] Admittedly, a literal reading of section 1074(8) does not compel the exclusion of jurors incapable of exercising the discretion contemplated by section 190.[1] It would be doing violence to the purpose of these sections of the Penal Code, however, to construe section 1074(8) to permit these jurors to serve. It would in all probability work a de facto abolition of capital punishment, a result which, whether or not desirable of itself, it is hardly appropriate for this court to achieve by construction of an ambiguous statute.

Defendant contends that the admission in evidence of certain guns, holsters, belts, and shells was erroneous on the ground that they were not relevant to any issue in the case. On the morning of July 23rd, almost two weeks after the homicides, police found in Roscoe's Chrysler a brief case containing three holsters, two leather belts, each with twelve rounds of .38 special shells, a box of .22 shells, and fifty-nine .38 special shells. Two more .38 shells were found in the seat of the automobile. On the same day police arrested Richard and seized a loaded Colt .38 revolver in his possession. Later, following directions given them by Roscoe, they discovered a P38 automatic with a clip of shells in a cesspool. The court overruled objections to testimony describing the finding of these objects and also admitted them into evidence.

[2, 3] Some of the .38 special shells contained bullets that were copper-coated factory loads, and others contained hand-cast lead bullets. There was expert testimony that the factory loads resembled in weight and shape a factory-load bullet found at the scene of the crime, and although the expert could not say that they came from the same box as that bullet, he did maintain that they were of the same type and from the same manufacturer. Defendant brought out that this type of bullet is in common use throughout the country; nevertheless, the similarity testified to by the expert, together with the prosecution's showing that the .38 shells found in the brief case would fit the type of revolver known to have been used in the killings, justified the trial court's admitting the factory loads. The relevancy of the hand-cast bullets was even clearer. There was expert testimony, based on spectroscopic analysis of the metal in the bullets,

1. The awkwardness of testing the juror by use of the exact language of section 1074(8) was made abundantly clear in the present case. Time and again the court questioned the juror in the statutory language, and time and again the juror replied that he did not entertain such an opinion "as would prevent him finding the defendant guilty." Finally, in order to make it clear to the juror that he was being asked if he opposed the death penalty, the court was compelled to abandon the statutory language.

that those found in the brief case were probably poured from the same batch of lead as the hand-cast bullets found at the scene of the crime. The expert found "a remarkable resemblance."

[4] As to the holsters, experts testified that markings in People's Exhibit No. 26 indicated that it had once carried a Smith and Wesson .38 Special revolver. Even if this is a popular gun, we cannot say that possession of the holster was not relevant to the issue of the Risers' possession of the murder weapon.

[5–7] The prosecution's own witness established that the bullets found at the scene of the crime had been fired from a Smith and Wesson .38 Special revolver, not from either the Colt .38 or the P38 that the court admitted into evidence. When the specific type of weapon used to commit a homicide is not known, it may be permissible to admit into evidence weapons found in the defendant's possession some time after the crime that could have been the weapons employed. There need be no conclusive demonstration that the weapon in defendant's possession was the murder weapon. People v. Ferdinand, 194 Cal. 555, 563, 229 P. 341; People v. Nakis, 184 Cal. 105, 113–114, 193 P. 92. When the prosecution relies, however, on a specific type of weapon, it is error to admit evidence that other weapons were found in his possession, for such evidence tends to show, not that he committed the crime, but only that he is the sort of person who carries deadly weapons. People v. Riggins, 159 Cal. 113, 121, 112 P. 862; People v. O'Brien, 130 Cal. 1, 5, 62 P. 297; People v. Yee Fook Din, 106 Cal. 163, 165–167, 39 P. 530; People v. Wong Ah Leong, 99 Cal. 440, 34 P. 105. People v. Beltowski, 71 Cal.App.2d 18, 23, 162 P.2d 59, cited by the prosecution as contrary to this proposition, is adequately distinguished in People v. Richardson, 74 Cal.App.2d. 528, 541–542, 169 P.2d 44, on the ground that no specific weapon was relied on in the Beltowski case. It was error therefore to to admit the Colt, two of the holsters, the belts, and the box of .22 shells. The P38 was admissible on other grounds that appear below.

[8] Defendant, however, was not prejudiced by these errors. The shells and one holster were clearly admissible, and from these the jury would have concluded that defendant possessed firearms. The admission of the Colt, more holsters, belts, and shells added little to the jury's knowledge gained from evidence correctly admitted. The introduction of the Colt may have actually benefited defendant, for it provided an explanation for his possession of the .38 shells. An expert testified that these shells would fit either a Colt or a Smith and Wesson .38 Special, and without the Colt in evidence the jury might more easily have concluded that the ammunition was kept for a Smith and Wesson.

Defendant next cites as prejudicial error the introduction of evidence of other crimes. On the stand defendant maintained that the only pistols he had ever owned were the Colt, the P38, and a toy cap pistol, and he denied having a Smith and Wesson .38 Special. He stated that he had obtained the P38 from a sailor in the New Viking Bar, and denied having told a police officer that he had taken it from Doc's Village, a different bar. Officer Dutil then testified that defendant had told him that he had taken the P38 from Doc's Village on June 29, 1955. The prosecution followed this with testimony by the bartender at Doc's Village that the two brothers had robbed Doc's Village on June 29th, that each had been armed with a blue steel gun, and that they had taken away with them a P38 kept behind the bar. Finally, the owner of Doc's Village identified the P38 found in the cesspool as the one that had been kept behind the bar.

[9] Evidence of other crimes is not admissible when its sole effect is to show a criminal disposition, but if it "tends logically and by reasonable inference to establish any fact material for the prosecution, or overcome any material fact sought to be proved by the defense, [it] is admis-

sible although it may connect the accused with an offense not included in the charge." People v. Woods, 35 Cal.2d 504, 509, 218 P.2d 981, 984; see People v. Citrino, 46 Cal.2d 284, 288, 294 P.2d 32.

[10] The cross-examination of defendant to discover whether he had ever owned a Smith and Wesson .38 Special and when he had acquired the P38, and the testimony of the witnesses from Doc's Village, tended to establish that the Risers entered Doc's Village on June 29th armed with two blue steel guns; that they there acquired the P38; that therefore they had at one time been in possession of three guns, and that only two of these were known not to have been Smith and Wesson .38 Specials. The P38 was admissible to corroborate the bartender's testimony that the Risers acquired the P38 at a time when they already had two guns. This evidence that the Risers had a third gun of unknown make was relevant to show that they had the means to commit the crime. See People v. Simeone, 26 Cal.2d 795, 804–805, 161 P.2d 369.

The trial court closely limited the effect of the testimony on the Doc's Village incident to showing how the Risers were armed and when they obtained the P38, and specifically instructed the jury against drawing broad inferences of criminal tendencies. The court's further limitation of the testimony to purposes of impeachment was, if anything, unduly favorable to defendant.

Roscoe Riser also took the stand. On direct examination he stated that he had never been involved in a robbery; on cross-examination the district attorney gave detailed descriptions of numerous robberies committed in San Francisco by Roscoe and Richard, intermittently asking Roscoe if he had not furnished these descriptions in admitting the robberies to the police. Roscoe denied the prior inconsistent statements.

[11] Defendant complains that the court should have immediately instructed the jury that these references to his participation in robberies could in no way be used against him, since the prosecution did not show that he had been present when Roscoe was interrogated. Throughout the trial the court, whenever requested to do so, instructed clearly and at length that statements made by one defendant were not evidence against another defendant who had not been present, and it repeated this warning in its general instructions at the close of the trial. There is no reason to suppose that the jury, even though not reinstructed at this particular juncture, did not understand and apply the general principle the court had laid down. Furthermore, since defendant did not request the court to repeat its warning at this time, he cannot now complain.

Defendant says that it was misconduct for the prosecutor to fail to produce witnesses that Roscoe had in fact made the statements attributed to him; that since the prosecutor apparently had neither the intention nor the means of establishing the truth of his allegations, he must have made them solely to inflame the jury against the brothers. Cf. People v. Evans, 39 Cal.2d 242, 248–249, 246 P.2d 636. We must assume, however, that in view of the court's instructions the jury did not consider defendant's alleged participation in the robberies. The injury if any was to Roscoe, and his appeal is not now before us.

As a further error, defendant complains of the admission in evidence of a bottle and a glass bearing fingerprints testified to be the fingerprints of Richard Riser. Deputy Sheriff Lochry identified the bottle and glass as articles that he had taken from the Hilltop Cafe. When he arrived at the Cafe, early in the morning of July 12th, he found several bottles, glasses, and salt cellars on the bar. He dusted them for fingerprints, put them in a box, and locked the box in the sheriff's identification truck. About 4 or 5 a. m. he returned to the sheriff's office and put the articles in an open book case in an office that he shared with another police officer. This office was unlocked; it was flanked on one side by an office shared by two or three persons, and on the other side by a hall leading to a general office. According to Lochry, the evidence remained in the book case approximately four hours, until about 8:30 a. m., when it was removed and thereafter kept under lock and key or in the custody of specific persons.

Defendant contends that in view of these facts the prosecution failed to establish continuous possession, which is a necessary foundation for the admission of demonstrative evidence; that since someone could have altered the prints or imposed wholly new ones during the four hours the glass and bottle were left unguarded in the book case, the prosecution has not sufficiently identified the prints as those that existed when the articles were removed from the bar. Defendant would require the prosecution to negative all possibility of tampering.

[13, 14] The burden on the party offering the evidence is to show to the satisfaction of the trial court that, taking all the circumstances into account including the ease or difficulty with which the particular evidence could have been altered, it is reasonably certain that there was no alteration. The requirement of reasonable certainty is not met when some vital link in the chain of possession is not accounted for, because then it is as likely as not that the evidence analyzed was not the evidence originally received. Left to such speculation the court must exclude the evidence. See Dobson v. Industrial Accident Comm'n, 114 Cal.App.2d 782, 785, 251 P.2d 349; McGowan v. City of Los Angeles, 100 Cal. App.2d 386, 389–392, 223 P.2d 862, 21 A.L.R.2d 1206; People v. Smith, 55 Cal. App. 324, 327–329, 203 P. 816; Novak v. District of Columbia, 82 U.S.App.D.C. 95, 160 F.2d 588. Conversely, when it is the barest speculation that there was tampering, it is proper to admit the evidence and let what doubt remains go to its weight. See People v. Tomasovich, 56 Cal.App. 520, 529, 206 P. 119; State v. Smith, Mo., 222 S.W. 455, 458–459. In the present case defendant did not point to any indication of actual tampering, did not show how fingerprints could have been forged, and did not establish that any one who might have been interested in tampering with the prints knew that the bottles and glasses were in Deputy Sheriff Lochry's book case. There was no error in the court's ruling.

In the course of instructing the jury the court stated that "Although there are two degrees of murder, the evidence in this case is such that either both of the defendants, or one of them, is innocent of the charge of murder * * * or one or both of the defendants are guilty of murder in the first degree. * * * For murder which is committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate * * * robbery * * * is murder of the first degree; whether the killing was intentional, unintentional or accidental." See Pen.Code, § 189.

[15] Defendant contends that it was error for the court thus to remove from the jury's consideration the degree of murder, and whether in fact it had been in the course of a robbery or attempted robbery. The evidence, however, was overwhelming that the homicides had been committed in the perpetration of a robbery, and when there is no reasonable doubt on this issue the court is justified in withdrawing it from the jury. People v. Sanford, 33 Cal.2d 590, 595, 203 P.2d 534; People v. Perkins, 8 Cal.2d 502, 516, 66 P.2d 631; see People v. Rupp, 41 Cal.2d 371, 381–382, 260 P.2d 1. Defendant offered no evidence indicating that a robbery had not been committed, and in his own statement of facts to this court he says that "the killing took place during the commission of a robbery."

In addition to this instruction on felony murder, the court gave the jury the code definition of murder, including the provisions on premeditated murder and second degree murder, and the code definition of robbery. Pen.Code, §§ 189, 211. These instructions were unnecessary because they covered questions that had already been withdrawn from the jury by the first instruction. But if any confusion was generated by these instructions, it could only have benefited defendant by leading the jury to think that the question of the degree of murder was still open to its determination. See People v. Peterson, 29 Cal.2d 69, 78–79, 173 P.2d 11, certiorari denied, 331 U.S. 861, 67 S.Ct. 1751, 91 L.Ed. 1867.

In the midst of its deliberations the jury returned to the courtroom and the following discussion took place between court and jury:

"The Foreman: The question was, under those circumstances would either of the defendants be eligible for parole if a recommendation was made for life imprisonment.

"The Court: I see. Well, the answer of the Court is for the purpose of determining the punishment and for that purpose, only, it is the law that a person convicted of First Degree Murder and sentenced to life imprisonment may be eligible for parole. Does that answer your question?

"The Foreman: Yes.

"The Court: I might state that it further provides that they may be eligible for parole but not before he has served seven calender years. Now, I just state that the law is worded that way."

The next day the jury informed the court that it had one verdict complete as to one of the brothers. It then submitted a written question to the court asking whether "In the event of what is a verdict of guilty on both counts one and two, is there any recommendation the Jury can make that would preclude the possibility of parole during the lifetime of a person convicted." The court answered, "No." Within an hour the jury returned its verdicts of guilty, fixing the punishment at life imprisonment for Roscoe, but with no specification of punishment for Richard. Under the instructions that were given the verdict as to Richard necessarily implied that the jury fixed the punishment at death.

[16, 17] It is now well-established that although the jury may not weigh the possibility of pardon or parole in determining the guilt of an accused, it may consider these consequences in exercising its discretion to choose between different punishments. People v. Reese, 47 Cal.2d 112, 301 P.2d 582; People v. Byrd, 42 Cal.2d 200, 206–208, 266 P.2d 505, certiorari denied, 348 U.S. 848, 75 S.Ct. 73, 99 L.Ed. 668; People v. Barclay, 40 Cal.2d 146, 158, 252 P.2d 321; People v. Osborn, 37 Cal.2d 380, 384–385, 231 P.2d 850. Defendant contends, however, that it was error for the court to give the jury information about eligibility for parole before it had determined the question of guilt or innocence. This contention is without merit. In both People v. Reese, supra, and People v. Byrd, supra, we upheld the trial court when it had included in its original instructions to the jury the information that one sentenced to life imprisonment could be paroled. In those cases, as in the present one, the court cautioned the jury against allowing this information to influence its determination of guilt. Prudence requires no more; it does not require that the jury be kept in ignorance of the consequences of different penalties until it has finally determined guilt. Moreover, it is by no means clear in the present case that the jury, when it addressed its questions to the court, had not already found defendant guilty.

Defendant also claims that the court misinformed the jury when it said that defendant could be paroled in seven years if sentenced to life imprisonment; that because of sections 3024(b) and 3048 of the Penal Code, defendant could not be paroled in less than ten years.

[18] Section 3024(b) provides that the minimum terms of sentence and imprisonment "for a person previously convicted of a felony either in this State or elsewhere, and armed with a deadly weapon [is] * * * 10 years * * *." As we pointed out in People v. Reese, 47 Cal.2d 112, 301 P.2d 582, this provision is in an article of the Code concerned with the length of sentences and the fixing thereof, and not with how much of a sentence must be served before a prisoner is eligible for parole. That subject is covered in a different article, embracing sections 3040 to 3065. Section 3049 provides that a person whose minimum term of imprisonment is more than one year may be paroled at any time after the expiration of one-third of the minimum term. Section 3046 limits section 3049 by stating that no person imprisoned under a life sentence may be paroled until he has served at least seven calendar years. Authority to grant parole after a certain portion of a minimum term has been served is not destroyed by a provision such as section 3024 which sets the minimum term itself.

[19] Section 3048, also cited by defendant, limits eligibility for parole when a defendant has been adjudicated an habitual criminal. Such an adjudication cannot be made unless the prior convictions on which it is to be based have been charged in the indictment. People v. Wagner, 78 Cal.App. 503, 506–507, 248 P. 946. No prior convictions were charged in the indictment in the present case, therefore section 3048 has no application.

[20] Defendant's most serious objections go to the eye-witness testimony of Mrs. Burgess and Mr. Pantel. One charge is that the prosecution improperly coached Mrs. Burgess into identifying defendant as the man she had seen at the Hilltop. Mrs. Burgess identified defendant in a Stockton police lineup. She admitted that after this Lieutenant Kilroy had been to her house on numerous occasions, shown her pictures and taken her for rides, and that after her appearance before the grand jury the district attorney had discussed her testimony with her on several occasions. There is no evidence, however, that she was prepared in any way before the lineup, and she specifically denied having seen pictures of defendant before that time. This evidence is insufficient to justify a conclusion that Mrs. Burgess' identification was the result of an idea planted in her mind by the prosecution.

Before trial defendant moved for an order directing the prosecution to furnish him with a copy of the fingerprint taken from the bottle, and directing the Sheriff's Office of Stanislaus County to allow him to inspect statements made to police by Mrs. Burgess and Mr. Pantel immediately after the homicides. The motion was denied.

After cross-examination of witnesses Burgess and Pantel, defendant had issued a subpoena duces tecum addressed to Captain Ross of the Sheriff's Office commanding him to produce the originals of the same statements sought by the pretrial motion. The affidavit in support of the subpoena asserted that the statements were material and relevant to issues in the case and contradictory to the witnesses' present testimony. Defendant first learned of the statements from local newspapers, which reported Captain Ross as saying that the witnesses had described the man who did the shooting as tall and slender, with a dark complexion and black hair, and the other man as dark complexioned with black hair. Apparently the Riser brothers have blond hair and light complexions, and differ significantly in other characteristics from the newspaper descriptions. On cross-examination Mrs. Burgess admitted having made a statement to the police. She claimed, however, that she described the man who did the shooting as stocky, not as tall and slender, and although she admitted describing the man by the door as dark complexioned, she denied having said that he had black hair.

The prosecution moved for an order vacating the subpoena. Despite defendant's argument that he was entitled to the statements for purposes of impeachment, the motion was granted on the ground that the subpoena sought to bring into court evidence that could not be used for impeachment and was not otherwise admissible. Defendant contends that this order was erroneous.

Originally at common law the accused in a criminal action could not compel production of documents or other evidence in the possession of the prosecution. (See 6 Wigmore, Evidence (3rd ed. 1940), 475–476; 8 Id. at 219–220.) Production was denied before trial on the ground that to compel the prosecution to reveal its evidence beforehand would enable the defendant to secure perjured testimony and fabricated evidence to meet the state's case. It was felt, furthermore, that to allow the defendant to compel production when the prosecution could not in its turn compel production from the defendant because of the privilege against self incrimination would unduly shift to the defendant's side a balance of advantages already heavily weighted in his favor. See generally State v. Tune, 13 N.J. 203, 98 A.2d 881; State ex rel. Robertson v. Steele, 117 Minn. 384, 135 N.W. 1128; 6 Wigmore, Evidence, supra, at 475–476.

[21] Whatever the force of these arguments when directed to pretrial discovery, they have little or no application when production is sought by subpoena during trial of statements referred to on cross-examination. The question then is not whether the defendant will be allowed advance disclosure of evidence upon which the prosecution plans to base its case, but whether he will be allowed any disclosure of evidence that the prosecution does not intend to produce in court at all. See United States v. Krulewitch, 2 Cir., 145 F.2d 76, 78, 156 A.L.R. 337. Furthermore, the additional possibility that the defendant will obtain perjured testimony or fabricated evidence as a result of disclosure at this point in the proceedings is too slight to justify denying production. The decisions of this court have always impliedly recognized that on a proper showing a defendant in a criminal case can compel production when it becomes clear during the course of trial that the prosecution has in its possession relevant and material evidence. Production has been denied, not on the ground that there was never any right to it, but because the requirements justifying production had not been met in the particular case. People v. Gallardo, 41 Cal.2d 57, 67, 257 P.2d 29; People v. Bermijo, 2 Cal.2d 270, 276, 40 P.2d 823; People v. Glaze, 139 Cal. 154, 72 P. 965.

[22] There is authority to the contrary, see, e. g., Little v. United States, 8 Cir., 93 F.2d 401, 407, certiorari denied, 303 U.S. 644, 58 S.Ct. 643, 82 L.Ed. 1105; State v. Rhoads, 81 Ohio St. 397, 91 N.E. 186, 27 L.R.A.,N.S., 558, but we are convinced that the better reasoned decisions support the position implicit in our cases. See Gordon v. United States, 344 U.S. 414, 73 S.Ct. 369, 97 L.Ed. 447; United States v. Krulewitch, 2 Cir., 145 F.2d 76, 78–79, 156 A.L.R. 337; Asgill v. United States, 4 Cir., 60 F.2d 776, 778–779; People v. Walsh, 262 N.Y. 140, 149–150, 186 N.E. 422; People v. Dellabonda, 265 Mich. 486, 496–507, 251 N.W. 594. Absent some governmental requirement that information be kept confidential for the purposes of effective law enforcement, the state has no interest in denying the accused access to all evidence that can throw light on issues in the case, and in particular it has no interest in convicting on the testimony of witnesses who have not been as rigorously cross-examined and as thoroughly impeached as the evidence permits. To deny flatly any right of production on the ground that an imbalance would be created between the advantages of prosecution and defense would be to lose sight of the true purpose of a criminal trial, the ascertainment of the facts. See Gordon v. United States, supra, 344 U.S. at page 419, 73 S.Ct. at page 373; 8 Wigmore,

[23] In People v. Glaze, supra, we refused to order production of a statement that appeared to the court to be inadmissible for any purpose, even for impeachment. The witness had neither signed the statement nor adopted it in any way. The lower courts have consistently enforced this requirement that the evidence sought be admissible, without denying, however, that production can be had when the evidence can be used to impeach and is not confidential. People v. Wilkins, 135 Cal.App.2d 371, 377–378, 287 P.2d 555; People v. Santora, 51 Cal.App.2d 707, 712, 125 P.2d 606; People v. Singh, 136 Cal.App. 233, 243, 28 P.2d 416; People v. Keyes, 103 Cal.App. 624, 638–640, 284 P. 1096, 1105; People v. Haughey, 79 Cal.App. 541, 543–544, 250 P. 406; People v. Nields, 70 Cal.App. 191, 232 P. 985; People v. Emmons, 7 Cal.App. 685, 690–691, 95 P. 1032. Nor do we think that the impeachment justifying production is necessarily restricted to impeachment by prior inconsistent statements to the exclusion, for example, of impeachment for bias. See Asgill v. United States, supra, 60 F.2d at page 779.

In the present case the court denied production on the ground that the statements could not be used to impeach the witnesses. We are at a loss to understand how the court could have reached this conclusion without even seeing the statements. Whether they were in writing or signed by the witnesses the record does not show, and it is safe to say that no one but the prosecution knew. Even if they were not signed, defendant might have been able to show, by the testimony of a stenographer or other witnesses or by the admissions of Mrs. Burgess and Mr. Pantel themselves, that the statements had been accurately transcribed and therefore could be used for impeachment. See People v. Bjornsen, 79 Cal.App.2d 519, 534–535, 180 P.2d 443; People v. Orosco, 73 Cal.App. 580, 593, 239 P. 82.

[24, 25] Obviously a defendant cannot show conclusively that a document is admissible without seeing it, and yet in order to see it he is told that he must show that it is admissible. The proper test for determining whether production must be granted is not whether the evidence has been conclusively proved admissible but whether, as stated in People v. Glaze, supra, 139 Cal. at page 158, 72 P. at page 967, "there is good reason to believe that the document, when produced, would be admissible in evidence for some purpose in the case * * *." There must be more than a mere possibility that the statements when produced will contain contradictory matter and be in such a form that they can be used to impeach, but the chance that it may turn out eventually that they cannot be used for this purpose should not block production at the threshold.

This precise problem, the relation between admissibility and the right to production, was presented in Gordon v. United States, supra, and the court there concluded that the prosecution had not conceded enough in admitting that it would be error to refuse to order production if it would be error not to admit the evidence once produced. "[P]roduction may sometimes be required though inspection may show that the document could properly be excluded." 344 U.S. at page 418, 73 S.Ct. at page 372. As in the case before us, the court was faced with a record that showed no reason why the statements once produced could not be used for impeachment.

[26] That the statements of Mrs. Burgess and Mr. Pantel existed and were in the possession of the prosecution or the police was never denied; that it was probable that they were inconsistent with the witnesses' testimony was shown by the newspaper accounts. Defendant was unable to prove conclusively that the statements were in a form warranting use for impeachment only because the prosecution kept them in its exclusive control. The prosecution did not claim that the necessities of law enforcement required that the statements be kept confidential, and in view of the fact that the police had released the substance of the statements to the press, there could be no such claim. Defendant was not exploring for generally useful information, but demanded particular documents reasonably thought to be usable for the specific purpose of impeachment. Finally, defendant went as far as he could without benefit of the statements, at least in the case of Mrs. Burgess. Once the witness denied the prior inconsistencies, there was nothing further defendant could do to press the impeachment. It does not appear that there were any witnesses to the statements who could recall exactly what had been said, and even if there were defendant was not compelled to rely on them if far more impressive documentary proof was at hand. We conclude that defendant sustained the burden imposed on him and that it was error to vacate the subpoena.

[27] In deciding whether this error was prejudicial we must determine whether there was a reasonable probability that the jury would have reached a different verdict had defendant been allowed to obtain and introduce in evidence prior inconsistent statements of the eye-witnesses. People v. Watson, 46 Cal.2d 818, 836, 299 P.2d 243. Even if we assume that prior inconsistent statements would have impaired the value of the eye-witness testimony, there remained against defendant the fingerprint evidence, the evidence that he possessed hand-cast bullets that probably had a common origin with bullets found at the scene of the crime and a holster that had once carried a Smith and Wesson .38 Special, and the evidence that he had had a gun in addition to those he admitted owning.

Weighed against this evidence was the testimony of the Risers that they had not been at the Hilltop on July 11th. Both stated that they nad been at the house of Della Fay Jones, Roscoe's girl friend, until 7:30 or 8 o'clock in the evening, and then had gone on, Roscoe and Della to a movie and Richard on a round of Stockton bars. Richard returned home about midnight and did not see Roscoe until the next morning. Della Fay Jones did not testify.

Richard had earlier told police that it was probably on the 11th that he and Roscoe had gone to Riverbank to buy furniture, returning to Stockton by way of Oakdale where they stopped at a bar. At the trial he explained that he had been confused about the dates as a result of almost continuous questioning by the police for three or four days. Roscoe could not recall the Riverbank expedition at all.

Witness Basford testified that the two men he met coming into the Hilltop Cafe had been in a Chrysler, Buick, or Pontiac. Both brothers testified that Roscoe's Chrysler had a flat tire on the 11th, and Roscoe said that it had been left in the backyard of their mother's house from the 10th until the 13th, while they used an old Dodge converted into a truck. Their mother stated that the Chrysler had been in the yard from the 10th to the 13th, and that if it had been removed it could only have been while she was asleep. A witness for the prosecution testified that he had seen the brothers getting into the Chrysler on the afternoon or evening of the 11th, but on cross-examination his testimony proved extremely weak.

[28, 29] Fingerprint evidence is the strongest evidence of identity, and is ordinarily sufficient alone to identify the defendant. See People v. Adamson, 27 Cal. 2d 478, 495, 165 P.2d 3, affirmed 332 U.S. 46, 67 S.Ct. 1672, 91 L.Ed. 1903. Here there is in addition to the fingerprint evidence the evidence of a common origin for the hand-cast bullets, a "remarkable resemblance" which we have no reason to believe could be the result of chance. The evidence that the holster had once carried a Smith and Wesson .38 Special, and that defendant had possessed an unidentified third gun, although not as strong as the fingerprint and bullet evidence, contribute to an impressive total of proof identifying defendant. We are of the opinion, therefore, that it is not reasonably probable that the jury, faced with this evidence, would have chosen to believe instead the unsupported testimony of defendant that he had not been at the Hilltop Cafe on the night of July 11th; accordingly, there has been no miscarriage of justice. Cal.Const. art. VI, § 4½.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

I cannot agree with the conclusion reached by a majority of this court that while it was error it was not prejudicial error for the trial court to deny defendant the right to produce documents containing statements by eyewitnesses allegedly contrary to those made at the trial by such witnesses. In my opinion nothing could be more prejudicial. It is impossible for an appellate court to say that the jury was not impressed by testimony which absolutely identified the defendant as the perpetrator of the crime given by persons present at the time the crime was committed.

In view of the holding in Gordon v. United States, 344 U.S. 414, 73 S.Ct. 369, 97 L.Ed. 447, it seems incredible that a majority of this court could hold that this error was not prejudicial. The same problem was there presented. The court had this to say: "By proper cross-examination, defense counsel laid a foundation for his demand by showing that the documents were in existence, were in possession of the Government, were made by the Government's witness under examination, were contradictory of his present testimony, and that the contradiction was as to relevant, important and material matters which directly bore on the main issue being tried: the participation of the accused in the crime. The demand was for production of these specific documents and did not propose any broad or blind fishing expedition among documents possessed by the Government on the chance that something impeaching might turn up. Nor was this a demand for statements taken from persons or informants not offered as witnesses. The Government did not assert any privilege for the documents on grounds of national security, confidential character, public interest, or otherwise. * * * Indeed, we would find it hard to withstand the force of Judge Cooley's observation in a similar situation that 'the state has no interest in interposing any obstacle to the disclosure of the facts, unless it is interested in convicting accused parties on the testimony of untrustworthy persons.' [People v. Davis, 52 Mich. 569, 18 N.W. 362, 363.] In the light of our reason and experience, the better rule is that upon the foundation that was laid the court should have overruled the objections which the Government advanced and ordered production of the documents.

"The trial court, of course, had no occasion to rule as to their admissibility, and we find it appropriate to consider that question only because the Government argues that the trial judge, in the exercise of his discretion, might have excluded these prior contradictory statements and since that would not have amounted to reversible error, it was not such to decline their production. We think this misconceives the issue. It is unnecessary to decide whether it would have been reversible error for the trial judge to exclude these statements once they had been produced and inspected. For production purposes, it need only appear that the evidence is relevant, competent, and outside of any exclusionary rule; for rarely can the trial judge understandingly exercise his discretion to exclude a document which he has not seen, and no appellate court could rationally say whether the excluding of evidence unknown to the record was error, or, if so, was harmless. The question to be answered on an application for an order to produce is one of admissibility under traditional canons of evidence, and not whether exclusion might be overlooked as harmless error.

"The Court of Appeals affirmed on the ground that Marshall's admission, on cross-examination, of the implicit contradiction between the documents and his testimony removed the need for resort to the statements and the admission was all the accused were entitled to demand. We cannot agree. We think that an admission that a contradiction is contained in a writing should not bar admission of the document itself in evidence, providing it meets all other requirements of admissibility and no valid claim of privilege is raised against it. The elementary wisdom of the best evidence rule rests on the fact that the document is a more reliable, complete and accurate source of information as to its contents and meaning than anyone's description and this is no less true as to the extent and circumstances of a contradiction. We hold that the accused is entitled to the application of that rule, not merely because it will emphasize the contradiction to the jury, but because it will best inform them as to the document's impeaching weight and significance. Traditional rules of admissibility prevent opening the door to documents which merely differ on immaterial matters. The alleged contradictions to this witness' testimony relate not to collateral matters but to the very incrimination of petitioners." Emphasis added; 344 U.S. at pages 418–421, 73 S.Ct. at page 373. It was concluded: "The Government, in its brief, argues strongly for the widest sort of discretion in the trial judge in these matters and urges that even if we find error or irregularity we disregard it as harmless and affirm the conviction. We are well aware of the necessity that appellate courts give the trial judge wide latitude in control of cross-examination, especially in dealing with collateral evidence as to character. Michelson v. United States, 335 U.S. 469, 69 S.Ct. 213, 93 L.Ed. 168. But this principle cannot be expanded to justify a curtailment which keeps from the jury relevant and important facts bearing on the trustworthiness of crucial testimony. Reversals should not be based on trivial, theoretical and harmless rulings. But we cannot say that these errors were unlikely to have influenced the jury's verdict. We believe they prejudiced substantial rights and the judgment must be reversed." 344 U.S. at pages 422–423, 73 S.Ct. at page 374.

The eyewitness testimony was by far the most important evidence against this defendant. The murder weapon was never found; the similarity in the hand-cast bullets was only that they were "probably of common origin"; and it was thought that defendant's holster had once carried a gun of a type of the murder weapon. It would appear to me that, in Judge Cooley's language, the state should have no interest in interposing any obstacle to the disclosure of facts; that all material and relevant facts should be set forth for the determination of the jury and, if certain state witnesses have been accused of making contradictory statements relating to a material fact, those statements should also be before the jury so that it could determine for itself the trustworthiness of such witnesses. The American concept of due process most certainly encompasses the right of an accused to be confronted by trustworthy witnesses and the right to show, if he can, that witnesses against him may not be worthy of belief. Due process most certainly also encompasses the concept that the state will not seek to conceal material evidence in the accused's favor. If due process of law does not encompass such concepts, then we have most assuredly departed a long way from the very foundation upon which our system of justice rests—the ideal that every man is presumed innocent until proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. In the words of Mr. Justice Holmes, Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438, 48 S.Ct. 564, 72 L.Ed. 944, it is better that one criminal escape than that the government play an ignoble part.

In Mesarosh v. United States, 77 S.Ct. 1; 77 S.Ct. 8, 9, the government moved to remand the case to the trial court because of untruthful testimony given before other tribunals by Mazzei, a government witness, although contending that the testimony given in the instant case by Mazzei was "entirely truthful and credible." The government sought to have the matter remanded to the District Court for a full consideration of the credibility of the testimony of the witness Mazzei. The counter-motion of petitioners asked for a new trial. In reversing the judgments below with directions to grant the petitioners a new trial, Mr. Chief Justice Warren, speaking for the court, had this to say [77 S.Ct. 8]: "Mazzei, by his testimony, has poisoned the water in this reservoir, and the reservoir cannot be cleansed without first draining it of all impurity. This is a federal criminal case, and this Court has supervisory jurisdiction over the proceedings of the federal courts. If it has any duty to perform in this regard, it is to see that the waters of justice are not polluted. Pollution having taken place here, the condition should be remedied at the earliest opportunity. 'The untainted administration of justice is certainly one of the most cherished aspects of our institutions. Its observance is one of our proudest boasts. This Court is charged with supervisory functions in relation to proceedings in the federal courts. See McNabb v. United States, 318 U.S. 332, 63 S.Ct. 608, 87 L.Ed. 819. Therefore, fastidious regard for the honor of the administration of justice requires the Court to make certain that the doing of justice be made so manifest that only irrational or perverse claims of its disregard can be asserted.' Communist Party [of United States] v. Subversive Activities Control Board, 351 U.S. 115, 124, 76 S.Ct. 663, 668.

"The government of a strong and free nation does not need convictions based upon such testimony. It cannot afford to abide with them. The interests of justice call for a reversal of the judgments below with direction to grant the petitioners a new trial."

Surely the great State of California does not need convictions based upon the deprivation of an accused's constitutional right to due process of law.

For the foregoing reasons I would reverse the judgment.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Roscoe R. RISER, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5896.

Supreme Court of California.
Dec. 31, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of murder. The Superior Court, Stanislaus County, Frank C. Damrell, J., entered judgment, and defendant appealed, and the People filed a motion that appeal be dismissed because defendant did not file his notice of appeal within required time. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that mere fact that after defendant was convicted of murder he was removed from county jail to penitentiary, so that communication between defendant and his counsel became difficult, would not justify excusing failure of defendant to file timely notice of appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1069(1)

The State, which establishes the time limit for appeals in criminal cases, may not frustrate those within its control from meeting the requirement, whether by slowness of prison methods or by negligence or misleading assurances of its employees.

West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rules 31, 53(b).

2. Criminal Law ⇐1069(6)

Mere fact that defendant is incarcerated during time for filing of appeal is not sufficient to permit him to invoke the rule that where lateness of filing of appeal is wholly attributable either to negligence of prison employees or to prison routine, appeal should not be dismissed. West's Ann. Rules on Appeal, rules 31, 53(b).

3. Criminal Law ⇐1068½

The State has no duty to see that every convicted prisoner perfects an appeal, nor is it responsible should the public defender fail to act. West's Ann. Rules on Appeal, rules 31, 53(b).

4. Criminal Law ⇐1081

Where there is no showing by a defendant of a convincing excuse for delay in filing notice of appeal, appeal must be dismissed. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rules 31, 53(b).

5. Criminal Law ⇐1081

Mere fact that after defendant was convicted of murder he was removed from county jail to penitentiary, so that communication between defendant and his counsel became difficult, would not justify excusing failure of defendant to file timely notice of appeal. West's Ann. Rules on Appeal, rules 31, 53(b).

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Roscoe R. Riser and his brother Richard G. Riser were found guilty by a jury of murder in the first degree. The jury fixed the punishment at life imprisonment for Roscoe Riser. A motion for a new trial was denied, and on February 24, 1956, judgment was entered on the verdict. Richard Riser's appeal to this court is automatic under section 1239(b) of the Penal Code, but to perfect an appeal defendant Roscoe Riser was required by rule 31 of the Rules on Appeal to file his notice of appeal "within 10 days after the rendition of the judgment * * *." Defendant did not file a notice of appeal until March 30th, considerably beyond the ten-day period. The People have filed a motion that the appeal be dismissed because defendant did not file his notice of appeal within the required time.

In an affidavit the deputy public defender, one of defendant's counsel, gives an explanation of the delay. He states that prior to judgment he discussed with defendant the question of appeal, but they reached no decision; that late in the morning of February 24th, after judgment had been entered, he and the public defender attempted to get in touch with defendant at the county jail only to find that he had already been sent to San Quentin; and that during the succeeding ten days, they received no communication from him and consequently took no action to perfect an appeal.

Defendant contends that in view of the seriousness of the sentence the appeal should be allowed because of the difficulty of communication between him and his counsel, because the delay in filing was owing to no fault of defendant, and because the points on appeal would be the same as those raised by the automatic appeal of Richard Riser.

[1] In support of this contention, defendant cites People v. Slobodion, 30 Cal. 2d 362, 181 P.2d 868. In that case we declined to dismiss an appeal where a prisoner had deposited his notice of appeal with prison employees and the lateness of filing was wholly attributable either to the negligence of those employees or to prison routine. The appellant had done all he could to assure timely filing. Recently, in People v. Head, 46 Cal.2d 886, 299 P.2d 872, we refused to dismiss an appeal where the appellant had relied on the representations of prison officials that his appeal would be taken care of. Thus the state, which establishes the time limit for appeals, may not frustrate those within its control from meeting the requirement, whether by the slowness of prison methods or by the negligence or misleading assurances of its employees.

[2, 3] The mere fact, however, that an appellant is incarcerated during the time for filing is not enough to invoke the Slobodion rule, since it does not point to the state as the cause of delay. In the present case we are told only that after judgment defendant was removed to San Quentin and that communication with him became difficult. There is no showing, however, that communication was attempted, or that if it was prison routine was a substantial factor in making the appeal late. Nor is it claimed that defendant attempted to file his notice through prison officials within the ten-day period. The state has no duty to see that every convicted prisoner perfects an appeal, nor is it responsible should the public defender fail to act. See People v. Walsh, 129 Cal. App.2d 327, 328–329, 277 P.2d 73; People v. Cox, 120 Cal.App.2d 246, 260 P.2d 1050.

Since defendant cannot show state action that would bring him within the Slobodion or Head cases, he is faced with the established rule that neither the parties nor the court can extend the time set by the Rules. People v. Behrmann, 34 Cal.2d 459, 211 P.2d 575; In re Horowitz, 33 Cal.2d 534, 537, 203 P.2d 513. Rule 53(b) allows a reviewing court for good cause to relieve a party from a failure to comply with the Rules, "except the failure to give timely notice of appeal."

[4, 5] Quite apart from the question, see People v. Aresen, 91 Cal.App.2d 26, 28–30, 204 P.2d 389, 957, whether the language and purpose of the Rules allow relief in extreme cases when it is impossible to file the notice and the appellant is in no way at fault, clearly when there is no showing of a convincing excuse for delay, the appeal must be dismissed. Even before judgment defendant had considered the taking of an appeal, yet apparently made no efforts after he was moved to San Quentin to file his notice.

The appeal is dismissed.

Olive BENNETT et al., Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

The HIBERNIA BANK (a Corporation), et al., Defendants and Respondents.

S. F. 19089.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
Dec. 27, 1956.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Jan. 23, 1957.

Action against membership bank to obtain declaratory relief determining plaintiffs' rights in the bank. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, H. A. van der Zee, J., sustained general demurrer without leave to amend, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that complaint, which contained purely evidentiary matter and allegations which were inconsistent, ambiguous, and uncertain, was, when liberally construed, sufficient as against a general demurrer.

Judgment reversed.

Spence, J., dissented.

Opinion, 289 P.2d 57, vacated.

1. Declaratory Judgment ⇐314

In action, against membership bank and others, to obtain declaratory relief to determine plaintiffs' rights in the bank, complaint, which contained purely evidentiary matter and allegations which were inconsistent, ambiguous, and uncertain, was, when liberally construed, sufficient as against a general demurrer. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., § 452.

2. Declaratory Judgment ⇐313

Generally, complaint in action for declaratory relief is sufficient if it sets forth facts showing the existence of an actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties under a contract and requests that the rights and duties be adjudged. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 1060.

3. Declaratory Judgment ⇐385

If, in declaratory judgment action, complaint sets forth facts showing existence of an actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of parties under a contract and requests that the rights and duties be adjudged, the court must declare the rights of the parties regardless of whether the facts alleged established that the plaintiff is entitled to a favorable declaration. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1060.

4. Declaratory Judgment ⇐385

Where, in declaratory judgment action, complaint shows, on its face, that all relief is barred by the statute of limitations, it is unnecessary for the court to make a declaration of rights, and a general demurrer may be sustained, and the same rule is applicable where the complaint shows that the entire controversy has been settled by a prior judgment.

5. Building and Loan Associations ⇐6(2)

Where, after June, 1863, savings and loan society was composed of members only, and none of the members owned stock, and, in August, 1864, society filed a certificate of incorporation as a membership corporation under the 1862 Act, corporation thus became a valid membership corporation regardless of its prior legal status, and, therefore, under 1864 statute contemplating that entire membership of the prior organization should be continued in the new organization, member of prior organization automatically became member of the new corporation. St.1853, p. 87; St.1862, p. 199, as amended by St. 1863–4, p. 531.

6. Corporations ⇐56

Power to adopt by-laws is ordinarily in stockholders or members of a corporation, but directors may be given such authority by statute or articles of incorporation. St.1862, p. 200.

7. Corporations ⇐56

1862 statute, which provided that one of the purposes for which a corporation and, hence, the directors could make by-laws was to regulate the time and manner in which any one could become or cease to be a member of the corporation, was broad enough to permit directors of corporation to adopt by-laws specifying the conditions under which membership rights might be acquired or lost. St.1862, p. 200.

8. Corporations ⇐182

Where membership corporation had been organized as a business and profit making organization, and members had property rights in corporate assets, such rights were transferable in absence of statute, by-law, or other regulation to the contrary.

9. Declaratory Judgment ⇐368
Evidence ⇐389

In action against membership bank and others to obtain declaratory relief determining plaintiffs' rights in the bank, question whether by-law of savings and loan society, as predecessor of bank, meant that there could be no transfer of rights of any member without action of directors or that only those who might join the society after adoption of the by-law would acquire nontransferable membership rights was question for trier of the facts, and extrinsic evidence would be admissible on such question.

10. Building and Loan Associations ⇐6(2)

Savings and loan association's by-law, which provided, in part, that no one shall be deemed a member whose account was once closed, had been adopted after person having membership in the corporation had become a member, would not be enforceable against such member, in absence of his consent, if it would unreasonably deprive him of his membership rights.

11. Corporations ⇐54

Reasonableness of corporation's by-law must be considered in the light of all the circumstances, including such matters as the purposes for which the corporation was organized and the extent of the rights of the particular member involved.

12. Judgment ⇐681

Where prior judgment entered in prior action in rem to determine membership rights in corporation in effect determined that plaintiffs' predecessor had no membership rights, complaint, in subsequent action to determine plaintiffs' rights in such corporation, would be subject to demurrer on ground of res judicata unless the additional facts alleged would justify setting such prior judgment aside.

13. Judgment ⇐447(1), 460(10)

Ordinarily, equity will not interfere with a judgment on ground of extrinsic fraud or mistake unless the one whose interests were infringed can present a meritorious case, and plaintiff must plead and prove facts from which it appears, at least prima facie, that, if the judgment were set aside and if the proceedings were reopened, a different result would probably follow.

14. Corporations ⇐189(7½)

In action to determine persons entitled to membership in domestic corporation, personal service must be had upon California members of record and of known address and such members' successors of known address, provided corporation is aware or could, through reasonable diligence, discover that they are successors. West's Ann.Financial Code, §§ 671.1–671.17.

15. Building and Loan Associations ⇐6(2)

Where facts disclosing father's membership appeared on records of membership bank, which knew that father had died and that, upon his death, his successors became entitled to membership and also knew of residence of daughter, who had always lived in California, daughter should have been named in prior action in rem to determine membership rights and should have been given personal service provided membership corporation knew or, with reasonable diligence, could have learned that daughter was father's successor. West's Ann.Financial Code, §§ 671.1–671.17.

16. Building and Loan Associations ⇐6(2)

Under Bank Act provision authorizing action to determine persons entitled to membership in membership corporation or to any interest in its assets, only a reasonable investigation to determine names of its members and their successors is required, and extent of investigation will necessarily depend upon the circumstances of each situation, including such matters as the facts known to the corporation and the value of the membership involved. West's Ann.Financial Code, §§ 671.1–671.17.

17. Judgment ⇐354

Failure to comply with provisions of Bank Act pertaining to action to determine persons entitled to membership in membership corporation or to interest in such corporation's property constitutes ground for vacation of judgment entered in such action. West's Ann.Financial Code, §§ 671.1–671.17.

18. Judgment ⇐443(1), 518

Equitable proceeding instituted for purpose of vacating a judgment constitutes a direct attack, and such attack may be made on ground of extrinsic fraud where it appears that there was a willful failure to give the required service in proceeding resulting in the judgment or that willfully false affidavits of service had been filed.

19. Judgment ⇐435

Extrinsic mistake may be a ground for vacation of a judgment by an independent action in equity if there has been no fair adversary trial.

20. Limitation of Actions ⇐95(1)

If lapse of time can bar an action by member or stockholder to establish his interest in a corporation, the statutory period does not commence to run until stockholder has knowledge or notice that his rights are denied or that his status is repudiated or controverted by the corporation.

21. Corporations ⇐438

Corporation holds its property in trust for benefit of its shareholders and occupies a fiduciary position with respect to them, and, therefore, shareholder is entitled to assume that the corporation will not assert any claim adverse to him.

22. Limitation of Actions ⇐96(2), 100(11)

Where fraud or mistake is involved, statute of limitations commences to run when plaintiff discovers he has a cause of action or, through use of reasonable diligence, should have discovered such fact, but a fiduciary has a duty to make full and fair disclosure of all facts which materially affect parties' rights and interest, and facts which would ordinarily require investigation may not excite suspicion where a fiduciary relationship exists.

23. Limitation of Actions ⇐95(1)

In action against membership bank and others to obtain declaratory relief to determine plaintiffs' rights in the bank, plaintiffs, upon issue whether action was barred by statute of limitations, were bound by everything which their predecessors knew.

24. Limitation of Actions ⇐100(4)

Three year statute of limitation on actions for fraud or mistake did not commence to run immediately upon rendition of judgment in prior action to determine membership in membership bank but was dependent upon knowledge of the judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 338, subd. 4.

25. Limitation of Actions ⇐55(5), 104(1)

Ordinarily, statute of limitations applicable to conversion actions begins to run from date of the conversion, even though injured party is ignorant of his rights, but such rule is not absolute, and, where there has been a fraudulent concealment of the facts, the statute of limitations does not commence to run until the aggrieved party discovers or ought to have discovered the existence of the cause of action for conversion. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 338, subd. 3.

26. Trusts ⇐233

Fiduciary has duty to make a full disclosure of facts which materially affect rights of the parties, and, therefore, fiduciary's act which amounts to a conversion of trust property is akin to fraudulent concealment.

27. Limitation of Actions ⇐100(13)

In view of allegations, in action to obtain declaratory relief determining plaintiffs' rights in membership bank, that one of plaintiff's predecessors had no knowledge of events upon which defendants relied as a defense to plaintiffs' claims, and which included alleged obtaining, by extrinsic fraud, the entry of a prior judgment adverse to plaintiffs, fact that a document disclosing such events was matter of public record could not cause the statute of limitations to begin to run on date of such events. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 338, subd. 3; West's Ann.Financial Code, § 670.

28. Limitation of Actions ⇐95(1)

Documents filed in proceeding for extension of corporate existence, while public records and constructive notice for certain purposes, were not sufficient to start running the statute of limitations in favor of fiduciary as to those of corporation's members who had no knowledge of such documents. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 338, subd. 4.

29. Limitation of Actions ⇐103(4)

If trustee of an express trust improperly transfers trust property to a third person who has knowledge that the transfer is in breach of trust, the statute of limitations does not run on the beneficiary's action against the third person until such time as the beneficiary learns of the breach of trust or of facts sufficient to arouse his suspicion.

30. Limitation of Actions ⇐179(2), 195(5)

In action against membership bank to obtain declaratory relief to determine plaintiffs' rights in the bank, plaintiffs would be required to allege and prove, upon question whether their action had been timely brought, facts showing the time and surrounding circumstances of the discovery of the cause of action which was based in part upon fraud.

31. Limitation of Actions ⇐195(3)

Where plaintiff had no duty to inquire until he has notice of facts sufficient to arouse the suspicions of a reasonable man, for example, because of existence of a fiduciary relationship, he need not disprove that an earlier discovery could have been made upon diligent inquiry but need only show that he made an actual discovery of hitherto unknown information within the statutory period before filing his action.

32. Limitation of Actions ⇐179(2)

In action against membership bank and others to obtain declaratory relief determining plaintiffs' rights in the bank, complaint, which contained allegations that discovery of the cause of action, which was based partly on fraud, had been made within two years prior to filing of the action, was sufficient to allege that the action had been timely brought. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 338, subd. 4.

L. L. James, Carl E. Day, Leander L. James, III, San Francisco, and Morris Lavine, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Alexander S. Keenan, Jr., San Francisco, amicus curiae on behalf of appellants.

Tobin & Tobin, Sullivan, Roche, Johnson & Farraher, Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison and Moses Lasky, San Francisco, for respondents.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

Plaintiffs are seeking declaratory relief to determine their rights, if any, in the Hibernia Bank which, prior to 1947, was known as the Hibernia Savings and Loan Society. They claim as successors of Callaghan Curtin who, it is alleged, became a member of Hibernia on October 27, 1860. A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and plaintiffs have appealed from the ensuing judgment.

[1] The complaint is very lengthy, and it contains a great deal of purely evidentiary matter; some of the allegations are inconsistent, others are ambiguous and uncertain, and our task would have been greatly simplified had the complaint been clarified on special demurrer. We have concluded, however, that the complaint, when liberally construed, Code Civ.Proc., § 452; Treu v. Kirkwood, 42 Cal.2d 602, 608, 268 P.2d 482; Hudson v. Craft, 33 Cal.2d 654, 661, 204 P.2d 1, 7 A.L.R.2d 696; Jaffe v. Stone, 18 Cal.2d 146, 153, 114 P.2d 335, 135 A.L.R. 775, is sufficient as against the general demurrer.

The Complaint

The principal allegations of the complaint may be summarized as follows:

Hibernia was organized in 1859 under an act which authorized the formation of corporations having capital stock and made no provision for corporations composed of members rather than stockholders. Stats. 1853, p. 87. By-laws were adopted which recited that the signers thereof agreed that the by-laws should govern them and determine their mutual duties, rights and privileges as members of the society. It was also provided that those who should sign the by-laws and "pay the entrance fee of two dollars, shall be styled and considered members of this Corporation. Those, who, in addition to the above, shall hold one or more shares of its Stock, shall further be styled and considered Stockholders." It was the intention of the incorporators that Hibernia should be conducted as a membership corporation, and the members alone exercised the right to vote, elect the trustees and amend the by-laws.

Curtin became a member of Hibernia on October 27, 1860, when he signed the by-laws, paid the entrance fee, made a deposit of $3,500 and received a passbook showing the amount of his deposit.

Some shares of stock were issued following incorporation, but none was issued after November 29, 1861. Between that date and June 27, 1863, all but four certificates for shares were retired and cancelled, and thereafter the corporation was composed of members only, none of whom owned any stock. No dividends were ever declared or paid upon the stock of the corporation; instead, all dividends were paid to the members on their deposits.

On August 29, 1864, Hibernia elected to become incorporated under an act adopted in 1862, and amended in 1864, Stats.1862, p. 199, Stats.1863–1864, p. 531, which provided that savings banks, including associations claiming in good faith to be incorporated under the laws of this state, could incorporate as savings banks without capital stock. A new certificate of incorporation was filed which stated that Hibernia should have no capital stock and that its affairs should be managed by a board of directors. On September 29, 1864, the directors, without a vote or consent of the members, and without consent of Curtin, purported to adopt new by-laws which stated that all prior by-laws were repealed. Article 4 of the by-laws provided that all persons who were members on August 29, 1864, "shall be deemed and considered members of this corporation, and the signatures of such persons to an agreement on their part to become members of this corporation, and ratifying and confirming the incorporation of said The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, * * * shall be procured as speedily as may be. Other persons may be allowed to become members of this corporation by a vote of the Board of Directors and not otherwise. Membership shall not pass with the ownership of moneys deposited with or under control of the corporation."

Subsequent to August 29, 1864, and prior to January 18, 1871, Curtin signed the agreement provided for in the 1864 by-laws, by the terms of which he ratified the incorporation proceedings taken by Hibernia in 1864 and agreed to become a member of the corporation as it existed under the act of 1862. Those by-laws provided that the "corporate powers" should be exercised by the directors, and amendments were adopted by the directors from time to time. An amendment so adopted in 1868 provided that all persons who were members on August 29, 1864, and then had not less than $100 to their credit, and whose accounts were not subsequently closed, "shall be deemed and considered members. * * * No one shall be deemed a member whose account is once closed." An amendment on January 18, 1871, provided that those who had signed the agreement to become members and who then "had accounts open with said Corporation, shall be deemed and considered the only members thereof at that date. * * * No one shall be deemed a member whose account is once closed." In 1886 an amendment was adopted which provided that a person shall cease to be a member "who shall not have continuously and at all times, at least One Hundred Dollars to his or her credit upon an open deposit account on the books of this Corporation."

In January 1909 Hibernia filed documents purporting to extend its corporate life for a further period of 50 years, and in March 1934 it filed other documents providing for perpetual existence of the corporation. The documents were executed by acting officers, directors and persons claiming to be members of the corporation; none of them was executed by Curtin, and neither he nor his daughter Mary had any knowledge of them.

Curtin maintained a deposit of at least $100 at all times from the opening of the account in October 1860 until April 1914, when he made a written assignment to Mary of all the moneys to his credit with Hibernia and she withdrew the balance on deposit, amounting to $363.54. He died several months later in September 1914. Mary was appointed executrix of Curtin's last will by the Superior Court of Santa Clara County, and his entire estate, including his membership rights in Hibernia, was distributed to her as sole legatee under his will. Mary died in January 1951, and a decree entered in 1952 ordered distribution to plaintiffs of the residue of her estate, which included the membership in Hibernia. Curtin's membership continued until transferred to Mary either by assignment or descent, and plaintiffs, as distributees of the estate of Mary, succeeded to all of the membership rights.

In October 1945 Hibernia filed an in rem suit to determine membership rights. The complaint named as defendants a number of individuals, together with all persons unknown claiming any right of membership, and alleged that, so far as Hibernia knew, the only persons who were members and had membership rights were 15 named individuals. These persons filed verified answers admitting the allegations of the complaint and alleging that they were members of Hibernia and the only persons having any right or interest in its property or assets other than the right to repayment of funds deposited with interest. Hibernia knew the residences of Curtin and of Mary, who was a resident of the state, and also knew or could have ascertained by an inspection of its records and the records of the Superior Court of Santa Clara County that Curtin's entire estate including his membership rights in Hibernia had been distributed to Mary as sole legatee. Neither Curtin nor Mary were named as defendants, and the only service attempted on them was as unknown defendants, by publication and posting. No appearance was made on their behalf. The court directed entry of the defaults of all nonanswering defendants, including all persons unknown claiming any assets of Hibernia, and judgment was entered naming the 15 answering defendants as the sole members of Hibernia and the only persons having any right or interest in its property and assets.

In 1947 Hibernia was reorganized as a stock corporation under the name of The Hibernia Bank, with stock in the amount of $7,000,000 divided among the 15 individual defendants.

Up to the time of Mary's death in January 1951 neither she nor any of the plaintiff's had any notice or knowledge of the 1945 action or the judgment entered therein or of the conversion of Hibernia into a stock bank, or of the change of its name, or of any facts which might have led them to discovery of the 1945 suit. Although Mary knew that Curtin was one of the early depositors of Hibernia, she had no knowledge of the fact that he was a member or was possessed of any of the rights of a member, and plaintiffs had no such knowledge until about June 1952.

Plaintiff Bennett was informed shortly after October 21, 1951, of a newspaper article published on that date which told about the settlement of an action brought against Hibernia by the descendant of an early depositor. Upon investigation by Bennett, it was discovered that Curtin signed the bylaws in 1860, made a deposit and paid the entrance fee, and thus became a member of Hibernia. Discovery was also made of the 1945 suit, the conversion of Hibernia into a stock bank, and the distribution of all its stock to the 15 individual defendants. The information gained through the investigation was the first knowledge possessed by plaintiffs regarding their rights.

The present action was filed on January 15, 1953.

Scope of General Demurrer in Action for Declaratory Relief

[2-4] It is the general rule that in an action for declaratory relief the complaint is sufficient if it sets forth facts showing the existence of an actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties under a contract and requests that the rights and duties be adjudged. Code Civ.Proc., § 1060. If these requirements are met, the court must declare the rights of the parties whether or not the facts alleged establish that the plaintiff is entitled to a favorable declaration. Maguire v. Hibernia S. & L. Soc., 23 Cal.2d 718, 728 et seq., 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062; cf. Anderson v. Stansbury, 38 Cal.2d 707, 717, 242 P.2d 305; Essick v. City of Los Angeles, 34 Cal.2d 614, 624-625, 213 P.2d 492. However, where a complaint shows on its face that all relief is barred by the statute of limitations, it is unnecessary for the court to make a declaration of rights, and a general demurrer may be sustained. Maguire v. Hibernia S. & L. Soc., supra, 23 Cal.2d at pages 733–737, 146 P.2d 673. By analogy, the same rule should apply where the complaint shows that the entire controversy has been settled by a prior judgment.

Since, as we shall see, membership rights are material to a consideration of the defenses of res judicata and the statute of limitations, we shall discuss those rights under a separate heading.

Did Curtin or Mary Have Membership Rights?

[5] It is alleged that Curtin became a member of Hibernia in 1860 when he made a deposit, paid the entrance fee and signed the by-laws of the original organization which provided that persons doing these things "shall be styled and considered members of this corporation." Defendants contend that this allegation must be disregarded because the complaint shows on its face that Curtin was not a stockholder of the original corporation and the statutes made no provision for corporations composed of members rather than stockholders. See Maguire v. Hibernia S. & L. Soc., 23 Cal.2d 719, 723, 146 P.2d 673; People v. Perrin, 56 Cal. 345, 347. They argue that Curtin could not have been a member because Hibernia could not have validly existed as a membership corporation at that time. It appears, however, that an act adopted in 1862 and amended in 1864 provided that previously existing savings corporations and "all associations or societies for the like purpose" claiming in good faith to be incorporated under the laws of this state, could be organized as membership corporations without capital stock. Stats.1862, pp. 199–205, Stats.1864, p. 531. The complaint alleges that after June 1863 the corporation was composed of members only, none of whom owned stock, and that in August 1864 Hibernia filed a certificate of incorporation as a membership corporation under the 1862 act. Hibernia thus became a valid membership corporation in August 1864, regardless of what its prior legal status may have been. The 1864 statute obviously contemplated that the entire membership of the prior organization should be continued in the new organization, and Curtin automatically became a member of the new corporation.

It is further alleged that Curtin's membership continued until transferred to Mary either by assignment or descent and that plaintiffs, as distributees of the estate of Mary, succeeded to all of the membership rights. Defendants claim, however, that membership rights were not transferable and that any such rights which Curtin or Mary may have had were terminated when the account was closed and Curtin died in 1914. In support of their position defendants rely on certain by-laws set forth in the complaint which were adopted in and after September 1864. The complaint alleges that these by-laws were adopted without authority from the members and without Curtin's consent and that they were therefore invalid. Plaintiffs also argue that the by-laws do not establish that membership rights were not transferable or that they were terminated by the closing of the account.

[6, 7] The power to adopt by-laws is ordinarily in stockholders or members of a corporation, but directors may be given such authority by statute or articles of incorporation. See Darrin v. Hoff, 99 Md. 491, 58 A. 196, 200; Morton Gravel Road Co. v. Wysong, 51 Ind. 4, 12; 8 Fletcher, Cyclopedia Corporations (1931), § 4172, p. 645; 13 Am.Jur. 284–285. The 1862 act provided that the "corporate powers of the corporation shall be exercised by a Board of not less than five Directors," and it contained a list of corporate powers, one of which was to "make by-laws, not inconsistent with the laws of this State," for certain enumerated purposes. Stats.1862, p. 200. Under the 1862 act one of the purposes for which the corporation, and hence the directors, could make by-laws was to regulate "the time and manner in which any person may become, or may cease to be, a member of the corporation." Stats.1862, p. 200. This language was broad enough to permit the directors to adopt by-laws specifying the conditions under which membership rights might be acquired or lost.

[8, 9] Hibernia was organized as a business and profit-making organization, and the members had property rights in the assets of the corporation. In the absence of a statute, by-law or other regulation to the contrary, these rights were transferable. Cf. Riverside Land Co. v. Jarvis, 174 Cal. 316, 327, 163 P. 54; Young v. New Pedrara Onyx Co., 48 Cal.App. 1, 14, 192 P. 55. Article 4 of the 1864 by-laws, after stating that all persons who were members of the prior organization on August 29, 1864, should be deemed members of the new corporation, provided: "Other persons may be allowed to become members of this corporation by a vote of the Board of Directors, and not otherwise. Membership shall not pass with the ownership of moneys deposited with or under the control of the corporation." This language might be construed, as defendants urge, to mean that there could be no transfer of the rights of any member without action by the directors. On the other hand, it might be interpreted as governing only the rights of those who might join the corporation after adoption of the by-law and as providing that such persons, upon becoming members, would acquire only non-transferable membership rights. We cannot hold that the by-law must as a matter of law be construed in the manner urged by defendants, and, if this case goes to trial, the parties should be entitled to produce extrinsic evidence in support of their respective interpretations.

[10, 11] The next question is whether the complaint shows on its face that any membership rights which Curtin or Mary may have had were terminated when the account was closed by Mary in 1914. A by-law adopted in 1868 provides in part: "No one shall be deemed a member whose account is once closed." Since this by-law was adopted after Curtin became a member it would not be enforceable against him, in the absence of his consent, if it would unreasonably deprive him of his membership rights. See People's Home Savings Bank v. Superior Court, 104 Cal. 649, 652, 38 P. 452, 29 L.R.A. 844; Lindsay-Strathmore Irrigation District v. Wutchumna Water Co., 111 Cal.App. 688, 701–702, 296 P. 933; Mancini v. Patrizi, 87 Cal.App. 435, 439–440, 262 P. 375; State v. San Francisco Sav. etc. Soc., 66 Cal.App. 53, 57–58, 225 P. 309; Bornstein v. District Grand Lodge No. 4, 2 Cal.App. 624, 628, 84 P. 271. The reasonableness of the by-law must be considered in the light of all the circumstances, including such matters as the purposes for which the corporation was organized and the extent of the rights of the particular member involved. Hibernia's certificate of incorporation provides that "the object for which it is formed is that of aggregating the funds and savings of the members of said Corporation and of others, and of preserving and safely investing the same for their common benefit." It may be that it was considered necessary to require members to retain their accounts and deposits with Hibernia in order to promote the success of the bank in accordance with the purposes for which it was organized. However, these are matters which must be determined by the trier of fact in the light of all of the evidence.

Defendants assert that Curtin ratified the by-laws in question. It appears that by an agreement signed subsequent to August 29, 1864, and prior to January 18, 1871, Curtin ratified the reorganization proceedings of 1864 and agreed to become a member of Hibernia as it existed under the act of 1862. This agreement was executed pursuant to a by-law adopted September 29, 1864, which provided that all persons who were members on August 29, 1864, shall be deemed members and that "the signatures of such persons to an agreement on their part to become members of this corporation, and ratifying and confirming the incorporation of [Hibernia] * * * shall be procured as speedily as may be." The exact language of the agreement does not appear in the record, and plaintiffs' allegations regarding its substance can be construed as referring only to the reorganization under the 1862 act as amended in 1864 and not to subsequent steps taken by the new corporation such as the adoption of by-laws. The allegation that Curtin agreed to become a member of Hibernia "as it existed under said act" does not necessarily mean anything more than that he was agreeing to the reorganization under that particular statute rather than to corporate existence of some other type. Defendants, of course, are entitled to show by the language of the agreement or by other evidence that Curtin ratified the by-laws, but the question cannot be resolved on demurrer.

It is obvious from what has been said that serious questions are presented as to what, if any, rights passed to Mary, but we cannot hold as a matter of law that the allegations relied upon by defendants with respect to the by-laws compel us to disregard the general allegations that Curtin's membership rights continued and passed to Mary on the transfer of his account or upon his death.

Is the 1946 Judgment Res Judicata?

[12] The 1946 judgment purported to be in rem and to be binding upon all persons having any claim to membership rights, which would include Mary, who was then alive, and her successors. The judgment in effect determined that Mary and her successors had no membership rights. The complaint is thus subject to demurrer on the ground of res judicata unless the additional facts alleged will, as plaintiffs claim, justify setting that judgment aside. Plaintiffs assert that the complaint alleges facts which, although not disclosed by the judgment roll of the prior action, are sufficient to show that the 1946 judgment was obtained without proper service of process and by extrinsic fraud. It is immaterial, in connection with this question, whether the present action be regarded as primarily one for declaratory relief, with the prayer to set aside the prior judgment as merely incidental, or whether, as defendants assert, this is essentially a suit to set aside that judgment. In either event plaintiffs, having disclosed the existence of the prior judgment, are barred unless they plead and prove sufficient facts to overcome the judgment. It should be kept in mind that we are not concerned here with a judgment which is void on its face and therefore subject to collateral attack.

[13] Ordinarily equity will not interfere with a judgment on the ground of extrinsic fraud or mistake unless the one whose interests were infringed can present a meritorious case; the plaintiff must plead and prove facts from which it appears, at least prima facie, that if the judgment were set aside and the proceedings were reopened, a different result would probably follow. Olivera v. Grace, 19 Cal.2d 570, 578–579, 122 P.2d 564, 140 A.L.R. 1328; Kupfer v. MacDonald, 19 Cal.2d 566, 568–569, 122 P.2d 271; Wattson v. Dillon, 6 Cal.2d 33, 43, 56 P.2d 220; Karlslyst v. Frazier, 213 Cal. 377, 380, 2 P.2d 362; Frost v. Hanscome, 198 Cal. 550, 559, 246 P. 53; Hite v. Mercantile Trust Co., 156 Cal. 765, 768, 106 P. 102; see Hallett v. Slaughter, 22 Cal.2d 552, 557–558, 140 P.2d 3; Bell v. Thompson, 147 Cal. 689, 692–694, 82 P. 327; Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 410, 417–418, 77 P. 1007. This rule has been applied in a number of cases involving proceedings in equity to set aside a judgment upon the ground that summons had not been served or that service was in some manner defective. Swallow v. Tungsten Products Co., 205 Cal. 207, 220, 270 P. 366; Lee v. Colquhoun, 175 Cal. 16, 17, 164 P. 894; Matson v. John Batto & Sons, 173 Cal. 800, 801, 161 P. 1144; Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 138, 141 et seq.; Brozey v. Alesen, 116 Cal.App. 641, 642, 3 P.2d 68; Hickey v. Algie, 51 Cal.App. 595, 599–600, 197 P. 359; see Bell v. Thompson, 147 Cal. 689, 692–693, 82 P. 327; Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 410, 417–418, 77 P. 1007; Young v. Barker, 83 Cal.App.2d 654, 657, 189 P.2d 521. In order to meet the meritorious case requirement the complaint must allege that plaintiffs have membership rights in Hibernia, and, as we have seen, the allegations in this respect are sufficient against a general demurrer. We therefore assume, for the purposes of this discussion, that the membership rights were transferable and that they survived the closing of the account; we also assume that the action is not barred by the statute of limitations.

In considering the effect of the 1946 judgment we must determine whether Hibernia complied with section 29a of the Bank Act[1] in that it did not name Mary, who was then alive, as a defendant or personally serve her with process. The section provides that actions brought thereunder shall include as defendants all persons appearing upon the records of the corporation as members, and all other persons who are known to the plaintiff to claim to be members, and other persons unknown claiming any right of membership or any interest in the property or assets of the corporation. A copy of the summons, which shall contain the names of the parties and a reference to all other persons unknown claiming any right to membership, is to be posted and recorded. Personal service is required to be made upon each defendant residing in this state whose place of residence is known to the plaintiff. A copy of the summons and complaint must be mailed to each of the known defendants who reside out of the state, at their place of residence, if known, and also to each of the known defendants, wherever residing, whose residences are unknown to plaintiff, addressed to them at the county seat of the county or city and county where the action is commenced.

[14] We are of the opinion that section 29a, when properly construed, requires personal service not only upon California members of known address whose names actually appear upon the records of the corporation but also upon persons of known address residing in California who are successors of such members, provided the corporation is aware, or could by the exercise of reasonable diligence discover, that they are successors. While the section, in designating who must be included as defendants, does not expressly refer to persons known by the corporation to be successors of members, it requires the inclusion of all persons appearing on the records of the corporation as members and, if the corporation has actual knowledge that a person is the successor of a member whose name so appears, the successor should be treated as though his name likewise appears on the books as a member. Any other construction of the section would be unreasonable. If such were not the rule, a corporation could deliberately take advantage of and profit at the expense of a successor-member whose name had not been placed upon the books but whose interest was known to the corporation. There is nothing in the statute indicating that personal service need not be made if the defendant does not know or claim that he is a member, and where the corporation knows of the successor's interest, its duty should not be altered because of the fact, as is alleged with respect to Mary, that the successor is unaware of his rights in the company. The successor of a member known by the corporation to be such but whose name has not formally been placed in the books is entitled to the same consideration as the member whose name is in the books.

These principles are applicable not only to a member's successor who is known to

1. Section 29a of the Bank Act, Stats.1945, p. 1017, was enacted in 1945 and now appears with slight changes as sections 671.1 to 671.17 of the Financial Code. It provides that any domestic corporation, which has no capital stock and has been carrying on a banking business for 20 years, may file a verified complaint to determine the persons entitled to membership in the corporation or to any right or interest in its property or assets. The statute also provides for various methods of service of summons, including service by publication against all unknown claimants, and that the judgment shall be conclusive against all persons and shall have the effect of a judgment in rem.

the corporation but also to a successor who is unknown but who could and should be discovered by the company upon a reasonably diligent search. A close analogy in support of this construction of section 29a is afforded by Title & Document Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 289, 317–318, 88 P. 356, 8 L.R.A.,N.S., 682. The statute there involved authorized an in rem proceeding to establish and quiet title to property whenever public records were destroyed, and it provided, among other things, for personal service upon adverse claimants when the plaintiffs knew or had been informed of them. The court said that the evident purpose was to secure, so far as possible, actual notice of the proceeding to all known claimants, and that where a statute is careful to provide for actual notice to the known claimants, it should not be construed as intended to permit a plaintiff to willfully or negligently close his eyes to the means of knowledge and thus secure a decree by publication and posting alone as against persons whose identity he might have learned by the use of due effort. On the basis of this reasoning the court held that the statute, properly construed, imposed upon the plaintiff the duty of inquiry as to the names and residences of all persons who might claim an adverse interest in the property and that it required the plaintiff to designate and serve all persons whom, with reasonable diligence, he could ascertain to be claimants. Moreover, the rule of construction adopted in the Kerrigan case, which did not involve a fiduciary relationship, would seem particularly applicable to statutes dealing with a corporation and its members where, as we shall see, fiduciary obligations are involved.

Section 29a, when construed in the manner set forth above, meets the requirements of due process not only as to persons who must be personally served but also as to persons who cannot reasonably or practicably be given personal service and who are given substituted service under the various provisions for mailing, publication, and posting. Title & Document Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 289, 306, 318, 88 P. 356; cf. Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 70 S.Ct. 652, 94 L.Ed. 865.

[15] The allegations of the complaint are sufficient to show that Mary was entitled to personal service in the proceedings under section 29a leading to the 1946 judgment. Facts disclosing Curtin's membership appeared on the records of Hibernia, which knew that Curtin died in 1914 and that upon his death "his successors" became entitled to membership. Hibernia also knew the residence of Mary, who lived in California throughout her entire lifetime. Mary should have been named in the prior action and given personal service provided Hibernia knew, or with reasonable diligence could have learned, that Mary was Curtin's successor. In this connection the complaint states that the events relating to the probate of Curtin's estate in Santa Clara County and its distribution to Mary were known to Hibernia or could have been ascertained by inspection of Hibernia's records and the records of the superior court in that county.

[16] We do not mean to suggest that a corporation desiring to avail itself of the procedure authorized by section 29a must make a complete search of all known possible sources of information in order to notify its members and their successors, such as, for example, examination of the probate records of all the counties of the state. Only a reasonable investigation is required, and its extent will necessarily depend upon the circumstances of each situation, including such matters as the facts known to the corporation and the value of the membership involved. We cannot hold as a matter of law that Hibernia had no duty to make inquiries at the last known address of a member known to have died, or to examine the probate records at the county seat of the place where the member resided or died, or to make an inquiry concerning the whereabouts of a known assignee of a deposit account.

[17–19] Failure to comply with the statutory provisions constitutes grounds for the vacation of the judgment. A suit in equity instituted for the purpose of vacating a judgment is a direct attack. Caldwell v. Taylor, 218 Cal. 471, 475, 23 P.2d 758, 88 A.L.R. 1194; Bacon v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 477, 486, 89 P. 317; Campbell-Kawannanakoa v. Campbell, 152 Cal. 201, 209, 92 P. 184; Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 410, 415, 77 P. 1007; Turner v. Milstein, 103 Cal.App.2d 651, 655, 230 P.2d 25. Such an attack may be made upon the ground of extrinsic fraud where it appears that there was a willful failure to give the required service or that willfully false affidavits of service were filed. Bernhard v. Waring, 213 Cal. 175, 179–181, 2 P.2d 32; Rivieccio v. Bothan, 27 Cal.2d 621, 624, 165 P.2d 677; Wool v. Scott, 140 Cal.App.2d 835, 841 et seq., 296 P.2d 17; City of Los Angeles v. Morgan, 105 Cal.App.2d 726, 730–731, 234 P.2d 319; Turner v. Milstein, 103 Cal.App.2d 651, 654–655, 230 P.2d 25; Sipe v. McKenna, 88 Cal.App.2d 1001, 1005, 200 P.2d 61; cf. Aldrich v. Aldrich, 203 Cal. 433, 437 et seq., 264 P. 754. A direct attack has also been allowed in an independent action in equity where there has been a failure to exercise the degree of diligence required by law in connection with personal service, Stern v. Judson, 163 Cal. 726, 728 et seq., 127 P. 38; Rowe v. Silbaugh, 107 Wash. 518, 182 P. 576, 577, where false recitals of service were the result of fraud, negligence, or mistake, Martin v. Parsons, 49 Cal. 94, 100, and where failure to name a person as a party was the result of mistake. Boyle v. Boyle, 97 Cal.App. 703, 706–707, 276 P. 118. These cases are in accord with the general principles followed in recent decisions of this court holding that extrinsic mistake may be a ground for vacation of a judgment by an independent action in equity where there has been no fair adversary trial. Olivera v. Grace, 19 Cal.2d 570, 578, 122 P.2d 564, 140 A.L.R. 1328; Hallett v. Slaughter, 22 Cal.2d 552, 557, 140 P.2d 3. The allegations are sufficient to bring the case within these principles. Hibernia knew of Curtin's membership, of his death leaving successors, and of Mary's address. Also, as we have seen, the complaint is sufficient to show that Hibernia either knew or, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, could have discovered that Mary was Curtin's successor.

Is the Cause of Action Barred by the Statute of Limitations?

[20–23] The general rules with respect to the statute of limitations in this type of action are set forth in Maguire v. Hibernia S. & L. Soc., 23 Cal.2d 719, 733 et seq., 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062, where we stated that, if lapse of time can bar an action by a member or stockholder to establish his interest in a corporation, the statutory period does not commence to run until the stockholder has knowledge or notice that his rights are denied or that his status is repudiated or controverted by the corporation. Upon this basis we held that the complaint did not show on its face that the alleged causes of action were barred by the statute of limitations or by laches. The underlying theory is that a corporation holds its property in trust for the benefit of its shareholders and occupies a fiduciary position with respect to them; as a result the shareholder is entitled to assume that the corporation will not assert any adverse claim against him. See Yeaman v. Galveston City Co., 106 Tex. 389, 167 S.W. 710, 723–724; Mountain Waterworks Const. Co. v. Holme, 49 Colo. 412, 113 P. 501, 510; Owingsville & Mt. S. Turnpike Road Co. v. Bondurant's Adm'r, 107 Ky. 505, 54 S.W. 718, 719; Holly Sugar Corp. v. Wilson, 101 Colo. 511, 75 P.2d 149, 152–153; Sharon v. Kansas City Granite & Monument Co., 233 Mo.App. 547, 125 S.W.2d 959, 963; cf. MacDermot v. Hayes, 175 Cal. 95, 114–115, 170 P. 616; Cooper v. Spring Valley Water Co., 171 Cal. 158, 162, 153 P. 936; Hobbs v. Tom Reed Gold Min. Co., 164 Cal. 497, 499, 129 P. 781, 43 L.R.A.,N.S., 1112. In cases involving fraud or mistake the statute commences to run when the plaintiff discovers he has a cause of action or, through the use of reasonable diligence, should have discovered it. See Stafford v. Shultz, 42 Cal.2d 767, 776, 270 P.2d 1. However, a fiduciary has a duty to make a full and fair disclosure of all facts which materially affect the rights and interest of the parties, and, where a fiduciary relationship exists, facts which would ordinarily require investigation may not excite suspicion. Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co., 26 Cal.2d 412, 440, 159 P.2d 958; see Schaefer v. Berinstein, 140 Cal.App.2d 278, 296, 295 P.2d 113. Mary was, of course, bound by facts known to Curtin, and plaintiffs are bound by everything Curtin or Mary knew.

Defendants contend that, even if the by-laws adopted in and after 1864 did not have the effect of terminating membership rights or making such rights nontransferable, they nevertheless amounted to a repudiation of any claim that membership rights could pass by descent or assignment or could survive the closing of Curtin's deposit account. The allegations of the complaint are uncertain and obviously incomplete as to what transpired with respect to these by-laws, but the facts alleged do not establish as a matter of law that Curtin or Mary or plaintiffs knew or should have known that the adoption of the by-laws or any action taken pursuant to them amounted to a repudiation of membership rights acquired by Curtin.

[24] The 1945 action, of course, repudiated any claims to membership rights which Mary may have had, but the complaint alleges that neither Mary nor any of the plaintiffs had any knowledge of the action prior to the death of Mary in January 1951. Defendants argue, however, that the statute commenced to run immediately upon the rendition of the judgment in 1946 and that the running of the statute did not depend upon knowledge of the judgment. We do not agree. The applicable statute is subdivision 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides for a three-year limitation in actions on the ground of fraud or mistake and states that the cause of action shall not be deemed to have accrued until the aggrieved party has discovered the facts constituting the fraud or mistake. Cf. Anglo Calif. Trust Co. v. Kelley, 117 Cal.App. 692, 695–696, 4 P.2d 604.

[25] It is also claimed that the proceedings taken in 1947 caused the statute of limitations to run against any membership rights which Mary obtained from Curtin. In that year the 15 defendants designated in the 1946 judgment as the sole persons entitled to membership took steps to convert Hibernia into a stock corporation, terminate the reserve fund and substitute for it capital stock together with surplus, change the name of the corporation to The Hibernia Bank, and issue to these 15 defendants shares of stock in lieu of their interest in the reserve fund and other assets of the corporation. Plaintiffs allege that, contrary to the Bank Act,[2] a majority of the members were not present at the meeting in which these changes were authorized, that notice of the meeting was not mailed to all members but only to the 15 persons referred to above, and that Mary was not present at the meeting and had no knowledge thereof. Defendants take the position that these allegations show an actual invasion which constituted a conversion. Ordinarily the statute of limitations applying in conversion actions, Code Civ.Proc., § 388, subd. 3, begins to run from the date of the conversion even though the injured person is ignorant of his rights. First National Bk. v. Thompson, 60 Cal.App.2d 79, 83, 140 P.2d 75; Coy v. E. F. Hutton & Co., 44 Cal.App.2d 386, 389–391, 112 P.2d 639; Rose v. Dunk-Harbison Co., 7 Cal.App.2d 502, 505–506, 46 P. 2d 242. This rule, however, is not absolute; for example, where there has been a fraudulent concealment of the facts the statute of limitations does not commence to run until the aggrieved party discovers or ought to have discovered the existence of the cause of action for conversion. Bartlett v. Pacific Nat. Bank, 110 Cal.App. 2d 683, 694, 244 P.2d 91; see Rose v. Dunk-Harbison Co., 7 Cal.App.2d 502, 505, 46 P.

2. Section 29 of the Bank Act, now Fin. Code, § 670, provides that banking corporations having no capital stock may elect to have such stock.

2d 242; 2 Wood on Limitations (4th ed., 1916) 858–859; cf. Pashley v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 25 Cal.2d 226, 229, 153 P.2d 325.

[26, 27] Since a fiduciary has a duty to make a full disclosure of facts which materially affect the rights of the parties, it seems obvious that any act by him amounting to a conversion of trust property is akin to a fraudulent concealment. Cf. Airola v. Gorham, 56 Cal.App.2d 42, 45–47, 54, 133 P.2d 78 [breach of trust by secret delivery of deed to third person]; Bell v. Bayly Bros., 53 Cal.App.2d 149, 157, 127 P.2d 662. This is in accord with statements in many decisions that statutes of limitation do not begin to run against an action for breach of a voluntary trust until there has been a repudiation which is brought home to the beneficiary. See In re Estate of Clary, 203 Cal. 335, 341–342, 264 P. 242; Hermosa Beach Land & Water Co. v. Law Credit Co., 175 Cal. 493, 496, 166 P. 22; Cortelyou v. Imperial Land Co., 166 Cal. 14, 20, 134 P. 981; Taylor v. Morris, 163 Cal. 717, 725, 127 P. 66; Elizalde v. Murphy, 163 Cal. 681, 685, 126 P. 978; Luco v. De Toro, 91 Cal. 405, 416, 18 P. 866, 27 P. 1082; Alton v. Rogers, 127 Cal.App.2d 667, 679, 274 P.2d 487; Mulli v. Mulli, 105 Cal.App.2d 68, 74–75, 232 P.2d 556; Kornbau v. Evans, 66 Cal. App.2d 677, 683–684, 152 P.2d 651. Similar principles were followed in Maguire v. Hibernia S. & L. Soc., supra, 23 Cal.2d 719, 735, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062. The complaint alleges that Mary had no knowledge of the events which took place in 1947. In view of the allegations indicating that a fiduciary relationship existed, the fact that a document disclosing these events was a matter of public record filed with the Secretary of State cannot alone cause the statute to run. Cf. Seeger v. Odell, 18 Cal.2d 409, 414–415, 115 P.2d 977, 136 A.L.R. 1291; Stoll v. Selander, 81 Cal.App.2d 286, 292, 183 P.2d 935.

[28] The complaint does not show that the statute of limitations commenced to run as the result of the proceedings for extension of corporate existence in 1909. The documents filed in that year, while public records and constructive notice for certain purposes, are not sufficient to start the running of the statute in favor of the fiduciary as to those of its members who had no knowledge of them. The complaint alleges that neither Curtin nor Mary had any knowledge of these proceedings.

[29] It does not follow from the fact that there may have been no fiduciary relationship between Mary and the 15 individual defendants that the statute has run in their favor. The complaint alleges that the individual defendants received their shares of stock in 1947 with full knowledge of, and subject to, the rights of Curtin and his successors as members. Accordingly, we must assume that these defendants had notice of any breach of fiduciary duty or trust upon the part of the corporation. In analogous situations it has been held that, if a trustee of an express trust improperly transfers trust property to a third person who has knowledge that the transfer is in breach of trust, the statute of limitations does not run on the beneficiary's action against the third person until such time as the beneficiary learns of the breach of trust or of facts sufficient to arouse his suspicion. Schofield v. Cleveland Trust Co., 149 Ohio St. 133, 78 N.E.2d 167, 171; Davidson v. Stagg, 94 Mont. 272, 22 P.2d 152, 154–155; Pennsylvania Co. for Ins. on Lives, etc. v. Ninth Bank & Trust Co., 306 Pa. 148, 158 A. 251, 253; In re Marshall's Estate, 138 Pa. 285, 22 A. 24, 26–67; Baldwin v. Taplin, 113 Vt. 291, 34 A.2d 117, 121–122; Hall v. Windsor Savings Bank, 97 Vt. 125, 121 A. 582, 585, 124 A. 593, 596; American Nat. Bank of Enid v. Crews, 191 Okl. 53, 126 P.2d 733, 742, 743; State Bank & Trust Co. v. Commercial Trust & Sav. Bank, 300 Ill. App. 435, 21 N.E.2d 157; see Rest., Trusts, § 327, comments i, k, Illus. 3; 3 Scott on Trusts (2d ed. 1956), § 327.2, p. 2378. Defendants point to several California decisions which declare, in broad general terms, that where an involuntary trust is raised by operation of law the statute of limitations commences to run immediately and no repudiation is necessary. See Kroger v. Truitt, 27 Cal.2d 288, 293, 163 P.2d 735; Wrightson v. Dougherty, 5 Cal.2d 257, 264, 54 P.2d 13; Benoist v. Benoist, 178 Cal. 234, 236–237, 172 P. 1109; Norton v. Bassett, 154 Cal. 411, 416, 97 P. 894; Broder v. Conklin, 121 Cal. 282, 288, 53 P. 699. In none of these cases, however, did it appear that the beneficiary of the trust lacked knowledge of the transfer for a sufficient period to prevent the statute from being a bar. The distinction is material because the beneficiary's lack of knowledge of the breach of trust is the basis for tolling the statute, and, accordingly, the California cases cited above are not controlling here.

[30–32] Plaintiffs must allege and prove facts showing the time and surrounding circumstances of the discovery of the cause of action upon which they rely. Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co., 26 Cal.2d 412, 441–443, 159 P.2d 958. The purpose of this requirement is to afford the court a means of determining whether or not the discovery of the asserted invasion was made within the time alleged, that is, whether plaintiffs actually learned something they did not know before. In applying this rule it is important to recognize the distinction between cases where a plaintiff is under a duty to inquire and those in which he has no such duty until he has notice of facts sufficient to arouse the suspicions of a reasonable man. Where there is no such duty, for example, because of the existence of a fiduciary relationship, a plaintiff need not disprove that an earlier discovery could have been made upon a diligent inquiry but need show only that he made an actual discovery of hitherto unknown information within the statutory period before filing the action. Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co., 26 Cal.2d 412, 442, 159 P.2d 958. The circumstances of the discovery which, according to the complaint, was made within two years prior to the filing of the action are sufficiently alleged to meet the requirements of the rule set forth above.

Conclusion.

The court erred in sustaining the general demurrer.

The judgment is reversed.

I agree with the majority that "it is unnecessary for the court to make a declaration of rights" if the complaint shows on its face "that the entire controversy has been settled by a prior judgment." My disagreement is based upon my view that plaintiffs' complaint does show on its face that the entire controversy has been settled by the final judgment in the action brought by the bank in 1945.

It appears that neither plaintiffs nor their predecessors had any dealings with the bank after 1914. In April of that year Curtin assigned his account to Mary, who thereupon closed the account by withdrawing the entire balance of $363.54. Curtin thereafter died in 1914 and Mary died in 1951. Plaintiffs' present claim to alleged membership rights is based solely upon such claim as they may have as successors in interest of Curtin and Mary.

When the account was assigned and closed in 1914, the by-laws of the bank then provided, and had provided for approximately fifty years, that "Membership shall not pass with the ownership of moneys deposited * * *"; that persons other than the original members might become members but only by action of the board of directors "and not otherwise"; and that "[n]o one shall be deemed a member whose account is once closed." Regardless of plaintiffs' failure to allege whether Curtin did or did not consent to the quoted by-laws, and regardless of plaintiffs' general, conclusionary allegations regarding membership rights, there can be no doubt that plaintiffs' specific allegations concerning the by-laws show that neither Curtin nor Mary, following the assignment and the closing of the account, was among the "persons appearing and designated upon the books and records of the corporation as members therein, * * *." Bank Act, § 29a, Stat.1945, p. 1017.

Nor were plaintiffs persons "known to the [bank] to claim to be members therein" for they allege, in their attempt to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations, that neither Curtin nor Mary knew of any such claim. If plaintiffs' predecessors were not known to themselves "to claim" membership, they could not have been known to the bank "to claim" to be members. The verb "claim" means "To ask for, or seek to obtain, by virtue of authority, right, or supposed right; to demand as due." (Webster's New Inter. Dict., Second Ed.) It carries a connotation of an affirmative assertion of a supposed right. Since plaintiffs alleged that neither Curtin nor Mary knew of any supposed right, they of course do not allege that Curtin or Mary ever affirmatively asserted, or made known a claim to, any supposed right.

It follows that when the bank brought its action in 1945, under section 29a of the Bank Act, neither Curtin nor Mary was among the persons required by the act to be personally named or served as defendants. They and their successors are nevertheless barred as they were among the "other persons unknown" whose claims, if any, were foreclosed by the judgment in rem which was entered in that action. I find nothing in Title & Document Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 289, 88 P. 356, 8 L.R.A., N.S., 682, or Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 70 S.Ct. 652, 94 L.Ed. 865, which points to a contrary conclusion here.

I therefore conclude that the trial court properly sustained the general demurrer to plaintiffs' complaint and entered judgment in favor of defendants. In view of this conclusion, it is unnecessary to discuss defendants' further contention that plaintiffs' belated claim is barred by the statute of limitations.

For the reasons stated, I would affirm the judgment.

WATSONVILLE COMMUNITY HOSPITAL et al., Defendants and Respondents.

S. F. 19485.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

Dec. 21, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 16, 1957.

Action for damages, brought by plaintiff in whose abdomen a Kelly clamp had been left during an operation. The Superior Court, Santa Cruz County, James L. Atteridge, J., rendered a judgment of nonsuit as to one surgeon, a nurse and a hospital, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that evidence elicited by plaintiff from adverse witnesses could overcome res ipsa loquitur inference upon which plaintiff relied; and held that such inference had in fact been overcome as a matter of law, insofar as the one surgeon was involved; but held that it could not be said as a matter of law that the hospital and nurse had not been negligent.

Affirmed as to one defendant and reversed as to others.

Shenk, J., dissented, and Carter, J., dissented in part.

Opinion, 291 P.2d 496, vacated.

1. Physicians and Surgeons ⇐18(6)

When a foreign object is unintentionally left in a patient's abdomen, it is ordinarily result of negligence of someone, and where patient receives unusual injuries while unconscious, all of persons who had any control over his body or instrumentalities which might have caused injuries may properly be called upon to meet inference of negligence by giving an explanation of their conduct.

2. Negligence ⇐121(2)

Same test is applicable in determining when res ipsa loquitur inference is dispelled as a matter of law as in deciding when any other inference is conclusively rebutted.

3. Trial ⇐139(1)

Nonsuit may be granted only when, disregarding conflicting evidence, giving to plaintiff's evidence all of value to which it is legally entitled, and indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, court can properly determine that there was no substantial evidence to support verdict in favor of plaintiff.

4. Trial ⇐142

Where evidence raises inference that a fact exists, and either party produces evidence, of nonexistence of fact, that is clear, positive, uncontradicted and of such a nature that it cannot rationally be disbelieved, nonexistence of fact is established as a matter of law; and, in these circumstances, inference is dispelled as a matter of law, and, if fact inferred is necessary to establish an essential element of plaintiff's case, a nonsuit or directed verdict is proper.

Rule relating to elicitation of testimony from adverse party treats evidence thus obtained as testimony obtained under cross-examination of adverse party's witnesses; and provision therein that party calling adverse witness shall not be bound by his testimony does not mean that such testimony may not be given its proper weight, but merely that party calling such witness shall not be concluded from rebutting testimony or from impeaching witness. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 2055.

6. Evidence ⇐89

As a general rule, a presumption can only be rebutted as a matter of law by evidence of party relying upon it, whereas an inference can also be rebutted by conclusive evidence of opposite party.

7. Evidence ⇐591

Evidence elicited from adverse witness may be used to dispel inference upon which plaintiff relies, provided evidence is clear, positive, uncontradicted and of such a nature that it cannot rationally be disbelieved. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 2055.

8. Evidence ⇐588, 589

A witness may be disbelieved if there is any rational ground for doing so, and interest of party in result of case will, in some circumstances, justify trier of fact in disregarding his testimony; but there are situations where interest of party in obtaining judgment favorable to himself will not render all of his testimony subject to disbelief.

9. Physicians and Surgeons ⇐18(6)

In action for damages, brought by plaintiff in whose abdomen a Kelly clamp had been left during an operation, res ipsa loquitur inference, raised against physician who had assisted in operation, was dispelled as a matter of law by testimony of his codefendants that he had not been responsible for leaving clamp in plaintiff's abdomen.

10. Evidence ⇐20(1)

It is a matter of common knowledge that no special skill is required in counting instruments.

11. Physicians and Surgeons ⇐18(8)

Proof of practice or custom of hospital nurses in community in matter of counting clamps is some evidence of what should be done and can assist in determination of what constitutes due care, but it does not conclusively establish standard of care.

12. Negligence ⇐5

General negligence cannot be excused on ground that others in same locality practice same kind of negligence.

13. Physicians and Surgeons ⇐18(9)

In action for damages, brought by plaintiff in whose abdomen a Kelly clamp had been left during an operation, it could not be said as a matter of law that there had been no duty on part of hospital and nurses to keep an instrument count in order to assist surgeons in determining whether all of instruments used had been removed from patient before final closure.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

A scissors-shaped metal instrument about six inches long, called a Kelly clamp, was left in plaintiff's abdomen when an operation was performed on her at defendant hospital. The operation was commenced by Doctors Lacy and Slegal. Kay Pogatschnik, who was an employee of the hospital, acted as surgical nurse. Doctor Eiskamp assisted in a part of the operation at the request of Doctor Lacy. Plaintiff was unconscious during the entire operation, which lasted approximately five hours. She was in considerable pain during the ten days she remained in the hospital following the operation, and the pain persisted for several months after she returned home. X-ray pictures taken about six months after the operation revealed a clamp lodged in the upper right quadrant of her abdomen. The clamp was removed, and plaintiff brought this action to recover damages from the hospital, the doctors and the surgical nurse. At the close of plaintiff's case motions for nonsuit were granted as to Eiskamp, Pogatschnik and the hospital, and plaintiff has appealed from the ensuing judgment.[1]

The questions presented are whether an inference of negligence was raised under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur and whether, if such an inference arose, it was dispelled as a matter of law.

Evelyn Craig, who was superintendent of the hospital, and defendants Lacy, Slegal and Eiskamp were called by plaintiff to testify under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that in a civil action a party may call and examine an adverse party.

The testimony of Lacy, who was in charge of the operation, may be summarized as follows: He scheduled the operation after deciding that an exploratory examination of the upper right quadrant of plaintiff's abdomen should be made. The hospital assigned Pogatschnik to act as surgical nurse, furnished all equipment and instruments, and charged plaintiff for the use of the room and for the services of the nurse. The operation began with Lacy and Slegal making an incision from plaintiff's navel upwards, exposing her gall bladder, which was diseased.

About forty minutes after the operation was begun, Lacy requested Eiskamp, who had been performing surgery in another part of the hospital, to look at plaintiff's gall bladder. Eiskamp made a visual inspection and recommended that the gall bladder be removed. After Eiskamp left the room, Lacy and Slegal discovered a "mass" in the sigmoid colon, which appeared to be cancerous. Lacy again consulted Eiskamp, who agreed that the mass should be removed and offered to help. The doctors decided not to operate on the gall bladder, and, while Lacy began to close the upper half of the incision, Eiskamp and Slegal prepared to remove the mass, which was in the lower left quadrant. None of Eiskamp's work was performed in the upper portion of plaintiff's abdomen, and he left the room before final closure of the incision. During the operation Lacy and Slegal used about 18 Kelly clamps which are uncurved scissors-shaped instruments. Eiskamp did not use anything but curved clamps. Lacy paid Slegal his fee but never received a bill from Eiskamp for his services.

Lacy further testified that the surgical nurse keeps a set of instruments on a tray very close to the surgical field and that one of her principal functions is to hand instruments to the doctors and take them back from him. No request for an instrument count was made by Lacy. The practice of hospitals generally is to maintain a sponge count before closure of an incision and to account for the needles used in suturing. This practice is followed by the nurses at defendant hospital.

Slegal's testimony substantially confirmed that of Lacy as to the sequence of events in the operating room. He said that Eiskamp did not take part in closing the upper portion of the incision and left before final closure of the abdomen.

Eiskamp testified that no Kelly clamps were used in his part of the operation, that he "had nothing to do with the gall bladder" and that in order to speed the operation he worked with Slegal on the tumor in the lower left quadrant of the abdomen.

Superintendent Craig testified that surgical instruments are furnished by the hospital, that they are placed in sterile packs containing a specified number and that she believed there are 18 Kelly clamps in a pack. After an operation all instruments are taken directly from the operating room, cleaned and reassembled into packages by a nurse or some other hospital employee. At the time of plaintiff's operation no one person was designated as being responsible for collecting and reassembling the instruments, and none of the hospital employees reported that any instrument was missing. Hospitals in the area "have no established practice of instrument counting either before or after surgery." Sponges and needles are usually counted, and an instrument count is made if requested by the surgeon.

[1, 2] When a foreign object is unintentionally left in a patient's abdomen it is ordinarily the result of the negligence of someone. Ales v. Ryan, 8 Cal.2d 82, 64 P. 2d 409. And where a patient receives unusual injuries while unconscious, all of the persons who had any control over his body or the instrumentalities which might have caused the injuries may properly be called upon to meet the inference of negligence by giving an explanation of their conduct. Ybarra v. Spangard, 25 Cal.2d 486, 154 P.2d 687, 162 A.L.R. 1258. The evidence is sufficient to raise an inference of negligence under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur as to Eiskamp, Pogatschnik and the hospital. Eiskamp assisted in the operation; at one time or another during the operation the control of the instrument left in plaintiff's body was in the hands of the nurse; the hospital employed the nurse and furnished and reassembled the instruments. This places upon them the burden of initial explanation. Ybarra v. Spangard, supra.

[3, 4] Plaintiff contends that the inference of res ipsa loquitur was not dispelled as a matter of law and that therefore the court erred in granting the motion for a nonsuit. The same test is applicable in determining when the res ipsa loquitur inference is dispelled as a matter of law as in deciding when any other inference is conclusively rebutted. See Rose v. Melody Lane, 39 Cal.2d 481, 487, 247 P.2d 335; Leet v. Union Pac. R. R. Co., 25 Cal.2d 605, 621–622, 155 P.2d 42, 158 A.L.R. 1008. It has long been the rule in this state that a nonsuit may be granted only when, disregarding conflicting evidence, giving to the plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, and indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the court properly determines that there is no substantial evidence to support a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. Seneris v. Haas, 45 Cal.2d 811, 821, 291 P.2d 915; In re Estate of Caspar, 172 Cal. 147, 150, 155 P. 631. There is, however, a qualification on this broad general rule. It is settled that where the evidence raises an inference that a fact exists, and either party produces evidence of the nonexistence of the fact that is clear, positive, uncontradicted and of such a nature that it cannot rationally be disbelieved, the nonexistence of the fact is established as a matter of law. See Blank v. Coffin, 20 Cal.2d 457, 461, 126 P.2d 868. In these circumstances the inference is dispelled as a matter of law, and, if the fact inferred is necessary to establish an essential element of the plaintiff's case, a nonsuit or directed verdict is proper. Engstrom v. Auburn Auto. Sales Corp., 11 Cal. 2d 64, 77 P.2d 1059 [directed verdict]; Crouch v. Gilmore Oil Co., Ltd., 5 Cal.2d 330, 54 P.2d 709 [nonsuit]; Ceranski v. Muensch, 60 Cal.App.2d 751, 141 P.2d 750 [directed verdict]; Johnston v. Black Company, 33 Cal.App.2d 363, 91 P.2d 921 [insufficiency of evidence].

[5–7] The testimony which defendants claim dispels the inference of res ipsa loquitur as a matter of law was elicited from witnesses called under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure,[2] and

2. Section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "A party to the record of any civil action or proceeding or a person for whose immediate benefit such plaintiff contends that such evidence cannot be used in ruling on a nonsuit to dispel an inference on which plaintiff relies. Section 2055 provides in effect that a party to a civil action may be examined as if under cross-examination by the adverse party and that the party examining such witness shall not be bound by the witness's testimony and may rebut it by other evidence. Before section 2055 was enacted, a litigant who called an adverse party to testify found that the witness was treated as his own and that his examination was restricted by the rules applicable to direct examination. See Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., 212 Cal. 540, 555, 299 P. 529. This rule was changed by section 2055 so that testimony elicited by a plaintiff under this section is not treated as testimony of his own witnesses but as testimony obtained under cross-examination of the defendant's witnesses. Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., 212 Cal. 540, 556, 299 P. 529; Figari v. Olcese, 184 Cal. 775, 782, 195 P. 425, 15 A.L.R. 192. It is clear, however, that all such testimony is evidence in the case and that the provision in the section that a party calling an adverse witness shall not be bound by his testimony does not mean that such testimony may not be given its proper weight, "but merely as it declares, that the party calling such witness shall not be concluded from rebutting his testimony, or from impeaching the witness." Figari v. Olcese, 184 Cal. 775, 782, 195 P. 425, 528; see Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., 212 Cal. 540, 559, 299 P. 529; Dempsey v. Star House Movers, Inc., 2 Cal.App.2d 720, 722, 38 P.2d 825; 13 Cal. L.Rev. 302.[3]

It has been squarely held that an inference upon which a plaintiff relies may be completely dispelled as a matter of law by evidence given by witnesses called under section 2055. Crouch v. Gilmore Oil Co., Ltd., 5 Cal.2d 330, 54 P.2d 709. In the Crouch case an inference that one Smith was an agent of defendant arose from proof of the fact that the defendant's advertising insignia was painted on trucks operated by Smith. Evidence was adduced under section 2055 which the court found dispelled the inference as a matter of law, and it was held that a nonsuit was proper.

Our decision in Crowe v. McBride, 25 Cal. 2d 318, 153 P.2d 727, is not inconsistent with the holding in the Crouch case. As will be seen from an examination of the opinion in Crowe v. McBride, the point involved was whether the evidence was sufficient to present a question for the trier of fact, and in this connection we held that the testimony of the defendant given pursuant to an examination under section 2055 was evidence in the case and could be used to establish a cause of action against him. The use of evidence elicited under section 2055 to dispel an inference was not involved. Plaintiff, however, relies upon the following language in Crowe v. McBride, supra: "in considering the propriety of the nonsuit, we must accept the evidence most favorable to plaintiffs and disregard that which is unfavorable. The testimony of the action or proceeding is prosecuted or defended, or the directors, officers, superintendent, member, agent, employee, or managing agent of any such party or person, or the agent, officer or employee of a municipal corporation which is a party to the action or proceeding, may be examined by the adverse party as if under cross-examination, subject to the rules applicable to the examination of other witnesses. The party calling such adverse witness shall not be bound by his testimony, and the testimony given by such witness may be rebutted by the party calling him for such examination by other evidence. Such witness, when so called, may be examined by his own counsel, but only as to the matters testified to on such examination."

3. In an article entitled "Some Recent Cases in Evidence," 13 Cal.L.Rev. 285, 302 (1925), Professor A. M. Kidd, in commenting on section 2055, said: "The section states that a party calling such adverse party shall not be bound by his testimony, as if a party were ever bound by the testimony of any witness. What was meant was that an adverse party called as a witness might be examined and impeached to the same extent as the ordinary witness."

defendant, who was called to testify under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, falls within this rule and is to be treated as evidence in the case insofar as it is favorable to plaintiffs." This language must, of course, be read in the light of the facts of the case and the question presented for determination. It is correct as a general proposition, and it should not be given a strained interpretation to reach a conclusion on a matter not presented to or considered by the court.

Cases involving the use of evidence adduced under section 2055 to dispel a presumption must be distinguished from those involving inferences. Generally speaking, it may be said that a presumption is dispelled as a matter of law only when a fact which is wholly irreconcilable with it is proved by the uncontradicted testimony of the party relying on it or of such party's own witnesses.[4] Mar Shee v. Maryland Assurance Corp., 190 Cal. 1, 9, 210 P. 269; Steward v. Paige, 90 Cal.App.2d 820, 825, 203 P.2d 858; see Chakmakjian v. Lowe, 33 Cal.2d 308, 313, 201 P.2d 801; Engstrom v. Auburn Auto. Sales Corp., 11 Cal.2d 64, 70, 77 P.2d 1059; Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., 212 Cal. 540, 552, 299 P. 529; cf. Mundy v. Marshall, 8 Cal.2d 294, 296, 65 P.2d 65; Levin v. Brown, 81 Cal.App.2d 913, 917, 185 P.2d 329. Accordingly, it is the general rule that a presumption favorable to a plaintiff cannot be so dispelled by the testimony of a defendant given pursuant to section 2055 because a defendant called under that section is not treated as the plaintiff's witness. Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., 212 Cal. 540, 559, 299 P. 529; Lopez v. Knight, 121 Cal.App.2d 387, 390–391, 263 P.2d 452; Green v. Uarte, 87 Cal. App.2d 75, 78–79, 196 P.2d 63; see Engstrom v. Auburn Auto. Sales Corp., 11 Cal. 2d 64, 70, 77 P.2d 1059. On the other hand, as we have seen, an inference can be dispelled as a matter of law by evidence produced by either party.

It follows from what has been said that the testimony of a witness called by a plaintiff under section 2055 may be used to dispel an inference upon which the plaintiff relies, provided the evidence is clear, positive, uncontradicted and of such a nature that it cannot rationally be disbelieved. It is particularly appropriate to allow such testimony to be used to rebut the inference in cases like the present where plaintiff, because she was unconscious while receiving the treatment that resulted in her injuries, is given the benefit of a liberalized test for res ipsa loquitur, and all persons who had any control over her body or the instrumentalities which might have caused her injuries are required to meet the inference of negligence by giving an explanation of their conduct. If in these circumstances evidence given by witnesses under section 2055 establishes as a matter of law that one of the defendants is free from negligence, the prima facie case against that defendant based on the inference should fall, and plaintiff's position with respect to that defendant should be the same as if she had failed to prove all the facts necessary to raise the inference.

[8] A witness may, of course, be disbelieved if there is any rational ground for doing so, and the interest of a party in the result of a case will in some circumstances justify the trier of fact in disregarding his testimony. See Hamilton v. Abadjian, 30 Cal.2d 49, 53, 179 P.2d 804; Hicks v. Reis, 21 Cal.2d 654, 659–661, 134 P.2d 788; Blank v. Coffin, 20 Cal.2d 457, 461–462, 126 P.2d

4. There is a recognized exception to the general rule where evidence of the opposite party is absolutely conclusive, as for instance, where the presumption of death of a person who has not been heard from in seven years is dispelled by production of the person in court. See Engstrom v. Auburn Auto. Sales Corp., 11 Cal.2d 64, 70, 77 P.2d 1059; Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., 212 Cal. 540, 552, 299 P. 529. The general rule also is subject to the qualification that where testimony of the party relying on a presumption or of his witnesses is the product of mistake or inadvertence, such testimony will not operate to dispel the presumption. See Mar Shee v. Maryland Assurance Corp., 190 Cal. 1, 9, 210 P. 269.

868. There are situations, however, where the interest of a party in obtaining a judgment favorable to himself will not render all of his testimony subject to disbelief. For example, where part of a defendant's testimony is harmful to him but favorable to a codefendant, as where it tends to show that the witness is liable or makes it more difficult for him to establish his own lack of fault, that portion of his testimony may be used to rebut an inference unfavorable to the codefendant provided there is nothing to indicate collusion or any other reason for disbelieving the testimony.

[9] The evidence as to Eiskamp's participation in the operation consisted of the testimony of Lacy, Slegal and Eiskamp, and it was clear and uncontradicted to the effect that Eiskamp was not responsible for leaving the clamp in plaintiff's abdomen. This testimony did not in any way tend to benefit Lacy or Slegal but, to the contrary, was disadvantageous to them because the exoneration of one defendant would have the necessary effect of increasing the possibility of liability on the part of each of the other defendants. The record indicates no rational ground for disbelieving their testimony, and we hold that the inference raised against Eiskamp under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was dispelled as a matter of law.

The evidence, however, does not compel the conclusion that the inference of negligence on the part of the surgical nurse and the hospital has been dispelled. The testimony relied upon to absolve them was given by Craig, who was a hospital employee and who, in view of the advantages to her of maintaining a favorable relationship with the hospital, obviously had an interest in the outcome of the case. She likewise had an interest in the litigation as to the nurse because the hospital, as employer, would be liable for acts of the nurse within the scope of her employment. Craig's testimony could therefore be disbelieved by the trier of fact. See Hamilton v. Abadjian, 30 Cal.2d 49, 53, 179 P.2d 804; Hicks v. Reis, 21 Cal.2d 654, 659–661, 134 P.2d 788; Blank v. Coffin, 20 Cal.2d 457, 461–462, 126 P.2d 868.

[10–12] Moreover, if Craig's testimony were accepted by the trier of fact as being true, it is not of the character required to dispel the inference of negligence raised against the hospital and the nurse. As we have seen, Craig testified that it was the practice of hospitals in the area to count sponges and needles as part of the operative procedure, and with respect to "other implements" she stated there was "no established practice of instrument counting either before or after surgery." Even if we assume she intended to say that it was the practice not to count instruments, this evidence would not conclusively establish that the hospital and nurse were free from negligence. These defendants seek to avoid liability on the theory that they were required to exercise only that degree of skill employed by other hospitals and nurses in the community. It is a matter of common knowledge, however, that no special skill is required in counting instruments. Although under such circumstances proof of practice or custom is some evidence of what should be done and may assist in the determination of what constitutes due care, it does not conclusively establish the standard of care. Cf. Ales v. Ryan, 8 Cal.2d 82, 100, 64 P.2d 409; Barham v. Widing, 210 Cal. 206, 216, 291 P. 173; Anderson v. Stump, 42 Cal.App.2d 761, 765, 109 P.2d 1027; Inderbitzen v. Lane Hospital, 124 Cal.App. 462, 467, 12 P.2d 744, 13 P.2d 905. "General negligence cannot be excused on the ground that others in the same locality practice the same kind of negligence." Ales v. Ryan, 8 Cal.2d 82, 100, 64 P.2d 409, 418.

[13] We cannot say as a matter of law that there was no duty on the part of the hospital and nurses to keep an instrument count in order to assist the surgeon in determining whether all instruments used had been removed from the patient before final closure.

The judgment is affirmed as to defendant Eiskamp and is reversed as to defendants Pogatschnik and Watsonville Community Hospital.

TRAYNOR, SCHAUER, SPENCE and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice (concurring and dissenting).

The holding of the majority opinion may be epitomized as follows: An inference of negligence which arises from testimony of adverse witnesses examined under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure may be dispelled by such testimony even though plaintiff is not bound thereby and is entitled to rely upon all of such testimony which is favorable to her and disregard all that is unfavorable. The unsoundness of this holding is so obvious that the mere statement of it should disclose its absurdity. It is not only directly in conflict with the statutory law of this state, Code Civ.Proc., § 2055, but countless decisions of this court and of the appellate courts of the state. It is sheer double talk to say that evidence which is not binding upon a party may be relied upon to repel or dispel other evidence—an inference—in favor of such party.

Section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "A party to the record of any civil action or proceeding or a person for whose immediate benefit such action or proceeding is prosecuted or defended * * * may be examined by the adverse party as if under cross-examination, subject to the rules applicable to the examination of other witnesses. The party calling such adverse witness shall not be bound by his testimony, and the testimony given by such witness may be rebutted by the party calling him for such examination by other evidence. * * *" (Emphasis added.) After noting that the questions presented in the case at bar were whether an inference of negligence was raised under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur and whether, if such an inference arose, it was dispelled as a matter of law, we find this statement in the majority opinion:

"Evelyn Craig, who was superintendent of the hospital, and defendants Lacy, Slegal and Eiskamp were called by plaintiff to testify under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that in a civil action a party may call and examine an adverse party." (Emphasis added.) Section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides a great deal more than the above quoted misleading statement would lead one to believe. In discussing the effect of section 2055, the following statement from the majority opinion is of interest: "Section 2055 provides in effect that a party to a civil action may be examined as if under cross-examination by the adverse party and that the party examining such witness shall not be bound by the witness's testimony and may rebut it by other evidence. Before section 2055 was enacted, a litigant who called an adverse party to testify found that the witness was treated as his own and that his examination was restricted by the rules applicable to direct examination. See Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., 212 Cal. 540, 555, 299 P. 529. This rule was changed by section 2055 so that testimony elicited by a plaintiff under this section is not treated as testimony of his own witnesses but as testimony obtained under cross-examination of the defendant's witnesses. Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., 212 Cal. 540, 556, 299 P. 529; Figari v. Olcese, 184 Cal. 775, 782, 195 P. 425, 15 A.L.R. 192." The just quoted excerpt from the majority is more than misleading—and the cases cited do not stand for the proposition for which they are cited. For illustration, in the Smellie case, supra, 212 Cal. at page 556, 299 P. at page 535, we find this court stating that section 2055 "is a statute remedial in character, and as such should receive a construction by the courts which will carry into effect and accomplish the intent and purpose of the Legislature in enacting it. This intent was, as we read the section, to enable a party to an action to call an adverse party as a witness for the purpose of eliciting such facts as said witness may testify to which are favorable to the party calling him, without being bound by any adverse testimony which said witness may give. Only by such construction can the full remedial purposes of said legislation be effected. Not only so, but we think the express terms of said section clearly and plainly indicate that such was the purpose of the Legislature in the enactment of said section. As before noted, the adverse party, when called as a witness, is examined by the party calling him 'as if under cross-examination' and the party calling him 'shall not be bound by his testimony.' It is difficult to conceive of language more direct and explicit." The Smellie case involved a directed verdict. In the Figari case [184 Cal. 775, 195 P. 428], a trial on the merits was involved and the court there held that "This provision [2055] does not mean that such testimony may not be given its proper weight, but merely as it declares, that the party calling such witness shall not be concluded from rebutting his testimony, or from impeaching the witness. Dravo v. Fabel, 132 U.S. 487, 10 S.Ct. 170, 33 L.Ed. 421 [see, also, Rose's U.S. Notes]." In Daniels v. City & County of San Francisco, 40 Cal.2d 614, 625, 255 P.2d 785, 792, a majority of this court specifically held that "Plaintiffs maintain that 'the instruction should have explained that any such testimony elicited by the plaintiffs should weigh for them in so far as it was favorable, but that it should be disregarded in so far as it was unfavorable, if the matters to which it referred were not satisfactorily established by other evidence.' (Emphasis added.) But plaintiffs are relying upon authorities involving rulings upon a motion either for a nonsuit, Marchetti v. Southern Pac. Co., 204 Cal. 679, 686, 269 P. 529; Dempsey v. Star House Movers, Inc., 2 Cal.App.2d 720, 722, 38 P.2d 825 or for a directed verdict, Smellie v. Southern Pac. Co., 212 Cal. 540, 556, 299 P. 529; People v. Mahoney, 13 Cal. 2d 729, 736, 91 P.2d 1029. The rules therein stated have no application upon submission of the case for a determination of the factual issues on the merits. Figari v. Olcese, 184 Cal. 775, 782, 195 P. 425, 15 A.L.R. 192; Dorn v. Pichinino, 105 Cal.App.2d 796, 800, 234 P.2d 307. The distinction is noted in the Smellie case, where, after a full discussion, it is stated that testimony elicited under section 2055 'is, of course, evidence in the case and may be considered in determining the issues of the case upon the trial or final hearing by the court, or, if the case is before a jury, by the jury.' 212 Cal. 559, 299 P. 537; see, also, Green v. Newmark, 136 Cal.App. 32, 37–38, 28 P.2d 395; Balasco v. Chick, 84 Cal.App.2d 802, 808, 192 P.2d 76. Since this case was submitted to the jury on the merits, the assailed instruction was proper. Joseph v. Vogt, 35 Cal.App.2d 439, 441, 95 P.2d 947; Cloud v. Market Street Ry. Co., 74 Cal.App. 2d 92, 96, 168 P.2d 191." Dempsey v. Star House Movers, Inc., 2 Cal.App.2d 720, 38 P.2d 825, 826, was an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit. The court there, however, declared that testimony taken by plaintiff under section 2055 was not binding on the plaintiffs but could so far as it was favorable be considered together with other evidence favorable to plaintiffs. The court concluded: "There was no evidence binding on plaintiffs on the basis of which the trial court could hold that deceased was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The motion for nonsuit should have been denied. Marchetti v. Southern Pacific Co., 204 Cal. 679, 269 P. 529."

We are presently concerned with an appeal from an order granting a nonsuit.

Every member of this court has, at one time or another, relied upon and stated the rule of law applicable when a motion for a nonsuit is made: "'A motion for nonsuit may properly be granted "* * * when, and only when disregarding conflicting evidence, and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of the plaintiff." * * * "Unless it can be said as a matter of law, that * * * no other reasonable conclusion is legally deducible from the evidence, and that any other holding would be so lacking in evidentiary support that a reviewing court would be impelled to reverse it upon appeal, or the trial court to set it aside as a matter of law, the trial court is not justified in taking the case from the jury." * * *'" Seneris v. Haas, 45 Cal. 2d 811, 821, 291 P.2d 915, 921; Carter, J. In Hinds v. Wheadon, 19 Cal.2d 458, 460, 121 P.2d 724, 725, Mr. Chief Justice Gibson in speaking for the court, said: "Where a judgment is rendered upon a motion for nonsuit, the court must assume that all evidence received in favor of the plaintiff relevant to the issues is true. All presumptions, inferences and doubtful questions must be construed most favorably to the plaintiff. * * * In such [res ipsa loquitur] cases an inference arises that the accident resulted from a want of proper care on the part of the defendants. * * * It is incumbent upon the defendant in such a case to bring forth evidence to rebut the inference of negligence, and under such circumstances a nonsuit is improper since the case should be submitted to the jury." (Emphasis added.) Mr. Justice Shenk, speaking for the court in Milana v. Credit Discount Co., 27 Cal.2d 335, 163 P.2d 869, 165 A.L.R. 621, approved and relied upon the rule; in Golceff v. Sugarman, 36 Cal.2d 152, 222 P.2d 665, and Raber v. Tumin, 36 Cal.2d 654, 226 P.2d 574, Mr. Justice Schauer, speaking for the court, approved and relied upon the rule; in Easton v. Ash, 18 Cal.2d 530, 116 P.2d 433, Mr. Justice Traynor, speaking for the court, approved and relied upon the rule; in Palmquist v. Mercer, 43 Cal.2d 92, 95, 272 P.2d 26, Mr. Justice Spence, speaking for the court, approved and relied upon the rule; in Aguirre v. City of Los Angeles, 46 Cal.2d 841, 299 P.2d 862, Mr. Justice McComb, speaking for the court, approved and relied upon the rule.

The above stated rule has been so firmly embedded in the law of this state, that I find it incomprehensible that a majority of the members of this court should fail to realize that the above cases, and those following (to cite but a very few) will be overruled sub silento! (For statements and restatements of the rule, see: Schaufele v. Doyle, 1890, 86 Cal. 107, 24 P. 834; Archibald Estate v. Matteson, 1907, 5 Cal.App. 441, 90 P. 723; Hercules Oil Refining Co. v. In the case under consideration an inference of negligence arose because of the proved fact that a foreign body, a Kelly clamp, was left in plaintiff's abdomen after she had undergone surgery performed by defendants in defendant hospital. The clamp was not there prior to the surgery. That fact was proved by X-rays taken prior to the time the surgery was undertaken. In Seneris v. Haas, 45 Cal.2d 811, 825, 291 P.2d 915, 923, we said, quoting from Ybarra v. Spangard, 25 Cal.2d 486, 491, 492, 154 P.2d 687, 162 A.L.R. 1258, that "Every defendant in whose custody the plaintiff was placed for any period was bound to exercise ordinary care to see that no unnecessary harm came to him and each would be liable for failure in this regard.'" We also said, 45 Cal.2d at page 826, 291 P.2d at page 923, that "'where a plaintiff receives unusual injuries while unconscious and in the course of medical treatment, all those defendants who had any control over his body or the instrumentalities which might have caused the injuries may properly be called upon to meet the inference of negligence by giving an explanation of their conduct.'" (Emphasis added.) In Summers v. Tice, 33 Cal.2d 80, 86, 87, 199 P.2d 1, 4, 5 A.L.R.2d 91, speaking of an analogous situation, we said that "a patient injured while unconscious on an operating table in a hospital could hold all or any of the persons who had any connection with the operation even though he could not select the particular acts by the particular person which led to his disability." In the Ybarra case we held that the effect of the decision therein was that plaintiff had made out a case when he had produced evidence which gave rise to an inference of negligence which was the proximate cause of the injury; that it was then up to the defendants to explain the cause of the injury.

Plaintiff here alleged and proved that Drs. Lacy, Slegal, Eiskamp, Nurse Pogatschnik and the Watsonville Community Hospital had control of her unconscious person during abdominal surgery; that during that surgery a Kelly clamp—a foreign object—was left in her abdomen causing her pain, suffering and injury. Having proved that much, an inference of negligence arose and the duty immediately devolved upon the defendants to rebut that inference of negligence or become liable to plaintiff in damages. In order to rebut the inference of negligence, the defendants must make "an affirmative showing of a definite cause for the accident in which cause no element of negligence on the part of the defendant adheres; or (2) of such care in all possible respects as necessarily to lead to the conclusion that the accident could not have happened from want of care, but must have been due to some unpreventable cause, although the exact cause is unknown." Dierman v. Providence Hospital, 31 Cal.2d 290, 295, 188 P.2d 12, 15.

In Scott v. Burke, 39 Cal.2d 388, 247 P. 2d 313, 320, this court adopted the holding of Ales v. Ryan, 8 Cal.2d 82, 99, 64 P.2d 409, that "the inference of negligence which is created by the rule res ipsa loquitur is in itself evidence which may not be disregarded by the jury and which in the absence of any other evidence as to negligence, necessitates a verdict in favor of the plaintiff." (Emphasis added.)

The majority admits, as necessarily it must, that the res ipsa loquitur rule is applicable here and that an inference of negligence arose as to all these defendants. Despite this admission, the majority holds that evidence elicited under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure may be considered and used to dispel the inference of negligence which arose as to Dr. Eiskamp.

In so holding, the author of the majority opinion ignores the full impact of the rule set forth in the case of Crowe v. McBride, 25 Cal.2d 318, 319, 153 P.2d 727, in which he, speaking for this court, said: "In considering the propriety of the nonsuit, we must accept the evidence most favorable to plaintiffs and disregard that which is unfavorable. The testimony of the defendant, who was called to testify under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, falls within this rule and is to be treated as evidence in the case insofar as it is favorable to plaintiffs. Anderson v. Stump, 42 Cal.App.2d 761, 109 P.2d 1027; Dempsey v. Star House Movers, Inc., 2 Cal.App.2d 720, 38 P.2d 825; cf. People v. Mahoney, 13 Cal.2d 729, 91 P.2d 1029, motion for directed verdict; Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., 212 Cal. 540, 299 P. 529." (Emphasis added.) It has been said time and time again that the rule is well established that on appeal from judgments of nonsuit, the plaintiff has a right to rely on such portions of defendants' testimony elicited under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure as are favorable to her and to disregard the unfavorable portions thereof. Code Civ.Proc., § 2055; Crowe v. McBride, supra; Karstensen v. Western Transportation Co., 93 Cal.App.2d 435, 209 P.2d 47; Williams v. Freeman, 35 Cal.App.2d 104, 94 P.2d 817; Young v. Bank of America, 95 Cal.App.2d 725, 214 P.2d 106, 16 A.L.R.2d 1155; Connors v. Southern Pacific Co., 91 Cal.App. 2d 872, 206 P.2d 31; Green v. Uarte, 87 Cal.App.2d 75, 77, 196 P.2d 63; Carlton v. Pacific Coast Gasoline Co., 110 Cal.App.2d 177, 242 P.2d 391; Marino v. Valenti, 118 Cal.App.2d 830, 259 P.2d 84; Lopez v. Knight, 121 Cal.App.2d 387, 263 P.2d 452; Refinite Sales Co. v. Fred R. Bright Co., 119 Cal.App.2d 56, 258 P.2d 1116; In re Estate of Hull, 63 Cal.App.2d 135, 146 P.2d 242; In re Estate of Burns, 26 Cal.App.2d 741, 80 P.2d 77; Hiner v. Olson, 23 Cal. App.2d 227, 72 P.2d 890, 73 P.2d 945; Whicker v. Crescent Auto Co., 20 Cal. App.2d 240, 66 P.2d 749; In re Estate of Lances, 216 Cal. 397, 14 P.2d 768; Lewis v. Southern California Edison Co., 116 Cal. App. 44, 2 P.2d 419; and others too numerous to mention.

We are now told that it has been "squarely held that an inference upon which a plaintiff relies may be completely dispelled as a matter of law by evidence given by witnesses called under section 2055. (Crouch v. Gilmore Oil Co., Ltd., 5 Cal.2d [330], 333 [54 P.2d 709].)"

In Crouch v. Gilmore Oil Co., Ltd., supra, an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit was involved. Plaintiff there sought to establish the issue of agency by defendant's testimony under section 2055. Plaintiff proved that the truck in question, while different in construction from that used by Gilmore Oil Company, was painted by Gilmore Oil with the colors used by it and 4,500 of its service station operators on the Pacific Coast. Gilmore Oil also painted the sides of the truck with the word "Gilmore" and placed its advertising insignia of the lion's head on the rear of the truck. On the doors of the truck were, however, painted the words "Owens Valley Oil Company." Gilmore Oil sold Smith, the owner of the truck, its gasoline at a lower price. Testimony elicited under section 2055 showed that the driver of the truck was paid by Smith, the owner. The court held, specifically on the authority of Maupin v. Solomon, 41 Cal.App. 323, 183 P. 198, that the inference of agency was rebutted by uncontradicted testimony given under section 2055.

Maupin v. Solomon, supra, involved an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff after a trial on the merits, and the court held, merely, that an inference that the driver of defendant's car was acting within the scope of his employment could not stand in the face of uncontradicted evidence to the contrary. Testimony adduced under section 2055 was not involved and it was not an appeal from either a nonsuit or a directed verdict.

It is my opinion that the Crouch case was incorrectly decided. The evidence on the issue of agency was sufficiently conflicting to make it a question of fact for the jury. Plaintiff was not bound by the testimony under section 2055 which was contrary to the inference arising from the facts above set forth. Furthermore, I do not see how Mr. Chief Justice GIBSON can cite, with approval, the Crouch case in view of his opinion in Crowe v. McBride, 25 Cal.2d 318, 319, 153 P.2d 727,* wherein he said, in speaking for the court: "In considering the propriety of the nonsuit, we must accept the evidence most favorable to plaintiffs and disregard that which is unfavorable. The testimony of the defendant, who was called to testify under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, falls within this rule and is to be treated as evidence in the case insofar as it is favorable to plaintiffs." (Emphasis added.) It would appear that the Crouch case was effectively overruled for all purposes by Crowe v. McBride, supra, and the many other better reasoned cases both prior and subsequent thereto. In his analysis of Crowe v. McBride, supra, the author of the majority opinion conveniently omits any mention of the case of Burr v. Sherwin Williams Co., 42 Cal.2d 682, 688, 691, 268 P.2d 1041, 1044, wherein he, speaking for the court, said "It is settled, of course, that res ipsa loquitur raises an inference, not a presumption, and the general rule is that whether a particular inference shall be drawn is a question of fact for the jury, even in the absence of evidence to the contrary. See Code Civ. Proc., § 1958; Blank v. Coffin, 20 Cal.2d 457, 461, 126 P.2d 868; Hamilton v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 12 Cal.2d 598, 602–603, 86 P.2d 829. This, however, does not preclude the conclusion that res ipsa loquitur may give rise to a special kind of inference which the defendant must rebut, although the effect of the inference is somewhat akin to that of a presumption." (Emphasis added.)

Also in his endeavor to distinguish the the Crowe v. McBride case from the Crouch case (to the detriment of the Crowe case), the author of the majority opinion informs us that the quotation from the Crowe case "must, of course, be read in the light of the facts of the case and the question presented for determination. It is correct as a general proposition, and it should not be given a strained interpretation to reach a conclusion on a matter not presented to or considered by the court." This statement is grossly inaccurate. Crowe v. McBride involved an action for malpractice; defendant chiropractor's motion for a nonsuit was granted. The appeal was from the order granting the nonsuit. Defendant's testimony under 2055 was treated as evidence in the case insofar as it was favorable to plaintiffs and we reversed the judgment of nonsuit. It was, therefore, not necessary to give the language used there "a strained interpretation to reach a conclusion on a matter not presented to or considered by the court."

The majority opinion makes much of the fact that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur raises an inference rather than a presumption and that a presumption may not be dispelled by evidence produced by an adverse party, whereas an inference may be so dispelled. In Burr v. Sherwin Williams Co., supra [42 Cal.2d 682, 268 P.2d 1044], the author of this opinion specifically held that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur gave rise to a "special kind of inference" which the defendant must rebut and that the effect of this particular inference was "somewhat akin to that of a presumption"!

The law in this state has, until the case at bar, always been that on a motion for a nonsuit all evidence elicited under section 2055 which is unfavorable to the plaintiff must be disregarded. Green v. Uarte, 87 Cal.App.2d 75, 196 P.2d 63; Jeppi v. Brockman Holding Co., 34 Cal.2d 11, 206 P.2d 847, 9 A.L.R.2d 1297; Karstensen v. Western Transp. Co., 93 Cal.App.2d 435, 209 P.2d 47; Young v. Bank of America, 95 Cal.App. 2d 725, 214 P.2d 106, 16 A.L.R.2d 1155; Refinite Sales Co. v. Fred R. Bright Co., 119 Cal.App.2d 56, 258 P.2d 1116; Batchelor v. Caslavka, 128 Cal.App.2d 819, 276 P.2d 64; and others too numerous to mention. The only case relied upon by the majority for the proposition that an inference may be dispelled as a matter of law by testimony taken under section 2055 is the case of

* Even though he maintains it is not inconsistent.

Crouch v. Gilmore Oil Co., Ltd., 5 Cal.2d 330, 54 P.2d 709. The Crouch case did not involve the inference of res ipsa loquitur which is an inference of a character that is "akin to that of a presumption" but involved an inference that defendant truck driver was the agent of Gilmore Oil Company.

It appears to me that the majority opinion has thoroughly confused the issue. It ignores cases where the inference of res ipsa loquitur was involved and the holding therein that testimony taken under section 2055, insofar as it is favorable to plaintiffs, remains in the case until rebutted by the defendant; it ignores the time-honored rule where an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit is involved; it makes misleading statements and cites cases in support thereof which are not in point. As another example, the statement in the majority opinion that "The same test is applicable in determining when the res ipsa loquitur inference is dispelled as a matter of law as in deciding when any other inference is conclusively rebutted. See Rose v. Melody Lane, 39 Cal.2d 481, 487, 247 P.2d 335; Leet v. Union Pac. R. R. Co., 25 Cal.2d 605, 621–622, 155 P.2d 42, 158 A.L.R. 1008." This follows the statement of plaintiff's contention that the inference of res ipsa loquitur was not dispelled as a matter of law and that therefore the court erred in granting the motion for a nonsuit. Both the Rose and Leet cases were appeals from judgments rendered after a trial on the merits. Neither one involved an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit. Then the author of the majority opinion makes this statement: "There is, however, a qualification on this broad general rule [the rule on appeal where a nonsuit is involved]. It is settled that where the evidence raises an inference that a fact exists, and either party produces evidence of the nonexistence of the fact that is clear, positive, uncontradicted and of such a nature that it cannot rationally be disbelieved, the nonexistence of the fact is established as a matter of law. See Blank v. Coffin, 20 Cal. 2d 457, 461, 126 P.2d 868 [870]." In Blank v. Coffin, supra, an appeal from a directed verdict was reversed by this court. It was there held: "It is not always possible for a party to a lawsuit to introduce evidence directly bearing upon the existence of a fact that he is attempting to prove. The evidence available to him may serve only to establish the existence of certain primary facts that are logically connected with the material fact. If a jury can reasonably infer from these primary facts that the material fact exists, the party has introduced sufficient evidence to entitle him to have the jury decide the issue. The jury is not compelled to draw the inference, however, even in the absence of contrary evidence and may refuse to do so. Whether a particular inference can be drawn from certain evidence is a question of law, but whether the inference shall be drawn, in any given case, is a question of fact for the jury. See cases cited in 10 Cal.Jur. 738–739, § 60.

"Usually, the opposing party introduces evidence as to the nonexistence of the fact in issue, and the jury must then determine the existence or nonexistence of the fact from all the evidence before it. If the evidence contrary to the existence of the fact is clear, positive, uncontradicted, and of such a nature that it can not rationally be disbelieved, the court must instruct the jury that the nonexistence of the fact has been established as a matter of law." It is quite apparent that Blank v. Coffin does not stand for the proposition for which it is cited. The Blank quotation continues thus: "The jury, however, is the sole judge of the credibility of the witnesses (Cal.Code Civ.Proc., § 1847; see cases cited in 27 Cal.Jur. 182, § 156) and is free to disbelieve them even though they are uncontradicted if there is any rational ground for doing so." The Blank case, incidentally, involved the question of whether or not it was proper for the jury to draw the inference that the automobile was being driven by an employee of the owner with his permission at the time of the accident. A majority of the court in the Blank case held that the directed verdict was improper because there was sufficient evidence "to permit the jury to infer that the car was being driven with defendant's permission." Engstrom v. Auburn Auto. Sales Corp., 11 Cal.2d 64, 77 P.2d 1059, Crouch v. Gilmore Oil Co., Ltd., supra, and Ceranski v. Muensch, 60 Cal.App.2d 751, 141 P.2d 750 were all cases involving the inference of ownership. Johnston v. Black Company, 33 Cal.App.2d 363, 91 P.2d 921, involved the inference of res ipsa loquitur and a situation where the trial court had directed a verdict for the defendant on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence after the jury had returned a verdict for the plaintiff. The defendants, in the Johnston case, had introduced evidence at the trial which dispelled the inference (see 33 Cal.App.2d at pages 366 and 368, 91 P.2d at pages 922 and 923). None of these cases, with the exception of the Crouch case, involved testimony elicited under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Crouch case has been discussed heretofore.

Plaintiff here has proved her injury and defendants' causal connection, therewith and that inference of negligence remains undispelled until an "affirmative showing of a definite cause for the accident, in which cause no element of negligence on the part of the defendant adheres" is made. There is here, therefore, no failure of proof as in the Crouch case. Plaintiff is not bound by any adverse testimony of any defendant called under 2055. Had the case gone to the jury it was free to believe that Dr. Eiskamp may have used a Kelly clamp; that he did, at some time, during the surgery, work in the upper quadrant of plaintiff's abdomen; or that the clamp had, during the six months it remained in plaintiff's abdomen, worked its way to the position in which it was found. "* * * the inference of negligence which is created by the rule res ipsa loquitur is in itself evidence which may not be disregarded by the jury and which in the absence of any other evidence as to negligence, necessitates a verdict in favor of the plaintiff." Ales v. Ryan, 8 Cal.2d 82, 99, 64 P.2d 409, 417. Plaintiff here had made out her case against all defendants by proving facts which raised an inference of negligence which remained in the case as evidence until dispelled by the defendants.

The following statement is made in the majority opinion: "A witness may, of course, be disbelieved if there is any rational ground for doing so, and the interest of a party in the result of a case will in some circumstances justify the trier of fact in disregarding his testimony. See Hamilton v. Abadjian, 30 Cal.2d 49, 53, 179 P.2d 804 [nonsuit not involved]; Hicks v. Reis, 21 Cal.2d 654, 659–661, 134 P.2d 788 [nonsuit not involved]; Blank v. Coffin, 20 Cal.2d 457, 461–462, 126 P.2d 868 [reversal of directed verdict for defendant]." It is, of course, elementary that the trier of fact may, on the trial of a case, disbelieve any witness or his testimony. We are here concerned with a nonsuit (and testimony taken under section 2055) where all of the plaintiff's evidence and the inferences to be drawn therefrom must be taken as true and all conflicts in the evidence must be disregarded! Any evidence elicited under section 2055 to the effect that Dr. Eiskamp did not operate in the field where the Kelly clamp was later found merely creates a conflict with other evidence from which the evidence of his negligence may be inferred and must, under heretofore cited cases, be disregarded.

The following statement from the majority opinion is totally irrelevant where, as here, an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit is involved: "There are situations, however, where the interest of a party in obtaining a judgment favorable to himself will not render all of his testimony subject to disbelief. For example, where part of a defendant's testimony is harmful to him but favorable to a codefendant, as where it tends to show that the witness is liable or makes it more difficult for him to establish his own lack of fault, that portion of his testimony may be used to rebut an inference unfavorable to the codefendant provided there is nothing to indicate collusion or any other reason for disbelieving the testimony." The question of disbelief of testimony does not enter into the case when a motion for a nonsuit is made. The defendant, in making the motion, admits that all of plaintiff's case is true. People v. One 1940 Buick Sedan, 71 Cal.App.2d 160, 162 P.2d 318; Seaford v. Smith, 86 Cal.App.2d 339, 194 P.2d 792; Mastro v. Kennedy, 57 Cal.App.2d 499, 134 P.2d 865; Moore v. Belt, 34 Cal.2d 525, 212 P.2d 509; Connors v. Southern Pac. Co., 91 Cal.App.2d 872, 206 P.2d 31; Karstensen v. Western Transportation Co., 93 Cal.App.2d 435, 209 P.2d 47; Carlton v. Pacific Coast Gasoline Co., 110 Cal.App. 2d 177, 242 P.2d 391; Baley v. J. F. Hink & Son, 133 Cal.App.2d 102, 283 P.2d 349; New Zealand Ins. Co. v. Brown, 110 Cal. App.2d 411, 242 P.2d 674; DeAryan v. Butler, 119 Cal.App.2d 674, 260 P.2d 98.

The majority opinion states: "The evidence as to Eiskamp's participation in the operation consisted of the testimony of Lacy, Slegal and Eiskamp, and it was clear and uncontradicted to the effect that Eiskamp was not responsible for leaving the clamp in plaintiff's abdomen. This testimony did not in any way tend to benefit Lacy or Slegal but, to the contrary was disadvantageous to them because the exoneration of one defendant would have the necessary effect of increasing the possibility of liability on the part of each of the other defendants. The record indicates no rational ground for disbelieving their testimony, and we hold that the inference raised against Eiskamp under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was dispelled as a matter of law." (Emphasis added.) The lack of logic in, and the unsoundness of, the foregoing argument is so obvious that it should be apparent to the most uninformed. It is conceded by the majority that the favorable portion of this testimony gave rise to an inference of negligence against Dr. Eiskamp. If plaintiff is not bound by the unfavorable portion of the testimony of Drs. Lacy, Slegal and Eiskamp, how can it be said that such testimony can now be relied upon by Dr. Eiskamp to rebut the inference of negligence which arose as a result of the testimony of these witnesses favorable to plaintiff? I submit that the majority has not answered this question and it cannot do so except by its arbitrary ipse dixit "that the inference raised against Eiskamp under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was dispelled as a matter of law."

The essence of the legal theory upon which the majority holding is based is contained in the following statement from the majority opinion: "It follows from what has been said that the testimony of a witness called by a plaintiff under section 2055 may be used to dispel an inference upon which the plaintiff relies, provided the evidence is clear, positive, uncontradicted and of such a nature that it cannot rationally be disbelieved. It is particularly appropriate to allow such testimony to be used to rebut the inference in cases like the present one where plaintiff, because she was unconscious while receiving the treatment that resulted in her injuries, is given the benefit of a liberalized test for res ipsa loquitur, and all persons who had any control over her body or the instrumentalities which might have caused her injuries are required to meet the inference of negligence by giving an explanation of their conduct. If in these circumstances evidence given by witnesses under section 2055 establishes as a matter of law that one of the defendants is free from negligence, the prima facie case against that defendant based on the inference should fall, and plaintiff's position with respect to that defendant should be the same as if she had failed to prove all the facts necessary to raise the inference."

It is impossible for me to rationalize the foregoing statement as it requires the application of a brand of mental gymnastics which I do not possess. What I think it means is this: While the testimony of Drs. Lacy, Slegal and Eiskamp, taken under section 2055, established an inference of negligence against Eiskamp under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur which, under the authorities, remains in the case until rebutted by defendants, this same testimony negatives any inference of negligence against Eiskamp. This brain child is labelled by the majority as "a liberalized test for res ipsa loquitur." It sounds more reactionary than liberal to me. It is obvious that what the majority want to do here is to destroy the remedial effect of both section 2055 and the res ipsa loquitur doctrine. It is accomplishing this result by declaring that certain evidence—testimony here—"establishes as a matter of law that one of the defendants is free from negligence" notwithstanding the law has established an inference of negligence against him. Is this the product of rational thinking? Can legal reasoning be so obtuse? Should such conflicts exist in our law? My answer to these questions is an emphatic NO. The real difficulty is, the failure of the judicial process to function. The majority here desires to reach a result which cannot be reached by the application of legal principles. So it resorts to sophistry and it becomes enmeshed in a maze of conflicts. The judicial process operates in reverse order. It proceeds from the premise that we have a judgment which is under attack. To determine the validity of this judgment, we apply legal tests—rules of law—and we accept the result which flows from this process. In pursuit of this process, we avoid conflicts and the law becomes a smoothly operating machine geared to the efficient administration of justice.

Applying the judicial process to this case, we find that under section 2055, as construed by all of the authorities, plaintiff may establish her case by the testimony of adverse witnesses; she may do this without being bound by any testimony which is unfavorable to her. So far as her case in chief is concerned, all testimony unfavorable to her must be disregarded the same as if it were not in the record. The testimony favorable to her establishes an inference of negligence against all defendants. She may rest her case on such evidence, secure against a motion for a nonsuit. The judgment of nonsuit against her was therefore erroneous and should be reversed. This always has been the law of this state since section 2055 was enacted and would still be the law if the judicial process was followed in this case.

It would be just as honest, and do less harm to the law, if the majority, in order to reach the result it desires, would hold that no inference of negligence arose against Dr. Eiskamp because the undisputed evidence shows that he did not use a Kelly clamp in the portion of the operation he performed in plaintiff's abdomen. While I could not join in such holding, it is my opinion that it is necessary for a plaintiff to show that a defendant was an active participant in the negligent act which resulted in the injury complained of in order to establish an inference of negligence against such defendant under the res ipsa loquitur doctrine. This was the holding of this court in Seneris v. Haas, 45 Cal.2d 811, 291 P.2d 915, where a judgment of nonsuit in favor of Dr. Haas was affirmed. But the majority expressly holds that under the evidence here an inference of negligence arose against Dr. Eiskamp and I agree with this holding. It appears to be the law of this state, however, that whether a particular inference can be drawn from certain evidence is a question of law, but whether the inference shall be drawn, in any given case, is a question of fact for the jury. (See cases cited in 10 Cal.Jur. 738–739, § 60.)

In view of the foregoing rule it would obviously be more logical for the majority to conclude that under the evidence produced here no inference of negligence arose against Dr. Eiskamp. In so holding the majority would have at least a semblance of authority to support its otherwise wholly unfounded conclusion.

We have held Ales v. Ryan, 8 Cal.2d 82, 95, 100, 64 P.2d 409, that leaving a foreign object in a patient's abdomen does not ordinarily occur without negligence and in Ybarra v. Spangard, 25 Cal.2d 486, 154 P.2d 687, 162 A.L.R. 1258, that when a patient receives unusual injuries while unconscious, all defendants having any control over his body or the instrumentalities which might have cause the injuries may be called upon to rebut the inference of negligence by giving an explanation of their conduct. Nurse Pogatschnik, as an employee of the hospital, was one of the defendants having "control" over the unconscious body of the plaintiff. Plaintiff established through the testimony of Mrs. Evelyn Craig, superintendent of defendant hospital, who was called under section 2055, that it was not the practice of the hospital, through its nurse employees, to make an instrument count after surgery. Whether such an omission constituted negligence was answered adversely to defendant hospital in Ales v. Ryan, 8 Cal.2d 82, 100, 64 P.2d 409, 418, where this court said: "We have already held upon authority that the failure to remove a sponge from the abdomen of a patient is negligence of the ordinary type and that it does not involve knowledge of materia medica surgery but that it belongs to that class of mental lapses which frequently occur in the usual routine of business and commerce, and in the multitude of commonplace affairs which come within the group of ordinary actionable negligence. The layman needs no scientific enlightenment to see at once that the omission can be accounted for on no other theory than that someone has committed actionable negligence." Mrs. Craig also testified, although her testimony is not binding on plaintiff, creates merely a conflict in the evidence, and may be ignored, that it was not the custom of hospitals in the community to make an instrument count after surgery. I am of the opinion that the majority opinion incorrectly discusses this testimony as failing to "dispel" the inference of negligence as to the hospital and surgical nurse. Plaintiff is not bound by any adverse testimony elicted under section 2055, as I have heretofore pointed out. The testimony as to custom merely created a conflict in the evidence and might be considered adverse to plaintiff if it were not for cases holding that "General negligence cannot be excused on the ground that others in the same locality practice the same kind of negligence." Ales v. Ryan, 8 Cal.2d 82, 100, 64 P.2d 409. It was also said in Pauly v. King, 44 Cal.2d 649, 655, 284 P.2d 487, 490, quoting from Owen v. Rheem Mfg. Co., 83 Cal.App.2d 42, 45, 187 P.2d 785, that " 'Custom may assist in the determination of what constitutes due care. What others do is some evidence of what should be done, but custom is never a substitute for due care.' "

We have repeatedly held that a hospital must exercise reasonable care towards a patient as his known condition may require, Wood v. Samaritan Institution, 26 Cal.2d 847, 851, 161 P.2d 556; Rice v. California Lutheran Hospital, 27 Cal.2d 296, 302, 163 P.2d 860; Ault v. Ross General Hospital, 105 Cal.App.2d 78, 80, 232 P.2d 528. "If the alleged neglect relates to matters or conduct which are reasonably within the ken of the average layman the jury may determine the culpability of the person charged therewith without the aid of experts. If it relates solely to the exercise of judgment in the application of skill and learning then proof of the negligence must be made by experts." Valentin v. La Societe Francaise, 76 Cal.App.2d 1, 5, 172 P.2d 359, 362; Dean v. Dyer, 64 Cal.App.2d 646, 653, 149 P.2d 288; Stevenson v. Alta Bates, Inc., 20 Cal.App.2d 303, 309, 66 P.2d 1265; Inderbitzen v. Lane Hospital, 124 Cal.App. 462, 12 P.2d 744, 13 P.2d 905. It appears to me that the failure to make an instrument count subsequent to surgery is a matter "reasonably within the ken" of the average layman to permit the jury, without the benefit of expert evidence, to determine whether or not such failure constituted negligence, or the failure to exercise such reasonable care towards a patient as his known condition may require. Valentin v. La Societe Francaise, 76 Cal. App.2d 1, 5, 172 P.2d 359; Wood v. Samaritan Institution, 26 Cal.2d 847, 851, 161 P.2d 556. But, the inference of negligence having arisen because of the Kelly clamp having been left in plaintiff's abdomen during surgery at a time when the defendants had control of her unconscious body, the question of whether such negligence existed was for the trier of fact on a trial of the issues involved. The evidence adduced by plaintiff, together with the favorable inferences to be drawn therefrom, when conflicting evidence is disregarded, was more than sufficient to permit the cause to be tried by the jury, or the court, as the case may be.

It is impossible to rationalize the majority opinion on any theory of law or logic. It certainly finds no support in the prior decisions of this court or the appellate courts of this state. In the absence of any basis in legal philosophy for the holding here, it is obvious that considerations of expediency have controlled. I submit that such considerations are foreign to the judicial concept. If the law is to be changed, the Legislature is the law-making body, and such change should be brought about by legislation and not by judicial fiat. In our constitutional form of government, with its system of checks and balances, the Legislature is more responsive to the will of the people than the courts and any change in public policy or statutory law should originate with it. I submit that the action of this court here invades the province of the Legislature in a most vital field of legislation and public policy as it repeals or nullifies the provision in section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure that a party is not bound by testimony elicited under this section.

I would reverse the judgments of nonsuit as to defendants Eiskamp, Pogatschnik and the Watsonville Community Hospital.

SHENK, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. I am in agreement with the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Carter insofar as he concludes that the majority opinion has misapplied section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the doctrine or res ipsa loquitur. It is well established by the authorites in this state and cited by Mr. Justice Carter that the plaintiff may, under section 2055, call the defendants as adverse witnesses and examine them "as if under cross-examination" and without prejudice to his own cause. The plaintiff is not bound by that testimony. That which is unfavorable to him must, for the purposes of a motion for a nonsuit, be disregarded, however strong or persuasive or even conclusive it might be in favor of the defendants and against the plaintiff in the trial on the merits. The plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of whatever portion of that testimony is favorable to him and that portion only is to be considered in evidence for the purpose of a nonsuit. For that purpose the plaintiff's case is supported by all favorable inferences that may be drawn from that testimony. Those inferences may be in addition to the inference included in the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur which alone is sufficient to take the case to trial on the merits. The question of when an inference in favor of the plaintiff may be dispelled by the testimony of his own witnesses is not involved in this case. In law the defendants, when called by the plaintiff under section 2055, are not the plaintiff's witnesses. With the rule now announced by the majority a plaintiff may not call a defendant for examination under that section except at the peril of having the testimony so taken and which is unfavorable to him used against him in support of a motion for a nonsuit. This is an unfortunate and confusing deviation from the established rules. Under the authorities the res ipsa loquitur doctrine is applicable to this case and its beneficial purpose is effectively destroyed if in calling the defendants as adverse witnesses the plaintiff must assume the hazard of having them justify their conduct and by their own testimony obtain a judgment of nonsuit. The record shows without question that the testimony of the defendants obtained under section 2055 insofar as it is favorable to the plaintiff is in support of the inference of negligence, and that inference has not been dispelled either in fact or in law. The defendant Eiskamp took part in the operation and he should be required to defend on the merits along with his co-defendants.

TRUCK INSURANCE EXCHANGE, Petitioner,

v.

INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION of the State of California, and Odas W. Patterson, Respondents.

Civ. 9098.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 8, 1957.

Proceeding to review order of Industrial Accident Commission. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that employee who, while working on his employer's farm, was hit by stray bullet fired from .22 rifle by 10 year old boy on neighboring farm was entitled to workmen's compensation.

Affirmed.

1. Workmen's Compensation ⇐702

Employee who, while working on his employer's farm, was hit by stray bullet fired from .22 rifle by 10 year old boy on neighboring farm was entitled to workmen's compensation.

2. Workmen's Compensation ⇐609

Injuries occurring in the course of employment also arise out of the employment and hence are compensable under Workmen's Compensation Law although the factor which put in motion force causing injury was something over which employer had no control and with which he had no connection.

3. Workmen's Compensation ⇐998

Evidence supported award of workmen's compensation for future medical treatment which might become necessary to employee whose shoulder was injured when hit by bullet fired from .22 rifle.

Mullen & Filippi, San Francisco, for petitioner.

A. E. Corten and Daniel C. Murphy, San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

PEEK, Justice.

Petitioner seeks to review an order of the respondent commission awarding benefits to respondent Patterson who, while working on his employer's farm, was hit by a stray bullet fired from a .22 rifle by a ten-year-old boy on a neighboring farm.

[1] Two contentions are made by petitioner: (1) That the injury did not arise out of the employment and was not proximately caused thereby; and (2) that the Commission erred in making an award for future medical treatment.

It would seem wholly unnecessary to discuss in detail the numerous cases from other jurisdictions cited in support of petitioner's contention that the injury is not compensable, and that therefore the rule expressed in Associated Indem. Corp. v. Industrial Acc. Comm. (Zurbuchen), 43 Cal.App.2d 292, 110 P.2d 676, is controlling. Suffice it to say that while we agree with petitioner that factually the case is substantially on all fours with the present one, we cannot agree that the Zurbuchen case has not been overruled and hence is controlling.

That case was decided in 1941. In 1950 the First District Court of Appeal, Division I, was presented with a very similar question in the case of Industrial Indem. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm. (Baxter), 95 Cal.App.2d 804, 214 P.2d 41. There the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Bray, ably discussed with critical particularity all of the cases in this State, beginning with Kimbol v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 173 Cal. 351, 160 P. 150, L.R.A.1917B, 595, wherein this question had been presented. The decision notes that while our courts generally have labored the problem at length in an attempt "* * * to show that the actual substance which injured the employee was an instrumentality of the employer, a real analysis of the facts and rulings in these cases shows that actually the courts were allowing compensation because his employment brought the employee into what became a position of danger even though that danger was not, and in many instances could not have been, foreseen either by the employer or employee, and even though the risk was not peculiar to the particular location." 95 Cal.App.2d at page 810, 214 P.2d at page 45. See also 18 Cal.L.Rev. 562.

[2] The Baxter case was followed by the recent case of Madin v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 1956, 46 Cal.2d 90, 292 P.2d 892. In that opinion the court quoted with approval and at length from the Baxter case and held that "* * * injuries occurring in the course of employment also arise out of the employment and hence [are] compensable although the factor which put in motion the force causing the injury was something over which the employer had no control and with which he had no connection." 46 Cal.2d at page 93, 292 P.2d at page 894. Additionally, the court held that the Zurbuchen case was "contrary" to the rule enunciated in that it failed to give the liberal construction required of workmen's compensation laws, and was not in "accord" with the Baxter case and the other cases cited with approval in the Madin case.

[3] The petitioner's second contention, that the award for further medical treatment which might become necessary is in error, is based upon a portion of the doctor's report wherein it was stated that the applicant "* * * is in need of no additional medical care." However that is not the full context of the comment. The doctor, after noting that the progress of the patient had been satisfactory, concluded,

> "* * * It is my recommendation that this patient be reexamined in approximately two months. If at that time he has had no complication from his injury, it will probably be in order to consider a settlement of his claim.
> "The patient will have permanent disability consisting of limitation of motion of the right shoulder and the present measurements appear to be remaining about the same in their degree of limitation."

As respondents note, the petitioner is not aggrieved by this phase of the award and cannot be unless a claim for some specific treatment is made, in which event petitioner will have its day in court to present any legal or factual defense it may have against such a claim. Here it is quite apparent that the doctor anticipated the possibility of further examination and the possibility of future complications. Also the nature of the disability suggests the possibility of future medical needs. The contention of petitioner that the award is unsupported in this regard cannot, therefore, be sustained.

The award is affirmed.

v.

J. H. TARMAN and Bessie May Tarman, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 8856.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 7, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 5, 1957.

Action by trustor and another against purchaser of accommodation note and another to set aside trustee's deed, which secured the note, and to quiet title to the realty covered by the deed. The Superior Court, Butte County, J. F. Good, J., entered judgment adverse to plaintiffs, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that, where trustor stood by in purchaser's office when purchaser advised trustee to postpone his sale under trust deed to December 22, but attorney representing corporation for which the note had been executed as an accommodation was erroneously informed by secretary of purchaser's attorney that the sale had been postponed to the 29th, and neither trustor nor representative for the corporation appeared at sale, the sale could not be set aside by reason of irregularities plus inadequacy of price, even though purchaser of note, as purchaser at the sale, obtained full title of the property, which was then valued not greater than $50,000, for about $20,000.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Mortgages ⇐369(3)

Inadequacy of price, standing alone, will not afford ground for setting aside sale of trustee under deed of trust, but gross inadequacy of price in conjunction with irregularities which had the effect of conducing to the inadequacy of price or which have in some other way contributed to injury to trustor will afford such support.

2. Mortgages ⇐369(3)

Where trustor stood by in office of purchaser of note secured by the deed of trust when purchaser advised trustee to postpone his sale under trust deed to December 22 but attorney representing corporation for which the note had been executed as an accommodation was erroneously informed by secretary of purchaser's attorney that the sale had been postponed to the 29th, and neither trustor nor representative for the corporation appeared at sale, the sale could not be set aside by reason of irregularities plus inadequacy of price, even though purchaser of note, as purchaser at the sale, obtained full title of the property, which was then valued not greater than $50,000, for about $20,000.

3. Mortgages ⇐247

Where, pursuant to urgent solicitation of trustor and by written agreement, defendant purchased accommodation note, which had been executed by trustor, and which was secured by the deed of trust, under express agreement with trustor that he would be subrogated to all rights of seller of the note, defendant was entitled to have the property subject to the deed of trust sold at public auction just as person who had sold the note to him was in process of doing unless trustor themselves or through the accommodated party should pay the accommodation note.

Spurr & Brunner, E. N. Funk, Ukiah, for appellants.

Raymond A. Leonard, Oroville, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment denying plaintiffs and appellants any relief in an action brought by them to set aside a trustee's deed to real property and to quiet title to the real property against respondents.

Appellants, hereinafter called Crofoot, were the owners of real property in Butte County, California, consisting of about 1,575 acres of land. They had encumbered the title by executing a deed of trust covering the same to secure the payment of an indebtedness of $10,000. Thereafter, in December of 1951, they executed a second deed of trust securing payment of a promissory note payable to Black Rock Mineral Company, a corporation, hereinafter called Black Rock. They did this in order to enable Black Rock to develop certain mining properties on other lands, by negotiating the secured note. As between Crofoot and Black Rock the note was accommodation paper, and Black Rock had promised Crofoot it would pay and discharge the indebtedness secured by the deed of trust. Black Rock negotiated the note to one Allen, and thereafter failed to make payments due. Allen instructed the trustee to begin proceedings to sell the property. The sale was set for November 10, 1952. In the meantime, and on October 31, 1952, Crofoot had entered into a written contract with respondent J. H. Tarman, hereinafter called Tarman, in which Tarman agreed to buy the real property for a price of $78,750. Tarman went into possession of the property and has remained in possession ever since. During the interim between the execution of the purchase contract and the date of sale under the deed of trust, Tarman, at the solicitation of Crofoot, purchased the accommodation note from Allen in order to postpone the sale. He then instructed the trustee to postpone the sale to the 15th of December following. The transaction between Crofoot and Tarman covering Tarman's purchase of the note from Allen was the subject of a written agreement, the substance of which was as follows: The agreement recited the necessity of obtaining and paying to Allen forthwith the sum of $33,704.97 in order to prevent the trustee's sale on December 15th. It declared that Allen held additional security for the payment of the sum owing to him consisting of a certain lease of property, a chattel mortgage executed by Black Rock upon personal property and also 150,000 shares of the capital stock of Black Rock. It was then stated that if Tarman should procure the necessary funds and pay them to Allen he would be entitled to receive from Allen all the above security; that Tarman had agreed to arrange a continuance of the trustee's sale for not less than 30 days from November 7, 1952; that Tarman should be subrogated to all the rights of Allen. Tarman did postpone the sale to December 15th. Crofoot applied for, and received, a further postponement to December 22d. On the last mentioned date the trustee sold the subject property at public sale to Tarman for the sum of $10,000 and gave him a trustee's deed. Between December 15th and December 22d, the attorney representing Black Rock, which corporation was endeavoring to obtain funds to pay the accommodation note, attempted to contact Tarman's attorney to ascertain the exact date of sale and on failing to reach him was told by his secretary that the sale had been postponed to the 29th of December, which information was erroneous. Black Rock's attorney acquainted Crofoot with the information the secretary had given. Neither Crofoot nor a representative for Black Rock appeared at the sale, and testimony was introduced that Black Rock and Crofoot relied upon the mistaken information they had received as to the date of sale even though, as to Crofoot, he had himself obtained the last postponement to December 22d. They learned of the sale a day or so after it occurred and protested that they should be allowed to pay off the obligation and restore the title to appellants. They caused a notice to be recorded declaring the sale invalid. Tarman, on December 30th, offered, to Black Rock's attorney, to set aside the sale if the money he had paid Allen was returned to him by January 3, 1953. This offer was conveyed by letter and brought the immediate telephonic response that it would be impossible to raise the money in the time allowed. However, no further offer was made and neither Black Rock nor Crofoot tendered any payment to Tarman. Black Rock continued its endeavors to raise money, and by January 15th it placed in the trust account of its attorney the sum of $35,000. On January 16th the attorney paid Tarman $22,500 for the release of the chattel mortgage which was then in process of foreclosure and offered to pay the balance of the total sum he had expended in purchasing the accommodation note, but Tarman refused to accept it and since has maintained his position as owner of the real property. Tarman never paid to Crofoot any part of the purchase price of the property in accordance with the contract of purchase. In December of 1953 appellants brought the present action.

[1] Appellants first contend that the trustee's sale should be set aside upon grounds of irregularity. They preface their argument by stating the well-settled rule that, although inadequacy of price standing alone will not afford ground for setting aside a trustee's sale, yet gross inadequacy of price in conjunction with irregularities which have the effect of conducing to the inadequacy of price or which have in some other way contributed to the injury to the trustor will afford such support. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Century Land & Water Co., 19 Cal.App.2d 194, 196, 65 P.2d 109; Sargent v. Shumaker, 193 Cal. 122, 129, 223 P. 464.

They point to the following testimony as to inadequacy of price: There was the contract by which respondent, within 60 days of the sale, had agreed to pay appellants $78,750 for the land. Tarman himself testified at the trial that on the day of sale the property was worth $40,000 to $50,000. H. C. Crofoot testified that on the sale date it was worth $50 an acre. A real estate broker testified to the same value. Another real estate broker, testifying as a witness for Tarman, said the land was worth from $25 to $50 an acre. The trial court found that the reasonable market value was "not in excess of $50,000." At the time of the sale the property was encumbered by tax liens in the amount of less than $1,000, and by the first lien deed of trust upon which there was nearly $10,000 owing. Adding these sums to Tarman's bid of $10,000, we see that Tarman got the full title for about $20,000.

[2] Turning now to the alleged irregularities in the sale and their effect upon the sale, Crofoot argues concerning the fact and the effect of the misinformation as to the date of sale which emanated from the secretary of Tarman's attorney. It appears that they do not in fact claim there were irregularities in the trustee's conduct of the sale, nor that anything done or left undone by the trustee was in violation of the trustee's authority or contrary to the trustee's duties. Indeed, it appears without conflict that the postponement from December 15th to December 22d was made by Tarman upon the personal application of Crofoot who stood by in Tarman's office when Tarman telephoned the trustee, advising it to postpone the sale to the 22d. There is nothing in the record to the effect that anything done or left undone by the trustee prevented the public from attending at the sale or in anywise discouraged bidding. Therefore, the trustee's sale cannot be set aside by reason of irregularities plus inadequacy of price. Crofoot's contention that the sale should be set aside is in reality based upon matters de hors the sale proceedings, that is, upon a claim of fraud or mistake inhering in the misinformation as to the date of sale.

It is admitted by all parties that shortly before December 22d the attorney for Black Rock did call the office of the attorney for Tarman, who was absent; that Black Rock's attorney then talked to the secretary in his office, inquiring as to the correct date to which the sale had been postponed; that, as the court found, the secretary innocently stated the sale had been postponed until the 29th. There is no evidence whatever that the misinformation was fraudulently given, and as noted the court found otherwise.

Crofoot alleged that the representations as to the date of sale were made to the attorney for Black Rock with the fraudulent intent of misleading Crofoot into a false sense of security, preventing appearance at the sale to bid, and preventing Crofoot from paying and discharging the indebtedness. The trial court found against all of these allegations, and specifically found that Crofoot's failure to pay Tarman was not by reason of any misapprehension as to the date of sale, but was because Crofoot relied upon other persons to pay him. This latter finding is supported by the testimony of appellant H. C. Crofoot, who testified that he considered it was up to Black Rock to take care of the matter and that he had their assurance that they had the money; that he himself had arranged a continuance to the 22d and on receiving information from the attorney for Black Rock that the sale had been set forward to the 29th he did not contact respondent to ascertain the correctness of that statement, even though it conflicted with the arrangements he had personally made with Tarman. When asked by the trial court to tell the court why he waited for a year to bring this action when he knew shortly after December 22, 1952 that the sale had been made, he replied that Black Rock was taking care of the matter, that he did not negotiate with Tarman at any time after January of 1953 and up to the time of filing this action, because it was not up to him to do that, that he had relied on Black Rock to do that, that he had never, between December 22, 1952 and the time of filing this action, made any tender or payment of money to Tarman, because he did not owe him anything.

The most that can be said concerning the fact and the effect of the misinformation as to the date of sale, conveyed to the attorney for Black Rock and by him to Crofoot, is that the facts would have supported a determination by the trial court that the sale ought to be set aside but that such a holding was not compelled. The secretary of Tarman's attorney stated that she had called Tarman's office and was told that the sale had been postponed to the 29th of December. The trial court was not required to hold that that information came from Tarman or was authorized by him. He testified to the contrary and said that he did not know anything about how that information was obtained, if, in fact, the secretary had called his office about the date of sale. The trial court was fully justified in holding, as it did, that there was neither actual nor constructive fraud involved in the matter and was equally justified in holding that Crofoot's allegation that the practical result was to prohibit them or Black Rock from attending the sale and bidding thereat was not supported by the evidence and was untrue. There was testimony that almost immediately after respondent purchased the accommodation note from Allen he began pressing appellants to restore the money to him, because he had had to find the funds necessary and had had to complete the acquisition of the funds from his own private resources which left his business short of operating capital. There was testimony of many promises, made and broken by Crofoot, that they would be able to restore Tarman's money to him if he would grant one more postponement. There was a like history of promises made and not kept on the part of Black Rock in its endeavors to get the money from parties interested in that corporation. There was evidence that Black Rock did not succeed in gathering the money until about the middle of January following the sale. The trial court was fully justified in refusing the equitable relief of setting the sale aside.

Crofoot contends that because Tarman was in possession of the real property under an executory contract of sale he could not dispute the title of his vendors, and that he acquired and held the title conveyed to him by the trustee for Crofoot's benefit for all the purposes of the executory contract. Reliance is placed upon such cases as Garvey v. Lashells, 151 Cal. 526, wherein at page 531, 91 P. 498, at page 501, it is said:

> "* * * 'A purchaser of land in possession thereof under a contract of sale, by the terms of which the vendor is to give a warranty deed of the property, conveying a good and perfect title thereto, cannot, upon the vendor's failure and inability to convey a good and perfect title, retain both the land and the purchase money until a perfect title shall be offered him, but he must pay the purchase price according to the contract, and receive such title as the vendor is able to give, if he chooses to retain the possession of the land, or he may rescind * * *.'
> "* * * The generally accepted rule is to the effect that, if the purchaser in possession perfects the title of the vendor pending the executory contract by buying in an outstanding claim, the perfected title inures to the benefit of the vendor for all the purposes of the agreement, and the utmost that the vendee can ask is to be reimbursed for his outlay in obtaining such title, with interest thereon."

[3] We think this rule, under the facts of this case, has no such application to the case at bar as compelled the trial court to enter a decree based thereon. As has been stated, it appears that Tarman did not voluntarily purchase any outstanding claim of title. On the contrary, by a written agreement and at Crofoot's urgent solicitation he purchased the accommodation note held by Allen and received an assignment thereof, and of the other security held by Allen, under an express agreement with Crofoot that by doing so he would be subrogated to all the rights of Allen thereunder. This meant, of course, that, unless appellants themselves or through Black Rock should pay the note, Tarman was entitled to have the property sold at public auction just as Allen was in the process of doing. That such was the true meaning of the contract is further evidenced by the conduct of Crofoot who continually sought postponements of the trustee's sale initiated by Allen. Tarman took no action with respect to the trustee's sale of the property except what the parties had agreed he might take. By that agreement he stepped into the shoes of Allen; he had the right to have the trustee make the sale; he agreed thereby to postpone the sale for more than 30 days and this he did; and though not compelled to bid, he was entitled to do so. Implicit in the bargain he made with Crofoot was his right, if he bid the property in at public sale, to keep the title he thus acquired.

The judgment is affirmed.

Ethel Marie MILLS and Florence Mills Tripp, a/k/a Mrs. Gene Tripp, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21521.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 20, 1956.

Action for declaratory relief. From a judgment of dismissal entered after an order sustaining defendants' demurrer to the third amended complaint in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, A. Curtis Smith, J., the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that the Superior Court had jurisdiction of the count relating to the respective rights of the parties in Illinois realty and to declare a vendor's lien; that the causes of action in counts one and two were not barred by limitations and that the count three and four were demurrable.

Judgment reversed.

1. Declaratory Judgment ⇐385, 386

Both declaratory and coercive relief may be granted in the same action for declaratory relief. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 1060.

2. Declaratory Judgment ⇐318

Where an actual controversy allegedly existed between the parties relating to their respective rights in Illinois realty, declaration seeking an adjudication of the rights of the parties stated a cause of action for declaratory relief. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 1060.

3. Declaratory Judgment ⇐390

An action for declaratory relief is a suit in equity, and jurisdiction of a court of equity to enforce its decrees is coextensive with its jurisdiction to determine the rights of the parties, and it can enforce its decrees as a necessary incident to its jurisdiction. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1060.

4. Declaratory Judgment ⇐271

If a complaint for declaratory relief pleads facts sufficient to entitle plaintiff to some equitable relief, court will assume jurisdiction of the entire controversy. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1060.

5. Declaratory Judgment ⇐253

Equity will not deny declaratory relief simply because it cannot afford the full measure of relief plaintiff may need or because it cannot act directly on the premises to which the relief relates. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., § 1060.

6. Equity ⇐36, 63

Equity acts in personam, not in rem, and after the court has obtained jurisdiction of parties it may by a decree in personam control their actions with respect to property situated without its jurisdiction whenever such action is necessary to effect a complete disposition of the controversy.

7. Declaratory Judgment ⇐273

The superior court was not without jurisdiction of a declaratory action to determine the rights of parties in Illinois realty on the ground that the court did not have jurisdiction of the res, since equity acts in personam. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 1060.

8. Judgment ⇐903

While the decree of a California court directing conveyance of realty outside the state does not of itself affect the title of the realty in the latter state it is sufficient basis for a suit in California courts to compel such conveyance.

9. Venue ⇐22(1)

Where plaintiffs sought a declaration of rights between themselves and defendants with respect to Illinois property and the declaration would not operate directly on the property or affect the title, action was transitory and properly maintainable in the county where the defendants resided. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1060.

10. Equity ⇐54

Equity does not wait on precedent which exactly squares with the facts in controversy but will adjust itself to those situations where right and justice would be defeated but for its intervention.

11. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐246

A vendor's lien after an actual conveyance is not a specific and absolute charge on the realty, but a mere equitable right to resort to it on failure of payment by the vendee. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3046.

12. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐269

Right to a vendor's lien must be established by suit, and the lien is not of operative force until established by a decree of court, and it may be asserted only by a suit in equity for the purpose of obtaining such a decree. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3046.

13. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐266(1)

An extension of time for payment of the purchase money does not extinguish a vendor's lien, and the vendee is regarded as holding the realty in trust for the benefit of the vendor to the extent of the unpaid purchase money, and the trust descends to the representatives and heirs of the vendee against whom the lien for the purchase money will be enforced. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 3048.

14. Courts ⇐7

In suit to adjudicate the rights of parties in Illinois realty, superior court had jurisdiction of the cause of action though plaintiffs, on proof of facts alleged, would be entitled to a decree that they had a vendor's lien on the Illinois property, where the cause of action averred was to establish the lien, and not to foreclose it. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3046.

15. Limitation of Actions ⇐2(1)

The barring of a claim by limitations is a procedural matter governed by the law of the forum regardless of where the cause of action arose.

16. Limitation of Actions ⇐16

The nature of the right sued on, and not the form of action or relief demanded, determines the applicability of the statute of limitations.

17. Limitation of Actions ⇐13, 104(1)

Where a party fraudulently conceals the existence of a cause of action against him, the statute of limitations is tolled and the guilty party is estopped to plead the limitations.

18. Limitation of Actions ⇐13

Doctrine of equitable estoppel may be invoked to prevent a defendant from relying on the statute of limitations.

19. Limitation of Actions ⇐13, 99(1)

When a defendant who sets up the statute of limitations has previously, by fraud or any violation of duty to plaintiff, caused him to subject his claim to the statutory bar, he must be charged with having wrongfully obtained an advantage which the courts will not allow him to hold.

20. Estoppel ⇐98(1)

An estoppel of a party ordinarily is operative against his privies in estate.

21. Limitation of Actions ⇐13

Rule that fraud may serve as basis of estoppel against asserting bar of limitations applies irrespective of whether action claimed to be barred is itself based on fraud.

22. Liens ⇐16

A court of equity will keep alive or restore a lien where the equities require it and the parties intended that it should not be extinguished, as where it has been discharged by fraud or mistake.

23. Limitation of Actions ⇐199(1)

Whether an estoppel exists, whether acts, representations, or conduct lulled a party into sense of security preventing him from instituting proceedings before the running of the statute of limitations and whether the party relied thereon to his prejudice is a question of fact, not of law.

24. Limitation of Actions ⇐104(1)

Where a party is guilty of fraudulent concealment of the cause of action, the statute of limitations is deemed not to become operative until the aggrieved party discovers the cause of action. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., §§ 312, 338, subd. 4.

25. Limitation of Actions ⇐192(3)

To bring oneself within the statute respecting fraudulent concealment of a cause of action as respects limitations, a party must allege when the fraud was discovered, circumstances and what the discovery was and why it was not discovered sooner. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 312, 338, subd. 4.

26. Limitation of Actions ⇐199(2)

When facts with respect to discovery of fraud tolling limitations are susceptible to opposing inferences, whether a party had notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry as to the particular fact and whether by prosecuting such inquiry he might have learned such fact are questions of fact for the trial court. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 312, 338, subd. 4.

27. Limitation of Actions ⇐192(3)

In action seeking a declaration that plaintiffs had a vendor's lien on Illinois realty, complaint was not barred by limitations where the count alleged facts showing when the alleged fraud was discovered, circumstances of the discovery, what the discovery was and why it was not discovered sooner, so as to toll limitations. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 336a, 337, subd. 1.

28. Courts ⇐7

In suit for a decree that defendants held title to Illinois realty in trust for the benefit of plaintiffs, superior court had jurisdiction of the cause of action.

29. Fraud ⇐7

If there is a duty to speak because of a confidential relation, a failure to do so is a species of fraud for which equity will afford relief.

30. Pleading ⇐214(1)

Averments of a count must be assumed true on demurrer thereto.

31. Limitation of Actions ⇐102(11)

Ordinarily, in a suit to establish an involuntary trust, the statute of limitations begins to run when the trust relation is terminated. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2217.

32. Limitation of Actions ⇐100(3)

In suit for a decree that defendants held title to Illinois realty in trust for plaintiffs, grounded on fraud, the statute began to run on the date the plaintiffs discovered the fraud, and where the action was brought within three years thereafter, it was not barred by limitations. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 2217, 2223, 2224, 2243; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 338, subd. 4.

33. Pleading ⇐35

Where, in so far as a count sought a decree that defendants held title to Illinois realty in trust for the benefit of plaintiffs, it was no different from count two, it was surplusage.

34. Trusts ⇐91

Where count of complaint sought a decree that the property received by defendants as distributees of the estate of the alleged trustee was held in trust for plaintiff, to extent that realty was insufficient to provide restitution of the amount due plaintiffs under terms of note executed by the alleged trustee, no theory existed on which it could be decreed that the defendants held the property so received from the estate of the alleged trustee in trust for benefit of the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs were not entitled to a vendor's lien on such other property.

35. Pleading ⇐204(2)

A general demurrer to a complaint containing more than one count should be overruled if there is a good count stating a cause of action, and if it is erroneously sustained, the judgment of dismissal should be reversed.

Robert J. Johnston, Brooks Gifford, Sidney H. Wyse and Henry W. Cutter, Pasadena, for appellants.

Burr & Smith, Los Angeles, for respondents.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal from a judgment of dismissal entered after an order sustaining defendants' demurrer to the third amended complaint, to be referred to as the complaint.

The complaint is in four counts. Count I alleges:

In May 1929 Oscar L. Mills, now deceased, purchased from Thomas O. and Annie E. Mills, his father and mother, a parcel of realty located in the county of Will, state of Illinois, and agreed in writing to pay $27,800 therefor. Oscar Mills received a deed to the property, subject to a deed of trust for $14,000, and executed an unsecured promissory note for $13,109.46 payable on demand to the order of "Thomas O. Mills and Annie E. Mills, or Survivor of either" at California Bank, Los Angeles, with interest at 7 per cent, representing the balance of the purchase price.

Oscar Mills did not pay the note, and no part of it has ever been paid. Thomas O. Mills died June 13, 1932. Annie E. Mills died March 28, 1938. After her death the will of Thomas O. Mills was admitted to probate in Illinois and on June 23, 1939 his estate was distributed directly to the heirs at law of Annie E. Mills, who were Oscar L. Mills, her son, plaintiff Arthur James Mills, her son, and plaintiffs Virginia Marsh Gerace, Robert Mills Marsh and Betty Jane Marsh, children of Irma Amber Marsh, her predeceased daughter.

A relation of trust and confidence existed between Oscar Mills on the one hand and Thomas O. and Annie E. Mills on the other hand in that: Oscar was the son of Thomas and Annie; for more than 10 years prior to 1926 plaintiff Arthur Mills had managed the farm and business affairs of Thomas and Annie; about June 1, 1926 Oscar represented to them that it would be to their best interest to turn the management of their property and business affairs over to him, that he was the most successful member of the family, and they could rely on him, that he was in a better position to do so, Arthur had not had the business experience or ability to look after their affairs and he should no longer be imposed on; in 1929 when Oscar gave his parents the note Thomas was 79 and Annie was 77 years of age, both had had attacks of thrombosis, were in ill health physically and mentally, and were no longer engaged in business of any kind; Thomas and Annie relied on the representations and turned over to Oscar the management of their property and affairs and sought, obtained, and relied on his advice and counseling. Such relation continued during the lifetimes of Thomas and Annie.

A confidential relation existed between Oscar and plaintiff Arthur Mills in that: they were brothers; Oscar, by words, acts, and representations, had assumed a position of trust and confidence with Arthur, advised and counseled him on business affairs, and Arthur relied on and looked to him for advice and counseling from 1926 to the date of Oscar's demise; Oscar advised Arthur to leave the farm and come to work for him, that he would look after their parents and their business affairs; Arthur went to work for Oscar and his continued employment was dependent on Oscar's discretion.

A confidential relation existed between Oscar and plaintiffs Virginia Marsh Gerace, Robert Mills Marsh, and Betty Jane Marsh in that: they are nieces and nephew of Oscar; they were born on February 12, 1919, February 17, 1921, and May 21, 1923, respectively; their mother, Oscar's sister, died September 22, 1934; their father was suffering from a fatal illness at the time; he died September 10, 1938; during the illness of their father Oscar represented to him that in the event his illness caused his demise he (Oscar) would look after and care for Virginia, Robert, and Betty the same as if they were his own children; at the death of their father, on the invitation and suggestion of Oscar, they moved to California and lived with him about two months, and thereafter at his suggestion they established a separate residence.

Oscar fraudulently and deceitfully concealed the indebtedness for the unpaid purchase price of the Illinois realty in that: at the time of the purchase he stated to plaintiff Arthur Mills he had paid cash to his father and mother for the property at about $100 an acre; on information and belief, after the death of Thomas he stated to Annie he was unable to make payments on the note but that as soon as his money became available he would make payment, that it would cause him considerable embarrassment in his business ventures in California if demand for payment was made on him at that time, that he would pay it to her or his brothers and sisters at the first opportunity; Annie was old and infirm and likely to be imposed on by artful and designing persons at the time; she relied on the representations and was induced thereby to withhold demand for payments; he represented in a verified petition in the proceeding for probate of the estate of Thomas that the only assets of the estate at the time of his father's death were government bonds of an estimated value of $500; he stated to Arthur at the time of his father's death and again at the time of his mother's death that he was fully familiar with their affairs and that they left no estate of value; he stated to Arthur and to Virginia at the time of his mother's death that his father left no money or property and that it had been necessary for him to advance sums for his father's benefit during his lifetime and to pay the funeral expenses; he stated to Arthur at the time of his father's death and again at the time of his mother's death that he would personally take care of any necessary matters and that it would be unnecessary, detrimental, and a waste of time for Arthur to assist him in any way in settlement of their affairs; he stated to his mother and Arthur that nothing should be done regarding the probate of his father's estate since if any interest should inure to Arthur, his (Arthur's) wife from whom he was separated, would claim her share to the detriment of all concerned, and in any event it would be of no avail as there was no property; about December 28, 1939 plaintiff Virginia Gerace told Oscar she wanted to look over the personal effects, papers, and photographs of Thomas and Annie; Oscar stated to her that neither Thomas nor Annie had any property or effects of value; on information and belief, Oscar knew of the location of a safe deposit box of Thomas during the latter's lifetime and at the time of his death; the identity and location of the box was at no time disclosed to Arthur, and it remained sealed until after the death of Annie when it was opened by an agent of Oscar; Oscar told Arthur the box contained miscellaneous papers of no value. At no time after the death of Annie did Oscar disclose to any one of plaintiffs the fact that the balance of the purchase price of the Illinois property represented by the note had not been paid.

All of the statements and representations made by Oscar were false and untrue; they were made for the purpose of deferring action to enforce collection of the purchase price of the property and of concealing the existence of the indebtedness from plaintiffs; by reason of such concealment plaintiffs were induced to and did refrain from further investigation and inquiry into the assets of Thomas and Annie and their respective estates.

It is alleged that because of the aforesaid acts, statements, and representations of Oscar, plaintiffs did not discover the existence of the note until January 20, 1952; it was discovered in a locked strongbox among the personal effects, papers, and photographs in a trunk which was moved to California after the death of the father of Virginia, Robert, and Betty, placed in storage for about six months, and thereafter stored among the personal effects of his deceased parents for the use of Oscar and Arthur; the existence of the strongbox was unknown to Arthur until January 20, 1952; neither the existence of the note nor any other fact or circumstance of the indebtedness was in any manner suggested to plaintiffs until that time; they then made an investigation as to the status of the indebtedness and the note.

Defendants are residents of the County of Los Angeles. They are the distributees under the will of Oscar Mills, who died June 10, 1947 and whose will was admitted to probate in the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles, in which proceeding the time within which a creditor's claim might be filed expired prior to the discovery by plaintiffs of the existence of the note and in which a decree of distribution was made on May 16, 1951. It is further alleged summary probate proceedings were had in Illinois whereby title to the realty was and is now vested in defendants as distributees under the will of Oscar Mills.

At the time the Illinois realty was deeded to Oscar he took possession of the property and retained possession until his death. Since his death defendants have had possession. Since Oscar took possession the value of the property has depreciated. On information and belief, the present value of the property is less than the amount of the note with interest.

Plaintiffs are the equitable owners of an undivided two-thirds interest in the Illinois realty. They have a lien as heirs of the grantors on the property in the amount of the note with interest.

An actual controversy exists between plaintiffs and defendants relating to their respective rights, titles, and interest in the Illinois realty. Plaintiffs' claim of rights in the property is denied and disputed by defendants.

The prayer of Count I is for declaratory relief.

Counts II, III, and IV reallege the allegations of Count I except those with respect to plaintiffs having a lien on the Illinois property as heirs of the grantors and with respect to an actual controversy existing between the parties. Count II further alleges that at the time Oscar purchased the property and promised to pay the balance of the purchase price he made the promise without any intent to perform it, and defendants hold title to the property in trust for the use and benefit of plaintiffs. The prayer of Count II is for a decree that defendants hold title on a constructive trust for the use and benefit of plaintiffs.

Count III is on the theory defendants are not only constructive trustees of the realty but also of other property received by them as distributees of the estate of Oscar Mills to the extent that the realty is insufficient to provide restitution for the amount of the note. Count IV seeks an adjudication that plaintiffs are the owners of an undivided two-thirds interest in the note and that it be enforced against defendants by requiring them to make restitution of enough assets received by them from the estate of Oscar Mills as that estate would have to do if the note had been discovered and claim filed prior to the expiration of the time for filing claims.

The record does not disclose the ground on which the demurrer was sustained, a practice we have heretofore had occasion to criticize.

Count I

[1] An actual controversy is alleged to exist between plaintiffs and defendants relating to their respective rights in the Illinois realty. Defendants assert the superior court is without jurisdiction of the cause of action averred because an adjudication of title in realty situated outside the state is sought. Any person who desires a declaration of his rights "in respect to, in, over or upon property," may in cases of actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties, bring an action in the superior court for a declaration of his rights in the premises, and the court may make a binding declaration of such rights and duties. Code Civ. Proc., § 1060. Both declaratory and coercive relief may be granted in the same action. Staley v. Board of Medical Examiners, 109 Cal.App.2d 1, 6, 240 P.2d 61; Knox v. Wolfe, 73 Cal.App.2d 494, 505, 167 P.2d 3.

[2–4] Count I states a cause of action for declaratory relief. Maguire v. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc., 23 Cal.2d 719, 728, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062; Lord v. Garland, 27 Cal.2d 840, 851–852, 168 P.2d 5; Kessloff v. Pearson, 37 Cal.2d 609, 613, 233 P.2d 899; Chas. L. Harney, Inc. v. Contractors' State License Board, 39 Cal.2d 561, 564, 247 P.2d 913. An action for declaratory relief is a suit in equity. The jurisdiction of a court of equity to enforce its decrees is coextensive with its jurisdiction to determine the rights of the parties, and it has power to enforce its decrees as a necessary incident to its jurisdiction. Klinker v. Klinker, 132 Cal.App.2d 687, 694, 283 P.2d 83. If a complaint for declaratory relief pleads facts sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to some equitable relief, the court will assume jurisdiction of the entire controversy. Jones v. Feichtmeir, 95 Cal.App.2d 341, 344, 212 P.2d 933.

[5–7] Defendants argue the superior court is without jurisdiction of the cause of action pleaded because the court does not have jurisdiction of the res—the realty in Illinois. Equity will not deny any relief whatever to a plaintiff simply because it cannot afford him the full measure of the relief he may need, or because it cannot act directly on the premises to which that relief relates. Tully v. Bailey, 46 Cal.App. 2d 195, 200, 115 P.2d 542. Equity acts in personam, not in rem. After the court has obtained jurisdiction of the parties it may, by a decree operating in personam against them, control their actions with respect to property situated without its jurisdiction whenever such action is necessary for it to effect a complete disposition of the controversy. Thus when realty is situated outside the state and the court has jurisdiction of the parties in the state it can: compel a conveyance of the realty, Tomaier v. Tomaier, 23 Cal.2d 754, 760, 146 P.2d 905; Chamberlain v. Wakefield, 95 Cal.App.2d 280, 291–292, 213 P.2d 62; declare and impose a trust relating to the realty, Caldwell v. Ulsh, 184 Ind. 725, 112 N.E. 518; Watkins v. Watkins, 160 Tenn. 1, 22 S.W.2d 1; order a cancellation of deeds to the realty and require a waiver of a party's interest therein, Tully v. Bailey, 46 Cal.App.2d 195, 198, 115 P.2d 542; order an accounting by a mortgagee in possession of the realty, Peninsular Trading & Fishing Co. v. Pacific S. W. Co., 123 Cal. 689, 695–697, 56 P. 604; appoint a trustee of the realty and direct him to execute the trust, Smith v. Davis, 90 Cal. 25, 29, 27 P. 26; decree a rescission of a contract of sale of the realty, order an accounting of the lands and proceeds received therefrom, and direct a reconveyance to the plaintiffs, Promis v. Duke, 208 Cal. 420, 428, 281 P. 613; decree specific performance of a contract to convey the realty, Redwood Investment Co. of Stithton, Ky. v. Exley, 64 Cal.App. 455, 458–459, 221 P. 973; decree the appropriation of the realty to the payment of a debt and set aside a conveyance thereof as in fraud of creditors. Berger v. Loomis, 169 Or. 575, 131 P.2d 211, 144 A.L.R. 636.

> "In Wimer v. Wimer, 82 Va. [890] 901, 5 S.E. 536, we find this language of the court: 'But, while this is true, it is undoubtedly well settled that, in cases of fraud, trust, or contract, courts of equity will, whenever jurisdiction over the parties has been acquired, administer full relief without regard to the nature or situation of the property in which the controversy had its origin, and even where the relief sought consists in a decree for the conveyance of property which lies beyond the control of the court, provided it can be reached by the exercise of its powers over the person, and the relief asked is of such nature as the court is capable of administering.' * * * [90 Cal. at page 32, 27 P. at page 27.] The decrees of courts of equity primarily and properly act in personam, and, at most collaterally only in rem. If the parties are within the jurisdiction of the court, an injunction will be granted to stay proceedings in a suit in a foreign country. A trust will be enforced pertaining to realty, regardless of the situation of the property. [Italics added.] Courts of equity have, as between the parties, reviewed the judgments of foreign courts, and even sales made under those judgments, when fraud or undue advantage was shown. A specific performance of a contract of sale of lands situated in a foreign country will be decreed in equity. * * * A decree to convey land lying in another state does not affect the title; it only operates upon the person who is to make the conveyance, and it is his act in making the deed that affects the title."

[8] While the decree of a court directing the conveyance of realty outside the state does not of itself affect the title of the realty in the latter state, it is a sufficient basis for a suit in the courts of the sister state to compel such conveyance. Spalding v. Spalding, 75 Cal.App. 569, 580, 243 P. 445.

[9] Plaintiffs do not seek a decree operating directly on the Illinois property or one affecting the title. Cf. Getty v. Getty, 130 Cal.App. 519, 20 P.2d 82. What they seek is a declaration of rights between themselves and defendants to the property. Such a declaration will not operate directly on the property or affect the title. The cause of action averred is not for the recovery of the possession of, or to quiet the title to, or for the enforcement of a lien on, realty. It is for a declaration of the rights of the parties in realty. It is transitory and properly maintainable in the county where the defendants reside. See Vaughan v. Roberts, 45 Cal.App.2d 246, 251–256, 113 P.2d 884.

[10–14] Plaintiffs argue that on proof of the facts alleged in Count I they will be entitled to a decree that they have a vendor's lien on the Illinois property. We agree. They do not contend the court has jurisdiction to foreclose the lien. Equity does not wait on precedent which exactly squares with the facts in controversy, but will adjust itself to those situations where right and justice would be defeated but for its intervention. United States Cas. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 122 Cal.App. 2d 427, 434, 265 P.2d 35. The cause of action averred is to establish the lien, not to foreclose it. "One who sells real property has a vendor's lien thereon, independent of possession, for so much of the price as remains unpaid and unsecured otherwise than by the personal obligation of the buyer." Civ.Code, § 3046. A vendor's lien, after an actual conveyance, is not a specific and absolute charge on the realty but a mere equitable right to resort to it on failure of payment by the vendee. The right must be established by suit. Longmaid v. Coulter, 123 Cal. 208, 212, 55 P. 791. The lien is of no operative force or effect until established by a decree of court, and may be asserted only by a suit in equity for the purpose of obtaining such a decree. 25 Cal.Jur. 756, § 224. The right passes to the representatives and heirs of a deceased vendor. Selna v. Selna, 125 Cal. 357, 361, 58 P. 16. An extension of time for payment of the purchase money does not extinguish a vendor's lien. 25 Cal.Jur. 750, § 217. A vendee is regarded as holding the realty in trust for the benefit of the vendor to the extent of the unpaid purchase money, and the trust descends to the representatives and heirs of the vendee against whom the lien for the purchase money will be established and enforced. Civ.Code, § 3048; Burt v. Wilson, 28 Cal. 632, 638; 25 Cal.Jur. 749, § 216. The superior court has jurisdiction of the cause of action averred in Count I.

[15, 16] Defendants assert the cause of action averred in Count I is barred by the statute of limitations. As we have noted, by Count I plaintiffs seek a declaration that they have a vendor's lien on the Illinois realty. The barring of a claim by the statute of limitations is a procedural matter governed by the law of the forum, regardless of where the cause of action arose. Biewend v. Biewend, 17 Cal.2d 108, 114, 109 P.2d 701, 132 A.L.R. 1264. A suit for declaratory relief is governed by the same limitations as are applicable to other forms of relief. The nature of the right sued on, and not the form of action or relief demanded, determines the applicability of the statute of limitations. Leahey v. Department of Water and Power, 76 Cal.App.2d 281, 286, 173 P.2d 69.

[17–23] Where a party fraudulently conceals the existence of a cause of action against him, the statute of limitations is tolled and the guilty party is estopped to plead the limitations. Kimball v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 220 Cal. 203, 30 P.2d 39; Pashley v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 25 Cal.2d 226, 153 P.2d 325; Benner v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 26 Cal.2d 346, 159 P.2d 24. The doctrine of equitable estoppel may be invoked to prevent a defendant from relying on the statute of limitations. When a defendant who sets up the statute has previously by fraud or any violation of duty to the plaintiff caused him to subject his claim to the statutory bar, he must be charged with having wrongfully obtained an advantage which the courts will not allow him to hold. Stafford v. Shultz, 42 Cal.2d 767, 775–779, 270 P.2d 1; Carruth v. Fritch, 36 Cal.2d 426, 429–434, 224 P.2d 702, 24 A.L.R.2d 1403; Sears v. Rule, 27 Cal.2d 131, 145–148, 163 P.2d 443; Pashley v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 25 Cal.2d 226, 228–235, 153 P.2d 325; Adams v. California Mut. B. & L. Ass'n, 18 Cal.2d 487, 488–489, 116 P.2d 75; Strangman v. Arc-Saws, Inc., 123 Cal.App.2d 620–624, 267 P.2d 395; United States Cas. Co. v. Indem. Acc. Comm., 122 Cal.App.2d 427, 433–434, 265 P.2d 35; Industrial Indem. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 115 Cal.App.2d 684, 689–692, 252 P.2d 649; Schaefer v. Kerber, 105 Cal.App.2d 645, 647, 234 P.2d 109; Berkey v. Halm, 101 Cal.App.2d 62, 68, 224 P.2d 885; Herman v. Brown, 91 Cal.App.2d 758, 761, 205 P.2d 1086; Anderson v. Thacher, 76 Cal.App.2d 50, 69–72, 172 P.2d 533; Twining v. Thompson, 68 Cal.App.2d 104, 111–113, 156 P.2d 29; Laraway v. First Nat. Bank of La Verne, 39 Cal.App.2d 718, 726–731, 104 P.2d 95; Miles v. Bank of America, etc., Ass'n, 17 Cal.App.2d 389, 397–399, 62 P.2d 177; annotations: 130 A.L.R. 8, 49; 24 A.L.R.2d 1413, 1435. Thus it has been held that a defendant may be estopped to plead limitations where he had induced inaction on the part of the plaintiff by his false representations or fraudulent concealment. Sears v. Rule, 27 Cal.2d 131, 145–148, 163 P.2d 443; Pashley v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 25 Cal.2d 226, 228–235, 153 P.2d 325; Anderson v. Thacher, 76 Cal.App.2d 50, 69–72, 172 P.2d 533; Twining v. Thompson, 68 Cal.App.2d 104, 111–113, 156 P.2d 29. And an estoppel of a party ordinarily is operative against his privies in estate. In re Mohr's Estate, 212 Wis. 198, 248 N.W. 143, 148, 249 N.W. 517; Izard v. Mikell, 173 Miss. 770, 163 So. 498, 499. The rule that fraud may serve as the basis of estoppel against asserting the bar of limitations applies irrespective of whether or not the action claimed to be barred is itself based on fraud. Carruth v. Fritch, 36 Cal.2d 426, 224 P.2d 702, 24 A.L.R.2d 1403; Pashley v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 25 Cal.2d 226, 153 P.2d 325; Sibert v. Shaver, 111 Cal.App.2d 833, 840, 245 P.2d 514. A court of equity will keep alive or restore a lien where the equities of the case require it and the parties intended that it should not be extinguished, as where it has been discharged by fraud or mistake. Kern v. A. P. Hotaling Co., 27 Or. 205, 40 P. 168, 170; Seymour v. Alkire, 47 W.Va. 302, 34 S.E. 953, 954; Drake Lumber Co. v. Semple, 100 Fla. 1757, 130 So. 577, 581, 75 A.L.R. 687; Backer v. Pyne, 130 Ind. 288, 30 N.E. 21, 22, 30 Am.St.Rep. 231; 33 Am.Jur. 438, § 38. Cf. Richards v. Griffith, 92 Cal. 493, 496, 28 P. 484. Whether an estoppel exists—whether the acts, representations, or conduct lulled a party into a sense of security preventing him from instituting proceedings before the running of the statute, and whether the party relied thereon to his prejudice—is a question of fact, not of law. Industrial Indem. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 115 Cal.App.2d 684, 690, 252 P.2d 649.

Posey v. Brixey, 133 Okl. 98, 271 P. 230, on its facts is on all fours with the case at bar. It was an action by a vendor against a vendee to recover the balance of the purchase price of realty and for foreclosure of a vendor's lien thereon. By fraud of the vendee, the vendor did not bring the action within the statutory period for bringing an action on the principal obligation. The court held that, 271 P. 232:

> "[T]he vendee by his demurrer to vendor's evidence admits that he has not paid the full consideration money, under circumstances that show a want of fidelity on his part in the transaction sufficient to constitute fraud, as in this case, though the cause be barred as a law action on contract by two years, under the first subdivision of section 185, C.O.S.1921, but brought by the vendor within two years after discovery of nonpayment of the full purchase money under the third subdivision of said section 185, equity will interfere to prevent the vendee from reaping the benefit of the advantage thus unfairly gained and sought to be held under a defense based on the statute barring an action on contract after five years of the accrual of the cause."

It is argued that section 337(1) of the Code of Civil Procedure governs.[1] This is not an action on the note and it is not an action on a contract, obligation or liability founded on an instrument in writing. The gist of the cause of action averred is fraud allegedly perpetrated by Oscar Mills. Section 337(1) has no application.

[24–26] When a party is guilty of fraudulent concealment of the cause of action the statute is deemed not to become operative until the aggrieved party discovers the cause of action. Code Civ. Proc., §§ 312, 338(4); Stafford v. Schultz, 42 Cal.2d 767, 778, 270 P.2d 1; Hansen v. Bear Film Company, Inc., 28 Cal.2d 154, 178, 168 P.2d 946; Sears v. Rule, 27 Cal. 2d 131, 149, 163 P.2d 443; Pashley v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 25 Cal.2d 226, 229, 232, 153 P.2d 325; Twining v. Thompson, 68 Cal.App.2d 104, 111, 156 P.2d 29; Laraway v. First Nat. Bank of La Verne, 39 Cal. App.2d 718, 726 et seq., 104 P.2d 95. To bring himself within section 338(4) a party must allege when the fraud was discovered, the circumstances of the discovery, what the discovery was, and why it was not discovered sooner. Tognazzini v. Tognazzini, 125 Cal.App.2d 679, 686–687, 271 P.2d 77. When the facts are susceptible to opposing inferences, whether a party had notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry as to a particular fact, and whether by prosecuting such inquiry he might have learned such fact, are questions of fact to be determined by the trial court. Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co., 26 Cal.2d 412, 440, 159 P.2d 958; Bowman v. McPheeters, 77 Cal.App.2d 795, 798, 802–803, 176 P.2d 745; Blackman v. Howes, 82 Cal.App.2d 275, 278–279, 185 P.2d 1019, 174 A.L.R. 1004.

[27] Count I sufficiently pleads facts showing when the fraud was discovered,

1. "Within four years: 1. An action upon any contract, obligation or liability founded upon an instrument in writing, except as provided in Section 336a of this code * * *."

the circumstances of the discovery, what the discovery was, and why it was not discovered sooner. Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co., 26 Cal.2d 412, 436–444, 159 P.2d 958.

Count II

[28, 29] In Count II a decree is sought that defendants hold title to the Illinois realty in trust for the benefit of plaintiffs. It is evident from what has been said with respect to Count I that the court has jurisdiction of the cause of action averred. Defendants assert the cause of action is barred by the provisions of section 338(4) of the Code of Civil Procedure. Facts showing that a confidential relation existed between Oscar Mills on the one hand and his father, mother, and plaintiffs on the other are alleged. If there is a duty to speak because of a confidential relation, a failure to do so is a species of fraud for which equity may afford relief. Larrabee v. Tracy, 21 Cal.2d 645, 651, 134 P.2d 265.

Civil Code, section 2217, reads:

"An involuntary [constructive] trust is one which is created by operation of law."

Civil Code, section 2223, reads:

"One who wrongfully detains a thing is an involuntary trustee thereof, for the benefit of the owner."

Civil Code, section 2224, provides:

"One who gains a thing by fraud, * * * the violation of a trust, or other wrongful act, is, unless he has some other and better right thereto, an involuntary trustee of the thing gained, for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it."

Civil Code, section 2243, reads:

"Everyone to whom property is transferred in violation of a trust, holds the same as an involuntary trustee under such trust, unless he purchased it in good faith, and for a valuable consideration."

In Bainbridge v. Stoner, 16 Cal.2d 423, at page 428, 106 P.2d 423, at page 427, the court stated:

"The theory of a constructive trust was adopted by equity as a remedy to compel one to restore property to which he is not justly entitled, to another. The person holding the property may have acquired it through fraud, undue influence, breach of trust, or in any other improper manner and he is usually personally liable in damages for his acts. But the one whose property has been taken from him is not relegated to a personal claim against the wrongdoer which might have to be shared with other creditors; he is given the right to a restoration of the property itself. The title holder is, therefore, said to be a constructive trustee holding title to the property for the benefit of the rightful owner, but he is not charged with responsibility based upon either the actual or presumed intention of the parties. (Sec. 2224, Civ.Code; Burns v. Ross, 190 Cal. 269, 212 P. 17; Restatement, Restitution, sec. 160.)" [Italics added.]

[30–32] Assuming the averments of Count II to be true, as we must, the conduct, acts, and representations of Oscar Mills amounted to fraudulent concealment and a violation of his trust. Defendants who received the Illinois property in violation of the trust are involuntary trustees of the property for the benefit of plaintiffs. Civ. Code, § 2243. Ordinarily in a suit to establish an involuntary trust, the statute of limitations begins to run when the trust relation is terminated. Knapp v. Knapp, 15 Cal.2d 237, 241, 100 P.2d 759. But Count II is grounded in fraud. The applicable statute is, as defendants apparently concede, section 338(4) of the Code of Civil Procedure, and under the principle stated at length in Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co., 26 Cal.2d 412, 436–444, 159 P.2d 958, which need not be repeated, the statute began to run in January 1952, at the time plaintiffs discovered the fraud. The action was filed on July 27, 1953, within three years after discovery.

Plaintiffs have shown by the allegations of Count II that a confidential relation existed between Oscar Mills and his parents and plaintiffs; that they had no notice or knowledge of any suspicious facts or circumstances prior to January 1952; that at that time plaintiffs were first put on notice of possible fraud and then made discovery. It follows that the cause of action averred in Count II is not barred by section 338(4) of the Code of Civil Procedure. Knapp v. Knapp, supra, 15 Cal.2d 237, 241–242, 100 P.2d 759.

Count III

[33, 34] This count seeks to have it decreed that defendants hold title not only to the Illinois property in trust for the benefit of plaintiffs but also of other property received by them as distributees of the estate of Oscar Mills to the extent the Illinois realty is insufficient to provide restitution of the amount due plaintiffs under the terms of the note. It is averred the value of the Illinois property is not sufficient to provide restitution of the amount due on the note and that defendants received sufficient therefor from the estate of Oscar Mills. Insofar as Count III seeks a decree that defendants hold title to the Illinois realty in trust for the benefit of plaintiffs, it is no different from Count II and is surplusage. We know of no theory on which it can be decreed that defendants hold property received by them from the estate of Oscar Mills other than the Illinois realty in trust for the benefit of plaintiffs. None is advanced and no authority is cited in support of the proposition. Plaintiffs have no lien on such other property. 25 Cal.Jur. 746, § 213. The demurrer to Count III was properly sustained.

Count IV

Plaintiffs say Count IV "only seeks to impress with a trust, for the benefit of appellants, the real property located in Illinois or the proceeds thereof and such other property which descended to the respondents from the estate of Oscar L. Mills if such other property is necessary to make complete restitution for the fraud of said Oscar L. Mills." We see no difference between Count IV and Count III. The demurrer to Count IV was properly sustained.

[35] A general demurrer to a complaint containing more than one count should be overruled if there is a good count stating a cause of action. If it is erroneously sustained, the judgment of dismissal should be reversed. Lord v. Garland, 27 Cal.2d 840, 850, 168 P.2d 5; Shook v. Pearson, 99 Cal. App.2d 348, 351, 221 P.2d 757; Armstrong v. Civ. 17048.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 2, 1957.

Action for declaratory relief to determine rights and duties under the indemnity provisions in lease. Judgment for respondent in the Superior Court, City & County of San Francisco, William F. Traverso, J., and the defendant appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Agee, J. pro tem., held that a clause in the lease did not require lessee to indemnify lessor against a claim for liability made by an injured pedestrian but that lessee was required to pay cost and expenses of pedestrian's action against lessor where lessee failed to take out as required by lease, a public liability policy covering both liability of lessor as well as lessee.

Judgment modified and affirmed.

1. Landlord and Tenant ⇐152(3)

Under terms of a lease requiring the lessee to "maintain" the sidewalk, the word "maintain" means to repair or keep in good condition things that exist and not the creation of something new.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Maintain".

2. Indemnity ⇐8

Where lease required lessee to indemnify lessor on account of injury to any person arising from use of premises by lessee or from failure of lessee to keep premises in good condition and repair, lessee was not required to indemnify lessor because of pedestrian's claim of injury based on alleged faulty construction of a sidewalk in front of leased premises, where lessee had nothing to do with construction and there was nothing to indicate that sidewalk was in any different condition on date of injury than it was at the time of entry by lessee.

3. Landlord and Tenant ⇐156

Where lease required lessee to take out a public liability policy covering liability of lessor as well as lessee and policy which lessee took out and in effect at time of injury to pedestrian did not cover liability of lessor but pedestrian's action for injuries was dismissed because barred by limitations, lessee must reimburse lessor for cost, expenses and fees reasonably incurred in the defense of pedestrian's action.

AGEE, Justice pro tem.

Defendant Joseph R. Quinn appeals from a judgment in a declaratory relief action brought by plaintiff to have declared certain rights and duties under indemnity provisions in a lease.

On March 25, 1951, appellant was the tenant in possession of premises known as the "Aetna Garage," 525 Jones Street, San Francisco, under a written lease executed by the owner, Romelda Bacciocco. Appellant had acquired the lease by assignment and was obligated by written agreement to comply with the terms thereof. On the date stated, one Holt was walking in front of the premises and was injured when he fell upon the sidewalk. He filed an action on July 10, 1951 for damages against the City and County of San Francisco, Romelda Bacciocco and appellant, claiming that his fall was caused "because of the dangerous construction of said sidewalk abutting said premises." On October 23, 1951, Holt filed an amended complaint, to which separate answers were filed by these three defendants. Romelda Bacciocco thereafter died and the American Trust Company, respondent herein, was appointed the administrator of her estate and substituted in the Holt action in her place.

The amended complaint in the Holt action is in three counts. The first is against the City, the second against decedent, and the third against appellant. The second count alleges that decedent was the owner of the premises and that she "carelessly and negligently allowed and permitted the sidewalk abutting said premises to be constructed and caused to be constructed in an unsafe and defective condition and to remain in said unsafe and defective condition, in that said sidewalk was constructed with elevations in portions of said sidewalk leading into said 525 Jones Street, creating contours in said sidewalk's normal flat surface; that cement guards were attached to said building and said guards projected into the sidewalk and were attached to said sidewalk and that said * * * [owner] well knew or in the exercise of ordinary care should have known of said dangerous and defective and unsafe condition of said sidewalk at said point."

On December 8, 1954, respondent commenced this action to have its rights and duties declared with relation to the Holt action. The controversy between respondent and appellant is over the indemnity provisions in the lease as the same relate to the Holt action. The only evidence introduced at the trial was the lease, the written agreement by appellant to be and remain bound by the lease, and the County Clerk's file in the Holt action. Judgment in favor of respondent was rendered in substance as follows: That appellant shall undertake on behalf of respondent the defense of the Holt action; that appellant shall reimburse respondent for all costs, expenses and fees reasonably incurred by decedent and/or respondent in the defense of said Holt action; and that appellant shall pay any judgment rendered against respondent in said Holt action.

Clause 8 in the lease provides as follows: "* * * the lessee will hold the lessor exempt and harmless for and on account of any damage or injury to any person * * * arising from the use of the premises by the lessee, or arising from the failure of the lessee to keep the premises in good condition and repair, as herein provided." (Emphasis added.)

It is apparent that Holt's claim of injury is based upon the alleged faulty construction of the sidewalk and not upon anything "arising from the use of the premises by the lessee, or arising from the failure of the lessee to keep the premises in good condition and repair."

There is no claim that the lessee had anything to do with the construction of the sidewalk or that any use he made of it had anything to do with Holt's alleged injuries. The lessee did agree in the lease that he would keep and maintain the premises (including the sidewalk) in good order and repair. However, the lease also provided that he could not make any alterations of the premises or any part thereof without the written consent of the lessor. Again, there is no claim of any such alterations. The lease did state that lessor would give her consent under certain conditions to enlarge the main entrance to the premises, but this did not eventuate.

[1] It is thus clear that all that the lessee was required to do under the lease was to "maintain" the sidewalk. To maintain means to repair or keep in good condition things that exist, and not the creation of something new. Holman v. County of Santa Cruz, 91 Cal.App.2d 502, 519, 205 P.2d 767; Hoel v. City of Los Angeles, 136 Cal.App.2d 295, 304, 288 P.2d 989. There is nothing to indicate that the sidewalk was in any different condition on March 25, 1951, than it was at the time of entry by the lessee.

[2] We conclude that Clause 8 did not require appellant to indemnify the lessor against liability for a claim such as that made by Holt.

[3] Clause 24 of the lease provides as follows: "The lessee shall take out and maintain at her own cost and expense public liability insurance against accidents of every character to persons and property, death to persons and destruction and injury to property covering the premises, and the said policy shall cover the liability of the lessor, as well as the lessee, and the said policy shall be fifty thousand ($50,000) Dollars as to one person and one hundred thousand ($100,000) Dollars as to one accident." (Emphasis added.)

Appellant admitted in his answer that the only insurance policy which he took out and had in effect at the time of the Holt incident did not cover the liability of the lessor. Appellant also admitted in his answer that respondent has been refused a defense in the Holt action. If appellant had complied with Clause 24, the respondent would have been entitled to a defense under the insurance policy. It so happens that no further defense is now needed because, on August 2, 1956, the Superior Court, on its own motion and under the provisions of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, dismissed the Holt action for failure to bring it to trial within five years after it was filed. (Stipulated at oral argument to so augment the record.) Consequently, the only provision in the declaratory relief judgment now affecting the parties is that which requires appellant to reimburse respondent for all costs, expenses and fees reasonably incurred by decedent and/or respondent in the defense of the Holt action. If appellant had complied with Clause 24, respondent would not have had to incur these expenses and appellant should be and is required in equity to reimburse respondent accordingly.

The judgment is modified by striking therefrom the paragraphs therein designated as (1), (2) and (4) on the ground that these provisions have become moot because of the dismissal of the Holt action, leaving the paragraphs designated as (3) and (5) in full force and effect, which said paragraphs are as follows:

"(3) Defendant, Joseph R. Quinn, shall reimburse and pay to Plaintiff herein all costs, expenses and fees reasonably incurred by said decedent and/or Plaintiff herein in the defense of said action No. 408641. [The Holt action]

"(5) Plaintiff shall have its costs herein taxed at $35.03."

As so modified, the judgment is affirmed and the lower court is directed to take such further proceedings as are necessary to determine the amount to be paid by appellant under said paragraph (3). Respondent shall recover its costs on appeal.

Action by house trailer seller against buyers for specific performance of a conditional sales contract wherein buyers agreed to convey certain realty to seller as a down payment on the sale price of a trailer. The Superior Court, Riverside County, Hilton H. McCabe, J., entered judgment for seller and buyers appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that evidence sustained findings that amounts stated in contract were based on fair and reasonable value of the trailer and the realty at the time in question, and that the contract was in compliance with statute regulating conditional sales of motor vehicles and that the charge was not usurious.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Specific Performance ⇐121(3)

In action by house trailer seller against buyers for specific performance of a conditional sales contract wherein buyer agreed to convey certain realty to seller as a down payment on the sales price of a trailer, evidence sustained finding that amounts stated in contract were based on fair and reasonable value of the trailer and the realty at the time in question, and that the contract was in compliance with statute regulating conditional sales of motor vehicles and that the charge was not usurious. BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action for specific performance. The plaintiff was engaged in the business of selling house trailers, in which she was assisted by her husband. On January 17, 1955, the defendants bought a trailer from her. This trailer had been priced for sale at $2,995, and the defendants offered to buy the trailer by deeding a vacant lot in "Rancho Mirage" to the plaintiff as a down payment, and by paying a balance of $1,600 in monthly installments. On that day the parties signed a conditional sales contract in the usual form, and the defendants also, in writing, authorized the procuring of insurance on the trailer. This contract fully described the trailer and recited the cash price as $2,395, sales tax $71.85, D.M.V. fees $24, making a total cash price of $2,490.85. It also listed the down payment as $890.85, and the unpaid balance as $1,600, with insurance $181.50, making a total unpaid balance of $1,781.50. The time price differential was then stated to be $535.10, and the contract balance $2,316.60. It then provided that the balance should be paid in 36 equal monthly installments beginning on March 1, 1955. On the same day, January 17, an escrow was started at a bank and the defendants signed escrow instructions in which they agreed to put into escrow any papers necessary to vest title to the described lot in the plaintiff within thirty days. The defendants were given a copy of the contract and they took and retained possession of the trailer. They continued to pay the installments on the contract, which the plaintiff had assigned to a bank, but notified the escrow holder not to deliver the deed and refused to convey the real property to the plaintiff. There was also other evidence that the trailer was worth $2,995 at the time of the sale, that the lot was then worth $1,500, and that the value of lots in that area had increased at the time of the trial.

The complaint in this action alleged, among other things, the written agreement to sell and buy this trailer for the total of $2,490.85; that the defendants agreed to transfer this lot to the plaintiff in part payment of said purchase price; the opening of the escrow for that purpose; that the value of the lot was $890.85; that the contract of sale was fair and reasonable to defendants; that the plaintiff has fully performed; and that the defendants have refused to permit the closing of the escrow so that the deed covering this lot might be recorded. The answer of the defendants admitted that they had agreed to purchase this trailer from the plaintiff on January 17, and denied most of the other allegations of the complaint. As affirmative defenses they alleged that this lot is now and at the time of the sale was reasonably worth $2,000, and it would be unjust and inequitable to compel them to convey it to the plaintiff for a consideration of $890.85; that at the time of entering into the contract the plaintiff had falsely represented to the defendants that the trailer was worth $2,995 when in fact its value was not in excess of $1,800; and that the defendants did not realize that plaintiff had inserted the figure $2,395 in the contract as the purchase price, and did not become aware of such fact until they were served with the complaint herein. The court found in all respects in favor of the plaintiff, finding that the material allegations of the complaint were true and the material allegations of the answer, including the affirmative defenses, were not true. It was also found that the defendants accepted the trailer and occupied it until about November 1, 1955; that the reasonable value of the lot was $890.85 at the time in question; that the written contract was fair, just and equitable; that the value of the trailer at the time of the sale was $2,995; that at no time was a rescission effected; and that the conditional sales contract and the escrow agreement were both legal in all respects, fair and reasonable to all parties concerned, and a proper subject for specific performance. A judgment was entered ordering the defendants to specifically perform the contract and to complete the escrow. The defendants have appealed from that judgment.

The appellants' sole contention is that the conditional sales contract is unenforceable because it did not comply with Section 2982 of the Civil Code. It is argued that the amounts stated in the contract, as required by Section 2982, are all fictitious except for the cost of the insurance and the fees of the Department of Motor Vehicles; that the amount of the cash price of the trailer and the amount of the down payment were fabrications; that the sales tax was computed on an imaginary sales price; that the amount stated to be unpaid on the cash price was the difference between the imaginary cash price and the imaginary down payment; that the sales tax was computed on an imaginary sales price; that the time price differential was necessarily computed on an imaginary unpaid balance; and that this time price differential was thus usurious.

[1, 2] The findings of the court are sufficiently sustained by the evidence. Disregarding any conflicts in the evidence with respect to the preliminary negotiations, it appears that the appellants offered to buy this trailer by giving this lot as a down payment and agreeing to pay an additional $1,600 to be paid on monthly installments. Before this offer was accepted, the respondent's husband looked at the lot and observed that adjoining lots had signs on them pricing those lots at $1,000 each. The parties seemed to have been not too particular about fixing the exact price for the lot, or for the trailer, in advance of entering into the written contract. In any event, the respondent's husband prepared the conditional sales contract, which the appellants agreed to and signed. He inserted the figures therein, making the cash price of the trailer $2,395 which, with the other charges listed, resulted in the balance of $1,600 which was agreed upon. The appellants read the contract before signing, agreed to the terms, and were given a copy thereof. They took the trailer, occupied it as a home, and made the payments on the contract for some eight or nine months. During that interval, they decided that the lot they had agreed to convey was worth more than the price agreed upon at the time the contract was entered into, and refused to permit the escrow to be closed. The statements set forth in the conditional sales contract complied with the requirements of Section 2982 of the Civil Code, and the amounts stated therein are those agreed upon by the parties at the time the contract was entered into and signed. Whether or not the exact figures to be used were agreed upon in the preliminary negotiations they were finally agreed upon when the contract was signed, and anything said in the preliminary negotiations must be considered as having been merged in the written contract, which governs. The result is that no usurious charge appears, and the record fully supports the court's findings and judgment insofar as any contention raised on this appeal is concerned.

The judgment is affirmed.

Hearing Granted Feb. 14, 1957.

Action by fertilizer company against tomato canner to recover for fertilizer furnished tomato farmer, brought on theory canner had promised to pay company for fertilizer from moneys due farmer by canner. The Superior Court, Orange County, John Shea, J., entered judgment for fertilizer company and canner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that canner's letter which acknowledged that fertilizer company was to be paid from the return due farmer, did not constitute an unconditional acceptance of an assignment by farmer, which in effect, guaranteed payment of fertilizer company's claim, but merely authorized canner to pay fertilizer company in the event there was a net return due to farmer from tomato crop.

Judgment reversed.

* Opinion vacated 312 P.2d 1085.

1. Assignments ⇐58
Guaranty ⇐6

Where tomato canner agreed to accept a "crop order" against farmer's tomato crop for fertilizer furnished to farmer by fertilizer company and company failed to furnish canner with "crop order" but sent to canner bill made out to farmer, and after receipt of bill canner secured farmer's approval thereof, and thereafter canner sent letter to company acknowledging that fertilizer company would be paid "from returns due to farmer", letter did not constitute an unconditional acceptance of farmer's assignment and canner did not, in effect, guarantee payment of fertilizer company's claim.

2. Assignments ⇐84

Where tomato canner agreed to accept a "crop order" against farmer's tomato crop on behalf of fertilizer company which had furnished fertilizer to farmer, fertilizer company did not furnish canner "crop order," but sent to canner bill made out to farmer, and canner sent letter to company acknowledging that fertilizer company would be paid "from the returns to farmer" for tomato crop, and where other authorized advancements made by canner on behalf of farmer exceeded tomato crop proceeds, in absence of a finding of fraud in reference to priority of payment of advances, canner was not liable to company for fertilizer furnished farmer.

3. Estoppel ⇐58

An essential element of the doctrine of estoppel is that the party claiming its protection was intentionally or deliberately led into a course of conduct to his detriment by the party against whom he seeks to apply the doctrine.

4. Estoppel ⇐118

In action by fertilizer company to recover for fertilizer furnished a bankrupt farmer brought against canning company, which was authorized to make advancements on behalf of farmer against farmer's tomato crop, fertilizer company failed to show that it was intentionally or deliberately led into a course of conduct to its detriment by conduct of canner in acknowledging by letter that it would pay company from "any funds due" farmer for fertilizer furnished by company to farmer, when it developed that farmer was not due any proceeds from canner due to fact that other advancements made by canner exceeded farmer's proceeds for tomato crop.

5. Estoppel ⇐52

The doctrine of estoppel is strictly applied, and will not be enforced unless substantiated in every particular.

Mize, Larsh, Mize & Hubbard, Santa Ana, for respondents.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Plaintiffs and respondents Larry Fricker and A. V. Smith, doing business as Larry Fricker Company, manufacturers and distributors of fertilizer, brought this action against defendant and appellant Uddo & Taormina Company, a copartnership, canners of tomatoes (hereinafter referred to as defendant) and defendant George Kikuchi, grower, for $4,074.91, alleging that on November 1, 1952, defendants were indebted to plaintiff for money had and received, and defendants promised in writing to pay said money on request.

Defendant Kikuchi was never served and he was dismissed from the action on account of bankruptcy. The case went to trial upon a stipulation of facts which shows Kikuchi leased 160 acres of land to grow tomatoes and was under written contract to sell them to defendant canning company; that during the 1951 crop year, Kikuchi grew and sold to defendant the crop and plaintiff supplied the soil fumigant; that plaintiff was requested by defendant to supply on credit and to take a written crop order; that after first agreeing to this credit arrangement, plaintiff finally refused to supply on crop order and demanded instead a written promissory note signed by Kikuchi and guaranteed by defendant, which was done and the note was paid in full; that the proceeds from the sale of Kikuchi's 1951 crop were sufficient to cover all charges made by defendant against Kikuchi for advances, payments, etc. for his benefit, and after all such charges were deducted, there was a net balance of crop proceeds due Kikuchi; that prior to the commencement of the 1952 tomato crop season Kikuchi again contracted with defendant to grow and sell to it a crop of canning tomatoes; that this contract authorized, but did not require, defendant to make advances, payments, and/or loans to, or for the use and benefit of Kikuchi, and to charge the same against his account; that in April, 1952, Kikuchi again requested plaintiff to supply soil fumigant in the amount prayed for in plaintiff's complaint; that plaintiff orally asked defendant if it would again guarantee the bill as in 1951, and defendant company said that it would not guarantee the bill, but would accept a crop order against the 1952 crop returns "which would become due from defendant to Kikuchi"; that the form of crop order used in 1952 by defendant, which is the same as used in 1951, read as follows: "Uddo-Taormina Cannery * * You are hereby authorized to pay to the" Fertilizing Company "for material supplied by them, from ——— to ——— from the moneys due or to become due to me from you, and charge the same to my account". Then follows the grower's signature and the following: "The above order is accepted, but is payable out of moneys due or to become due to: grower after first deducting all advances made to grower by us, and after paying any orders given by him and received by us prior to the date of receipt of" fertilizer company "invoices". Accepted by ———.

It was then stipulated that plaintiff had never done business before 1952 by means of a crop order upon defendant, and had no knowledge of others who had, and was not acquainted with the form of crop order used by defendant; that after defendant promised to accept a crop order, and prior to April 5, 1952, plaintiff supplied Kikuchi with soil fumigant, and about April 25, 1952, plaintiff made out a bill to Kikuchi for the same in the amount prayed for in the complaint, and sent said bill to defendant; that after the receipt of said bill defendant checked with and secured Kikuchi's approval thereof, and about May 2, 1952, defendant executed and delivered to plaintiff a written instrument dated May 2, 1952, as follows:

"Larry Fricker Co.

"Gentlemen:

"This will confirm that we have accepted a crop order instructing us to pay to you $4,074.91 from the return due to George Kikuchi from Tomatoes delivered by him to us during the 1952 season." Signed by the defendant company.

It was then agreed that no written crop order was ever given by Kikuchi directly to plaintiff covering the bills sued for in the complaint; that on May 2, 1952, defendant had already charged against Kikuchi's 1952 tomato crop account the sum of $27,000 for monies theretofore advanced to and for Kikuchi, and that of said amount $18,000 had been advanced and paid out for the rent upon the tomato crop land; that after May 2 and up to December 31, 1953, when the Kikuchi account was closed, defendant from time to time made further advances and loans for his benefit and charged the same to his account; that the total amount so charged after May 2, 1952, was $53,668, and that the total amount charged, both before and after May 2, was $80,668; that the first tomatoes were harvested from Kikuchi's land in August, 1952, and commencing with August 30, Kikuchi's crop account was credited from time to time as tomatoes were harvested, with the amount of gross crop proceeds, price adjustments, and other miscellaneous credits; that the total amount so credited was $77,013; that a detailed statement of Kikuchi's tomato crop account for the 1952 season with defendant, commencing December 18, 1951, and ending December 31, 1953, showing all charges and credits was received into evidence and marked defendant's Exhibit A; that the 1952 tomato crop production and crop returns therefrom proved to be smaller than either Kikuchi or defendant had anticipated and when the Kikuchi account was closed on December 31, 1953, the total sums of money advanced and paid out to and for Kikuchi exceeded by $3,655.19 the total of all the credit to his account, and Kikuchi was still indebted to defendant in that amount upon the date he was adjudicated a bankrupt; that at all times after December 18, 1951, Kikuchi had no funds or credits out of which to pay the cost of land rent, planting and harvesting of the 1952 tomato crop except such sums as would be advanced or loaned by defendant for such purposes; that at all times during the growing and harvesting Kikuchi devoted his entire time to said crops and worked personally in the field; that he used, in the crop production and hauling, farm equipment and trucks either owned by him or being purchased by him on conditional sales contracts; that had said equipment not been available for use it would have been necessary to rent equivalent equipment; that in April, 1952, at the time when plaintiff elected to supply Kikuchi upon crop order, he knew and believed that Kikuchi had no funds, assets or ability to pay for the soil fumigant except out of the crop proceeds which Kikuchi could expect to receive from the prospective tomato crop; that at such time plaintiff did ascertain the approximate amount of the charges which had theretofore been charged by defendant against Kikuchi's said prospective tomato crop; that those items of the charges shown on defendant's Exhibit A were in the main used by him to pay necessary crop production expenses, and such payments were made only in cases where the party furnishing the labor, materials, etc. demanded payment and would not extend credit; that on each occasion when Kikuchi requested "advances" to be paid directly to himself, the defendant, before making said advances, inquired of Kikuchi the purpose for which the money was to be used, and they were advised that it was needed and was to be used to pay various items of crop production expense; that Kikuchi did use some of the money so advanced to him for his family and himself to live on, and that he had no other source of income or funds out of which to support himself and his family; that Kikuchi used some of the money so advanced to him to make installment payments which were due on farm equipment which he was purchasing under conditional sales contracts, but that he was using said machinery full time in the production of said crop; that the moneys so advanced were necessary to the production of the tomato crop; that there never was a time during the 1952 season (from December 18, 1951, when the first charge for advance rent was made, to December 31, 1953, when the account was closed with a debit balance of $3,655.19) when the credit balance of the Kikuchi account with defendant exceeded the debit balance; and that the plaintiff's bill remains wholly unpaid. Findings were entered accordingly. Judgment went against defendant for said amount.

A similar action was before this court for decision in Garner v. Uddo & Taormina Co., 137 Cal.App.2d 819, 290 P.2d 967, where plaintiff, a liquid fertilizer distributor, brought an action against this same defendant for fertilizer sold to Kikuchi, the grower, on a crop order wherein he authorized Uddo & Taormina Company to pay plaintiffs from the balance of money due him from after deducting all advances made. The trial court found against plaintiffs and this finding was sustained on appeal. The facts related therein are quite similar to those in the instant case except there was another fertilizer company involved, and in the instant action there never was produced a signed crop order, as was done in the cited case. We are unable to perceive any material distinction which would attach any personal liability upon defendant for fertilizer furnished to Kikuchi. It is plaintiff's claim that by the transaction defendant company unconditionally accepted an assignment by the grower in the sum of $4,074.91, to be paid from the returns due grower for tomatoes delivered by him to defendant during the 1952 season; that the claimed assignment to plaintiff by the grower had precedence over any and all advances made to or on behalf of the grower subsequent to May 2, 1952, and that defendant is estopped to assert or maintain otherwise, citing such authority as Baumgarten v. California Pacific Title & Trust Co., 127 Cal.App. 649, 657, 16 P.2d 332; A. Farnell Blair Co. v. Hollywood State Bank, 102 Cal.App.2d 418, 227 P.2d 529; and Klein v. Farmer, 85 Cal.App.2d 545, 552, 194 P.2d 106.

[1, 2] It affirmatively appears from the stipulation that defendant's only obligation and duty to plaintiff was to "accept a crop order against the 1952 crop returns which would become due from defendant to Kikuchi". Plaintiff, upon whom the burden rested, never furnished defendant with such a crop order and it would be unreasonable to believe that defendant intended to accept a crop order couched in other language than that required of it and ordinarily used by it in such cases. At least there was no meeting of the minds of the parties as to its terms and plaintiff may not now argue, on appeal, that a more stringent liability was imposed on defendant than the crop order form indicated. If the general form used was in fact signed by plaintiff and Kikuchi, as defendant may well believe, then no recovery could be had under the case of Garner v. Uddo & Taormina Co., supra. If a different obligation arose, plaintiff failed to establish that fact. Plaintiff relies on the letter of May 2, 1952, as establishing an unconditional acceptance of an assignment by the grower. This letter specifically recited that plaintiffs were to be paid "from the return due to George Kikuchi". Plaintiff argues that the return referred to does not mean "net return" but any return from the sale of the tomatoes. This sentence cannot reasonably be so construed under the circumstances. Under the stipulation defendant was authorized, but not obligated, to advance costs and deduct the same from the crop sales proceeds. It therefore clearly appears that defendant was authorized to make advances necessary to the production of the crop, deduct those sums from the gross returns, and pay the balance to the grower. There never was a time after the opening of the account and the payment of the $18,000 property rental, that the returns exceeded the authorized deductions. Accordingly, there never was a time when any return was "due" to George Kikuchi, from which plaintiff's claim could be paid. The letter itself specifies and limits the fund from which it was to be paid and such fund never came into existence. This coincides with the stipulation of facts. There is no indication or finding of fraud in reference to the priority of payment of advances and charges against the fund. It further appears that defendant refused to guarantee payment of this account by endorsing a note of the grower as in the past, and plaintiff relied upon the crop agreement arrangement. If plaintiff's claim were correct, that the letter of May 2, 1952, constituted an unconditional assignment, then defendant would be, in effect, guaranteeing payment of plaintiff's claim. This is entirely contrary to the intention of the parties as reflected in the stipulation of facts. We must therefore conclude that no personal liability against defendant attached. Lindley v. Fay, 119 Cal. 239, 243, 51 P. 333; Vatcher v. Grier, 50 Cal.App. 39, 41, 195 P. 75; Parker v. Herndon, 19 Cal.App. 451, 455, 126 P. 183; Sawyer v. Colgan, 102 Cal. 283, 292, 36 P. 580, 834; Tatsuno v. Pedersen, 21 Cal.App. 585, 132 P. 608. In fact, defendant was compelled to assume an indebtedness of $3,655.91 by reason of the failure of the crop to produce the amount anticipated by all of the parties and from which plaintiff apparently intended to rely for payment of the obligation.

[3–5] As to the claimed estoppel, the facts indicated do not show that the party claiming its protection was intentionally or deliberately led into a course of conduct to his detriment by the party against whom he seeks to apply the doctrine. This is an essential element. The defense of estoppel often means that the party against whom it is invoked is deprived of the right to prove the truth as to a matter involving a substantial right and may thereby be divested of a substantive right of property; and since, as a general proposition, the great end of judicial inquiry is to ascertain the truth, the law does not favor estoppel. The doctrine is strictly applied, therefore, and will not be enforced unless substantiated in every particular. Lake v. O'Brien, 54 Cal.App. 543, 202 P. 158; City of San Diego v. Cuyamaca Water Co., 209 Cal. 105, 287 P. 475; 18 Cal.Jur.2d 406, secs. 4 and 5.

Defendants were convicted of having in their possession parts of the plant of the genus Lophophora. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Thomas L. Ambrose, J., entered judgments on the verdicts and orders denying motions for new trial, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that the use of the words "genus Lophophora" in section of the Health and Safety Code defining as a narcotic all parts of the plant of the "genus Lophophora" whether growing or otherwise, is not a violation of section of the constitution requiring that all legislative proceedings shall be in the English language.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Clayton Roland Johnson and Herbert Gene French were accused by information of having in their possession "parts of the plant Genus Lophophora and the buttons thereof, also known as Peyote" in violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code. In a court trial they were convicted and, after their motions for new trial were denied, they appealed from the judgments and the orders. The first contention of appellants is "that the word 'lophophora' is a Latin term, and a botanical term, which is not used in common every-day ordinary English", and that the use of the word in the statute contravenes Section 24 of Article IV of the Constitution which requires, in part, that all legislative proceedings shall be in no other than the English language.

Section 11001(l) of the Health and Safety Code defines as a narcotic "all parts of the plant of the genus Lophophora whether growing or otherwise; the buttons thereof, the alkaloids extracted from any such plant; and every compound, salt, derivative, mixture or preparation of such plant." The information was in the terms of the statute except for the addition of the words "also known as Peyote." The definition of "narcotics" contains numerous chemical and botanical terms. The laws are replete with Latin terms that have been adopted as a part of the English language. It is unnecessary to mention instances in which adoption has been preferred to the devising of definitions expressed in English words more commonly used and understood.

[1–3] We look first to the dictionaries to ascertain whether a given word is recognized as a part of the English language. Although that may not always be an infallible test it is, in the present case, a satisfactory one. "Lophophora" is defined in Webster's New International Dictionary, Second Edition, Unabridged: "A genus of spineless cacti, family Cactaceae, having as the only known species the mescal (L. Williamsii)." "Peyote" is defined: "A stimulant drug from mescal buttons." The latter term is recognized in section 11530 of the Health and Safety Code as a common name of "the geni of the Lophophora." In using the words "Genus Lophophora" in section 11001 the legislature did not depart from the use of the English language; it recognized them as words that had been adopted as a part of that language. The requirement that legislative acts shall be written in the English language does not forbid the use of Latin words. If a Latin word has been in common use and carried in the English dictionaries for many years, with a sure and settled meaning, it is proper for the legislature to put it into a statute. It may have no English equivalent, or no convenient one, but this would not bar its use. The laws relating to habeas corpus are in the English language, and so is section 11001 (l) of the Health and Safety Code.

[4] The second argument is that "Any person who is told that he is prohibited from possessing the genus Lophophora would undoubtedly laugh since he could not possibly know what the genus lophophora was." Appellants expressly concede "that 'peyote' is a word commonly known in the west and south west, citing People v. Beesly, 119 Cal.App. 82, at p[age]. 88 [6 P.2d 114, 970]." It is also conceded by appellants that if the statute used the word "peyote" this "would be enough to inform any person what the prohibited offense was." If appellants, as they concede, knew what peyote is and were interested to ascertain whether its possession was unlawful they could have done what their counsel have done, namely, consult the dictionaries and the Health and Safety Code and thereby have become sufficiently informed that it was Lophophora and that they should leave it alone.

[5] It is no defense to the charge of possession of a narcotic plant that the possessor does not know that its possession is forbidden. Appellants do not deny that they knew they had peyote in their possession and that it had narcotic properties. Their contentions are wholly without merit.

The judgments and orders are affirmed.

Civ. 8880.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 28, 1956.

Action by refrigeration equipment buyers against sellers for amount allegedly paid by buyers on behalf of sellers in paying judgment obtained against buyers alone in prior actions by third party against buyers, sellers, and sellers' supplier and subcontractor for services rendered in installing the equipment on buyers' premises. The Superior Court, Humboldt County, Carl L. Christensen, J., entered judgment adverse to sellers, and sellers appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that sellers' obligation to buyers had not been litigated in third party's action against buyers, and therefore defense of res judicata as between buyers and sellers was not available to sellers.

Judgment affirmed.

Opinion, 303 P.2d 583, vacated.

1. Judgment ⇐956(5)

In action by refrigeration equipment buyers against sellers for amount allegedly paid by buyers on behalf of sellers in paying judgment obtained against buyers alone in prior action by third party against buyers, sellers, and sellers' supplier and subcontractor for services rendered in installing the equipment on buyers' premises, where judgment roll showed third party's action against sellers was dismissed at close of third party's evidence in chief, issue of sellers' obligation to buyers had not been adjudicated and defense of res judicata was not available to sellers.

2. Money Paid ⇐9

In action by refrigeration equipment buyers against sellers for amount allegedly paid by buyers on behalf of sellers for services rendered in installing the equipment on buyers' premises, evidence was sufficient to sustain trial court's finding that, by terms of the agreement, sellers had promised to install the equipment on buyers' premises.

3. Money Paid ⇐1

One who is compelled, by reason of a legal liability to pay an obligation for which another in equity and good conscience should pay may recover from such other the money so paid, and it is not necessary that the payment should have been coerced by actual legal proceedings, but the mere existence of the legal liability is sufficient.

4. Money Paid ⇐1

Where third party, in action against refrigeration equipment buyers, sellers, and sellers' supplier and subcontractor for services rendered in installing the equipment on buyers' premises, recovered judgment against buyers, but sellers had promised to install the equipment at sellers' cost, buyers, in paying such judgment, were forced to lay out money for benefit of sellers, and, therefore, sellers were obligated to repay such money to buyers.

5. Money Paid ⇐9

In action by refrigeration equipment buyers against sellers for amount allegedly paid by buyers on behalf of sellers for services rendered in installing the equipment on buyers' premises, evidence was sufficient to establish that amount paid by buyers was the reasonable value of work done by third party.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Opinion after rehearing granted.

This is an appeal from a money judgment in an action brought upon a common count for an amount alleged to have been paid by respondents on behalf of the appellants.

The money paid by respondents was paid in satisfaction of a judgment recovered against respondents by one Nelson Rossig. In that prior action Rossig sued respondents herein, appellants herein, and Marine Electric Company, a corporation, for the reasonable value of his services in installing on the property of respondents certain refrigeration equipment which respondents had purchased from appellants, and which appellants in turn had purchased from Marine Electric Company. In the Rossig action appellants herein and Marine Electric Company were granted nonsuits at the close of Rossig's case in chief. The action then proceeded against respondents herein, and Rossig obtained a judgment against them. Respondents paid the judgment and then brought this action to recover from appellants the money so paid out by respondents, alleging it to have been paid out on behalf of appellants and at their request. In response to the common count pleaded against them by respondents the appellants generally denied the allegations of the complaint and pleaded a special defense of res judicata, alleging that in the prior action brought by Rossig all issues as between respondents and appellants herein, codefendants in the Rossig action, had been litigated, and that it had thus been adjudged as between the parties to this action that any sums that may have been paid by respondents upon the demand of Rossig were as between the parties hereto the sole obligation of respondents herein and not money laid out for appellants' benefit.

[1] The judgment roll in the prior action was introduced in evidence at the trial of this action, and an inspection thereof reveals the following: By his complaint Rossig made the following allegations against respondents herein, appellants herein, and Marine Electric Company: That within four years last past the defendants and each of them became indebted to Rossig for services and material and parts furnished them in the installation of a refrigeration system in a building owned by Batini and Massei in Eureka, California, which services, material and parts were of the reasonable value of $641.97. Judgment was prayed against all of the defendants. Respondents herein answered, denying generally said allegations. Marine Electric Company likewise answered, denying the allegations and alleging affirmatively that it had sold certain machinery and equipment to appellants herein and had shipped the same to Eureka. Appellants herein answered, denying generally said allegations. Upon these pleadings the cause went to trial.

The judgment of nonsuit recites that after the evidence of plaintiff had closed, Marine Electric Company and appellants herein moved for a judgment of nonsuit upon the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove a sufficient case as to each of said defendants. It was then recited that the motions for nonsuit were granted. Judgment of nonsuit followed. The judgment rendered against respondents herein on the merits appears to have been made after written waiver of findings of fact and conclusions of law and is simply a money judgment that Rossig recover of respondents herein the sum of $641.97, plus interest and costs.

The record of Rossig v. Batini, et al. introduced in evidence does not establish the defense of res judicata. The judgment of nonsuit in favor of Marine Electric Company and appellants herein, coming at the close of Rossig's evidence in chief, came at a time in the trial of that case when for aught that appears from the judgment roll Rossig had simply failed for some reason to make a prima facie case against respondents' codefendants. At that point in the case respondents herein had not been called upon to rebut anything placed in evidence by Rossig. When their codefendants moved for nonsuits they were in no position to oppose and when their codefendants were, at their own solicitation, excluded from further proceedings it is patent that there could not thereafter have been any adjudication of rights and obligations between themselves and respondents. Indeed, our recital of the pleadings shows that they had tendered no such issues in the Rossig action. It is obvious that appellants herein by the introduction in evidence of the judgment roll in the prior action wholly failed to establish the defense of res judicata.

Appellants further contend that there is not sufficient evidence in the record to sustain the trial court's findings of fact. These findings may be summarized as follows: That on October 16, 1946, the respondents and appellants entered into an agreement providing in part that appellants would furnish to respondents certain refrigeration equipment; that by the terms of that agreement appellants agreed to install the equipment in the premises of respondents; that thereafter appellants engaged the services of Marine Electric Company as subcontractors to install said equipment; that Marine Electric Company engaged Rossig to do the work; that Rossig did the work and presented his charges therefor to respondents herein, which charges were reasonable for the work done; that respondents paid the charges of Rossig in accordance with the judgment rendered in favor of Rossig against respondents herein in an action brought by Rossig against respondents herein; that in said action appellants herein were joined as codefendants with respondents, but that during the course of the trial a nonsuit was granted in appellants' favor. In the findings the trial court stated further that the judgment in the Rossig action did not constitute an adjudication of the issues pleaded in the present action between respondents and appellants, nor present any issue as to any liability of appellants to respondents for the charges of Rossig. The court further found that upon payment of the Rossig judgment, appellants herein became indebted to respondents for the money so laid out.

[2-4] As to the terms of the agreement between respondents and appellants, Mr. Batini, testifying at the trial of the action herein, said that the agreement placed upon appellants the burden not only of furnishing the refrigeration equipment, but also that of installing it and all for the agreed price which respondents paid to appellants. That testimony sufficiently supports the trial court's finding that by the terms of the agreement appellants promised to install the refrigeration equipment in the premises of respondents. There was other evidence to the same effect. Thus, when Rossig threatened to sue respondents, Mr. Batini forwarded the demand to Mr. Stelling, one of appellants, appending the following notation: "Are you going to pay your Bills—With Our Money—or have us sewed. This is not our way of doing Business. We paid you promptley." Stelling wrote in reply that the Marine Electric Company was responsible for the bill as "The supplying of the refrigeration equipment and its installation was a sub-contract between ourselves and the Marine Electric Company of San Francisco." The situation presented then is this: Appellants agreed to sell and, at their cost, to install on the premises of respondents certain refrigeration equipment. So far as respondents were concerned appellants performed that agreement, Mr. Rossig doing the work of installation. The contract was completed and no breach thereof occurred. Nevertheless, Rossig was able to obtain a judgment against respondents. We are not here concerned with the circumstances under which that occurred, for as between appellants and respondents the money respondents were forced to pay Rossig ought to have been paid by appellants. Respondents, therefore, were compelled to lay out money for the benefit of appellants, and the trial court correctly adjudged that appellants were thereupon obligated to repay the moneys so laid out. It was said in Weaver v. Fickett, 82 Cal.App. 116, 120, 255 P. 257, 259:

> "* * * 'One who is compelled, by reason of a legal liability therefor, to pay an obligation for which another in equity and good conscience should pay, may recover from that other the money so paid. It is not necessary that the payment should have been coerced by actual legal proceedings; the mere existence of the legal liability is sufficient.'"

> "Plaintiff relies upon the equitable doctrine that one who is compelled to pay a debt or whose property is made liable for a debt which another in good conscience ought to pay is entitled to recover against that other the amount so paid. In commenting upon this rule the Supreme Court said in Finnell v. Finnell, 159 Cal. 535, 539, 114 P. 820, 821: 'The soundness of this doctrine has been upheld by innumerable decisions of courts of the highest authority in many jurisdictions, and it is so obviously just and reasonable that it is matter of wonder that it should ever have been called in question.'"

[5] Appellants contend that there was in the record no evidence that the amount paid by respondents was the reasonable value of the work of installing the refrigeration equipment. Assuming that such proof was necessary, the assignment is not supported by the record. During the trial Mr. Stelling admitted that if all of the equipment, including tubing and gas, which was itemized in the statement from Mr. Rossig, had been necessary for the job then the charges would not have been unreasonable; and Mr. Batini testified directly that all of the items itemized had actually been used in the installing of the equipment.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

VALLÉE, Justice.

[1] Defendant was convicted of bookmaking, Pen.Code, § 337a, subd. 1, by the court sitting without a jury. He appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. He contends first that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment.

About 10:30 a. m. on November 26, 1955 Deputy Sheriff Lee and other officers observed defendant in front of the Hide Out Café on Whittier Boulevard in Los Angeles County. An elderly gentleman approached defendant and began a conversation with him. Defendant took a National Daily Reporter from his pocket and the two looked at it together. The gentleman then handed defendant a small piece of paper and some money. Defendant put the piece of paper in his right-hand pants pocket and the money in his left-hand pants pocket.

Within ten minutes thereafter Murray Bane approached defendant and had a conversation with him. Defendant took the National Daily Reporter from his pocket and he and Bane scanned it. Bane took a card from his pocket and they looked at it.

Bane put the card back in his shirt pocket and handed defendant some money.

The officers then approached defendant and placed him under arrest. They took the card from Bane's shirt pocket and the small piece of paper and the National Daily Reporter from defendant's hand. The National Daily Reporter was dated November 26, 1955. The card and the small piece of paper were betting markers. Notations on the card referred to a $2 win, $2 place bet on Gaviota Pass in the third race to be run that day at Tanforan. Notations on the small piece of paper referred to a $1 win, $1 place, and $1 show bet on Dauber Chickle in the second race and to a $2 win, $2 place, and $2 show bet on Turk's Delight in the eighth race, to be run that day at Tanforan.

Bane told Officer Lee in defendant's presence that he had given defendant a $5 bill, for which he received $1 in change for a $2 win, $2 place bet on Gaviota Pass. Defendant said he had taken the bet, he intended calling it in to a bookmaker, he had not taken any other bets, and that he did not know how he had the small piece of paper in his possession.

There was evidence in contradiction of the foregoing to the effect that defendant did not see the small piece of paper until it was shown him by the officers, that the money handed him by Bane was in payment of a debt, and that the notations on the small piece of paper and on the card were not in defendant's handwriting.

We think it manifest the evidence is sufficient to support the judgment. Cf. People v. Meade, 109 Cal.App.2d 306, 240 P.2d 680; People v. Burch, 118 Cal.App.2d 122, 257 P.2d 44. Resolution of the conflict in the evidence was for the trial court.

[2] Defendant was also charged with a violation of subdivision 3 of section 337a of the Penal Code, receiving money bet on the result of a horse race. He was found not guilty of that offense. He contends that acquittal of a violation of subdivision 3 prevents the facts relating to acts condemned by that subdivision from being used to convict him of a violation of subdivision 1; in effect, that an acquittal of a violation of subdivision 3 was an acquittal of a violation of subdivision 1. The point is untenable. A verdict of acquittal of one count may not be deemed or held to be an acquittal of any other count. Pen.Code, § 954. "Section 337a of the Penal Code contains six subdivisions, and is so framed that one set or series of acts might constitute a violation of each or all of said subdivisions. By its provisions the following acts are made felonies: In subdivision 1, bookmaking or poolselling; in subdivision 2, occupying a room with bookmaking paraphernalia for the purpose of recording bets on races; 3, receiving bets on races; 4, recording bets on races; 5, owner permitting room or building to be used for any of the preceding purposes; 6, making or accepting bets on races. Each of these constitutes a separate offense, as if it had been enacted in a separate section of the Code." People v. Ghio, 82 Cal.App. 28, 32, 255 P. 205, 206. "[T]he acquittal of an alleged violation of one of the subdivisions of section 337a, Penal Code, does not prevent the facts relating to acts condemned by that subdivision from being used with reference to another subdivision." People v. Smith, 113 Cal. App.2d 416, 420, 248 P.2d 444, 447. Also see People v. Meade, 109 Cal.App.2d 306, 309, 240 P.2d 680.

People v. Coppla, 100 Cal.App.2d 766, 224 P.2d 828, relied on by defendant, is not in point. The judgment in that case was reversed because the evidence was insufficient.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

PARKER WOOD, J., concurs.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

I dissent. The evidence was that defendant received money and a slip of paper which indicated that the money was placed as a bet or bets. The acquittal under subdivision 3 means that the court determined that he did not receive a bet on a race. If there was no betting the evidence as to possession of the National Daily Reporter, and what could have been a betting marker if a bet had been made, was meaningless and there was no evidence of bookmaking. I think a reversal is required.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Cesario FLORES, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5691.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Dec. 27, 1956.

Hearing Denied Jan. 23, 1957.

Defendant was convicted on plea of guilty of kidnapping and rape, and judgment was entered. Thereafter the defendant filed a petition for writ of error coram nobis, on ground that he was fraudulently induced to employ certain attorney, and on ground that he was induced to plead guilty by reason of coercion and duress on part of his attorneys. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Herbert V. Walker, J., entered an order denying writ of error coram nobis, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that there was no abuse of discretion on part of the Superior Court in denying writ of error coram nobis.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐997(6)

The office of a writ of error coram nobis is to bring attention of court to facts which existed at time of trial, and which would have constituted a valid defense, but which, without negligence on part of defendant, were not presented, either through duress, fraud, or excusable mistake, and which, not appearing on face of record, would have effected an acquittal of defendant or, at least, would have caused a more favorable judgment to have been entered against him.

2. Criminal Law ⇐997(15)

On writ of error coram nobis, there is a strong presumption that judgment of conviction is correct.

3. Criminal Law ⇐997(15)

To prevail in a coram nobis proceeding, a defendant has the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the credible evidence that he was deprived of substantial legal rights by extrinsic causes.

4. Criminal Law ⇐997(6)

On writ of error coram nobis, defendant must show that facts on which he relies were not known to him and could not, in exercise of due diligence, have been discovered at any time substantially earlier than the time of filing his petition.

5. Criminal Law ⇐997(1), 1147

The granting of relief in a coram nobis proceeding rests largely in the sound discretion of the trial court, and its decision will not be reversed except for an abuse of that discretion.

6. Criminal Law ⇐558

Trial court is not required to accept as true the testimony of a witness, even though the testimony is not contradicted.

7. Criminal Law ⇐1159(4)

The trial court's determination of the truth or veracity of a witness is final.

8. Criminal Law ⇐997(5)

Defendant's claim that his counsel did not competently represent him could not be considered in coram nobis proceeding.

9. Criminal Law ⇐997(15)

In coram nobis proceeding, trial court properly excluded evidence of defendant that he was allegedly induced to employ certain counsel through capping activities on her behalf.

10. Criminal Law ⇐997(15)

In coram nobis proceeding, record did not support charge of defendant that he was denied the right to subpoena witnesses.

11. Criminal Law ⇐997(15)

Failure of defendant to explain his delay in seeking relief from asserted imposition of his counsel was a factor for the trial court's consideration in passing on petition for writ of error coram nobis.

12. Criminal Law ⇐997(5, 9)

On petition for writ of error coram nobis, on ground that defendant was fraudulently induced to employ certain attorney, and on ground that he was induced to plead guilty by reason of coercion and duress on part of his attorneys, superior court did not abuse its discretion in denying writ of error coram nobis. West's Ann.Pen. Code, §§ 209, 261, subd. 3, 286, 288a.

Cesario Flores, in pro. per., and John E. Glover, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOX, Justice.

Defendant appeals from the denial of his petition for writ of error coram nobis.

Defendant was charged with the commission of seven felonies: four were kidnapping for the purpose of robbery; one was rape, Pen.Code, sec. 261(3); the other two were, respectively, violations of Penal Code sections 286 and 288a. In all counts its was alleged that defendant was armed with a deadly weapon,—a knife. In each of the kidnapping counts it was alleged that the victim was subjected to bodily harm by defendant.

At defendant's arraignment on September 20, 1954, E. D. McPherson, Esq., appeared as counsel for defendant for the purpose of arraignment only. Arraignment and plea were continued to December 27. On December 14, defendant appeared by the Public Defender. Thereafter he was represented by Gladys Towles Root, and Herbert Grossman and Joseph M. Rosen of her office. On January 13, 1955, with Mr. Grossman at his side, he entered a plea of not guilty.

Investigation disclosed that asserted alibi witnesses would not support defendant's claim of an alibi. Mr. Grossman advised defendant that in his opinion "it is a very bad case from your standpoint. The evidence here is against you, and you have no evidence in your behalf, or very little evidence." Mr. Grossman also told him "there is a possibility of a death penalty in this case." Later, defendant told Mr. Rosen: "The truth of the matter is that I committed these offenses that I am charged with. I have denied it up to now * * * because I don't want my wife to know." Thereupon Mr. Grossman, with defendant's consent, sought approval of the district attorney for pleas of guilty to two counts of robbery. The district attorney would not accept such pleas. He insisted on a plea to one count of kidnapping for the purpose of robbery, with an admission that the victim was subjected to bodily harm, and to one other count. Defendant inquired about the possibility of the death penalty being imposed. Grossman replied: "I will not permit you to enter that [plea] unless I am certain in my mind, as much as it is possible for anyone to be certain * * * that you will not receive the death penalty." Defendant thereupon entered a plea of guilty to one of the kidnapping counts and to the charge of rape. On the kidnapping charge the court sentenced him to life imprisonment without possibility of parole, Pen.Code, sec. 209, and on the rape count to the state prison for the term prescribed by law, that sentence to run concurrently with the other.

Some ten months after sentence defendant filed this petition. He offered no explanation for his delay.

Defendant was returned to court for the hearing and acted as his own counsel. He did not, however, take the witness stand.

The burden of defendant's complaint is that he was fraudulently induced to employ Mrs. Root; that she and her associates did not competently represent him; that he was induced to plead guilty by reason of coercion and duress on their part; and that the trial court committed prejudicial error in certain of its rulings.

[1–5] In discussing the function of writ of error coram nobis, this court recently pointed out, in People v. Hayman, 145 Cal. App.2d 620, 302 P.2d 810, 812, that "The office of that writ is to bring the attention of the court to such facts as existed at the time of the trial that would have constituted a valid defense, but which, without negligence on the part of the defendant, were not presented, either through duress, fraud or excusable mistake and which, not appearing on the face of the record, would have effected an acquittal of the petitioner or, at least, have caused a more favorable judgment to be entered against him [citations]." There is a strong presumption that the judgment is correct. People v. Bobeda, 143 Cal.App.2d 496, 300 P.2d 97; People v. Shorts, 32 Cal.2d 502, 508, 197 P.2d 330. To prevail in a coram nobis proceeding a defendant has the burden of establishing by a preponderance of credible evidence that he was deprived of substantial legal rights by extrinsic causes. People v. Devora, 105 Cal.App.2d 457, 459, 233 P.2d 653; People v. Bible, 135 Cal.App.2d 65, 67, 286 P.2d 524. Also, the petitioner must show that the facts upon which he relies were not known to him and could not in the exercise of due diligence have been discovered at any time substantially earlier than the time of filing his petition. People v. Ayala, 138 Cal.App.2d 243, 246, 291 P.2d 517. Finally, granting relief in such a proceeding rests largely in the sound discretion of the trial court and its decision will not be reversed except for an abuse of that discretion. People v. Bible, supra, 135 Cal.App.2d at page 68, 286 P.2d 524; People v. Devora, supra.

[6, 7] The questions of fraud, coercion and duress are essentially factual. All three attorneys testified at length as to their professional relationships with defendant and as to what was done by them in the handling and disposition of his case. At the conclusion of the hearing the trial court indicated he believed their testimony rather than the story of defendant as revealed by his verified petition and his supporting witnesses. The trial court "is not required to accept as true the testimony of a witness even though not contradicted." People v. Bobeda, supra [143 Cal.App.2d 500, 300 P.2d 99]; People v. Curtis, 104 Cal. App.2d 219, 223, 230 P.2d 877; People v. Kirk, 98 Cal.App.2d 687, 692, 220 P.2d 976. In this connection defendant charges Mrs. Root with giving perjured testimony on the hearing. The trial court, however, believed her and its "determination of the truth or the veracity of a witness is final." People v. Bobeda, supra [143 Cal.App.2d 500, 300 P.2d 99]. Thus the factual questions have been resolved against defendant. Such resolution, being supported by substantial evidence, is binding on appeal.

[9] Defendant predicates error on the court's exclusion of evidence that he was induced to employ Mrs. Root through capping activities on her behalf. The ruling was correct. Such evidence was immaterial in this proceeding.

[10] Defendant asserts that he was denied the right to subpoena witnesses. The record does not support his charge. In this connection the court made the following inquiry of defendant: "The Court: Do you know whether the subpoenas were delivered to the Sheriff or the police for the purpose of showing serving? Defendant Flores: I gave them to my wife to give them to the County Clerk, but as far as them being issued, I don't know." Although defendant's wife was a witness in this hearing, she gave no testimony relative to delivering any subpoenas to the County Clerk to be issued by him. It does not appear from her testimony or otherwise that the clerk refused to issue any subpoenas for defendant.

[12] Defendant had a full and fair hearing. There was no abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court.

The order (identified in the notice of appeal as "Judgment" and "order denying petitioner a new trial") is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Willie Lloyd CARTWRIGHT, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 2670.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 27, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree. The Superior Court, San Joaquin County, M. G. Woodward, J., entered judgment on the verdict and an order denying motion to modify the judgment for first degree murder to second degree murder, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence sustained conviction for first degree murder.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Homicide ⇐146, 147

Proof of deliberation, premeditation, willfulness and malice may be inferred in murder prosecution from the facts and circumstances surrounding the homicide and furnishing a reasonable ground for such conclusion. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 189.

2. Homicide ⇐253(1)

Evidence sustained conviction of murder in the first degree. West's Ann.Pen. Code, §§ 189, 1181, 1260.

3. Homicide ⇐345

Though District Court of Appeal, on appeal, has authority under the Penal Code to modify a judgment of murder in the first degree by reducing the degree of the crime to murder of the second degree, such authority should only be exercised where evidence fails to support a judgment of murder in the first degree. West's Ann. Pen.Code, §§ 189, 1181, 1260.

John L. Briscoe, Public Defender, Stockton, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by Doris H. Maier, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Willie Lloyd Cartwright was charged by information with the crime of murder. He pleaded not guilty, waived a trial by jury and requested the court to try his case sitting without a jury. At the conclusion of the trial the court found the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree. Defendant's motion to modify the judgment from first degree to second degree was denied and judgment was pronounced that defendant be imprisoned in the state prison for life.

Defendant has appealed from the judgment and from order denying his motion to modify the judgment. Appellant's sole contention is that the evidence is insufficient to support a finding of deliberation and premeditation and hence that the trial court's determination that the killing was murder in the first degree is erroneous, and therefore the judgment of conviction should be modified to fix the degree of the homicide as murder in the second degree. In view of this contention we shall summarize the evidence as shown by the record.

On the evening of August 25, 1955, the appellant shot and killed his estranged wife, Eula Bernice Cartwright. This tragedy climaxed several years of marital discord, which included two separations and two divorces. Soon after the interlocutory decree of divorce in 1953, the couple became reconciled until early in August of 1955 when, after a long period of disharmony concerning the late hours kept by the decedent the couple again separated and the decedent obtained another interlocutory decree of divorce on the 18th day of August, 1955.

On the day of the murder the defendant spent most of the afternoon and early evening hours drinking. At about 9:30 p. m. he telephoned his twelve-year-old daughter, Mary Louise, at the home of his estranged wife. The conversation which ensued disturbed the defendant greatly. He asked the child whether she liked the man his wife was going out with and the reply was that the child preferred that man to the defendant. The defendant angrily informed the child that they would never have the man as a father. By the time the child hung up on him the defendant was in the state of tears. He thereupon went to his parents' home and got and loaded a rifle. From there he drove to Dick's Drive-In where his estranged wife was working as a car hop.

After being parked in the lot of the drive-in for about 15 minutes the defendant called Lena Byrd, another car hop, over to his car and told her he wanted to talk to his wife. Miss Byrd related this to the decedent and she came over to the defendant's car. After a brief conversation during which, according to the defendant's statement, his temper had cooled down he started to question the woman concerning her new boy friend. She informed him that it was none of his business, and seeing the rifle on the floor-boards of the car she whirled and started to run away. The defendant thereupon grabbed the loaded rifle, jumped from the car and shot his wife in the back. He fired three initial shots and then pumped two more bullets into his wife's body as she lay on the ground a few feet away. She died as a result of the wounds thus received.

The defendant returned to his car and drove to the 21 Club where he had been earlier and informed James Pollanda, an employee of the bar, that he had just shot his wife. He took Pollanda out to the car and gave him the rifle. He asked Pollanda to "call the law" and offered no resistance.

Shortly after his arrest defendant made a free and voluntary statement concerning the events which had transpired. This statement was substantially in keeping with his testimony at the trial. He admitted that he had made threats concerning his wife and the other man during his telephone conversation with his daughter. He stated that he knew the rifle was a dangerous lethal weapon and that it was on the floor-boards of his car during his conversation with the decedent at the drive-in. In the statement he admitted that he had obtained the gun and taken it to the drive-in with the intention of killing his wife.

Defendant took the stand and testified to the events which had transpired in substantial conformity with the testimony of the prosecution witnesses. He stated that when he got the gun he didn't know whether he intended to shoot himself or his wife or the other man. He stated that at the drive-in his temper "cooled down" while he was talking to his wife, but then he "just went crazy."

Upon cross-examination defendant was confronted with his prior statement that he had in fact intended to kill his wife. He was asked, "Do you remember that answer, sir?" He responded, "I wouldn't—I wouldn't say I remembered it and I wouldn't say I wouldn't."

Geraldine Cartwright, the defendant's sister-in-law, was called as a defense witness and testified that the decedent had been going around with other men while married to the defendant. It was stipulated that a physician, if called, would testify to the fact that the decedent had been pregnant and had suffered a miscarriage in the spring of 1955. The defendant had been sterilized by surgery some two and a half years previously.

Dr. John A. Malloy, a licensed physician and surgeon specializing in psychiatry, was called by the defense. He testified that he found the defendant to have been very emotionally disturbed, feeling depressed, lonely, nervous and very much upset for several weeks prior to the shooting. It was his opinion that at the time of the shooting the defendant was "very, very disturbed," and he had strong reason to suspect that the defendant had been severely ill mentally. He further testified that he was of the opinion that the defendant was not able to deliberate at the time of the shooting, if by the word "deliberate", thinking rationally and clearly is meant. Upon cross-examination the doctor testified that he had relied heavily upon the truth of the defendant's statements to him.

The prosecution called Lt. Esau of the Sheriff's Department who testified that the defendant, shortly after the crime, had admitted to him that an intent to kill his wife had been formed after the telephone call to his daughter.

Appellant contends most earnestly that the evidence in the instant case does not establish that the homicide committed by appellant was a willful and deliberate murder within the meaning of section 189 of the Penal Code, which reads:

> "All murder which is perpetrated by means of poison, or lying in wait, torture, or by any other kind of wilful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or which is committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate arson, rape, robbery, burglary, mayhem, * * * is murder of the first degree; and all other kinds of murders are of the second degree."

He cites People v. Bender, 27 Cal.2d 164, at page 183, 163 P.2d 8, at page 19, where the court said:

> "It is asserted that 'There is nothing in the sections of the Penal Code which relate to this subject, which indicates that the Legislature meant to assign any particular period to this process of deliberation or premeditation, in order to bring the act within the first degree.' This latter assertion is eminently correct. (See People v. Thomas (1945), supra, 25 Cal.2d 880, 900, 156 P.2d 7.) But likewise there is nothing in the sections of the Penal Code which indicates that the Legislature meant to give to the words 'deliberate' and 'premeditate' any other than their common, well-known dictionary meaning.
> "The adjective 'deliberate' means 'formed, arrived at, or determined upon as a result of careful thought and weighing of considerations; as a deliberate judgment or plan; carried on coolly and steadily, esp. according to a preconceived design; * * * Given to weighing facts and arguments with a view to a choice or decision; careful in considering the consequences of a step; * * * unhurried; * * * Characterized by reflection; dispassionate; not rash.' (Webster's New Int. Dict. (2d ed.).) The word is an antonym of 'Hasty, impetuous, rash, impulsive.' (Id.) It has been judicially declared that 'Deliberation means careful consideration and examination of the reasons for and against a choice or measure.' People v. Richards (1905), 1 Cal.App. 566, 571 [82 P. 691]. The verb 'premeditate' means 'To think on, and revolve in the mind, beforehand; to contrive and design previously.' (Webster's New Int. Dict. (2d ed.).)"

Appellant argues that the evidence establishes that appellant was grieving over his broken home and the fact that his daughter told him over the telephone that she preferred the man her mother was going out with to him, and that he fired the fatal shots in a sudden transport of passion, excited by what his wife said to him as he sat talking with her in the parking area of the drive-in restaurant where she worked. Appellant asserts that the only evidence from which the court could infer deliberation was essentially circumstantial and is as consistent with the contention of appellant that the killing was the result of passion and severe emotional strain, negativing deliberation, as it was with any theory that appellant deliberated upon the slaying.

While there is some force in appellant's argument, yet it is clear that the conclusion of appellant that there was no deliberation or premeditation is not the only logical conclusion that can be drawn from the evidence. Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to respondent, the evidence indicates that the defendant harbored considerable animosity and resentment against his wife for some time. By his own admission the intention to kill his wife was formed just after his telephone conversation with his daughter. Furthermore, during his statement to the sheriff's office shortly after the crime, which was introduced into evidence, the defendant admitted that he obtained the rifle that evening and drove to the drive-in for the purpose of killing his wife. He remained seated in his parked car for 15 minutes or so before speaking to his wife. According to his own statement he had "cooled down" during the brief conversation with the decedent which ensued. These facts negate a killing done hastily and rashly in the heat of sudden provocation and support a conclusion that it was a murder executed after considerable reflection.

[1, 2] Proof of deliberation, premeditation, willfulness and malice may be inferred from the facts and circumstances surrounding the offense which furnish a reasonable ground for such conclusion. People v. Caritativo, 46 Cal.2d 68, 72, 292 P.2d 513; People v. Byrd, 42 Cal.2d 200, 213, 266 P.2d 505; People v. Eggers, 30 Cal.2d 676, 685, 185 P.2d 1. From the foregoing résumé of the facts of the instant case it is evident that the trial court could properly determine that the slaying was the willful and malicious product of premeditation and deliberation. People v. Caldwell, 43 Cal.2d 864, 279 P.2d 539; People v. Byrd, supra; People v. Daugherty, 40 Cal.2d 876, 256 P.2d 911; People v. Webb, 143 Cal.App.2d 402, 300 P.2d 130; People v. Pope, 130 Cal.App. 2d 321, 279 P.2d 108.

Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being, with malice aforethought. Penal Code, sec. 187. All murder which is willful, deliberate and premeditated is murder of the first degree. Penal Code, sec. 189. The evidence as indicated provides strong support for the inference that the slaying in this case was a killing with malice aforethought as a result of premeditation and deliberation. People v. Sutic, 41 Cal. 2d 483, 261 P.2d 241; People v. Daugherty, supra; People v. Webb, supra; People v. Pope, supra.

[3] While this court, upon appeal, has authority under sections 1181 and 1260 of the Penal Code to modify a judgment of murder of the first degree by reducing the degree of the crime to murder of the second degree, yet this authority should only be exercised where the evidence fails to support a judgment of murder of the first degree.

We think it is clear that in the instant case the question of whether or not there was a deliberate and premediated killing was one for the trial court to decide, and that the evidence was sufficient to support the determination of the trial court that it was such a killing.

Here, the evidence indicates that the intent to kill his wife was formulated by the appellant during and immediately after his telephone conversation with his daughter. The trial court sitting as the trier of fact could validly infer this from the threats made by the appellant during that conversation and from his admissions after being arrested. Furthermore, his conduct supports the conclusion since it can be readily inferred that he was acting in line with this intent to kill when he obtained a rifle from his home and took it with him to the drive-in where his wife worked.

Appellant concedes that malice may be inferred from proof of the commission of a homicide by the accused, but argues that deliberation and premeditation may not be inferred from the existence of malice. He further argues that proof of an opportunity to deliberate is not proof of deliberation. However, here deliberation and premeditation are not based merely upon proof that the defendant committed a homicide. Rather, the existence of these elements is logically derived by inference from defendant's words and conduct prior to the shooting. The evidence goes far beyond merely showing an opportunity to deliberate. The circumstances indicate that defendant did in fact premeditate and deliberate.

The judgment is affirmed.

Albert John BAKER, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5660.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 28, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of unlawfully selling heroin. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Aubrey N. Irwin, J., imposed sentence, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that where deputy district attorney, who had been admonished by court that testimony of police officer to effect that defendant, who admitted allegations of information charging sale of heroin, that he had been convicted of addiction, had admitted to officer that he had been previously addicted, was improper, thereafter asked other police officer to relate conversation with defendant other than what other officer had related, though court had stricken testimony of other officer, deputy district attorney committed prejudicial misconduct.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for retrial.

1. Criminal Law ⇐406(1)

Statement by police officer that defendant had admitted to him that he had been addicted previously to use of narcotics was not admission tending to prove charge of selling narcotics, and was inadmissible in prosecution for selling narcotics.

2. Criminal Law ⇐706

Deputy district attorney, who undoubtedly had discussed with police officer what officer's testimony would be as to his conversation with defendant accused of selling narcotics, and who knew that testimony would include defendant's admission of prior addiction to narcotics, deputy district attorney had duty to instruct witness not to relate alleged admission because of its inadmissibility.

3. Criminal Law ⇐706, 1171(1)

Where deputy district attorney, who had been admonished by court that testimony of police officer to effect that defendant, who had admitted allegations of information charging sale of heroin, that he had been convicted of addiction, had admitted to him that he had been previously addicted, was improper, thereafter asked other police officer to relate conversation with defendant other than what other officer had related, though court had stricken testimony of other officer, deputy committed prejudicial misconduct.

4. Criminal Law ⇐1023(10)

Purported appeal from sentence would be dismissed.

Ernest L. Graves, Long Beach, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Robert S. Rose, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendant Baker and one Gonzales and one Penalver were charged with unlawfully selling heroin. Baker and Gonzales admitted allegations of the information that they had been convicted of being addicted to the unlawful use of narcotics, a misdemeanor. Penalver pleaded guilty. In a jury trial, Baker and Gonzales were found guilty. Baker appeals from the sentence and judgment.

Appellant contends that there was prejudicial misconduct on the part of the deputy district attorney; that the judge erred in rulings regarding admissibility of evidence; and that the evidence was insufficient.

On August 6, 1955, from noon until 1 p. m., deputy sheriffs Natividad and Sperry, who were in a room in the Burlington Hotel in Los Angeles, observed Baker, Gonzales and Penalver who were at the Alan Hotel across the street from the Burlington. About noon the officers saw Baker standing outside the Alan Hotel, where Baker met a man. About 15 minutes later, Officer Natividad saw another man hand something to Baker. Then the officer saw Baker enter the Alan Hotel, return within a few minutes, and touch the man's hand. A few minutes later, Officer Natividad saw a third man touch Baker's hand. Then the officer saw Baker enter the hotel, return within a few minutes, and touch the third man's hand. The officer also saw Penalver meet Baker outside the hotel. Baker then entered the lobby of the hotel and sat in a chair next to a chair where Gonzales was sitting. Officer Natividad, after marking the serial number of a $10 bill (his own bill) on a match book cover, went across the street and talked to Penalver who was in front of the Alan Hotel. Then the officer and Penalver went into a cafe (near the hotel) and approached Baker and Gonzales who were sitting, side by side, at the counter. Officer Natividad testified further, as follows: Penalver told Baker that Natividad (officer) wanted to purchase three capsules of heroin for $9; Baker asked Penalver if Natividad was all right; Penalver replied that he was all right; Baker said, "Give me the money"; Penalver handed the marked $10 bill to Baker, who returned $1 in change; Baker told Gonzales to go upstairs and get three "caps"; then Gonzales left the cafe; Baker told the officer to wait outside; Penalver and the officer went outside, and approximately two minutes thereafter Gonzales came from the Alan Hotel and entered the cafe; Penalver and the officer followed him into the cafe; Gonzales handed a piece of rubber balloon to Penalver; the officer, in the presence of Baker and Gonzales, extended his hand and asked Penalver to give him (officer) the caps; Penalver handed the piece of balloon to the officer and stated: "There are three caps inside, next time you trust me"; the officer then returned to the Burlington Hotel and had a conversation with Officer Sperry; both officers then crossed the street and arrested Penalver, who was near the cafe; while Officer Sperry remained with Penalver, Officer Natividad went into the lobby of the Alan Hotel, where Baker and Gonzales were sitting, and arrested them; the officer took them to the place where Officer Sperry and Penalver were; Officer Natividad searched Baker and found $78 or $178 on his person; the officer compared a $10 bill, which was found in the search, with the number he had made on the match book cover; the number on the bill and the number on the cover were the same.

The three capsules, received in evidence as Exhibit 1, contained heroin.

Officer Natividad testified further that, after the defendants had been taken to the narcotic bureau, the officers had a conversation with them individually and collectively. The attorney for Gonzales objected to testimony by Officer Natividad as to his conversation with Gonzales. The judge asked the deputy district attorney if he intended "to produce some conversation that would amount to either a confession or—." The deputy replied in the affirmative. The judge then said that a motion to strike the testimony might be renewed if the deputy did not "connect it up." The deputy asked Officer Natividad to relate the conversation he had with Baker. The officer testified that: he asked Baker if he was selling or had sold heroin; he replied in the negative; the officer told him that the officers had watched from across the street and that Baker sold narcotics to three individuals and "we [officers] know" that he was selling narcotics; Baker made no response; "I [officer] asked defendant [Baker] if he was addicted to the use of narcotics and he told me that he had been previously addicted to the use of narcotics but he was not using narcotics at the time"; the officer told Baker that the $10 bill, which the officer took from him, was a marked bill; the officer asked Baker where he secured the bill; he replied that he received it in the cafe from someone who owed him money, but he did not know the persons' name. The attorney for Baker and the attorney for Gonzales moved to strike out all the testimony regarding the conversations upon the ground that the conversation did not constitute a confession or admission. The motions were granted, except as to the portion of the conversation relating to the $10 bill. The judge instructed the jury to disregard all the conversation except the portion relating to the $10 bill.

Officer Sperry testified, in substance, the same as Officer Natividad had testified with respect to: observing the three defendants from the Burlington Hotel; marking the serial numbers of the $10 bill on the match book cover; comparing the serial numbers after the arrests. He testified further that the amount of money taken from Baker, when he was searched, was $178. He also testified that after the defendants were arrested, the officers had a conversation with them wherein the three defendants were present. The deputy district attorney asked him to relate the conversation. At the request of the judge the attorneys approached the bench, and then the judge said that the only part of the conversation that would be in the category of an admission was the part relating to the $10 bill, that the rest of the conversation was a denial of accusatory statements, and that the testimony as to the conversation should be confined to that part relating to the $10 bill, and only that part should be referred to. After the conference at the bench, the deputy asked the witness to relate the conversation concerning the bill. The officer testified that Officer Natividad asked Baker where he got the $10 bill; Baker replied that he got it as payment of a debt. Then the deputy asked the witness if he recalled any other conversation "other than what Mr. Natividad has testified to?" The witness replied, "Merely that Mr. Penalver" stated that he (Penalver) was not selling narcotics at that corner, that he had no narcotics of his own, and he had obtained them from someone else.

Defendant testified to the effect that he did not sell heroin or anything to the officer; that he was not implicated in the matter charged against him; that Penalver, who owed him $15, paid $9 of the indebtedness while Baker and Gonzales were having lunch in the cafe.

[1] Appellant contends, as above stated, that there was prejudicial misconduct on the part of the deputy district attorney. This contention is based upon questions by the deputy wherein he asked the officers to relate conversations which they had with Baker. When the deputy asked Officer Natividad to relate such a conversation, he (deputy) stated in effect that he intended to show a confession or admission. A part of the conversation, as related by that officer, was: "I asked the defendant if he was addicted to the use of narcotics and he told me that he had been previously addicted to the use of narcotics but he was not using narcotics at the time." All the testimony as to that conversation, except as to the $10 bill, was stricken out. Thereafter the deputy asked Officer Sperry to relate the conversation which he and Officer Natividad had with Baker. Thereupon, in a conference with the attorneys at the bench, the judge asked the deputy if "this conversation" was the same conversation that Officer Natividad had testified to. The deputy replied in the affirmative. The judge admonished him to confine the testimony, regarding that conversation, to the part of the conversation relating to the $10 bill. The deputy asked the officer to relate the conversation concerning that bill. After the officer had answered that question, the deputy asked him if he recalled any other conversation "other than what Mr. Natividad has testified to?" That question and the answer thereto implied that Officer Sperry did recall the conversation which Natividad had related and which had been stricken out—the conversation wherein Baker said that he had been previously addicted to the use of narcotics. In view of the previous order striking out the same testimony, and in view of the admonition of the court restricting the subsequent testimony as to the conversation, that question should not have been asked. The statement that Baker had been addicted to the use of narcotics was not an admission tending to prove the charge of selling narcotics, and the statement was inadmissible. Furthermore, as above stated, Baker had admitted the allegation of the information that he had been convicted of being addicted to the unlawful use of narcotics. The statement (in the conversation) that he had been addicted to the use of narcotics was not a statement that he had been convicted of being so addicted, but is was closely related thereto, was inadmissible, and tended to prejudice the defendant. Although the improper statement with respect to addiction, as originally included in the testimony of Officer Natividad, was stricken out and the jury instructed to disregard it, it is doubtful if the prejudicial effect of the statement was removed. In Helton v. United States, 5 Cir., 221 F.2d 338, 340, wherein the charge was possession of marijuana, an officer testified that the accused told him that " 'he had been smoking marihuana intermittently very seldom for the past four or five years.' " The trial court therein, upon request of the prosecuting attorney, ordered the statement stricken out. The court said at page 340: "It is true that here the trial court ordered the improper evidence stricken from the record, but he gave no instruction whatever to the jury to disregard the improper testimony. In fact, in the circumstances of this case, it is doubtful that any instruction, however strong, would have succeeded in destroying the picture which this remark created in the jury's mind * * *." In the present case the improper statement regarding addiction, which had been made by Officer Natividad, was again impliedly placed before the jury by the deputy's question as to whether Officer Sperry recalled any other conversation other than what Officer Natividad had testified to. Although no objection was made to the question, the court had theretofore ruled that such statement as to addiction was inadmissible and had ordered, in effect, that the testimony of Officer Sperry exclude reference to addiction.

[2, 3] It is of frequent occurrence in criminal trials that police officers, in relating conversations with the defendant, testify to statements by the latter that are detrimental to him and inadmissible as evidence, thus necessitating a motion to strike the evidence, the granting of the motion, and an admonition to the jury to disregard it. This was true of the testimony of Officer Natividad as to Baker's admission of the use of narcotics. We said in People v. Bentley, 131 Cal.App.2d 687, 690, 281 P.2d 1, 3: "The district attorney knew, or should have known, the testimony the officer was going to give and should have warned him not to make the statement. Every prosecutor who offers a witness to testify to conversations with an accused should know what the witness will relate if given a free hand. The prosecutor has the duty to see that the witness volunteers no statement that would be inadmissible and especially careful to guard against statements that would also be prejudicial."

It must be presumed here that the deputy district attorney had discussed with Officer Natividad what his testimony would be as to his conversation with defendant and knew that it would include defendant's admission of prior addiction to narcotics. If so, it was his duty to instruct the witness not to relate that alleged admission. A claim of ignorance on the part of the prosecutor as to the testimony the witness would give cannot be reconciled with the affirmative duty of fairness in the trial to which prosecutors must be alert at all times.

The deputy district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct.

In view of the above conclusion, it is not necessary to determine other contentions on appeal.

[4] The judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded for a retrial. The purported appeal from the sentence is dismissed.

147 Cal.App.2d 300

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Julius SHANNON, Jr., Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5694.

Dec. 28, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of burglary. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Charles W. Fricke, J., entered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that, where evidence of defendant's guilt was, on a review of the whole case, overwhelming, the judgment of conviction could not be reversed.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1036(1)

Upon appeal in burglary prosecution, defendant, who did not make objection at trial to evidence obtained upon his arrest, could not, for the first time on appeal, urge the doctrine of illegal search and seizure but would be deemed to have waived all possible objections by his silence at the trial.

2. Witnesses ⇐345(1), 350

Witness may be impeached by proof of his conviction of a felony, and errors or falsehoods in his explanations may be exposed by contradictory proof, and the district attorney on cross-examination is allowed to show that, under such circumstances, defendant has attempted to deceive the court and is, therefore, untrustworthy.

3. Witnesses ⇐350

Prosecutor was not foreclosed from further inquiry by fact that he had asked accused whether he had been convicted of a felony, but prosecutor could proceed to inquire into the nature of the crime.

4. Criminal Law ⇐1036(2)

Where, while under cross-examination in regard to his felonies, defendant made no objection to any of the questions claimed on appeal to have been prejudicial, defendant thereby waived all right to complain thereof on appeal.

5. Criminal Law ⇐814(17)

Where any circumstantial evidence is merely incidental and corroborative of the direct evidence, an instruction on circumstantial evidence is not necessary.

6. Criminal Law ⇐1173(2)

Where, in burglary prosecution, direct evidence established defendant's presence and participation at scene of the burglary, and defendant, who was caught in the act, subsequently fabricated a falsehood to explain how he had gained possession of property taken and then confessed, propriety and correctness of instructions became matter of no importance, in view of the overwhelming proof of defendant's guilt, and, therefore, refusal to give instruction on jury's duty when the evidence is susceptible of two reasonable theories was not error.

7. Criminal Law ⇐825(1)

Having covered the general, applicable principles in the charge, court was not obliged to give, sua sponte, a more specific instruction as to defendant's theory of the case.

8. Criminal Law ⇐800(5)

Giving of instruction pertaining to credibility of witnesses without defining term "impeach" used in such instruction was not error.

9. Criminal Law ⇐741(1), 742(1)

The jury are the sole and exclusive judges of effect and value of evidence addressed to them and of credibility of witnesses who have testified in the case.

10. Witnesses ⇐333

Witnesses' character as shown by the evidence, should be taken into consideration for purpose of determining their credibility.

11. Criminal Law ⇐323

Witness is presumed to speak the truth, but such presumption may be repelled by manner in which he testifies or by evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty, or integrity.

12. Witnesses ⇐345(1), 383

Witness may be impeached by evidence that, at other times, he has made statements inconsistent with his present testimony as to any matter material to the cause on trial and by proof that he has been convicted of a felony.

13. Criminal Law ⇐553

Witness, who is wilfully false in one material part of his testimony, is to be distrusted in others, and jury may reject whole of testimony of such witness.

14. Criminal Law ⇐553

If jury is convinced that witness, willfully and with design to deceive, has stated what was untrue as to a material point, jury may treat all his testimony with distrust and suspicion and reject all unless it shall be convinced that he has, in other particulars, sworn to the truth. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2061, subd. 3.

15. Criminal Law ⇐800(5)

Ordinary words, such as "impeach" when used in instructions do not require defining but are presumed to be understood by the jurors.

16. Criminal Law ⇐561(1)

Doctrine of reasonable doubt applies only to question of defendant's guilt, not to appraisal of witness' testimony.

17. Criminal Law ⇐857(1)

Jury is not to involve question of guilt with a consideration of the penalty.

18. Criminal Law ⇐761(13)

Instruction that, in arriving at verdict, jury was not to discuss or consider subject of penalty or punishment, as that was a matter which would lie with the court or other governmental agencies, and was not in any way to affect jury's decision as to defendant's innocence or guilt did not suggest defendant's guilt.

19. Burglary ⇐42(1)

Possession of stolen property was a circumstance to be considered in connection with other evidence in determining defendant's innocence or guilt of charge of burglary.

20. Burglary ⇐42(3)

In addition to proof of possession of stolen property, there had to be proof of corroborating circumstances, to sustain charges of burglary such as the acts, conduct, and falsehood of defendant.

21. Criminal Law ⇐778(5)

In burglary prosecution, court, by giving instruction that possession of stolen property was circumstance to be considered in connection with other evidence in determining defendant's guilt or innocence and that, in addition to proof of possession of such property, there had to be proof of corroborating circumstances, such as defendant's acts, conduct, and falsehood, did not impose upon defendant burden of convincing the jury beyond a reasonable doubt of his theory and explanation of possession of the stolen property.

22. Criminal Law ⇐781(6)

In burglary prosecution, given instruction that, if jury should find that a confession was false in material particular, it remained, nevertheless, evidence for jury's consideration in connection with all other evidence in the case and was to be given such significance and weight as jury's judgment might determine was not error, since it merely advised jury that, even though some portion of accused's confession might be false, balance was not necessarily rendered unworthy of consideration.

23. Criminal Law ⇐1186(4)

Where, in burglary prosecution, evidence of defendant's guilt was, on a review of the whole case, overwhelming, the judgment of conviction could not be reversed. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Cary G. Branch, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Raymond M. Momboisse, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Julius Shannon, Jr. appeals a judgment convicting him of burglary. He demands a reversal on the grounds that (1) the evidence against him was illegally obtained, (2) he was improperly cross examined, (3) erroneous instructions were given and proper instructions were refused.

After midnight in late February 1956, appellant and his codefendant Williams took a drive in appellant's automobile along the streets of Los Angeles. Williams suggested the idea of obtaining cigarettes from some store. On Main Street they found the weapon for their purpose, a piece of cement brick. While driving on West Pico Boulevard, they stopped at a store with a glass front window through which Williams hurled the concrete. Through the space created by his vicious missile, Williams entered and duly returned with "a few cartons" of cigarettes. These he passed on to appellant who placed them in the rear of his car. Williams returned into the store for more of the same. Observant of his associate, Williams saw appellant driving away followed by a police car. Appellant was promptly apprehended and just as he was being returned to the store, the officers detained Williams as he emerged through the paneless door.

Appellant admitted to the officers the facts in the foregoing recital and added that he had approved of the proposed method of acquiring cigarettes; that he had placed the cartons in his automobile; that when he noticed the police car make a U-turn to approach him, he became frightened and fled. At the trial he testified that he was asleep during the burglary. Not only was he contradicted by the events that occurred at the scene but he was impeached by proof of two prior felony convictions.

[1] There was no illegal arrest. Appellant was found sitting in his car about 4 o'clock in the morning in front of a store, his motor running. He attempted flight as the police approached him. Because of the suspicious circumstances, they searched his conveyance and found the cartons. But regardless of the facts, no objection was made at the trial to the evidence thereof. Hence, he cannot on appeal for the first time urge the doctrine of illegal search and seizure where his trial occurred following the decision in People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905. He is deemed to have waived all possible objections by his silence at the trial. People v. Maddox, 46 Cal.2d 301, 304, 294 P.2d 6; People v. Farrara, 46 Cal.2d 265, 268, 294 P.2d 21; People v. Kitchens, 46 Cal.2d 260, 262, 294 P.2d 17.

Appellant complains that the District Attorney "spent considerable time in cross examining appellant by going into the facts of appellant's prior convictions." He advances the thesis that details of a prior felony conviction "not appearing in the judgment record of conviction should not be gone into by either side." The record does not bear out such contention. He answered that he had been twice convicted of a felony; once for possession of marijuana, once for automobile burglary. The prosecutor followed such answer by having appellant admit that he had pled guilty to having burglarized an office building and that while on probation he wrote to his probation officer that he was present during the burglary and was awake. The foregoing admissions were elicited from appellant to counteract his intimations that he was in fact innocent of the prior charge.

[2, 3] Not only is it proper to impeach a witness by proof of his conviction of a felony, but errors or falsehoods in his explanations may be exposed by contradictory proof. The district attorney is allowed to show that, under such circumstances, the defendant has attempted to deceive the court and is therefore untrustworthy. The prosecutor is not foreclosed of further inquiry by having asked the accused whether he had been convicted of a felony; he may proceed to inquire into the nature of the crime. People v. Williams, 27 Cal.2d 220, 228, 163 P.2d 692.

[5, 6] Appellant contends that the evidence was entirely circumstantial and that he was prejudiced by the court's failure to instruct on the duty of the jury when the evidence is "susceptible of two reasonable theories" as embodied in Caljic Instruction 26,[1] in addition to Caljic 24 and 27 which were given. He asserts that inasmuch as he was asleep when Williams burglarized the store, the jury should have been instructed as to their duty in the event they should find such explanation equally reasonable with the theory that he was a conscious participant in the crime. But the evidence was not wholly circumstantial. It was in the main direct. The store had been broken and burglarized; two half cases of cigarettes had been removed. Appellant was found sitting behind the wheel, parked in front of the store, motor running; carrying away the stolen merchandise, he attempted to flee from the officers. His companion was arrested in the act of bringing additional loot from the store and defendant immediately confessed his guilty participation. Nothing more was required to prove that he was aiding his confederate in the commission of the crime. See People v. Martin, 128 Cal.App.2d 361, 364, 275 P.2d 635. When any circumstantial evidence is merely incidental and corroborative of direct evidence, an instruction on circumstantial evidence is not necessary. People v. Jerman, 29 Cal.2d 189, 197, 173 P.2d 805. In the instant case, direct evidence established the presence and participation of appellant at the scene of the robbery. Not only was he caught in the very act but subsequently he fabricated a falsehood to ex-

1. California Jury Instructions Criminal, No. 26.

If the evidence in this case [as to any particular count] is susceptible of two constructions or interpretations, each of which appears to you to be reasonable, and one of which points to the guilt of the defendant, and the other to his innocence, it is your duty, under the law, to adopt that interpretation which will admit of the defendant's innocence, and reject that which points to his guilt.

You will notice that this rule applies only when both of the two possible opposing conclusions appear to you to be reasonable. If, on the other hand, one of the possible conclusions should appear to you to be reasonable and the other to be unreasonable, it would be your duty to adhere to the reasonable deduction and to reject the unreasonable, bearing in mind, however, that even if the reasonable deduction points to defendant's guilt, the entire proof must carry the convincing force required by law to support a verdict of guilt.

plain how he had gained possession of the cigarettes and then confessed. In view of the overwhelming proof of his guilt, the propriety and correctness of the instructions becomes a matter of no importance.

[7] Appellant vainly complains that he was prejudiced by the court's failure to instruct on appellant's "theory of the case"; that is to say that appellant had been asleep. No such instruction was offered. The court had advised the jury that in order to convict appellant, it was essential that he intended, at the time of the entry into the store, to steal the property of another. (Caljic 201.) Also, the jury were directed that if appellant did not participate in the burglary or have knowledge thereof, he could not be convicted of the offense. Having covered general, applicable principles in the charge, the court was not obliged to give sua sponte more specific instructions as to defendant's theory of the case. People v. Warren, 16 Cal.2d 103, 116, 104 P.2d 1024.

[8–15] Appellant contends that Caljic Instruction 52 (alternate) printed on the margin [2] was not sufficient; that it should have defined "impeach" and have explained how the jury should consider proof of a prior felony conviction. The instruction given is correct, accurate and comprehensive. Nothing should have been added. The word "impeach" is in common usage—meaning to discredit. Such ordinary words do not require defining. They are presumed to be understood by the jurors. People v. Chavez, 37 Cal.2d 656, 668, 234 P.2d 632. The instruction does not suggest that a prior conviction of a felony on the part of the witness must necessarily discredit his entire testimony. The jury were fully informed that they are the sole and exclusive judges of the credibility of witnesses and that the instructions given to them on that subject are only guides for their assistance. Appellant urges that the admonition contained in the instruction that a witness' testimony may be impeached by "evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty, and integrity" is in error because no such evidence was presented. However, such an instruction has been held perfectly proper for the consideration of the jury since the witness' character and demeanor while on the stand are to be taken into account by the jurors. People v. Monteverde, 111 Cal.App.2d 156, 171, 244 P.2d 447.

[16] The last paragraph of Caljic 52 (alternate) relative to distrust to be given at least partially false testimony is not erroneous. It is authorized by Code of Civil Procedure, section 2061. See People v. Smith, 132 Cal.App.2d 805, 808, 283 P.2d 39; Code Civ.Proc., § 2061(3). Appellant insists that the word "convince" in the last paragraph should have been followed by the phrase "beyond a reasonable doubt." Such modification would have been error. The doctrine of reasonable doubt applies

2. Credibility of Witnesses

"The jury are the sole and exclusive judges of the effect and value of evidence addressed to them and of the credibility of the witnesses who have testified in the case * * *

"The character of the witnesses, as shown by the evidence, should be taken into consideration for the purpose of determining their credibility * * * A witness is presumed to speak the truth. This presumption, however, may be repelled by the manner in which he testifies * * * or by evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty or integrity * * * A witness may be impeached also by evidence that at other times he has made statements inconsistent with his present testimony as to any matter material to the cause on trial [; and a witness may be impeached also by proof that he has been convicted of a felony or felonies].

"A witness wilfully false in one material part of his or her testimony is to be distrusted in others. The jury may reject the whole of the testimony of a witness who has wilfully sworn falsely as to a material point. [If you are convinced that a witness has stated what was untrue as to a material point, not as a result of mistake or inadvertence, but wilfully and with the design to deceive, then you may treat all of his or her testimony with distrust and suspicion, and reject all unless you shall be convinced that he or she has in other particulars sworn to the truth]."

only to the question of defendant's guilt. It is not pertinent to the appraisal of the testimony of a witness.

[17, 18] The giving of Caljic Instruction 9[3] is assigned as error in that it suggests the guilt of appellant. On the contrary, it directs the jury not to involve the question of guilt with a consideration of the penalty. That is the law. Without that advice a jury may permit their consideration of guilt to be deflected by a dread of seeing the accused suffer the statutory punishment.

[19–21] Appellant complains that Caljic Instruction 203 was prejudicial in that it imposes upon the accused the "burden of convincing the jury beyond a reasonable doubt of his theory and explanation of possession" of the stolen property. Such contention is not justified. The instruction states merely that possession is "a circumstance to be considered in connection with other evidence in determining the question of innocence or guilt." It stated, also, that "in addition to proof of possession of such property there must be proof of corroborating circumstances" such as "the acts, conduct, falsehood * * * of the defendant." The instruction is a correct statement of the law. People v. Howell, 126 Cal.App.2d 780, 783, 273 P.2d 79; People v. Corral, 60 Cal.App.2d 66, 72, 140 P.2d 172; People v. Taylor, 4 Cal.App.2d 214, 217, 40 P.2d 870.

[22] Assignment is made of that portion of Caljic 29 as follows: "* * * if you should find that a confession was false in any material particular, it remains, nevertheless evidence for your consideration in connection with all other evidence in the case, to be given such significance and weight as your judgment may determine." (Emphasis added.) The derivation of this particular wording is of interest. The instruction as originally drawn read that if the jury "should find that a confession was false, either entirely or in part, it remains nevertheless evidence for your consideration." (Emphasis added.) People v. Ford, 89 Cal.App.2d 467, 472–473, 200 P.2d 867, reversed a conviction based upon such an instruction on the reasoning that if the confession was entirely false, then the defendant must be innocent of the crime. People v. Shaw, 115 Cal.App.2d 597, 604, 252 P.2d 670, held similarly but refused to reverse because of a failure to find prejudice to the rights of the defendant. The current wording of the instruction, as here given, has been expressly approved in People v. Ybarra, 127 Cal.App.2d 74, 78, 273 P.2d 284 (hearing denied). The court there pointed out that the new wording merely advised the jury that even though some portion of the confession of an accused may be false, the balance is not necessarily rendered unworthy of consideration.

[23] In any event, the evidence of appellant's guilt on a review of the whole case is overwhelming. Therefore, the judgment cannot be reversed. Const. art. VI, § 4½.

Affirmed.

FOX and ASHBURN, JJ., concur.

3. Jury May Not Consider Penalty
In arriving at a verdict in this case, you shall not discuss or consider the subject of penalty or punishment, as that is a matter which lies with the court and other governmental agencies, and must not in any way affect your decision as to the innocence or guilt of the defendant.

Anna L. PALMER, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Jack N. HOLCOMB et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 5272.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Dec. 19, 1956.

Action by wife, who had employed private detective to investigate activities of husband during pendency of divorce action, for cancellation of notes given to the detective for services rendered, assignment of interest in property, and trust deed securing notes and to quiet title. The detective filed cross-complaint to foreclose the trust deed. The Superior Court of San Bernardino County, R. Bruce Findlay, J., rendered judgment for defendant and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Coughlin, J. pro tem., held that the evidence sustained finding that notes and trust deed were executed voluntarily with full knowledge of all facts, uninfluenced by relationship between parties and that the instruments were supported by sufficient consideration.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Mortgages ⇐25(6), 86(3)

In action by wife, who had employed a detective to investigate husband's activities during pendency of her divorce, for cancellation of notes and trust deed given to detective for services rendered, evidence sustained findings that notes and trust deed were executed voluntarily with full knowledge of all facts, uninfluenced by relationship between parties and that the instruments were supported by sufficient consideration.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐931(1)

In examining the sufficiency of the evidence to support a questioned finding, an appellate court must accept as true all evidence tending to establish the correctness of the findings as made, taking into account, as well, all inferences which might reasonably have been thought by the trial court to lead to the same conclusion, and every substantial conflict in the testimony is to be resolved in favor of the finding.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐773(2), 792

Where appellant failed to serve opening and closing brief on one of several named respondents, and where omitted respondent made no appearance on his behalf, the court was justified in finding that appellant has abandoned appeal as to the omitted respondent and in dismissing appeal as to that respondent on its own motion.

Randolph J. Soker, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Arthur J. Crowley, Hollywood, for respondent Jack N. Holcomb.

COUGHLIN, Justice pro tem.

In December, 1952, the plaintiff, who then was a party to a divorce action, employed the defendant Holcomb, a private detective, to investigate the activities and financial affairs of her husband. Holcomb had been suggested by Millard M. Mier, her attorney in the divorce action.

During the ensuing 13 months, Holcomb, in the course of his employment, made two trips to San Diego, one to Crestline, and one to Yosemite Valley, following plaintiff's husband, ran down and checked out numerous rumors and false clues submitted by Mrs. Palmer; obtained recordings of her husband's conversation in their home; employed six operators, who, with himself, spent 2,782 hours in the course of this investigation; expended $6,876.97; and, from time to time, and sometimes daily, reported orally to the plaintiff the results of his efforts.

In June, 1953, the plaintiff paid Holcomb $690 on account. Thereafter, on different dates, she signed three documents purporting to be affidavits and promissory notes, which contained an itemization, month by month, of the charges for services rendered, automobile use, and miscellaneous expenses, an acknowledgment of their correctness, and a promise to pay the amount then due. It appears from these documents that on August 1, 1953, there were charges of $4,587.75, $1,026 and $995.85, respectively, for services, automobile use and miscellaneous expenses covering the period from January to July, inclusive, upon which $690.00 had been paid, leaving a balance of $5,919.60; that on October 10, 1953, there were charges of $996.50, $418.32, and $311.90, respectively, for similar items covering the period from August to October, inclusive, none of which had been paid; and that on January 19, 1954, there were further charges of $3,206.50, $328.60 and $316.67, respectively, for the same purposes covering the period of October to January, inclusive, all of which were unpaid.

During the course of Holcomb's employment, Mier became concerned about the cost of the investigation which the plaintiff had ordered and he counseled with her about this, but she insisted that the investigation continue and, on several occasions, said that she would spend every dime she had to get something on her husband. At one time the plaintiff stated that if Holcomb quit she would get someone else to take over.

On January 20, 1954, the plaintiff executed a hybrid type of instrument, purporting to be an assignment to Holcomb of all her interest in any property which she might receive on a division with her husband, for the purpose of securing payment of the promissory notes in question.

Thereafter, Holcomb expressed concern to the plaintiff about the status of his account, saying that he felt he was not adequately protected and suggested to her, and she agreed, that the three notes be combined in one and be secured by a deed of trust on a house and lot which she expected to receive under a pending property settlement agreement with her husband. Thereupon, Holcomb telephoned Mier; advised him of this understanding; gave him the amount of the three prior notes; and asked him to prepare a note and deed of trust accordingly. Mier suggested that he be named trustee in order to protect his client from a foreclosure without notice. Following this telephone conversation, a note and deed of trust were prepared and submitted to the plaintiff by her attorney, but, because she did not want her sister, who was present, to know about the matter, they were not executed at that time. Later, Mier gave the papers to Holcomb, who arranged a meeting with the plaintiff, at which there was a discussion about the amount of the fee charged; some additional work she wanted done; the effect of this transaction on the prior notes, which were to be canceled; the amount of interest due on the notes, which was included in the principal of the new note; and the title to the property described in the deed of trust. Thereupon, the documents were executed by plaintiff and acknowledged before the defendant Scott, a notary public, who also was present.

A few days later Mrs. Palmer went to a bank in Apple Valley and made an application for a loan on the property in question, hoping to pay off Holcomb and refinance her property with a longer term note.

"It is, of course, to be understood that in stating the evidence we are bound to consider that the trial court resolved all substantial conflicts and drew all reasonable inferences in favor of the defendants." Thomas v. Hunt Mfg. Corp., 42 Cal.2d 734, 736, 269 P.2d 12, 14. This observation is particularly pertinent because the facts heretofore outlined are in substantial conflict with the plaintiff's concept of the evidence under consideration.

On March 19, 1954, Mrs. Palmer filed a complaint to cancel all of the promissory notes, the assignment and the deed of trust, and to quiet her title to the real property described therein, alleging that she "reposed trust and confidence" in the defendant Holcomb, and also in her attorney, Mier, who had recommended his employment, which was effected under an agreement that the services rendered would be paid by her husband as a part of the costs in the divorce proceeding; that Holcomb and Mier requested her to sign certain documents in blank, falsely representing that her signature was necessary, either to enable Holcomb to obtain payment for his services from her husband, to assure her attorney that Holcomb was performing the investigation services requested, or to effect a release from tax obligations incurred by her husband; that she relied on these representations and signed the documents, which were acknowledged before the defendant Scott, a notary public, who was acting in collusion with Holcomb; that these documents purport to be the promissory notes, assignment and deed of trust in question, and are wholly without consideration.

Holcomb, Mier and Scott were named defendants in this complaint. Each filed an answer. In addition, Holcomb and Scott filed cross-complaints. Holcomb sought a court foreclosure of the deed of trust. Scott, who had been substituted for Mier as trustee, under the deed of trust, asked for attorney's fees which he claimed were payable under the terms of the trust agreement.

During the trial, the plaintiff asked for and obtained permission to file an amendment to her answer to Holcomb's cross-complaint, alleging inadequacy of consideration.

Upon conclusion of the plaintiff's case, she dismissed the action as against the defendant Mier.

The trial court rendered judgment in favor of the remaining defendants, on the complaint; directed foreclosure of the deed of trust; and awarded Scott $500 attorney's fees.

The plaintiff asks this court to reverse the judgment upon the ground that, in obtaining the documents in question Holcomb gained an inequitable advantage over her, resulting from the confidential relation existing between them, as evidenced by the inadequacy of the consideration involved and the other circumstances attendant upon the execution of those documents. Reliance is placed upon the rule that such transactions are presumed to be without sufficient consideration, obtained by undue influence and constructively fraudulent, casting upon the party who has gained the advantage the burden of showing fairness and good faith in all respects. Johnson v. Clark, 7 Cal.2d 529, 61 P.2d 767; Scovill v. Guy, 205 Cal. 386, 270 P. 934; Soberanes v. Soberanes, 97 Cal. 140, 31 P. 910.

[1] The rules of law applicable to the facts which plaintiff contends are established by the "uncontroverted evidence" in this case are clear. However, plaintiff's contention ignores the findings of the trial court that the allegations upon which she relies are untrue. These findings were based upon substantial evidence from which the court was entitled to conclude that the defendant Holcomb, in the course of his employment by the plaintiff, had rendered services and incurred expenses of the total reasonable value of $13,118.15, for which he had received $690 in cash and a promissory note in the sum of $12,604, which included interest, secured by a deed of trust; that the note and deed of trust were executed by the plaintiff voluntarily, with full knowledge of all the facts involved, understanding the effect of the transaction, and uninfluenced by the relationship existing between herself and the defendant.

There was an abundance of evidence which established that the documents which the plaintiff signed were not "in blank" at the time of their execution, as she alleged. No mention is made of this contention upon her appeal, and it must be assumed she now realizes that her story was incredible.

[2] At this time the plaintiff's complaint centers primarily around the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the court's finding with respect to the adequacy of the consideration for the note and deed of trust in question. "* * * [i]n examining the sufficiency of the evidence to support a questioned finding, an appellate court must accept as true all evidence tending to establish the correctness of the finding as made, taking into account, as well, all inferences which might reasonably have been thought by the trial court to lead to the same conclusion. Every substantial conflict in the testimony is, under the rule which has always prevailed * * * to be resolved in favor of the finding." Bancroft-Whitney Co. v. McHugh, 166 Cal. 140, 142, 134 P. 1157, 1158.

The extent and value of the defendant Holcomb's services were matters upon which a great deal of evidence was submitted to the trial court and its conclusion with respect thereto finds substantial support in the record.

Under the findings in this case the rule of law upon which plaintiff relies, regarding a presumption of insufficient consideration, fraud and undue influence, does not apply and, even if applicable, the proof necessary to overcome the presumption has been supplied.

The judgment as to the defendant Holcomb should be affirmed.

In her opening brief, appellant devotes part of a page contending that the court erred in awarding Scott $500 as attorney's fees, for the defense of the action seeking cancellation of the trust deed under which he acted as trustor. However, this brief never was served on Scott or his attorney, and this fact was pointed out in the reply brief filed by Holcomb, who intimates that the award of attorney's fees to the trustee was made under the provisions of the deed of trust, and charges that appellant's contention "in this regard is as frivolous as her argument is against Holcomb." No reply was made to this charge.

[3] The record on appeal, giving the name and address of each attorney representing each defendant, was filed in this court on November 23, 1955. Thereafter, appellant obtained two stipulations from respondent for extensions of time within which to file an opening brief; no stipulation was obtained from the respondent Scott. As stated, appellant's opening brief was served only on Holcomb, by serving his attorney. The same situation prevailed with respect to appellant's closing brief. Service of the former was made on January 16, 1956, and of the latter on May 11, 1956. The first brief was filed on January 17, 1956; the last on May 17, 1956. Oral arguments were set for November 13, 1956, at which appellant and respondent Holcomb were represented. No appearance was made for Scott and no brief was filed on his behalf. The foregoing facts justify a finding that appellant has abandoned her appeal as to the respondent Scott and, relying upon its inherent power, this court is justified in dismissing that appeal on its own motion. In re Estate of Wunderle, 30 Cal.2d 274, 279, 181 P.2d 874; Graham v. Los Angeles First N. T. & S. Bk., 3 Cal.2d 37, 41, 43 P.2d 543.

The appeal from the judgment in favor of defendant Scott is dismissed. The judgment in favor of the defendant Holcomb is affirmed.

WHITTIER ELEMENTARY SCHOOL DISTRICT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Robert C. KIRKWOOD, as Controller of the State of California, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 21915.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 31, 1956.

Declaratory judgment action by school district against State Controller to determine authority of State Allocation Board to amend order apportioning funds from Public School Building Loan Fund so as to permit district to retain proceeds from sale of replaced school site instead of applying such proceeds toward repayment of the state allocation as required by the resolution which initially approved the allocation. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Philip H. Richards, J., entered judgment adverse to Controller and Controller appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that Board was authorized to amend the original order so that school district would be entitled to retain the proceeds from sale of the replaced school site.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Schools and School Districts ⇐74

State Allocation Board has discretion to determine whether proceeds from subsequent sale of replaced school facilities shall be applied toward cost of school construction project financed by funds obtained from the board. 2. Schools and School Districts ⇐74

Where State Allocation Board had, in original order apportioning funds from Public School Building Loan Fund for construction of school, required that proceeds from sale of replaced school site be applied toward the repayment of the state allocation, board was thereafter authorized to amend the original order so that school district would be entitled to retain the proceeds from sale of the replaced school site. Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Richard L. Mayers, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Wm. E. Lamoreaux, Asst. County Counsel, Los Angeles, for respondent.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in an action in declaratory relief brought to determine the authority of the State Allocation Board to amend an order apportioning funds from the Public School Building Loan Fund so as to permit the respondent School District to retain the proceeds from the sale of a replaced school site, instead of applying such proceeds toward the repayment of the state allocation, as set forth in the resolution initially approving such allocation.

On about June 5, 1950, respondent, pursuant to the provisions of chapter 1.6 of Division 3 of the Education Code, filed a written application with the State Allocation Board for an allocation of $2,689,632.-70, for the acquisition and construction of certain school facilities set forth therein. The electors of the respondent District, at an election, had authorized the Board of Trustees of the District to accept and expend an apportionment from the State in an amount not to exceed $3,250,000, pursuant to the law.

On or about January 9, 1951, the State Allocation Board, by Resolution numbered 1389–106, approved an allocation of $2,452,-472, for the purposes set forth in the application. By this Resolution the respondent District was required to contribute to the costs of the contemplated school project "the net proceeds or credits allowed from the disposition of any sites, improvements, or facilities sold, transferred, or exchanged as a result of the acquisition or construction of any sites, improvements, or facilities pursuant to Chapter 1.6. * *" The Resolution further provided: "That the District shall proceed to dispose of any school building area in excess of the maximum prescribed by Paragraph 2 of this resolution, and any site or sites scheduled to be abandoned as a result of the acquisition or construction of any sites, improvements or facilities pursuant to Chapter 1.6 above, not later than the date the new construction authorized by this resolution is available for occupancy, provided that the terms, conditions and manner of disposition thereof shall be subject to the approval of the Director of Finance, and provided further that if such excess area or sites have not been disposed of by said date, the District shall dispose of the same in accordance with the instructions of the Director of Finance."

On or about January 20, 1953, the respondent District requested permission to sell the real property owned by the District, known as the Jonathan Bailey School and site, and to retain the proceeds therefrom "to be used for the construction of additional classroom facilities in accordance with the needs of the District."

On or about December 16, 1953, the State Allocation Board adopted Resolution No. 1389–106V, which amended Resolution No. 1389–106, in that it deleted from the original Resolution the requirement that the respondent School District contribute to the cost of the specific project as approved the net proceeds obtained from the disposition by the District of any sites, improvements, or facilities sold, transferred, or exchanged. Said Resolution further purported to authorize respondent District to sell the Jonathan Bailey School and site for not less than $253,600, and to apply the net proceeds obtained from said sale toward providing or constructing additional but unspecified school facilities.

On or about April 26, 1954, the Attorney General advised the appellant that the State Allocation Board had no authority to amend the original Resolution and that such purported amendment was invalid. About September 8, 1954, the respondent District entered into an agreement with the city of Whittier for the sale of the school site for the sum of $253,600.

The Attorney General, in his brief, sets forth that on October 27, 1954, the State Allocation Board adopted Resolution numbered 1389–106X, which said Resolution apparently took notice of the fact that the Attorney General had been requested by the Chief of the Local Allocation Division to reconsider his opinion of April 26, 1954. Further, it is said that by this Resolution the approval of the State Allocation Board, in allowing the respondent District to retain the proceeds from the sale of the Jonathan Bailey School and site was specifically made subject to the approval of the Attorney General. The respondent District points out that this particular Resolution (1389–106X) was never received in evidence.

On or about November 12, 1954, the Attorney General reaffirmed his previous opinion. On January 12, 1955, by Resolution numbered 1389–106Y, the State Allocation Board, after taking notice of the opinions of the Attorney General, reaffirmed its previous position. In this latter Resolution there is contained the following:

"2. That Paragraph 2 to-wit: 'That the approval of the Board, allowing the District to retain the proceeds from the disposition of the Jonathan Bailey School and site, is subject to approval of the Attorney General of the State of California', of Resolution No. 1389/106X, adopted October 27, 1954, is hereby rescinded."

Thereafter, the appellant demanded that the entire sum received, or to be received, by the respondent District from the sale of the Jonathan Bailey School and site be paid to the State of California, and in his demand stated that if said sums were not paid, that the State Controller would deduct the same from the yearly allotments of state funds to the respondent School District.

Some of the pertinent, relevant provisions of the law involved are as follows: Section 5048 of the Education Code as it read in 1950, and as it now reads, authorizes school districts to file applications for state apportionments with the State Allocation Board, and requires that Board to approve or reject the application.

Section 5050 of the Education Code requires that before an allocation becomes final 95% of the bonded capacity of a school district be outstanding, or if not, that the outstanding bonds be within $25,000 of the total bond limit. The section then provides as follows:

"At the time the board makes a conditional apportionment pursuant to Section 5048, it shall determine what portion of the total amount of bonds which a district is permitted to issue and sell by law shall be issued and sold by such district, the proceeds of which shall be applied toward the cost of the project for which the apportionment is sought. The portion so determined by the board shall be not less than the minimum amount required for such apportionment to become final under this section."

The section also requires the electors of the school district, by a two-thirds vote, to authorize the governing board of the district "to accept, expend, and repay, as provided in this chapter, an apportionment under the provisions of this chapter." As heretofore indicated, such an election was held in the respondent District and authorized the governing board to accept, expend and repay an amount not to exceed $3,250,000.

A complete scheme of repayment to the State of apportionments made, with interest, over a period of years is provided by sections 5053 to 5063 of the Education Code, section 5059 providing that interest shall cease after twenty-five years and at the end of thirty years any unpaid balance of an apportionment shall be cancelled. Section 5058 provides for the disposition of the repayments as follows:

"5058. The State Controller shall, during the next fiscal year following that in which he determines the annual repayment as herein provided, deduct the total amount of the annual repayment of each district in equal amounts from each installment of the apportionments made to such district from the State School Fund under Chapter 15 of this division; and, on order of the State Controller, the amount so deducted shall be transferred to the Public School Building Loan Fund. All money transferred to the Public School Building Loan Fund under the provisions of this section shall be available only for transfer to the General Fund under the provisions of Section 5103."

Other than as provided in the above referred to sections, there is no provision, so far as we are able to locate, requiring school districts to apply any other funds, either available at the time of the application or to become available from the sale of assets, towards the construction project or as a reduction or repayment of the apportionment, nor is there any provision in any of the sections requiring the State Allocation Board to include such provisions in the granting of the apportionment, this matter resting wholly within its discretion.

Pursuant to its rule-making power, the State Allocation Board adopted, among others, two rules as follows: Rule 1778 provides that at the time of making an apportionment the State Allocation Board shall prescribe the amount of funds to be contributed by the district toward the construction project, and in determining the amount of available funds may specify that proceeds from the sale of any facilities to be replaced through an apportionment shall be applied toward the cost of the construction project as such proceeds become available. Thus, by its own rule, the Board has discretion to require the proceeds from the sale of facilities to be used toward the project.

Rule 1781 provides, so far as material, as follows: "Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in these rules and regulations, the Board shall have power:

* * * * * *

"(c) To modify any apportionment or resolution of apportionment, either conditional or final, where the Board determines that good cause exists therefor.

"This section shall apply to any apportionment or resolution of apportionment heretofore or hereafter made or adopted by the Board."

The respondent has pointed out that under section 5058 of the Education Code it is required that the State Controller deduct the amount of annual repayments of each district from the apportionments made to such district from the State School Fund and to transfer the amount so deducted to the Public School Building Loan Fund and from there to the General Fund under the provisions of section 5103. The latter section provides for the accumulation of money to retire the State school bonds. Thus, should the appellant deduct the amount here involved from the regular yearly State apportionment to respondent District, it would eventually come to rest in the General Fund and would not be available for an allotment to any other school district.

The only provisions we have been able to locate providing for reimbursing the Public School Building Loan Fund after an allocation has been made to a school district are when the money allocated has been expended for unauthorized purposes, or is in excess of the final cost of the project, under section 5071 of the Education Code; when any unexpended portion of an allocation remains after three years has expired, section 5072 of the Education Code; and when a school site acquired with money allocated is sold within three years, section 5073 of the Education Code. The money in question in the instant case does not fall within any of the categories named.

The respondent also points out that the legislature, in the 1955 session amended section 5048 by adding thereto, among other things, the following:

"The board may for such good cause as it shall determine, reduce the amount of, or modify any provisions relating to, any contribution required of a school district under the terms of an apportionment, other than any contribution required of such district under Section 5050 from the sale of bonds; provided, that the board may not, without the consent of the district, increase the amount of any district contribution under the terms of an apportionment, in the absence of mistake arising from any source, or misrepresentation, concealment, or omission, on the part of the district, intentional or otherwise. The provisions of this paragraph shall be applicable to apportionments heretofore or hereafter made." (Emphasis added.) (Stats.1955, ch. 1734, § 3.)

It would appear therefore, that the legislature validated the actions of the State Allocation Board.

The trial judge in this matter prepared an opinion in writing wherein he set forth his reasoning and the law of the case. We believe the cause was correctly and properly disposed of in the trial court and we adopt as part of this opinion the memorandum opinion of the trial court which is as follows:

"The sole question for determination in this case is the authority of the State Allocation Board to amend an order apportioning funds from the Public School Building Loan Fund, so as to permit the plaintiff School District to use the proceeds from the sale of a replaced school site for the construction of additional school buildings, instead of applying such proceeds toward the repayment of the allocation as originally provided in the resolution approving such allocation.

"It is clear that the school building aid program embraced in Article 1, Chapter 1.6, Division 3 of the Education Code is to provide necessary and adequate school sites and buildings for financially distressed school districts.

"While the Act (Section 5048) requires the Director of Finances to determine the district's financial ability to meet all or a portion of the cost out of available funds, there is no provision in the Act which requires the Board to compel the district to contribute any of its available funds or funds which thereafter become available, except in the case of a sale within three years of a site or improvements purchased or improved in whole or in part from an apportionment (Section 5073).

"Rule 1778 adopted by the Board, pursuant to authority of Section 5045, provides that the Board shall prescribe the amount of funds to be contributed by the District and may specify that the proceeds from the sale of any facilities to be replaced through an apportionment shall be applied toward the cost of the approved project.

[1] "In the first instance then, it is within the Board's discretion to determine if proceeds from the subsequent sale of replaced facilities shall be applied toward the cost of the project.

"Rule 1781 provides that the Board may modify any apportionment, conditional or final, where the Board determines that good cause exists therefor. With no statutory provision relating to the use of funds subsequently becoming available from the sale of replaced facilities, and with authority to modify an apportionment for good cause, it would appear that the Board has authority to modify the provision of an apportionment requiring the District to contribute the net proceeds from the disposition of any replaced facilities by excepting therefrom the net proceeds acquired by the District from the sale of a particular school and site.

"The Attorney General contends that both the statute and the Board rules require the District to make use of all its available funds before obtaining State aid. This contention is not supported by any provision of the statute or by the Board rules.

"The Attorney General further contends that by modifying the apportionment provision relating to the contribution of proceeds from the sale or replaced facilities, by exempting the proceeds from the sale of one site and improvements, the Board has in effect approved the use of such proceeds for a project without first requiring the District to apply for an apportionment of such sum in the manner prescribed by law. The fallacy of this contention is that the Board is not required by law, nor by its own rules to require such contribution in originally approved apportionment. An expenditure of the District's funds subsequently becoming available is not an allocation from the Public School Building Loan Fund.

"It is a further contention of the Attorney General that to permit the plaintiff to retain and use the proceeds received from the sale of replaced facilities subverts the entire statutory scheme envisaged in the State Building Aid program in that it would render completely ineffectual the priority system contained in the Act. Sec. 5044.5 provides that the Board shall by rule give priority in allocating funds to districts where the children will benefit most from additional facilities. After setting forth the several bases for priority, the section provides that the Board may make exceptions when it determines that it will be for the benefit of the children affected. Thus it appears that even a waiver of priority is within the discretion of the Board and not in conflict with the enabling statute.

[2] "We conclude that the Board was authorized to amend the original resolution by the adoption of the resolution of December 16, 1953, authorizing the District to sell the Jonathan Bailey School and site and to apply the proceeds to the construction of the facilities specified in the amendatory resolution."

Judgment affirmed.

Civ. 22167.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 27, 1956.

Application by appellants for order augmenting record on appeal. The District Court of Appeal, held that where respondent's motion for correction of reporter's and clerk's transcripts was duly filed and heard, and appellants' attorney was present at hearing and did not call court's attention to matter appellants now wish included in record, application insofar as it asked for inclusion in record of all instructions requested by parties but refused by court, was denied.

Application denied in part.

Litigants must take notice of contents of a record that comes to appellate court.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐643(4)

Where respondent's motion for correction of transcript on appeal had been duly filed and heard, and where appellant's attorney was present at hearing, and attorney did not draw court's attention to matter appellant subsequently sought to have included in record, application in so far as it asked for inclusion in the record of all instructions requested by parties and refused by court was denied because of unexcused delay and manifest injustice to respondent, who needed operation to correct condition caused by accident. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 8(a).

PER CURIAM.

Appellants have filed an application for an order of this Court augmenting the record on appeal by adding to the clerk's transcript on appeal a supplement showing separately each instruction given to the jury, by whom each such instruction was requested, and whether the same was given as requested or whether the same was modified by the Court; and also adding all instructions requested by the parties but refused by the Court, showing in each instance the party by whom such instruction was requested.

It appears that the reporter's transcript on appeal contains each instruction which was given to the jury, but does not indicate in connection with each instruction at whose request the same was given, or whether the same was given on the Court's own motion, or given as modified, and that said transcript does not contain the instructions offered by the parties and refused by the Court.

By affidavit of their counsel appellants aver, "That a proper and adequate presentation of the questions to be raised on appeal, namely, the propriety of giving certain instructions, cannot be correctly and adequately presented unless the record herein is augmented" as requested.

Respondent makes no objection to an order being made directing the filing of a supplement to the clerk's transcript showing, "* * * at whose request such instruction was given or whether the same was given on the Court's own motion and further whether any such given instruction was modified and if so the wording of such modification."

Respondent however, opposes including in the requested supplement, "* * * all instructions requested by the parties but refused by the Court", on the ground that "Appellants are barred from such augmentation by laches and inexcusable delay".

The record reveals that on May 10, 1956, appellants filed their "Notice to Prepare Transcript and Designation of Items to be Included".

On September 11, 1956, counsel for appellants and respondents were advised by the usual printed form Notice of Completion of Clerk's and Reporter's Transcripts on Appeal, pursuant to Rule 8(a) that each party had 10 days after the mailing of such notice on said date to file a request for correction of such transcripts. No request was then made to include additional matters.

On September 21, 1956, respondent filed in the Superior Court a motion for correction of the Reporter's and Clerk's Transcripts on appeal in this action which motion was heard in Department 11 on October 5, 1956. Bruce Murchison, attorney for appellants, was present at the argument of such motion, and as pointed out by respondent, the appellants "at that time could have called to the Court's attention the matter which he now wishes included in the record but he failed so to do".

As to the prejudice that will ensue to respondent should the motion herein be granted in its entirety, it is urged that "the accident to respondent occurred on February 11, 1953, and the trial of the within action ended on March 5, 1956. It has taken from that date until the present time to get the record filed in this court. Respondent is a little girl now nine years of age whose parents have no funds, and who urgently needs two additional operations to correct conditions caused by the accident."

[1,2] As stated in In re Estate of Easton, 136 Cal.App. 213, 216, 28 P.2d 376, 377, "* * * parties to an action must take notice of the contents of a record that comes to appellate courts". In the instant case it is plain that appellants were not taken by surprise nor have they shown any excusable neglect or other good cause to secure the relief prayed for. We are satisfied that the application should be denied insofar as it asks for inclusion in the record of all instructions requested by the parties and refused by the Court. This because of the unexcused delay of appellants in seeking their relief, and further because of the manifest injustice that would occur to respondent.

It is therefore ordered that the record on appeal be augmented by adding to the clerk's transcript on appeal herein a supplement showing separately each instruction given to the jury, by whom each such instruction was requested, and whether the same was given as requested or was given as modified by the Court.

And it is further ordered that the Clerk of the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles be, and he is hereby directed to prepare said supplemental transcript in accordance with this order.

It is further ordered that the time for appellants to file their opening brief herein be and it is hereby extended until 30 days after said supplemental transcript herein ordered has been filed in this Court.

In all other respects the application is denied.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 27, 1956.

Hearing Denied Feb. 19, 1957.

Action brought by plaintiffs, who were engaged in the house-to-house installment sales business, against one of their former collector-salesmen, who had allegedly gone into same business for himself and solicited business from customers he had formerly served for plaintiffs. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Thurmond Clarke, J., granted injunctive and other relief, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that evidence sustained decree.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendant from a decree enjoining defendant from, among other things, soliciting or accepting certain business of persons who were customers of the plaintiffs during the period of the employment of defendant by plaintiffs, and awarding plaintiffs $500 damages.

A résumé of the facts established, and some of the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, is as follows: The plaintiffs are, and for about eight and one-half years had been, engaged in the house-to-house installment sales business. Their business is carried on by selling merchandise, generally to a housewife in the low income bracket, at her house, with either a down payment of a dollar or two, or with no down payment. Weekly installments of one or two dollars each are thereafter collected by the plaintiffs through their collector-salesman. The collector-salesman has a dual task: he calls at the house of the customer each week on a scheduled day and collects the small installment payment; at the same time he makes what in the trade are called "add-on sales," which are sales of additional merchandise the cost of which is added to the customer's account. The customer comes to rely on the plaintiffs, through the media of their collector-salesmen, as her supplier of the type of goods which plaintiffs handle.

Plaintiffs carry a line of general merchandise, clothing, household goods and appliances. Their customers are unique in that they are, very largely, persons in the low income brackets and many of them cannot afford to patronize more than one house-to-house credit-installment supplier. To such persons, the plaintiffs' services and credit policy are of special appeal.

Plaintiffs have about 9,000 accounts in Los Angeles county. Their customers were obtained, ordinarily, by (1) references from old customers; (2) employees of plaintiffs canvassing the various homes for the sole purpose of attempting to make an initial sale and (3) plaintiffs purchasing accounts from companies whose business it was to canvass and make the opening sale on an installment basis. Many of the persons who opened such accounts would make a single purchase and thereafter pay off the account, but some would continue to buy and these formed the hard core of regular, steady customers who bought merchandise from the plaintiffs for many years. There was considerable turnover in the new accounts but plaintiffs' regular customers could be counted on to buy month after month and year after year.

The plaintiffs' cost of merchandise plus costs of sales and collections was about 70% of the gross sales price. After computing overhead, plaintiffs made a net profit of approximately 10%. These percentages continued fairly constant and a few hundred customers one way or the other did not raise or lower the overhead materially.

Defendant was employed by the plaintiffs as a collector-salesman in March, 1954, and shortly thereafter he was assigned to a route. For each day of the week he was given a set of about 100 cards and on each card was the name of a customer of plaintiffs on the particular route, her address, a list of the merchandise previously bought by her from the plaintiffs, and the dates and amounts of payments for the period during which she had been a customer of the plaintiffs; also, the money balance due on the account and the name of the person who referred or obtained the customer in the first instance. The weekly route of about 500 customers assigned to the defendant was located in the district known as East Los Angeles. The defendant serviced this regular route of plaintiffs' customers for six months, seeing each customer on the same day of each week during that time. When the card indicated that the balance of the account and the credit rating of the customer warranted it, the defendant would attempt to sell additional merchandise to the customer. The customers were induced to and did rely upon defendant being at their house one week from the day of his last call.

About September 4, 1954, defendant left plaintiffs' employ. He immediately started operating the same type of business for himself, selling the same kind of merchandise. He went back along his old route and methodically visited the customers of plaintiffs whose names, identities and location he had learned, and whose personal acquaintance he had made, during and by reason of his former employment with the plaintiffs. He visited these customers without any prior invitation or request on their part to do so, with the exception of a very few instances, and he solicited business from them and advised them that he was now engaged in the same business for himself. With the knowledge which he had acquired from the plaintiffs' customer cards he asked, suggested and urged the customer to buy merchandise from him upon the same installment basis. If he did not succeed in selling the customer the first time, he would call back regularly. After he made a sale he would call on the customer regularly each week, collecting the weekly installment and making substantial add-on sales, which were greatly facilitated by his having sold them merchandise during his employment with the plaintiffs.

Defendant solicited business from most of the customers on whom he called while in the plaintiffs' employ and he succeeded in diverting to himself in many cases all, and in some cases a portion, of the business of about 100 customers. He admitted selling a total of $2,676.45 in merchandise to 54 of plaintiffs' customers.

The plaintiffs, upon learning of defendant's activities, instituted this action and on December 2, 1954, a preliminary injunction was issued. Thereafter, defendant continued to make sales in spite of the injunction. After a full and complete hearing was had, the trial court granted a permanent injunction and awarded the plaintiffs $500 damages, from which judgment the defendant prosecutes this appeal upon a settled statement.

[1] The defendant contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgment for $500 damages. The defendant admitted to sales of merchandise in a total sum of $2,676.45 to but fifty-four of the plaintiffs' customers. There would be nothing unreasonable under the facts of this case to conclude that the sales to the fifty-four customers were representative of the sales made by the defendant to all of the approximately one hundred customers of the plaintiffs. The trial court could well have concluded from the evidence that the defendant sold $5,000 worth of merchandise of a kind usually sold by the plaintiffs to those of plaintiffs' customers whom defendant learned of by reason of his employment by the plaintiffs. There was testimony that the net profit is always about 10% of the gross sales. Furthermore, the plaintiffs would not necessarily be limited to such an amount as damages. They were entitled to recover for all damages proximately caused by the defendant's wrong. Civ.Code, § 3333.

Defendant asserts that there was no confidential information not readily accessible to his competitors and further contends that he did not injure the plaintiffs. A reading of the facts of this case completely answers any such contention.

In the case of George v. Burdusis, 1942, 21 Cal.2d 153, at pages 159–161, 130 P.2d 399, at page 402, the court stated: "It is well settled in California that after an employee who worked on a retail delivery route has left the service of his employer, his use of the customer list to solicit business for another person is an unwarranted disclosure of trade secrets. Under such circumstances, a court of equity will enjoin not only the solicitation of the customers of the first employer but also the acceptance of any orders from them. [Citing cases.] However, where the customers are wholesale buyers whose names appear in directories, and they are so few in number that anyone might readily discover them, it has been held that the employer's list is not secret and confidential information. Avocado Sales Co. v. Wyse, 122 Cal.App. 627, 10 P.2d 485 * * *.

"The rule of Avocado Sales Co. v. Wyse, supra, has, however, been expressly limited by subsequent decisions of this court. It 'is not merely the knowledge of the identity of the customers, but the friendly contact with them, which is important to the solicitors * * *.' Their personal acquaintance with customers and knowledge of 'their respective places of residence, their peculiar likes and fancies and other characteristics, a knowledge of which would greatly aid them in securing and retaining the business of said former customers,' is sufficient to invoke equitable protection against the subsequent use by a former employee of such information. Dairy Dale Co. v. Azevedo, 211 Cal. 344, 295 P. 10.

"And the list of customers, not ordinarily entitled to judicial protection, may become a trade secret, if there is confidential information concerning the value of these customers. * * *

"As a customer list within the rules expressed may exist in the memory of the employee as well as in writing (Avocado Sales Co. v. Wyse, supra), the finding that no route book ever existed for the customers of the appellants served by Tom Burdusis is not determinative of the appellants' rights. Tom Burdusis testified that he carried in his mind his list of customers, and they are as easily identified as those in the cases of Avocado Sales Co. v. Wyse, supra, and Gloria Ice Cream & M. Co. v. Cowan, supra [2 Cal.2d 460, 41 P.2d 340]." (Emphasis added.)

Aetna Building Maintenance Co. v. West, 39 Cal.2d 198, 246 P.2d 11, decided in July, 1952, was a case wherein a former employee with an intimate knowledge of his former employer's customers, business operations and trade secrets, went out to compete with his former employer. The court said, 39 Cal.2d at pages 203–205, 246 P.2d at page 14: "* * * The question, therefore, is whether West was guilty of unfair competition in soliciting Aetna's customers.

* * * * * *

"'Solicit' is defined as: 'To ask for with earnestness, to make petition to, to endeavor to obtain, to awake or excite to action, to appeal to, or to invite.' Black's Law Dictionary, 3d ed., p. 1639. 'It implies personal petition and importunity addressed to a particular individual to do some particular thing, * * *.' Golden & Co. v. Justice's Court, 23 Cal.App. 778, 798, 140 P. 49, 58. It means: '"To appeal to (for something); to apply to for obtaining something; to ask earnestly; to ask for the purpose of receiving; to endeavor to obtain by asking or pleading; to entreat, implore, or importune; to make petition to; to plead for; to try to obtain."' People v. Phillips, 70 Cal.App.2d 449, 453, 160 P.2d 872, 874.

* * * * * *

"However, even in the absence of solicitation, Aetna is entitled to protection against West's use or disclosure in competition with it, of trade secrets given to him only for the purpose of carrying on his employer's business. (Riess v. Sanford, 47 Cal.App.2d 244, 246–247, 117 P.2d 694; Germo Mfg. Co. [of Missouri] v. McClellan, 107 Cal.App. 532, 541, 290 P. 534; §

2860 Labor Code; Rest., Agency, § 396(b); see cases collected in Junker v. Plummer, 320 Mass. 76, 67 N.E.2d 667, 165 A.L.R. 1453. * * *

"* * * Under such circumstances, as stated in George v. Burdusis, 21 Cal.2d 153, 159, 130 P.2d 399, and other decisions, to obtain relief against a former employee it must be shown: (1) The information was confidential and not readily accessible to competitors; (2) The former employee solicited the customers of his former employer with intent to injure him; (3) The former employee sought out certain preferred customers whose trade is particularly profitable and whose identities are not generally known to the trade; (4) The business is such that a customer will ordinarily patronize only one concern; (5) The established business relationship between the customer and the former employer would normally continue unless interfered with. California Intelligence Bureau v. Cunningham, 83 Cal.App.2d 197, 202, 188 P.2d 303, and cases there cited.

"Equitable protection may be invoked against the subsequent use by a former employee of knowledge of the '"peculiar likes and fancies and other characteristics"' of the former employer's customers where such knowledge will aid him in securing and retaining their business. [Citing cases.] This rule applies where friendly contact with customers is important to solicitors, a circumstance typical of the so-called 'trade route' cases. It has also been applied to situations involving a knowledge of the customer's desire for specialized information, his preference for certain products, and his buying habits. California Intelligence Bureau v. Cunningham, supra, 83 Cal.App.2d at page 204, 188 P.2d 303; Wallich v. Koren, 80 Cal.App.2d 223, 227, 181 P.2d 682."

[2] Whether the Aetna case sets down the rule that it is necessary to show all of the five items recited above (paragraph [8] of the Aetna decision, 246 P.2d 15) before relief against a former employee may be had, or whether it was intended otherwise, as is suggested in a law review article in 41 Cal.L.Rev. 38 (1953), does not concern us for the reason that we are of the opinion that in the instant case all of the factors, in any event, were present.

The remaining contentions of the defendant are, in our opinion, without merit.

Jan. 2, 1957.

Action by unmarried woman to have unmarried man declared to be father of woman's child and to obtain order for support of the child. The Superior Court, County of San Mateo, A. R. Cotton, J., after trial before a jury, granted woman's motion for directed verdict and entered judgment on order for directed verdict and order for support, costs, and attorney's fees, and man appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that evidence upon issue of paternity was sufficient to preclude direction of verdict for woman.

Judgment and order reversed.

1. Bastards ⇐70

In action by unmarried woman to have unmarried man declared father of her child and to obtain an order for support of child, evidence upon issue of paternity was sufficient to preclude direction of verdict for woman.

2. Trial ⇐170

Motion for directed verdict may be granted upon plaintiff's motion where, upon the whole evidence, the cause of action alleged in the complaint is supported, and no substantial support is given to the defense alleged by the defendant.

3. Trial ⇐178

Upon motion for directed verdict, the trial court has no power to weigh the evidence or pass upon conflicts in the evidence or upon credibility of witnesses.

4. Trial ⇐143

If there is a material conflict in the evidence, motion for directed verdict must be denied.

5. Bastards ⇐70

Fact that defendant denied, in his deposition, that he had ever had sexual intercourse with plaintiff, but at trial of paternity proceeding testified that he had had sexual intercourse prior to certain date, was matter which should have been submitted to jury, not decided by trial court on plaintiff's motion for a directed verdict.

6. Bastards ⇐59

In paternity proceeding, refusal to permit plaintiff to be asked, when testifying as an adverse witness under the Code of Civil Procedure, whether she had had sexual relationships with other men during period in which she conceived, was error. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 2055.

7. Bastards ⇐59

Evidence of plaintiff's sexual relations if any, with other men at or about time of her conception is admissible in paternity proceeding.

8. Trial ⇐45(1)

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

This action was brought by the plaintiff, an unmarried woman, to have defendant, also unmarried, declared to be the father of plaintiff's child, and for an order for the support of the child. After a trial before a jury, the trial judge granted the plaintiff's motion for a directed verdict. From a judgment based on the order for a directed verdict and from an order for support, costs and attorney's fees defendant appeals.

[1–4] The case is a simple one. The child was admittedly conceived in June of 1952. Plaintiff testified that on the night of June 14th and early morning of June 15th of that year defendant had intercourse with her. Defendant, while admitting being in the company of plaintiff on the night in question, denied having intercourse with plaintiff on that night or any other time after April, 1952. In the face of this conflict in the evidence the trial court granted a directed verdict for the plaintiff. This was error. "A motion for a directed verdict may be granted upon the motion of the plaintiff, where, upon the whole evidence, the cause of action alleged in the complaint is supported, and no substantial support is given to the defense alleged by the defendant." Walters v. Bank of America National Trust & Savings Ass'n, 9 Cal.2d 46, 49, 69 P.2d 839, 840, 110 A.L.R. 1259. The trial court, on such a motion, has no power to weigh the evidence, or to pass upon conflicts in the evidence or upon the credibility of the witnesses. If there is a material conflict in the evidence the motion must be denied. In re Estate of Flood, 217 Cal. 763, 21 P.2d 579; In re Estate of Lances, 216 Cal. 397, 14 P.2d 768.

Tested by these standards it is obvious that the trial court was in error in granting the motion for the directed verdict.

Both principals admit first meeting in 1948 while they were both employed in San Francisco by the same company. They began dating early in 1951. Thereafter, defendant's job required him to do considerable traveling away from San Francisco, but they corresponded. Plaintiff testified that late in January or early in February, 1952, she visited defendant in Los Angeles and they had intercourse; that she again went to Los Angeles and saw defendant in April of 1952, and again they had intercourse. Plaintiff also testified that on June 14, 1952, she and defendant had dinner with friends in San Francisco, and then, in defendant's automobile, went to their favorite "necking" spot at Bernal Heights, where, between 1:00 a. m. to 6:30 a. m. of June 15th they engaged in the acts of intercourse.

Defendant admitted having intercourse with plaintiff in Los Angeles in April of 1952, but unequivocally and positively denied having intercourse with her at any time thereafter. These denials appear in at least 15 different places in the reporter's transcript.

Plaintiff admits that she had her regular menstrual period early in June, 1952, and that she first passed her period in July of 1952. The child was born March 18, 1953. The plaintiff designated defendant as the father of the child on the birth certificate.

Defendant admits that he took plaintiff to a dinner party on the night of June 14, 1952, and that thereafter he took plaintiff to Bernal Heights, and sat with her in the car until the morning of June 15th. His version of what there occurred is that plaintiff delivered an ultimatum, that is, that they get married or quit seeing each other. He testified that plaintiff told him that she had been seeing another man who had proposed marriage and that she wanted to know where she stood with defendant. Defendant told her that, because of his financial responsibilities, because of his mother's health, and because his job required him to travel so much, he could not and would not marry her. Defendant repeatedly denied having intercourse with plaintiff on this occasion.

Blood tests of all those involved demonstrated that defendant could have been the father of the child.

The mother of plaintiff testified that defendant called at her home about nine months after the baby was born and referred to the baby as "my son" and offered to give him a good education. Defendant admitted this visit but denied the admission. Defendant testified that some time after the child was born he began paying plaintiff $50 a month. He stated that he did this as a matter of "expediency" to try and prevent a scandal on plaintiff's promise not to press the paternity action.

Plaintiff contends that in spite of defendant's positive denials of intercourse after April of 1952, defendant in fact admitted paternity in four letters written by him to her. The first of these letters is dated August 11, 1952, and the last March 29, 1954. We have read these letters carefully. We find in them no unambiguous and unequivocal admission of paternity, although, when read in connection with plaintiff's testimony, they would support a jury finding of paternity. It is unnecessary to quote all four letters. Typical is the letter of August 11, 1952, written shortly after plaintiff had informed defendant by letter that she had passed her July menstrual period. In this letter defendant stated: "I certainly hope your fears will not be realized, as we would both severely jeapordize [sic] our futures financially, and what is more important, socially if any scandal should arise. Naturally I'm just as worried as you, and for for [sic] the first time in many years, will say my prayers in hopes everything will work out for the best." Immediately preceding this passage is the following: "I hope by the time this reaches you everything will be back on schedule,—it seems highly unlikely that anything drastic will occur, at least on my account if you will recall careful [sic] the details and circumstances of our last meeting. Perhaps if you will read up on some scientific explanation of the 'facts of life' you will understand what I mean. At any rate, there are several causes for the cessation which you mentioned, age, emotional disturbance, diet, etc. I certainly hope your fears will not be realized * * *."

These passages are representative of the so-called admissions alleged to have been made in the letters. It is obvious that they do not constitute an unequivocal admission of paternity. They are subject to interpretation and explanation. Moreover, even if so interpreted they would conflict with the positive denials of defendant at the time of trial. Clearly, these were matters that should have been submitted to and determined by the jury.

[5] Plaintiff makes much of the fact that defendant lied in his deposition in which he stated that he had never had intercourse with plaintiff, and then at the trial testified as to the April, 1952, episode. The effect of this lying, was, of course, a matter that should have been submitted to the jury and not decided by the trial court on a motion for a directed verdict.

[6–8] Another error committed by the trial court should be mentioned. Plaintiff was asked, when testifying as an adverse witness under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, whether she had had sexual relationships with other men during June and July of 1952. Plaintiff objected on the grounds that the question was "purely irrelevant, immaterial." The objection was sustained. On appeal plaintiff seeks to sustain the ruling on the grounds that defendant made no offer of proof. The ruling was clearly erroneous. Evidence of plaintiff's sexual relations with other men at or about the time of conception is admissible. In re Estate of Gird, 157 Cal. 534, 108 P. 499; Berry v. Chaplin, 74 Cal.App.2d 652, 169 P.2d 442. It is equally clear that no offer of proof is necessary where the examination is of an adverse witness. Tossman v. Newman, 37 Cal.2d 522, 233 P.2d 1; Lawless v. Calaway, 24 Cal.2d 81, 147 P.2d 604.

The order of support appealed from falls with the judgment.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

Purchasers brought action against vendors for rescission of purchase of realty or for damages if rescission should be denied. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Eugene P. Fay, J., entered judgment for purchasers in an allegedly inadequate amount and provided that amount for which vendors were liable should be applied against purchase money note, which was not due and payable, and the purchasers appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that where vendors caused and procured a false report to be made by termite inspector that property was free of termites, and purchasers purchased the realty for $11,950 in reliance on such report, and property was in fact badly infested with termites and, because of termite infestation, was worth only $8,500 at time of sale, purchasers were entitled to damages in amount of $3,450, and not merely in amount of $1,600 as found by Superior Court, and that vendors were not entitled to have amount of damages set off against purchase money note.

Judgment modified and, as modified, affirmed.

1. Fraud ⇐62

Where vendors caused and procured a false report to be made by termite inspector that property was free of termites, and purchasers purchased the realty for $11,950 in reliance on such report, and property was in fact badly infested with termites and, because of termite infestation, was worth only $8,500 at time of sale, purchasers were entitled to damages in amount of $3,450, and not merely in amount of $1,600 as found by Superior Court.

2. Set-Off and Counterclaim ⇐36

Vendors, who were liable to purchasers for damages for causing and procuring a false report to be made by termite inspector that property was free of termites, were not entitled to set off damages against purchase money note, which was not yet due and payable .

DORAN, Justice.

This is an action for damages.

The facts, as recited in appellants' brief and supported by the record, are as follows:

"In this action for rescission of a purchase of real property, or for damages if rescission be denied, the plaintiffs had judgment against the fraudulent sellers for damages. In the complaint it is alleged that the purchase price was $11,950, and in the findings this was found to be true. This property was represented by defendant sellers, as being in good condition and free of all termite or dry-rot infestation; these representations were made with intent that the plaintiffs should rely thereon, the said defendants knowing that the plaintiffs were wholly ignorant of any facts which would have revealed to them the presence of termites or dry-rot. Plaintiffs believed these representations, and in reliance thereon purchased this property. The representations were in fact false and were known by these defendants to be false, and in fact they knowingly supressed the true facts as to the condition of this property. The property was badly infested with and damaged by termites and dry-rot.

"The Court found that the reasonable market value of the property purchased, at the time of this sale, was $8,500 due to this termite and dry-rot condition, but concluded that plaintiffs were entitled to judgment for only the sum of $1,600 as against the fraudulent vendors. The Court further concluded that this sum should be applied against a note held by the fraudulent vendors, taken as a part of the sale price, which was payable at $44.50 per month, and not due and payable for a long time thereafter. On May 29, 1956, judgment in keeping with these conclusions was entered."

It is contended on appeal that the trial court should be directed to modify the judgment in keeping with the facts as found so as to allow the sum of $3,450 damages and to eliminate the provisions for setoff and as so modified the judgment should be affirmed.

In connection with the sale and purchase of the property a termite inspector checked the condition of the property and reported the property to be free of termites. The court found that defendants had "caused and procured" a false report to be made by the termite inspector. The court also found that the inspector was not the employee or agent of plaintiff.

Respondent contends that, "the only person liable is C. Harold MacInnes, the termite contractor issuing the certificate on whom everyone relied".

[1, 2] Appellants' contentions are supported by the record and the law. It is ordered that the judgment be modified so as to allow the sum of $3,450 damages and that provision for setoff be eliminated. As so modified the judgment is affirmed. Appellants to recover costs on appeal.

v.

Inez BROWN, Appellant.

Cr. 5686.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 31, 1956.

Hearing Denied Jan. 30, 1957.

Prosecution for unlawful possession of heroin together with a charge of a prior misdemeanor conviction for narcotics addiction. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Thomas L. Ambrose, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed therefrom and from order denying her motion for new trial. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that evidence sustained finding that arresting police officer had such knowledge as would lead a man of ordinary care and prudence to believe that defendant was guilty, so as to authorize arrest without a warrant and subsequent search of defendant whom he had observed transferring some object to another woman in a back alley at night.

Judgment affirmed; attempted appeal from order dismissed.

1. Arrest ⇐63(4)

If the facts of which the officer has knowledge are such as would lead a man of ordinary care and prudence to believe, or to entertain an honest and strong suspicion, that the person is guilty, the police officer has such "reasonable cause" as would justify an arrest without a warrant. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 836, subds. 3, 5.

2. Arrest ⇐63(4), 71

In prosecution for unlawful possession of narcotics, evidence was sufficient to sustain finding that officer had such reasonable cause to believe that defendant had committed a felony as would authorize subsequent arrest and search of defendant whom officer had observed transferring material to another woman in a back alley late at night. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, §§ 11500, 11721; West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 836, subds. 2, 3, 5.

3. Arrest ⇐63(4)

Reasonable and probable cause for belief that a person has committed a felony so as to justify his arrest without a warrant, must be measured by the facts presented to the officer at the time he is required to act. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 836, subds. 3, 5.

Minsky & Garber, Albert C. Garber, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Bonnie Lee Hansen, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, defendant was charged with a violation of Section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code, a felony, in that she unlawfully had in her possession heroin, and was also charged with a prior misdemeanor conviction for narcotics addiction in violation of Section 11721 of the aforesaid code, which prior conviction was subsequently admitted. To the offense charged in the information defendant pleaded not guilty. Trial by jury was duly waived and by stipulation the People's case in chief was presented on the transcript of testimony adduced at the preliminary examination. Both parties reserved the right to introduce additional testimony. At the trial, when the judge announced he had read and considered the testimony contained in the transcript of the preliminary examination, and following argument by counsel, both parties rested after defendant's objection to all evidence presented by the prosecution was overruled. Defendant was adjudged guilty and sentenced to the California Institution for Women for the term prescribed by law.

This appeal is from the judgment of conviction and from "the order * * * denying defendant's motion for a new trial". Since the record reveals that no motion for a new trial was made, the attempted appeal therefrom must be dismissed.

The following will serve as a fair epitome of the factual background surrounding this prosecution. On January 15, 1956, at about 1:35 a. m., Officer Salagi was in an alley in the rear of the Chatterbox Hotel at 441 Stanford Street in the City of Los Angeles. He testified that, "I know that narcotics are sold in that area—quite a bit of narcotics sold in that area"; that he and his partner were in that area investigating vice conditions. That defendant and another woman walked into the alley and appeared to be conversing. The officer was about fifty or sixty feet from the two women and the alley was very well lighted at this point. The defendant was observed placing something in the other woman's hand, when the officer heard what sounded like a coin hit the pavement. The defendant bent over, picked up the object, and placed it in the lady's hand. The other lady was observed removing something from her purse and placing it in the defendant's hand. The latter then placed her hand in the area of her breast. For the purpose of establishing probable cause for making the arrest, the officer was permitted to testify that this incident "indicated to me that there was a transfer of narcotics taking place." The other woman left the area first and then defendant followed her out of the alley. Officer Salagi then left the area and found the defendant at the corner of 5th and Stanford about four minutes later. The defendant was there placed under arrest.

The officer removed a bindle from the left side of a jumper bag where the defendant was observed to have placed an object after the transaction referred to above. The powder contained in the bindle was identified as heroin. The defendant stated to the arresting officer that she had bought the heroin from one Fay Harris and paid $4 for it. The officer further testified that he was approximately 50 or 60 feet away from the two women at the time he observed them in conversation. He could not hear what they were saying. With regard to anything being transferred by one of the women to the other the officer testified:

"Q. With reference to this alleyway here, you actually didn't see anything transferred from one person to the other, did you?

"A. No, sir, just the way their hands were coming together and the coin dropping to the pavement and the defendant picking the coin up."

Appellant's sole ground for reversal of the judgment is that the trial court committed prejudicial and reversible error in overruling her objection to the introduction into evidence of the bindle of heroin and in refusing to suppress such evidence on the ground that the same was obtained as the result of an illegal arrest and consequent unlawful search and seizure. Appellant earnestly insists that the facts hereinbefore narrated did not furnish reasonable or probable cause for her arrest and that therefore, the aforesaid narcotic was erroneously received in evidence because it was the product of the claimed unlawful trespass upon appellant's constitutional rights.

In United States v. Snyder, D.C., 278 F. 650, 658, reasonable or probable cause is defined as "a reasonable ground of suspicion, supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious man in his belief that the person accused is guilty of the offense with which he is charged." See also Hernandez v. United States, 9 Cir., 17 F.2d 373; People v. Kilvington, 104 Cal. 86, 91, 37 P. 799; Cook v. Singer Sewing Machine Co., 138 Cal. App. 418, 422, 32 P.2d 430; People v. Moore, 141 Cal.App.2d 87, 89, 299 P.2d 691.

Penal Code, Section 836(2) authorizes an officer to make an arrest without a warrant, "When a person arrested has committed a felony * * *", or under subdivision (3) "When a felony has in fact been committed, and he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it", or under subdivision (5) "At night, when there is reasonable cause to believe that [the person arrested] has committed a felony."

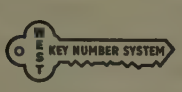
[1] Therefore, the primary question presented to us is whether the facts of which the officer herein had knowledge were such " 'as would lead a man of ordinary care and prudence to believe, or entertain an honest and strong suspicion, that the person [appellant] is guilty' ". People v. Kilvington, supra, 104 Cal. at page 92, 37 P. at page 801.

[2] Applying this rule to the facts of the case now engaging our attention, we are satisfied that it must be held that the officer had reasonable cause to believe that appellant may have committed a felony. Officer Salagi and his partner were patrolling a district where, as testified by Officer Salagi, "I know that narcotics are sold in that area—quite a bit of narcotics sold in that area". The officers were investigating vice conditions in the vicinity. It was 1:35 o'clock in the morning. The scene was a back alley. The officer observed appellant and another woman walk about 15 feet into the alley. They appeared to be conversing with each other, "I observed the defendant here take her hand and the other lady had her hand in this manner (indicating) down, with her palm up, and she was placing something into the other lady's hand—that is, the defendant was placing something into this lady's hand.

"I heard what sounded like a coin hitting the pavement and this defendant then bent over and picked up this object, so that sounded like the ring of a coin and she picked it up and placed it into the hand of this other lady, and then this other lady was observed to go through her purse, take something out and place it in this defendant's hand.

"Then I observed this defendant as she placed her hand up in this area here (indicating) of her breast, and the other lady left the alley first and this defendant followed her, and I left the area where I was and found the defendant at the southwest corner of 5th and Stanford, where I placed her under arrest."

[3] Reasonable and probable cause for belief that a person has committed a felony must be measured by the facts presented to the officer at the time he is required to act. People v. Kilvington, supra, 104 Cal. at page 93, 37 P. 799; People v. Hupp, 61 Cal.App.2d 447, 449, 143 P.2d 84. The time of the night; the location of appellant's activities together with her unusual conduct as observed by the officer, we are satisfied present such a state of facts " 'as would lead a man of ordinary care and prudence to believe, or entertain an honest and strong suspicion, that the person is guilty' ". People v. Kilvington, supra, 104 Cal. at page 92, 37 P. at page 801. (Emphasis added.) See also People v. Rodriguez, 140 Cal.App.2d 865, 869, 296 P.2d 38; People v. Blodgett, 46 Cal.2d 114, 117, 293 P.2d 57; People v. Martin, 46 Cal.2d 106, 107, 108, 293 P.2d 52; People v. Jiminez, 143 Cal.App.2d 671, 300 P.2d 68.



We have examined the cases of People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905; People v. Brown, 45 Cal.2d 640, 290 P.2d 528; People v. Simon, 45 Cal.2d 645, 290 P.2d 531, and other cases relied upon by appellant but find them factually distinguishable from the case at bar and we do not find therein anything which militates against the conclusion at which we have arrived herein, under the existing facts presented by the record now before us.

While it may not be entirely clear whether the actual arrest occurred before or after the search and seizure, it has been held that if an arrest is lawful, the search incident thereto would not be unlawful merely because it preceded the arrest. People v. Boyles, 45 Cal.2d 652, 655, 290 P.2d 535; People v. Martin, 45 Cal.2d 755, 761, 762, 290 P.2d 855.

The attempted appeal from the order denying a motion for a new trial is dismissed. The judgment is affirmed.

Julia JONES and John Jones, Husband and Wife, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

S. W. HOTCHKISS and Mrs. S. W. Hotchkiss, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21776.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 26, 1956.

Action for personal injuries sustained by a house worker when she slipped and fell on the floor of a service porch in defendants' residence. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Wallace L. Ware, J., entered judgment of nonsuit, and house worker appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that evidence presented questions for the jury as to whether the floor of service porch in question was sufficiently hard and smooth to be unsafe due to wax or sawdust upon it, and as to whether defendants exercised ordinary care with respect to the condition of such floor.

1. Trial ⇐142

If inferences can reasonably and fairly be deduced from the evidence which sustain the allegations of a complaint, it is error to grant a motion for a judgment of nonsuit.

2. Negligence ⇐134(2)

Negligence may be established by "circumstantial evidence", which is nothing more than one or more inferences which may be said to arise reasonably from a series of proven facts.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Circumstantial Evidence".

3. Negligence ⇐121(2)

No inference of negligence arises from mere fact of a fall or from mere fact that a floor was slippery, in the absence of proof of some foreign substance on the floor or proof of a dangerous condition created by or known to defendant.

4. Negligence ⇐48, 121(1)

To impose liability on the owner of a building for injuries sustained by an invitee, it must be shown that a dangerous condition existed, that the owner knew or should have known of it, and, while under some circumstances, negligence may be inferred from the existence of a dangerous condition, the burden rests on invitee to show the existence of a dangerous condition and that the owner knew or should have known of it.

5. Master and Servant ⇐286(16)

In action for personal injuries sustained by a house worker when she slipped and fell on the floor of a service porch in defendants' residence, evidence presented questions for the jury as to whether the floor of service porch in question was sufficiently hard and smooth to be unsafe due to wax or sawdust upon it, and as to whether defendants exercised ordinary care with respect to the condition of such floor.

S. M. Dana, Beverly Hills, for appellants.

Crider, Tilson & Ruppé and Jerome M. Budinger, Los Angeles, for respondents.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment of nonsuit in an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff Julia Jones when she slipped and fell on the floor of the service porch in defendants' residence.

The complaint alleged that plaintiff Julia Jones was employed by defendants as a day houseworker on their premises; defendants "placed and permitted to remain thereupon sawdust and/or other foreign substances which maintained a dangerous condition" on the premises; as a proximate result plaintiff slipped and fell while in the performance of her duties.

It appears to be conceded that Julia Jones was an invitee of defendants and that they were under a duty to exercise ordinary care to maintain the floor of the service porch in a reasonably safe condition.

Plaintiff Julia Jones was employed intermittently by defendants from 1949 to September 21, 1953. On direct, she testified: She worked four days a week for defendants. On September 21, 1953 she was doing cleaning and laundry work.

"Q. Before the accident occurred on the service porch, did you have any other occasion to go to the service porch? A. No, sir, no, sir. * * *

"Q. Will you tell us, please, how you got onto the service porch that day? A. Well, after I finished all in the house, I came on out, on through the kitchen, out on the service porch, picked up the trash cans to take them on out to the incinerator. * * *

"Q. Did you have anything in your hands? A. Not when I went on out, no, sir.

"Q. When did you take the cans in your hands? A. After I got out on the service porch I picked up the trash cans.

"Q. You picked up the trash cans and you went out to the back? A. Yes, sir. * * *

"Q. Did you take the trash to the back? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. In going to the back, were you on any particular pavement or concrete or stones or were you on grass or what were you actually walking on to go from the service porch to the incinerator? A. When you come off the service porch it is concrete. They have little concrete steps to go down, then you are on gravel to the incinerator.

"Q. Did you empty the wastebaskets in the incinerator? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you return to the service porch? A. Yes, sir. * * *

"Q. As you were walking into the service porch, did something happen? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Tell me there what happened. A. Well, my left feet [sic] slipped out from under me.

"Q. Go ahead. A. And I fell. My left feet [sic] skid out from under me and I fell, fell back.

"Q. When you fell, did you fall onto the ground? A. Yes, onto the floor. * * *

"Q. * * * Now, after you fell did you notice the ground—the floor on which you fell? A. No, sir, I didn't pay any attention, much attention to the floor.

"Q. You didn't pay any attention to the floor itself? A. No, sir.

"Q. Did you notice anything on your clothes that apparently came from the floor? A. Yes, sir, after I had gotten up and gotten—they taken me, I notice that little fine stuff was on my uniform.

"Q. What do you mean? A. Little fine sawdust that come from the machine of Mr. Hotchkiss', little fine stuff.

"Q. You say that was on your uniform? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What portions of your uniform did you notice this on? A. This little part here, this big part is where I noticed it (indicating).

"Q. Did you notice anything at all on the floor, such as mud, sticks, stones, anything like that? A. No, sir. * * *

"Q. Incidentally, after the accident happened, Mr. Hotchkiss and Mrs. Hotchkiss were both in the house? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Was there anything said about the accident or the service porch or the sawdust after the accident happened? A. Well, Mrs. Hotchkiss mentioned once that—said that she was going to have Mr. Hotchkiss move his machine in the garage because that sawdust kept the floor slippery and somebody was going to get hurt."

On cross, plaintiff Julia Jones testified that in going through the service porch on her way to the incinerator she did not look at or pay any attention to the floor.

"Q. How about coming back in before you had your fall, let's take it just as you are about to step into the door, go back onto the service porch, did you look to see if there was anything on the floor in front of you? A. No, sir, I didn't even look there, I didn't even pay any attention to the floor, I had the pail in my hand.

"Q. How many steps would you say you took from the time you entered the door until you had your fall? A. I would say I took about three—about three steps, I would say.

"Q. And were you going back the same way that you had come out? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You were going back over the same path that you used before? A. Yes, sir, I was going back toward the kitchen.

"Q. On the time that you were walking out with the baskets had you slipped? A. Did I slip?

"Q. When you were walking out with the baskets did you slip? A. No, sir. * * *

"Q. Did you notice anything unusual at all about the floor as you walked out with the baskets? A. No, sir.

"Q. It didn't feel slippery, did it? A. I wasn't paying any attention, I didn't pay any attention, I just wasn't paying any attention to the floor.

"Q. Then as you took those first three steps before you had your fall, you didn't notice anything unusual about the floor, during those three steps, did you? A. No, sir.

"Q. And you never did either before or after the accident see anything on the floor itself, did you? A. Well, no, sir, I didn't, no, sir. In fact, I didn't look and after I had the accident I was hurting so I didn't pay any attention to the floor."

Defendant Margareta W. Hotchkiss, called by plaintiffs, testified Julia was employed as a cleaning maid; there was a "Delta" power tool on the service porch; her husband used it primarily on holidays and nights after work;

"Q. Did this Delta power tool give off any debris, sawdust, shavings or the like? A. When in use, yes, sir.

"Q. Did it give off sawdust? A. Depending on the type of work being done, yes, sir.

"Q. If he were sawing wood, would it give off sawdust? A. I believe so.

"Q. Had you observed sawdust on the floor of the service porch when he was working? A. Yes, sir. * * *

"Q. Now, there were occasions before September 21, '53, when this Delta tool was used, were there not? A. Yes."

Defendant W. S. Hotchkiss, called by plaintiffs, testified he was at home at the time of the accident;

"Q. Did you help Mrs. Jones to her feet? A. Yes.

"Q. After you helped her to her feet, did you notice any mud or debris or pebbles or anything of that sort on the floor? A. No.

"Q. As you walked out the service porch to the incinerator is there a pathway of some sort to walk on? A. No, there is no path; there is concrete slab which abuts on the outside of the door.

"Q. Would you be walking on any mud or grass or oil as you went out to the incinerator and returned? A. No.

"Q. On the service porch there was a mechanical—that's a bad word—there is a kind of a work bench? A. Yes.

"Q. Besides that work bench you had some other tools there? A. Yes.

"Q. And you had a so-called Delta tool? A. Yes.

"Q. And this Delta tool, among other things, I gather it shaves and cuts wood? A. Yes.

"Q. Before September 21, '53, you had occasion to use the tool? A. Yes.

"Q. Did anyone besides yourself use it? A. No. * * *

"Q. * * * How did the tool get onto the service porch? A. I put it on the service porch.

"Q. Did you place it yourself or did you have someone else do it for you? A. It was movable and I moved it.

"Q. You moved it and placed it there? A. Yes.

"Q. Now, when this tool is being used for certain types of work will it create sawdust? A. Yes.

"Q. Have you observed this sawdust on the floor of the service porch? A. Yes.

"Q. I am talking about before September 21st about the operation of the tool and the sawdust on the floor. I am going to ask you something subsequently but right now I am addressing myself to the period subsequent to September of 1953. This is an asphalt tile floor, is it not? A. That's what I understand. * * *

"Q. Had this service porch been waxed before the time of the accident? A. I never saw it waxed.

"Q. Well, to your knowledge had you observed if it had been waxed or was in a waxed condition? A. I am not sure that I could tell that. I don't believe I could determine without close and careful examination whether or not it had been waxed. * * *

"Q. I would like to refer you to Page 14 [of deposition], commencing at Line 13 to Line 17—I beg your pardon—starting at Line 10, where the question is, to Line 17. There was a question asked of you at this time, November 9, '55, when your deposition was taken: 'Question: Did you ordinarily mop the floor or did you use something else, in the main, did you wax it or anything like that? Answer: Yes, it is waxed. You have to preserve the surface and you also mop it and clean it. Question: Before September 21, 1953, do you know when it was last waxed? Answer: No, I don't know.' Does this refresh your memory as far as the fact that it had been waxed before September of 1953? A. I believe I answered that I had never seen it waxed but I think it had been waxed at some time prior to that.

"Q. Now, you customarily used this tool in the evening after you came home from work? And I don't mean every evening but if you would use it, it would be after working hours? A. Nonworking hours.

"Q. Ordinarily what time do you get home? A. 6:00, 6:30.

"Q. And do you use the tool on holidays when you are not working? A. On occasion.

"Q. After you use the tool you always, when you finish, clean up, do you not? A. Yes.

"Q. And usually you would clean up the same evening you used the tool? * * *

"Q. Gather up any shavings? * * * A. Yes."

[1, 2] The foregoing evidence constituted plaintiffs' case. It is hardly necessary to say that if inferences can reasonably and fairly be deduced from the evidence which sustain the allegations of the complaint, it is error to grant a motion for a judgment of nonsuit. Negligence may be established by circumstantial evidence, which is nothing more than one or more inferences which may be said to arise reasonably from a series of proven facts. A plaintiff relying on circumstantial evidence does not have to exclude the possibility of every other reasonable inference possibly deriving from the evidence. Sanders v. MacFarlane's Candies, 119 Cal.App.2d 497, 500, 259 P.2d 1010. It is reasonable to infer that the asphalt tile floor was slippery—Julia's foot skidded out from under her and she "fell back"; that the floor had been waxed; that there was "fine sawdust" on the floor which came from the power tool; that defendants knew or should have known of the condition—Mrs. Hotchkiss said she was going to have the machine moved "because that sawdust kept the floor slippery and somebody was going to get hurt." Hatfield v. Levy Brothers, 18 Cal.2d 798, 805, 117 P.2d 841.

It is not negligence per se to have a waxed floor in a home, but a floor may be so waxed as to make it slippery and dangerous, particularly with sawdust upon it. Henderson v. Progressive Optical System, 57 Cal.App.2d 180, 185, 134 P.2d 807. Tuttle v. Crawford, 8 Cal.2d 126, 63 P.2d 1128, was a case where a woman stepped on a wet space of cement floor in a store, slipped and fell, and was injured. The wet spot was caused by the act of the employees of the store in freshening heads of lettuce by immersing them in water. The court held that whether the floor of the store was so negligently maintained as to render the person responsible for its condition liable in damages, was a question of fact to be decided by the jury. Many cases are there cited dealing with injuries resulting from falls caused by feet slipping on account of oil or grease or other substances which sometimes become deposited on floor spaces, or injuries inflicted because of improper floor conditions; and in each case they are held to be properly referable to juries for decision.

In Sharpless v. Pantages, 178 Cal. 122, 172 P. 384, 385, the plaintiff fell in the defendant's theatre due to the laying of a carpet in a loose condition. It was there held that since it was the defendant's act that was complained of as creating a dangerous floor condition, notice was not involved, and it was only necessary for plaintiff to show that the defendant's act had created a dangerous floor condition causing the plaintiff's injury. The plaintiff proved that her foot slipped as she stepped upon the carpet. The defendant moved for a nonsuit. The motion was denied by the trial court. Affirming, the Supreme Court said: "the fact that the plaintiff's foot slipped as she stepped upon the carpet is some evidence tending to show that defendant had failed" to use ordinary care to maintain the carpet upon the steps in such condition that it would be safe for persons to pass thereon in an ordinary manner, "and it is sufficient to sustain the decision upon the motion for a nonsuit."

> "Appellants' argument goes further to assail the finding that the floor was maintained by defendants in a negligent manner, and they rely upon a rule, which has been followed by some courts in other jurisdictions, that the duty of an owner to exercise ordinary care is not violated by merely oiling or waxing and polishing a floor in the usual way although the floor is rendered slippery thereby. [Citations.] This is contrary to the settled law as announced by our own courts.
> "In Rothschild v. Fourth & Market St[reet]. R[ealty]. Co., 1934, 139 Cal. App. 625, 628, 34 P.2d 734, it was held that evidence that a floor of a hallway maintained by the owner of a building for use by invitees of tenants of the building had been rendered slippery by the application of wax was sufficient to support a finding of negligence. This decision was in accord with those in [citations]. The right of a proprietor of a place of business to wax a floor which the customers are expected to use is not one which upon any reasonable theory can be held to be superior to his duty to use ordinary prudence and caution to avoid injury to those who come to his premises by invitation. If wax or, as in the present case, both wax and soft soap, are applied to the floor, it must be in such manner as to afford reasonably safe conditions for the proprietor's invitees, and if such compounds cannot be used on a particular type of floor material without violation of the duty to exercise ordinary care for the safety of invitees, by reason of the dangerous conditions they create, they should not be used at all. Of course slipperiness is an elastic term. From the fact that a floor is slippery it does not necessarily result that it is dangerous to walk upon. It is the degree of slipperiness that determines whether the condition is reasonably safe. This is a question of fact." [1]

[5] The jury could have reasonably inferred from the evidence that the surface of the floor of the service porch was sufficiently hard and smooth to become unsafe with the application of wax, or from the application of wax with sawdust upon it. It was for the jury to determine whether the condition was one of reasonable safety or, in other words, whether defendants had exercised ordinary care with respect to the condition of the floor.

In the light in which the evidence must be viewed on a motion for a judgment of nonsuit, the motion was improperly granted.

Reversed.

PARKER WOOD, J., concurs.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

I concur; but feel impelled to add a thought which comes to mind more often than it is expressed. I put it in the form of questions. Why do defense lawyers press for nonsuits when practically all the material facts are in evidence, instead of submitting the case on the merits, and why do trial judges grant nonsuits in doubtful cases when they are convinced that a verdict in favor of the plaintiff would be against the weight of the evidence and that it would be their duty to grant a new trial? It should be clear from a study of the reported cases that the rule applicable to nonsuits operates strongly in favor of plaintiffs and that it precludes reviewing courts from sustaining judgments of nonsuit if the evidence would be legally sufficient to support a verdict or judgment for the plaintiff. However dubious a plaintiff's case may appear to a reviewing court the functions of the jury must be respected and there can be no weighing of the facts beyond the inquiry whether the case of the plaintiff is entirely devoid of substantial support in the evidence. The frequency with which judgments of nonsuit are reversed should stand as a warning that too many of them are granted.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

PARAMOUNT CITRUS ASSOCIATION, Inc., a corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 21587.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 2, 1957.

Hearing Denied Feb. 27, 1957.

Suit for penalties and injunction against violation of marketing order requiring processors of lemon products to place certain per cent of all lemons received for processing during marketing season in Stabilization Pool, subject to control of Director of Agriculture. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Joseph W. Vickers, J., granted the relief sought, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Per Curiam, held that even if otherwise authorized, mandatory injunction was improper in absence of evidence which would justify finding that deposit of defendant's delinquent tonnage in Stabilization Pool would have any effect to stabilize market price of lemons or lemon products for marketing year or that it would rectify any detriment caused by defendant's wrongdoing, or have any other effect than to further penalize defendant for his violation of the Act.

Reversed in part and in part modified and affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐756

It is duty of counsel to search records and authorities to establish error.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐756, 761

Trial court, in suit for penalties and injunction against violations of marketing order, would not be put in error for refusing to allow defendant to file proposed amendment to its answer, where defendant failed to sustain by argument or authority its claim that circumstances alleged in proposed amendment, if established, would have constituted a defense to action, or that they would, if proved, have established an invasion of its constitutional rights.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐717

Opinion of trial judge may be examined by reviewing court as an aid in interpreting findings of fact and conclusions of law, but an opinion rendered by trial court cannot be used as a substitute for findings of fact and conclusions of law or to modify or defeat them.

4. Agriculture ⇐2
Injunction ⇐128

In suit for penalties and injunction against violation of marketing order requiring processors of lemon products to place certain per cent of all lemons received for processing during marketing season in Stabilization Pool subject to control of Director of Agriculture, evidence sustained finding that defendant had willfully and deliberately violated marketing order.

5. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇐749
Agriculture ⇐2

Where marketing order, requiring processors of lemon products to place certain per cent of all lemons received for processing during the marketing season in Stabilization Pool, did not make it obligatory upon Advisory Board to make sale from Stabilization Pool, question as to whether Board properly exercised its discretion was one of fact; and where evidence offered in administrative proceedings had for review of action of Advisory Board in refusing request to purchase lemons from Pool was not before court, it would be presumed that Director's decision upholding Board was supported by substantial evidence. West's Ann.Agric.Code, §§ 1300.10 et seq., 1300.19.

6. Agriculture ⇐2

In suit for penalties and injunction against violation of marketing order requiring processors of lemon products to place certain per cent of all lemons received for processing during marketing season in Stabilization Pool subject to control of Director of Agriculture, plaintiff was obligated to support its claim for penalties by proof as to number of weeks in which defendant had been delinquent in fulfilling its obligation to Stabilization Pool.

7. Agriculture ⇐2

In suit for penalties and injunction against violation of marketing order requiring processors of lemon products to place certain per cent of all lemons received for processing during marketing season in Stabilization Pool, trial court could not properly ignore, in assessing penalties, lemon concentrate which Board had accepted as delivered in partial fulfillment of defendant's obligation, even though defendant had not furnished a laboratory analysis showing citric acid content of the concentrate. West's Ann.Agric.Code, § 1300.19(b).

8. Injunction ⇐89

Agriculture Code subsection, making penalties and remedies prescribed cumulative with any and all other civil remedies provided or allowed by law with respect to violation, expressly conferred upon court power to enjoin further violations of act, but did not empower court to affirmatively enforce compliance with act. West's Ann. Agric.Code, § 1300.19(h, m).

9. Injunction ⇐4, 5

Propriety of affording equitable relief by injunction, either prohibitory or mandatory, rests in sound discretion of trial court, but such discretion is not arbitrary and must be exercised in accordance with fixed principles and precedents of equity jurisprudence.

10. Injunction ⇐1, 14

Power to issue injunction is extraordinary one to be exercised always with great caution and only in those cases where it appears that plaintiff will suffer irreparable injury if it is not issued.

Office of writ of injunction is a preventive one, and it is to be used to restrain a wrongdoer rather than to punish him after the wrong has been done or to compel him to undo it.

12. Injunction ⇐22

An injunction lies only to prevent injury and has no application to wrongs which have been completed.

13. Injunction ⇐5

A court of equity has power to issue a mandatory injunction where wrong is continuing in character and can only be remedied by requiring affirmative action on part of wrongdoer.

14. Injunction ⇐128

In suit for penalties and injunction against violation of marketing order requiring processors of lemon products to place certain per cent of all lemons received for processing during marketing season in Stabilization Pool, mandatory injunction, even if otherwise authorized, was improper in absence of evidence which would justify finding that deposit of defendant's delinquent tonnage into Stabilization Pool would have any effect to stabilize market price of lemons or lemon products for marketing year or that it would rectify any detriment caused by defendant's wrongdoing, or have any effect other than to further penalize defendant for his violation of the act. G. V. Weikert, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Walter S. Rountree, Asst. Atty. Gen., Alberta Gattone, John E. Fourt, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This action is one prosecuted by the Attorney General under the provisions of division 6, chapter 10, of the Agricultural Code, and particularly section 1300.19 thereof, and upon the complaint of the Director of Agriculture.

Pursuant to the relevant provisions of the Agricultural Code, the Director of Agriculture issued a marketing order effective October 1, 1954, requring processors of lemon products to place 75 per cent of all their lemons received for processing during the 1954–55 marketing season in the "Stabilization Pool" and to be there subject to the control of the Director of Agriculture, acting through and upon the advice of the Lemon Products Advisory Board, which was appointed by the Director pursuant to the authority granted him by section 1300.15 of the Agricultural Code.

From time to time during the marketing year 1954–55 the percentage of lemons which any processor was required to place in the Stabilization Pool was reduced, until in June of 1955 the percentage was reduced to 58 per cent. The appellant, Paramount Citrus Association, Inc., is a processor of lemons.

Under the provisions of the marketing orders and the rules and regulations for the administration thereof issued by the Director, each processor was obligated each week to report to the Advisory Board the amount of lemons received by it for processing during the preceding week, and the Stabilization Pool obligation incurred thereon. The processor might meet its obligations to the Stabilization Pool by storing the lemons and delivering warehouse receipts therefor issued in the name of the Board, or by delivering to the Board in lieu of lemons concentrated lemon juice or single-strength juice or warehouse receipts therefor, or by delivering to a processor for conversion into citric acid lemons of a tonnage equal to the unfulfilled obligation of the processor or their equivalent in concentrated or in single-strength juice, or by entering into an agreement with the Director for postponed compliance, and posting a bond in a penal sum in an amount equal to one hundred per cent of the processor's Stabilization Pool obligation computed at the rate of $60 per ton, or an equal amount in cash, as security for compliance at the deferred date which could not be later than August 31 of the marketing year (in this case August 31 of 1955). The rules and regulations provided that all products delivered to the Board in fulfillment of a processor's obligations to the Stabilization Pool should be certified by the United States Department of Agriculture as having been processed in California, and that all bulk containers should be sealed by that department.

The marketing order also provided that in each marketing season between the 1st day of October and a date to be fixed by the Board, which should not be earlier than March 1 nor later than May 30, lemons for use as free tonnage lemons (those not subject to Pool obligations) "may be sold from the Stabilization Pool" and that they might be sold after May 30 upon the affirmative vote of six members of the Board, and a finding by the Board that such action would not endanger the price stability of lemons or lemon products.

The appellant, in accordance with the terms of the marketing order and regulations, reported to the Board all lemons acquired by it for processing, but as to 34 separate weeks did not deposit any of said lemons with or hold them for the Stabilization Pool, nor did it execute any agreement for postponed compliance or post any bond or cash with the Board. It did, early in the marketing year, deliver to the Board 16 barrels of concentrate, equivalent to 64 fruit tons, for conversion into citric acid, and these were accepted by the Board but only 69 hundredths tons were credited to appellant's current Stabilization Pool obligation, the balance of the 64 tons being credited against appellant's obligation for the preceding season.

Shortly thereafter appellant delivered to the processing plant for conversion into citric acid for credit against its Pool obligation 16 additional barrels of concentrate, which was the equivalent of 65.4 tons of lemons, but this concentrate was rejected by the Board as not having been certified or sealed by the United States Department of Agriculture. At this time the appellant orally notified the representative of the Board that it had approximately 103 additional barrels for delivery. Of this 103 barrels appellant on June 27, 1955, delivered 81 barrels of lemon concentrate, which were certified and sealed by the United States Department of Agriculture and which were accepted by the Board, but were not credited against appellant's delinquency. The Board's manager testified that the 81 barrels of concentrate were the approximate equivalent of 250 tons of fruit, but neither plaintiff nor defendant offered any other evidence as to the citric acid content of this concentrate.[1]

The original complaint filed herein was in 15 counts. In the first count facts relevant to the promulgation of the marketing order and the rules and regulations, the failure of the appellant to comply with those rules and regulations, and the processing and sale by the appellant of the lemons which under the marketing order it was obligated to hold for the account of the Pool, were alleged, as well as other facts relevant to plaintiff's prayer for an injunction against further violations of the marketing order by appellant.

Each of the remaining 14 counts charged appellant with a violation of the marketing order in that it had, during a calendar week designated in that count, incurred an obligation to the Stabilization Pool of a certain number of tons, or citric acid pounds, of lemons, and in violation of the marketing order had failed to deliver any portion thereof to the Pool; and as to each violation sought a penalty of $500 or such lesser sum as the court should assess pursuant to section 1300.19(b) of the Agricultural Code.

By its supplemental complaint filed during the progress of the trial, the People alleged in separate counts 21 further violations of the same character covering 21 weeks during the period between January 1, 1955, and the week ending June 25, 1955. By its answer[2] appellant set forth two affirmative defenses, the first of which alleged in substance that 96 per cent of all the lemons produced in the United States are produced in California; that 99 per cent of all the lemons processed in the United States are processed in this state; that Sunkist Growers, Inc., and Exchange Lemon Products Co., which is alleged to be a subsidiary of Sunkist, control and handle 86 per cent of all lemons produced and processed in this state and have a virtual monopoly of the handling and marketing of lemon products in this state; that said Sunkist Growers, Inc., has since 1942 been subject to the terms of a decree of a United States court enjoining it from committing acts in violation of the federal antitrust laws including obstructing, restricting, or interfering with purchase by others of fruits; that under the provisions of the California Marketing Act of 1937 any marketing order must be assented to by processors who handle or process not less than 65 per cent of the volume of the agricultural commodity regulated thereby, and that by reason of the fact that Sunkist dominates and controls 86 per cent of the lemons the purposes of the act are defeated and nullified and the will of Sunkist imposed upon others engaged in the lemon industry in this state; that in order to operate its processing plant efficiently appellant must process at least ten thousand tons of lemons during each season; that it can acquire that quantity of lemons and has established an outlet for that quantity; that compliance with the decree of the Advisory Board that 75 per cent of all lemons acquired for processing during the present season be set aside and turned over to the Stabilization Pool would leave appellant able to meet less than 25 per cent of the requirements of its customers; that Sunkist has a surplus of lemons for processing but other processors in the state have more demand for their lemon products than they can supply, and that Sunkist refuses to sell

1. The Board apparently had no difficulty in ascertaining the fruit content of the 16 barrels which it refused, as it is shown on Exhibit 7 as being the equivalent of 64.71 fruit tons.

2. We do not here refer to the denials contained in the answer, inasmuch as many of them are on information and belief as to matters which were of public record and therefore not subject to such denials, and as all other material allegations of the complaint which were denied were admitted at the trial, with the exceptions which we will hereafter note.

any of said lemons to appellant but has turned its surplus into the Stabilization Pool for conversion into citric acid; that appellant attempted to buy ten thousand tons of lemons from the Stabilization Pool at the price fixed by the Advisory Board, but the Board refused to sell said lemons upon the ground that the sale thereof might unstabilize the market; and that the appellant had petitioned the Director of Agriculture to review the decision of the Advisory Board refusing to sell lemons to appellant from the Stabilization Pool.[3]

By its second affirmative defense appellant pleaded that the marketing order and the administrative rules and regulations issued thereunder "as the same have been and are now being interpreted and administered" are contrary to and in violation of the provisions of the Marketing Act and sections 11 and 13 of article I of the Constitution of the state and section 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

During the trial of the action appellant tendered, but the court refused to receive, an amendment to its answer by which it pleaded the same matters set forth in its second separate defense (denominated by the answer as Third Answer to the First Amended Complaint) and alleged as the facts which it contended constituted the alleged acts of the Advisory Board in interpreting and administering the marketing order, the following: (a) that the Board had interpreted the marketing order as controlling the handling and processing of lemons produced outside the state of California, and that by reason thereof appellant had been prevented from procuring lemons outside the state and processing them within the state and thus supplying the demands of its customers and enabling it to meet its Stabilization Pool obligations; (b) that the Lemon Products Advisory Board was illegally constituted in that the marketing order did not provide for a method of nominating and appointing members and alternate members of the Board representing any processors other than Exchange Lemon Products, but that the Director had nevertheless appointed persons purporting to represent other cooperative marketing organizations and processors which are not cooperative marketing organizations; (c) that by its interpretation and administration of the marketing order the Advisory Board has discriminated against the growers of inland California lemons and the processors thereof, including appellant, and in favor of the growers of coastal California lemons and the processors thereof.

The trial court held that none of the affirmative defenses either pleaded or tendered by appellant constituted defenses to the action, and although it received some evidence as to facts pleaded in these affirmative defenses refused to receive other evidence offered by the appellant in support of them, but required appellant's counsel to make offers of proof, to which offers the court sustained plaintiff's objections or its own objections.

By its findings of fact the court found that the appellant had willfully failed to comply with the marketing order and the rules and regulations promulgated by the Director thereunder in that it had willfully failed to hold for the benefit of the Stabilization Pool or to deliver to that Pool the percentages of lemons acquired by it for processing which were from time to time required by the marketing order and rules and regulations. It found that the total amount of lemons which appellant was required to deliver to the Stabilization Pool during the period from October 1, 1954, to June 15, 1955, amounted to 1,701.14 standard tons of lemons; that appellant had delivered and there had been accepted by the Board for compliance with appellant's Stabilization Pool obligation 81 barrels of lemon concentrate, but that the appellant had not furnished to the Advisory Board a laboratory analysis of the citric acid content thereof; and that the appellant was entitled to credit against its obligation of 1,701.14 tons of lemons, whenever it should furnish a laboratory analysis of the citric acid content of said 81 barrels of concentrate.

The court further found that the appellant would, unless enjoined, continue to violate the marketing order and the rules and regulations thereunder by processing all lemons acquired by it for that purpose and without withholding or delivering to the Stabilization Pool the percentage of said lemons required by the act. The court further found that the allegations of each of the counts of the amended complaint and the supplemental complaint which alleged weekly violations of the marketing order and sought penalties of $500 for each of such violations were true; and by its conclusions of law the court concluded that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the maximum penalty of $500 for each of the weekly violations alleged in the amended and supplemental complaints, or a total of $17,000; that the matters pleaded in the second affirmative defense set forth in appellant's answer were insufficient to constitute a defense to the action; and that the third affirmative defense set forth did not plead any facts but conclusions of law and constituted no defense to the action.

By its judgment the court gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant in the sum of $17,000 as civil penalties for appellant's failure on 34 separate weeks to deliver or hold its quota of lemons for the Stabilization Pool pursuant to the marketing order and the rules and regulations. It further ordered appellant to forthwith deliver to the Lemon Products Advisory Board for the Stabilization Pool 1,707.14 standard tons of lemons "or such lesser sum as shall be due after credit for 81 barrels of lemon concentrate" and such additional quantities of lemons or approved products as shall become due on each succeeding week under "the Marketing Order for Lemon Products, as Amended, effective November 3, 1954, or any validly adopted amendment, continuation, re-adoption or reissuance of said Order; Or: That defendants execute an agreement in writing for postponed compliance in accordance with Article III, Section E, subsection 7 of the Marketing Order for Lemon Products, as Amended, effective November 3, 1954, and deposit security therefor as provided in said Marketing Order and the Administrative Rules and Regulations issued thereunder." It further enjoined appellant from processing lemons unless it should have delivered to the Stabilization Pool lemons or approved lemon products equal to appellant's Stabilization Pool obligation "presently due" and which might thereafter become due under any marketing order.

Appellant by its opening brief makes three general assignments of error. In its presentation of these points, however, it has in most instances wholly failed to support the claims of error by citation of authority or by argument showing that the alleged errors of the trial court resulted in prejudice to appellant, and has left it to the court to search the record and the law in order to uphold its claims of error.

[1] Appellant's first point is "Appellant did not have a fair trial." It then asks us to read the entire record of oral proceedings (502 pages, which we have read with care) and charges the trial court with becoming an advocate for the plaintiff and with compelling appellant to present its defenses by offers of proof rather than through the examination of witnesses. A reading of the transcript of the oral proceedings does indicate that the trial court injected itself into the conduct of the trial to an extent much beyond that necessary to the proper conduct of the trial, and to an extent which certainly must have embarrassed and hindered counsel for the appellant in the presentation of its case. However, the court did permit offers of proof of the matters as to which it prevented appellant's counsel from examining its witnesses, and appellant has by its briefs utterly failed to show either by argument or authority that any of the matters which it offered to prove were relevant to any material issue presented by the pleadings, and we do not feel called upon to search the records and the authorities to establish error. That is the duty of counsel. See 3 Witkin, California Procedure (1954) sec. 150, pp. 2332–34, and cases there cited.

[2] The second point argued by appellant in its brief is done so under the heading "In regard to the pleadings." Under this heading appellant calls our attention to the matters alleged in the second and third affirmative defenses and to the fact that the court ruled that these did not allege facts sufficient to constitute a defense to the action, but again it utterly fails to furnish us with argument or authority to establish that the trial court erred in so ruling. Appellant also, under this heading, asserts that the court abused its discretion in refusing to allow it to file its proposed amendment to its answer, to which we have heretofore alluded, and in excluding all evidence in support thereof. Here again appellant fails to, by argument, point out wherein the facts alleged therein would constitute a defense to the action; and the only authority cited by it in support of its contention, State Board of Dry Cleaners v. Thrift-D-Lux Cleaners, 40 Cal.2d 436, 254 P.2d 29, in no wise supports its contention, as the Supreme Court in that case was dealing with the constitutionality of the Dry Cleaners Act of 1945, while in the case at bar appellant admits not only the constitutionality of the statutes here involved but that of the marketing order issued thereunder, and complains only of the manner in which the act is administered by the Board. Appellant fails to sustain by argument or authority its claim that any of the circumstances alleged in its proposed amendment, if established, would have in any wise constituted a defense to this action, or that they would have, if proved, established an invasion of its constitutional rights.

The third point argued in the briefs is argued under the heading "In regard to the opinion from the bench." Under this point counsel criticizes the court's oral announcement of its decision at the close of the case, seemingly contending that thereby the court demonstrated that it did not understand the facts or the law involved, and that therefore the court's findings of fact and conclusions of law cannot be sustained.

[3] While the opinion of the trial judge may be examined by an Appellate Court as an aid in interpreting the findings of fact and conclusions of law, an opinion rendered by the trial court cannot be used as a substitute for the findings of fact and conclusions of law made by the court, nor used to modify or defeat them. Strudthoff v. Yates, 28 Cal.2d 602, 170 P.2d 873. Furthermore, a reading of the remarks of the trial court which are adverted to by appellant as the opinion from the bench indicates that the learned trial judge had a very full and fine grasp of both the issues of fact and of law that had been presented to him, and we find nothing in the court's oral statement that is in material conflict with its findings of fact and conclusions of law.

[4] Appellant's next contention is that there is no evidence to support the finding of the trial court that appellant willfully and deliberately violated the marketing order. In support of this contention it contends that the evidence showed without conflict that it had attempted to buy from the Stabilization Pool ten thousand tons of lemons in order to meet the demands of its customers and to fulfill its obligations to the Pool, and that this demonstrated that it was not acting willfully or in bad faith in failing to comply with its obligations to the Pool.

The provisions of the marketing order did not make it obligatory upon the Advisory Board to sell lemons from the Pool to appellant or to any other processor; but, assuming that appellant in good faith construed the marketing order as making a sale obligatory, it was initially within the province of the Advisory Board, and finally within that of the Director, to construe it, and when appellant's request had been denied by both the Board and the Director it made no other effort to make up its delinquencies, although the evidence shows, and the court found, that it then had the ability so to do. The trial court was therefore fully justified in finding that appellant's violations of the marketing order were willful and deliberate.

[5] Appellant would have us review the order of the Director sustaining the Advisory Board's refusal to sell appellant lemons from the Pool. This we cannot do. The marketing order does not, as we have stated, make it obligatory upon the Board to make a sale from the Stabilization Pool, but permitted it so to do. The question as to whether the Board and the Director properly exercised their discretion is therefore one of fact and not of law. The evidence offered before the Director in the proceedings had to review the action of the Advisory Board refusing appellant's request to purchase lemons from the Pool is not before us, and we must presume that the Director's decision was supported by substantial evidence and was not arbitrary.

It is suggested by the Attorney General that the Director's decision cannot be collaterally attacked here, but can only be attacked by proceedings had pursuant to section 1094.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure; but inasmuch as no showing was made by the appellant which would have justified the trial court in holding that the decision of the Director was not supported by any substantial evidence and constituted an abuse of his discretion, we are not called upon to decide whether or not the Director's decision is subject to collateral attack.

[6, 7] A careful study of the record convinces us that the findings of the trial court as to the violations of the marketing order, and the judgment assessing penalties in the amount of $17,000, cannot be sustained. The evidence shows without conflict that on June 27, 1955, appellant delivered, and the Board accepted for compliance with appellant's Stabilization Pool obligation, 81 barrels of lemon concentrate; yet the Board, while accepting this 81 barrels as delivered in partial fulfillment of appellant's obligation, gave appellant no credit therefor and the trial court, in assessing penalties, allowed no credit therefor. This was done seemingly upon the basis that appellant had not furnished a laboratory analysis showing the citric acid content of the concentrate in the barrels.[4] In our opinion, however, the plaintiff was obligated, as a part of its case and in support of its claim for penalties, to prove the weeks as to which appellant was delinquent in fulfilling its obligation to the Pool. The evidence having shown without conflict that appellant had delivered and the Board had accepted 81 barrels of concentrate, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove to what extent if any appellant remained in default under its obligations to the Pool. The record is not devoid of evidence from which this fact could be ascertained, for the manager of the Advisory Board testified that the concentrate delivered would be the equivalent of approximately 250 tons of fruit. This concentrate having been accepted as partial compliance by appellant with its obligation, it follows that if it satisfied appellant's obligation for one or more full weeks, no penalty could be exacted for those weeks. An examination of Plaintiff's Exhibit 7 demonstrates that if this 250 tons of fruit had been applied to appellant's obligations during the first part of the marketing season, it would have satisfied its obligation for at least the first four weeks; or if credited upon appellant's obligation at the latter part of the period for which penalties were sought, it would have satisfied at least the last six weeks on account of which appellant has been assessed penalties.

It was the duty of the trial court to make some proper allocation of the 81 barrels of concentrate which admittedly were accepted by the Board in fulfillment of appellant's obligation, and it could not assess penalties for weeks as to which appellant's default

4. Our attention has not been called to any regulation requiring appellant to furnish a laboratory analysis, but if one does exist the failure to supply such analysis would only constitute grounds for refusing to accept the concentrate and would not justify accepting it but refusing to give credit for it.

[8–14] The final question presented by appellant concerns the mandatory injunction granted by the court. As we have heretofore pointed out the court not only enjoined appellant from further violations of the marketing order in question but ordered appellant to forthwith deliver the total amount of the delinquencies on account of which it had assessed penalties of $17,000 for the benefit of the Stabilization Pool, and enjoined appellant from engaging in business as a processor until it had complied with this mandatory order.

We are convinced that the mandatory provisions of the decree granted by the judgment cannot be sustained. The injunction speaks from the time of the entry of the judgment. Judgment was entered on August 11, 1955. At that time the marketing year was drawing to a close and there is no evidence whatsoever which would justify a finding or conclusion that the deposit of appellant's delinquent tonnage into the Stabilization Pool would have any effect to stabilize the market price of lemons or lemon products for that marketing year, or to rectify any detriment caused by appellant's wrongdoing, or have any other effect than to further penalize appellant for its violations of the act.

The act itself does not grant to the court, in an action such as this, any express power to compel compliance with the act, but does permit the court to, in addition to assessing penalities of not over $500 for each violation, enjoin further violations thereof. Agr.Code, sec. 1300.19(h). The Attorney General, however, asserts that under subdivision (m) of that section the court had the power to issue a mandatory injunction compelling appellant to fulfill the obligation to the Pool as to which it had defaulted.

So far as pertinent here, this section provides: "The penalities and remedies prescribed in this section with respect to any violation mentioned in this section * * * shall be cumulative with any and all other civil, criminal or administrative rights, remedies, forfeitures or penalties provided or allowed by law with respect to any such violation." [Emphasis added.] It is the Attorney General's contention that under this section the court could exercise its general equitable powers and grant injunctive relief beyond that specified in subdivision (h) of the section which limits relief of that kind to enjoining the defendant from further violations.

We do not so interpret subdivision (m), but believe that it was the intent of the Legislature by that subdivision to make it clear that those charged with the enforcement of the act were free to pursue any or all of the remedies provided by law for violation of the act, and it was not the intent to empower a court to affirmatively enforce compliance with the act by requiring the delivery of lemons or of lemon products into the Stabilization Pool. We think it is clear that when the Legislature by subdivision (h) of the section expressly conferred the power to enjoin against further violations of the act, it intended that that should be the limit of the court's power to issue an injunction. If it had been the legislative intent to empower a court to make an order which in effect compels specific performance of the obligations imposed by a marketing order, the Legislature would have, by apt language, expressly conferred that power. It may be futher said that the power of a court of equity to grant a mandatory injunction is not a remedy provided or allowed by law "with respect to * * *" the violations covered by section 1300.19.

Assuming, however, that subdivision (m) of the section does give the court the right, in actions of this kind, to exercise its general equitable power and to grant injunctive relief beyond that which it is expressly authorized to grant under subdivision (h) of the section, it is still apparent that the court improperly exercised this power.

While the propriety of affording equitable relief by an injunction either prohibitory or mandatory rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, this discretion is not arbitrary but must be exercised in accordance with the fixed principles and precedents of equity jurisprudence. Diederichsen v. Sutch, 47 Cal.App.2d 646, 118 P.2d 863. The power to issue an injunction is an extraordinary one to be exercised always with great caution and only in those cases where it appears that the plaintiff will suffer irreparable injury if it is not issued. The office of the writ is a preventive one and it is to be used to restrain a wrongdoer, "not to punish him after the wrong has been done or to compel him to undo it." An injunction lies only to prevent injury and has no application to wrongs which have been completed. Stewart v. Superior Court, 100 Cal. 543, 546–547, 35 P. 156, 563; Blake v. City of Eureka, 201 Cal. 643, 661, 258 P. 945; City and County of San Francisco v. Market St. Ry. Co., 95 Cal.App.2d 648, 656, 213 P.2d 780; Blumenthal v. Di Giorgio Fruit Corp., 30 Cal.App.2d 11, 18, 85 P.2d 580.

In the present case the evidence shows without substantial conflict that appellant had processed and marketed that portion of the lemons acquired by it which under the marketing order it was obligated to withhold from the market or deliver to the Board, and that any effect that its violations of the act might have upon the market price of lemons or upon the marketing by other processors of their lemon products had occurred prior to the issuance of the mandatory injunction with which we are concerned. It is thus apparent that the prohibitory injunction granted by the court, which enjoined appellant from further engaging in business as a processor without complying with the marketing order, fully served the preventive purposes for which an injunction is granted, and that the mandatory injunction served only to penalize the appellant for the wrong which it had committed, and to force it to undo those wrongs. Its further effect was to grant the plaintiff damages payable in kind without any proof as to the amount of damage actually sustained.

Undoubtedly a court of equity has power to issue a mandatory injunction where the wrong is continuing in character and can only be remedied by requiring affirmative action on the part of the wrongdoer—for example, nuisances, continuing trespasses, and encroachment upon easements. But here the wrongs which the court by its mandatory injunction sought to right were not continuing ones but completed ones; and the prohibitory provisions of the injunction granted, as we have heretofore said, adequately prohibited appellant from a repetition of those wrongs.

Paragraph II of the judgment made and entered by the trial court by which plaintiff is awarded judgment against appellant in the sum of $17,000 as civil penalties is reversed, with directions to the trial court to receive such further competent evidence as the parties may offer relative to the citric acid content of the 81 barrels of concentrate delivered to and accepted by the Lemon Products Advisory Board on June 27, 1955, and to make such allocation thereof to the delinquencies for which penalties are sought as the court shall find proper, and thereafter to enter judgment awarding plaintiff penalties, in such sum as the court may find just, against the appellant as to the delinquency for each week which is not fully satisfied by such allocation, not to exceed $500 for each violation.

Paragraph III of the judgment which reads as follows, is reversed:

"That the defendant, Paramount Citrus Association, Inc., a corporation, is hereby ordered and directed to forthwith deliver to the Lemon Products Advisory Board for the Stabilization Pool 1707.14 standard tons of lemons (36.5 citric acid pounds per ton) or such lesser sum as shall be due after credit for 81 barrels of lemon concentrate delivered on June 27, 1955 or the equivalent of said quantity of lemons in processed lemon products of a character and quality approved by the Lemon Products Advisory Board for Stabilization Pool compliance for the 1954–55 marketing season, and such additional quantities of lemons or approved products as shall be or become due on each succeeding week thereafter for so long as there shall remain any Stabilization Pool obligation of said defendant accruing under the Marketing Order for Lemon Products, as Amended, effective November 3, 1954, or any validly adopted amendment, continuation, re-adoption or reissuance of said Order;

"Or:

"That defendants execute an agreement in writing for postponed compliance in accordance with Article III, Section E, subsection 7 of the Marketing Order for Lemon Products, as Amended, effective November 3, 1954, and deposit security therefor as provided in said Marketing Order and the Administrative Rules and Regulations issued thereunder."

Paragraph IV of the judgment is modified to read as follows, and as so modified is affirmed:

"It is further ordered adjudged, and decreed that:

"The defendant, Paramount Citrus Association, Inc., a corporation, its officers, agents, employees, attorneys, representatives, and assigns are hereby permanently enjoined and restrained from processing, sorting, shipping, grading, extracting, grinding, crushing, or otherwise processing lemons for the purpose of preparing them for market in processed form and from marketing, contracting for the sale of, shipping, selling, transferring or transporting, or otherwise entering into the channels of trade any lemons for processing use or processed lemon products until and unless said defendants shall have delivered to the Stabilization Pool of the Lemon Products Advisory Board lemons or approved lemon products equal to their total Stabilization Pool obligation when and as such obligation shall become due under any Marketing Order presently in effect or any administrative orders, rules or regulations issued pursuant thereto, or, until and unless the defendants shall have executed an agreement in writing for postponed compliance in accordance with Article III, Section E, subsection 7 of the Marketing Order for Lemon Products as Amended, effective November 3, 1954, or any validly adopted amendment, continuation, readoption or reissuance thereof and shall have deposited security therefor as provided in said Marketing Order and the Administrative Rules and Regulations issued pursuant thereto."

v.

Charles Phillipe ORTIZ, Defendant and Respondent.

Cr. 5779.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Dec. 27, 1956.

Prosecution for possession of marijuana. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Herbert V. Walker, J., granted defendant's motion to set aside the information and the State appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that where marijuana in question was found during the course of making an inventory of the contents of an automobile in which defendant was found asleep, after defendant had been arrested for drunken driving, it was not discovered as a result of an unreasonable search, and therefore was not inadmissible in evidence even though officer did not have a search warrant.

Order setting aside information reversed.

1. Arrest ⇐71

Criminal Law ⇐395

In prosecution for possession of marijuana, where the marijuana in question was found during the course of making an inventory of the contents of an automobile in which defendant was found asleep, after defendant had been arrested for drunken driving, it was not discovered as a result of an unreasonable search, and therefore was not inadmissible in evidence even though officer did not have a search warrant. 2. Arrest ⇐71

Where, in prosecution for possession of marijuana, defendant's automobile was legally in arresting officer's possession as an incident of its impounding after defendant's arrest for drunken driving, its contents were legally in the officer's possession and marijuana found in such automobile was legally obtained by the officer even though officer did not have a search warrant. 3. Arrest ⇐71

Where an officer's search without a warrant, of automobile in which defendant was found prior to his arrest for drunken driving, was reasonable, arresting officer was not required to ignore contraband he discovered in the automobile simply because it was disconnected with the initial purpose of the search, to inventory the contents of the automobile prior to its impounding, and the contraband thus discovered was not thereby rendered inadmissible in evidence. FOX, Justice.

Defendant was charged with possession of marijuana. Health & Safety Code, sec. 11500. His motion to set aside the information, Pen.Code, sec. 995, was granted. The People appeal.

Defendant was arrested at approximately 5:00 o'clock in the morning on July 10, 1956, in the 900 block on Pier Avenue, Hermosa Beach. Just prior to the arrest Police Officer Hopkins observed a car parked some eight feet from the curb. Upon investigation, the officer discovered defendant lying on the front seat asleep with his head at the passenger side; his belt was loose, and "his trousers were down near his hips." The officer reached in the window, shook the defendant, and "finally got him awake." His breath was alcoholic and he "staggered badly, as he walked to the rear of his car." He told the officer he had had a quart of beer and a pint of whiskey the previous evening. The officer concluded he was intoxicated and arrested him for "drunk auto." City Ordinance No. 508. Officer Hopkins turned defendant over to the watch sergeant for incarceration.

Hopkins immediately began making an inventory of the items of personal property in the car preliminary to impounding it. In the course of his search, Hopkins found a small, brown paper bag containing marijuana in the glove compartment. The sergeant having departed with defendant for the jail, Officer Hopkins called them back. Upon being asked where the bag came from, defendant stated he did not know anything about it and refused to answer any more questions. Defendant does not appear to have made any statement then nor previously that the car was not his.

The officer also found in the glove compartment "two wallets containing numerous check stubs with defendant's name." The registration certificate for the car was in the glove compartment too.

It was the officer's custom always to make inventory of the contents of a car that he impounded. Such practice was deemed necessary to defeat dishonest claims by the owner of theft of the car's contents and to protect the temporary storage bailee against false charges.

At about noon on the day of defendant's arrest he was transported from the Hermosa Beach jail to the sheriff's station at Lenox by Deputy Sheriff Hatfield. In the course of that trip the deputy asked defendant how long he had been "fooling round with the weed," to which he replied "about three months." The deputy also asked the defendant "where he had obtained the marijuana that was found in his car." Defendant stated that "he had bought the marijuana on Main Street from an unknown, male Negro approximately a week prior to his arrest." He further stated "he had paid $5.00 for a half can" and that "the contents of the brown paper bag found in the glove compartment was the remainder of that half a can. * * *"

Defendant did not take the witness stand.

Defendant does not question the validity of his arrest. His thesis is that the search was unreasonable and therefore illegal. Hence the contraband that was found was inadmissible in evidence.

From defendant's position in the car, his physical condition, the manner in which the car was parked, and the earliness of the morning hour, the officer could reasonably conclude that defendant was "in control of" the vehicle,[1] and not just a passenger, at the time of the arrest. Hence the officer was entitled to impound the car, Veh.Code, secs. 585(b) (5) and 585.2; Pen.Code, sec. 849, and thus take possession of it.

[1] In the circumstances of this case it was not unreasonable for the police officer to make an inventory of the contents of the automobile prior to impounding it. Such inventory was a protection to the owner of the vehicle, the garage owner, and the officer. Since the marijuana was found during the course of making the inventory, it was not discovered as a result of an unreasonable search and therefore it was not inadmissible in evidence.

[2] This result may be reached by another approach. Defendant's car was legally in Officer Hopkins' possession as an incident of its impounding. Its contents also were legally in his possession. Therefore possession of the marijuana was legally obtained by the officer. Where an automobile is lawfully in the custody of a peace officer, such contraband articles as are contained in it are legally in the possession of such officer, People v. Baker, 135 Cal. App.2d 1, 5, 286 P.2d 510 and People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, has no application.

[3] Defendant also argues that the marijuana was illegally seized and therefore inadmissible in evidence because it "was not related to the crime for which the defendant had been placed in custody. * * *" An effective answer to this contention is found in Harris v. United States, 331 U.S. 145, 67 S.Ct. 1098, 91 L.Ed. 1399. In that case federal officers, armed with an arrest warrant, arrested the defendant for one crime and while searching his apartment

1. Defendant's statement to Deputy Sheriff Hatfield that he had purchased the contraband a week prior to his arrest and that the contents of the brown paper bag in the glove compartment were the remainder of that purchase justifies an inference that the car belonged to him, or, at least, that he was "in control of" it. This, plus Officer Hopkins' testimony, effectively disposes of defendant's contention that "There is no testimony or any evidence before this court that the defendant was in control of or driving the motor vehicle in which he was reclining prior to his arrest." Incidentally, it does not appear that defendant made any suggestion to Officer Hatfield that the car was not his. Also, although this was a matter within his own knowledge and power to dispute, defendant failed to testify. For the significance of such failure, see People v. Steccone, 36 Cal.2d 234, 239, 223 P.2d 17. Actually, the case appears to have been tried on the assumption that the car belonged to the defendant.

found evidence which implicated him in a wholly different and distinct offense. Upon conviction of the second charge, defendant appealed on the ground, among others, that the evidence thus procured was improperly admitted as it was not within the purview of the charge for which he was arrested. In rejecting defendant's contention, the court stated, 331 U.S. at pages 154–155, 67 S.Ct. at page 1103: "Here during the course of a valid search the agents came upon property of the United States in the illegal custody of the petitioner. * * * A crime was thus being committed in the very presence of the agents conducting the search. Nothing in the decisions of this Court gives support to the suggestion that under such circumstances the law-enforcement officials must impotently stand aside and refrain from seizing such contraband material. If entry upon the premises be authorized and the search which follows be valid, there is nothing in the Fourth Amendment which inhibits the seizure by law-enforcement agents of government property the possession of which is a crime, even though the officers are not aware that such property is on the premises when the search is initiated."

Similar views were recently expressed by our Supreme Court in People v. Roberts, 47 Cal.2d 374, 303 P.2d 721. It is there pointed out that officers in the course of conducting a reasonable search do not have to blind themselves to what is in plain sight simply because it is disconnected with the purpose for which they entered. In support of this principle the court cited Love v. United States, 4 Cir., 170 F.2d 32, where officers entered defendant's home legally for the purpose of searching for another man but in the course of their search they discovered a still in operation, and Paper v. United States, 4 Cir., 53 F.2d 184, where officers entered lawfully for the purpose of finding and arresting defendant on one charge but in searching for defendant they found an illegal supply of liquor, constituting another offense in the basement. The court quoted with approval the following from the Paper decision, 53 F.2d at pages 184–185: "Where the entry and search are rightful and there is present no element of trespass or fraudulent invasion of the rights of the citizen, there is no reason for excluding evidence of crime discovered in the course of the search. If the officers * * * had discovered in the cellar a counterfeiting plant in operation, would it have been their duty to ignore it? If they had come upon the body of a murdered man, would their testimony as to finding the body be excluded?"

So, here, since the search was reasonable, officer Hopkins was not required to close his eyes to the contraband he discovered simply because it was disconnected with the initial purpose of the search, People v. Roberts, supra, and the contraband thus discovered was not thereby rendered inadmissible in evidence. Harris v. United States, supra.

The order setting aside the information is reversed.

v.

Raymond A. PINELLI and Louis Sanchez, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 17038.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 2, 1957.

Landlord's action against tenants for breach of alleged oral agreement to execute a five-year written lease, or for breach of such lease. From a judgment for defendants rendered by the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Milton D. Sapiro, J., the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Agee, J. pro tem., held that evidence supported trial court's finding that no such new lease was executed and that no terms of any such proposed lease were ever agreed upon by parties.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Landlord and Tenant ⇐25(5)

Delivery of signed lease to tenant was essential in order to make lease operative.

2. Landlord and Tenant ⇐22(4)

In landlord's action against tenants for breach of alleged oral agreement to execute a five-year written lease, or for breach of such lease, evidence supported trial court's finding that no such new lease was executed and that no terms of any such proposed lease were ever agreed upon by parties.

3. Landlord and Tenant ⇐115(3)

Where original lease provided that any holding over with consent of landlord would be construed as a tenancy from month to month, tenants could not be liable under alleged five year extension of such lease, which they did not sign, on any theory that it was merely an extension of original lease at an increased rental and not a renewal thereof. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 4; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1973, subd. 4.

4. Landlord and Tenant ⇐116(5)

Tenants from month to month, in order to terminate their tenancy at end of a 30-day period, were only required to give the statutory notice of termination and not to have the consent of the landlords to surrender premises. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1946.

5. Election of Remedies ⇐14

Plaintiff may not change his election of remedies by means of a supplemental complaint.

James C. Purcell, San Francisco, for appellant.

Robert K. Barber, San Francisco, for respondents.

AGEE, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff brought this action for damages for breach of an alleged oral agreement by defendants to execute a five-year written lease. The trial court found upon conflicting evidence that defendants did not make any such agreement. Plaintiff makes no contention that this finding is not supported by substantial evidence. Defendants also raise the Statute of Frauds. Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 4; Code Civ.Proc., § 1973, subd. 4. The trial court held that this was likewise a good defense.

Judgment was rendered for plaintiff in the sum of $185, that being the amount of rent owing by defendants for the last month of their month-to-month tenancy of the premises in question. Plaintiff has appealed from this judgment.

Plaintiff and his brother held the master lease on premises located at 714 and 710 Folsom Street, in the City and County of San Francisco. This lease expired by its terms on January 14, 1952. On May 17, 1948, they executed, as sublessors, a written sublease of 714 Folsom Street. This sublease expired by its terms on December 31, 1951, and provided for a rental of $125 per month. The sublessees operated a tavern on the premises. In November, 1950, they sold out to defendants, Raymond A. Pinelli and Louis Sanchez, and assigned the sublease to them. Plaintiff is an attorney at law and he handled all of the details of the sale and acted as escrow holder. He retained the sublease in his files and defendants did not have a copy.

In October, 1951, plaintiff obtained a new master lease of 714 and 710 for the term commencing January 15, 1952, and ending January 14, 1957, at a rental of $95 per month. Prior to this, there had been a general discussion between plaintiff and defendants about a new sublease of 714 for the period commencing January 1, 1952. Plaintiff told them that as soon as he had contacted the owners about a new master lease he would talk to them further. He did tell them, however, that there would be a "slight increase" in their rent. In December, 1951, plaintiff told defendant Pinelli that the defendants could have a new lease and that the rent would be increased to $200 per month. Pinelli told plaintiff that they would not pay that much rent. Plaintiff called back later and told Pinelli that they could have the place for $185 per month. Pinelli agreed to this and asked plaintiff to prepare a new lease. Plaintiff suggested that the new lease contain all of the other terms of the existing lease. Pinelli told plaintiff that he had never read or seen that lease and would not agree to a new lease until he had seen its proposed terms. Pinelli asked plaintiff to draft a new lease and bring it to the tavern so that all of the parties could look it over at the same time. Plaintiff never presented a new lease to defendants. He testified that on January 2, 1952, he prepared and signed an "Extension of Lease" but he admitted that he did not at any time show this to defendants and they did not sign it. This extension instrument adopted the old lease by reference except as to the new period and the increased rental. Defendants paid the increased rental, commencing January 1, 1952. Defendant Sanchez called at plaintiff's office on several occasions and asked to see the proposed lease but he was always told that it had been misplaced. As late as April, 1953, defendant Sanchez called at plaintiff's office, paid the rent, and asked to see the proposed new lease and again plaintiff said he could not find it but that defendants were not to worry about it. About this time defendants became discouraged by their failure to obtain a new lease, the roof was leaking badly, and cars in the parking lot adjacent to the tavern were bumping into the side of the building and knocking liquor bottles off the shelves. In May, 1953, defendants gave plaintiff 30 days' written notice of termination of tenancy, sold their liquor license, and closed up.

Plaintiff then filed this action for damages in the sum of $7,955, that amount representing the total rent for the balance of the five-year period at $185 per month.

[1, 2] Plaintiff's first contention is that it was not necessary, in order to effectuate the new lease, that defendants, as lessees, sign the "Extension of Lease" which plaintiff prepared and which he testified was signed by him on January 2, 1952. In all of the cases [1] relied upon in support of this contention, there was an agreement reached by the lessor and the lessee as to the terms of the lease and the lessee entered into possession under the lease agreed upon. Here, the parties did not reach an agreement as to the proposed new lease and their entry into possession was under the old lease of May 17, 1948. In each of the cases referred to by plaintiff, there was a delivery to the lessee of the lease agreed upon, signed by the lessor. In the instant case there may have been a signing by the lessor but there was no delivery to the lessee. "To become operative, a lease must not only be signed but delivered." (15 Cal.Jur. p. 617, citing authorities.) Plaintiff kept the "Extension of Lease" in his file and defendants never even saw it. The trial court found as follows: "Prior to the termination of said lease, plaintiff and the defendant Louis Sanchez engaged in certain oral negotiations relative to the execution of a new written lease of the premises from plaintiff to defendants but no such new lease was executed nor were the terms there-ever agreed upon by the parties." This finding is supported by substantial evidence.

[3] The second contention of plaintiff is that it was not necessary that defendants sign the instrument dated January 2, 1952, in order to make it effective, because such instrument was merely an extension of the term of the original lease at an increased rental and not a renewal thereof. The cases relied upon by plaintiff involve leases which contain an express provision for such an extension. See 172 A.L.R. 1219, et seq., for collection.

The plaintiff argues from these cases that a mere holding over by the lessee constitutes an election to take the additional or extended term and obviates the necessity of executing a new lease. The fallacy of this argument is that the original lease in the instant case contains no such provision for an extension. Instead, it provides as follows: "Twentieth: Any holding over after the expiration of said term, with the consent of the lessor, shall be construed to be a tenancy from month to month, at a rental of One Hundred and Twenty Five ($125.00) Dollars * * * and shall otherwise be on the terms and conditions herein specified, so far as applicable."

Plaintiff's third contention is that defendants are estopped to raise the Statute of Frauds as a defense. His argument is that he was under no obligation to obtain a new master lease and that he obtained the new master lease "solely in reliance upon the promise of the defendants to execute the instrument in question [the so-called extension of lease]." This argument fails for the obvious reason that the trial court found that the defendants had not made any such promise. The defendants so testified and plaintiff does not claim that this finding is not supported by substantial evidence.

[4] Plaintiff's fourth contention is that there has been no surrender of the premises. He states that a surrender of leased premises before the expiration of the term can be done only by expressed consent of the parties in writing or the operation of law when they do something that implies that both have consented. This argument is based upon the assumption that there was a valid lease for a specified term in existence after the expiration of the original term. Defendants correctly point out that, after December 31, 1951, their tenancy was from month to month and that all that was necessary, in order to terminate such tenancy, was to comply with section 1946 of the Civil Code. Here, the notice required by this section was admittedly given. This is all that defendants were required to do to terminate their tenancy at the end of the 30-day period. Dorn v. Oppenheim, 45 Cal.App. 312, 186 P. 462.

[5] Lastly, plaintiff complains of the denial of his motion to file a supplemental complaint. This proposed pleading requested a money judgment for rent at the rate of $185 per month from January 1, 1953, to the entry of judgment. It is based upon the theory that a new lease was in effect between the parties. This is a different theory than that alleged in the original complaint, which was for damages for breach of an oral agreement to execute a lease. Both theories, however, are dependent upon the existence of an agreement to execute a lease and, in view of the finding that there was no such agreement, any judgment rendered on the proposed supplemental complaint would of necessity have been the same as the judgment rendered on the original complaint. This being so, plaintiff could not have been prejudiced by the denial of his motion. It should also be noted that plaintiff was attempting to change his election of remedies by means of a "supplemental complaint," which he cannot do. Bradbury v. Higginson, 162 Cal. 602, 123 P. 797.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Glen Varick FOSTER, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 22018.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 31, 1956.

Proceeding by wife against husband for order increasing allowance for separate support and maintenance, and new attorney's fees. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Walter H. Odermar, J., ordered husband to pay $475 a month alimony for 13 months, and additional attorney's fee of $1,000, and husband appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that where there was evidence that wife was being attended by psychiatrist and another doctor, but since prior order husband's obligations had decreased $250 per month by reason of termination of alimony to prior wife, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by modifying previous order for support and maintenance and attorney's fees.

Order affirmed.

1. Husband and Wife ⇐295, 299(3)

In proceeding by wife against husband for increase in separate support and maintenance allowance and new attorney's fees, where there was evidence that wife was being attended by a psychiatrist and another doctor, but since prior order husband's obligations had decreased $250 per month by reason of termination of alimony to previous wife, and that assets of husband were $400,000, it was within discretion of the trial court to raise allowance for support and maintenance from $400 to $475 per month and to increase attorney's fees.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐984(1)

Order granting increase in allowance for separate support and maintenance should not be disturbed on appeal, in absence of clear abuse of discretion.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐1047(5)

In proceeding by wife against husband for increase in separate support and maintenance allowance and for additional attorney's fees, where attorney testified that reasonable value of services rendered was $1,500, but did not have record with him, failure to order attorney to bring such books and records to court was not prejudicial error.

4. Attorney and Client ⇐62

There is no rule which expressly limits a wife, seeking a divorce, to representation by single attorney.

5. Husband and Wife ⇐299(3)

Stipulation at preliminary hearing to fix balance of attorney's fees at the time of trial did not preclude trial court from exercising its discretion and making modification order for attorney's fees, in proceeding by wife against husband for increase of separate support and maintenance allowance and for additional attorney's fees.

Price, Postel & Parma, Santa Barbara, Frederick W. Mahl, Jr., Los Angeles, for appellant.

Walter H. Young, Los Angeles, for respondent.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order wherein the court ordered the appellant to pay to the respondent's new counsel, on account of attorney's fees, the sum of $1,000, and further, to pay to the respondent, in addition to the sum of $400 per month previously ordered, the sum of $75 per month.

The facts of the case, as disclosed by the files and records, are substantially as follows: The parties hereto were each previously married to and divorced from another spouse at least once. The respondent, hereinafter referred to as the wife, had, prior to her marriage to the appellant, hereinafter referred to as the husband, lived in California sometimes with and sometimes separated from her then husband. The husband herein was, at the time of his marriage to the wife herein, divorced from another wife and was paying her alimony in the sum of $250 per month plus $300 per month for the support and maintenance of two minor children of that marriage. The parties here were married in Las Vegas, Nevada, on or about June 20, 1953, and separated about April 8, 1955. Apparently the marriage took place on the day of the divorce of the wife herein from a previous husband.

The wife brought this action wherein she alleged extreme cruelty and seeks a judgment for separate support and maintenance. The husband's answer denies the existence of the marriage relationship and the alleged acts of extreme cruelty. He also filed a cross-complaint for annulment, and in the alternative, for a divorce.

An order to show cause with reference to alimony, attorney's fees and costs was secured by the wife and returned and heard before Judge Mosk in Department B, Santa Monica, on June 3, 1955. After a full and complete hearing on that date the judge ordered the husband to pay to the wife the sum of $400 a month for support and maintenance, plus the sum of $250 on account of costs and the sum of $1,500 on account of the wife's attorney's fees, and pursuant to stipulation between counsel for the parties, the balance of attorney's fees, if any, was to be set at the time of trial. The amounts so ordered were all paid by the husband.

Thereafter the wife secured an order to show cause with reference to a modification of the order of June 3, 1955, based upon her affidavit that she required over $800 per month for her support and maintenance, additional fees for her new attorney, and additional sums for costs. This order with reference to a modification of the original order was heard on April 13, 1956, in the superior court, Santa Monica, Department C, before Judge Odemar, and at the conclusion of the hearing the judge ordered that the husband pay additional attorney's fees, on account, in the sum of $1,000, and the sum of $475 for a thirteen month period for the wife's support and maintenance. This appeal is from the order of April 13, 1956.

The record seems to indicate that the complaint for separate support and maintenance was filed on the 25th day of May, 1955. The first order to show cause was heard and disposed of on June 3, 1955. Sixty-four days elapsed from the date of the filing of the original complaint to the date of the husband's first appearance by demurrer. The hearing on the demurrer was continued on the day it was set to be heard. A first amended complaint was filed by the wife on August 26, 1955. Sixty-eight days later an answer and cross-complaint was filed by the husband. At the date of the hearing of the petition to modify the previous order of June 3, 1955, no answer to the cross-complaint had been filed, although some 162 days had passed. An answer to the cross-complaint was ultimately filed on June 26, 1956. The case is now at issue and set for pre-trial hearing on April 18, 1957.

The husband contends that the wife failed to sustain the burden of showing a change of circumstances since the making of the original order. The evidence did show, however, that she was now apparently being attended by a psychiatrist and another doctor. She was apparently being attended by the psychiatrist for what she said was being "emotionally upset", and by the second doctor for what she stated the doctor said was a "near ulcer". She further testified that she now drove her automobile 25,000 miles per year, or over 2,000 miles per month. Further, in an affidavit, she set forth that she once was employed by I. Magnin for two or three months in 1950 for $165 per month, that she hasn't worked since, and does not expect to work in the future. She also stated that she required $30 per month for beauty treatments and care.

At the original hearing the wife stated that she had lived in California up to a period of approximately six weeks before securing her divorce from her then husband. She was extremely vague and uncertain as to just how long she had been in Las Vegas, Nevada, immediately prior to her marriage on June 20, 1953, but that she was certain that she had been there at least six weeks. She did not recall whether she had closed her bank account in California when she left the state, or whether she had registered to vote in Nevada, and she believed, however she was not sure, that she took her clothing to Nevada. Furthermore, it was shown that since the prior order the husband's obligations were decreased $250 per month by reason of the termination of alimony to a previous wife in the sum of $350 per month, but increasing his child support charge by $100 per month. The assets of the husband were disclosed to be about $400,000, consisting of $180,000 in securities, and $220,000 in three trusts of which he is the beneficiary.

[1, 2] We are of the opinion that under the circumstances it was within the discretion of the trial court to raise the allowance for the support and maintenance of the wife from $400 to $475 per month. Under the facts and circumstances of this case, the court apparently found, among other things, that the wife was in need of some additional psychiatric or other treatment, and well he might have so found. It is true that any other judge might very well have rejected the petition of the wife for any increase on the evidence which was presented. There is, however, in our opinion, an insufficient showing to demonstrate a clear abuse of discretion, and unless there is such a clear abuse, the order should not be disturbed on appeal. Sweeley v. Sweeley, 28 Cal.2d 389, 170 P.2d 469. The court did not exceed the bounds of reason.

[3] Next considering the matter of the allowance for additional attorney's fees, Sidney Traxler, the first attorney for the wife, appeared as a witness in the hearing to modify the original order. He testified that the reasonable value of the services rendered to the wife by him was the sum of $1,500. He stated that he had expended seventy hours on the case and that his rate was $30 per hour. The witness said that he did not have the record of the seventy hours work with him. Counsel for the husband requested of the judge that he make an order that Traxler bring his office records concerning the services he rendered to the wife to the court, to the end that he could be cross-examined thereon. The judge apparently did not state that he would not make such an order as requested, but the fact remains that he did not so order Traxler to bring to the court his books and records concerning the time expended on the case. Appellant contends that it was prejudicial error not to grant his request. We are of the opinion that there is no merit to the contention. In the case of Rose v. Rose, 109 Cal. 544, at page 546, 42 P. 452, the court said, in reference to an order for additional attorney's fees: "As the value of the services and the pecuniary condition of the defendant are elements entering into the determination by the court of the amount which it will direct to be paid, the court would naturally require some evidence upon these points; and unless it is made to appear that the order was made without any evidence, or without any opportunity on the part of the husband to be heard, and that it is of such a character as on its face to be inordinate in amount, it must be assumed that the discretion of the court has been properly exercised. The mere absence from the record of the evidence upon which the order was based does not authorize its reversal. The appellant must show that error has been committed. In taking the evidence for the purpose of fixing the amount of the allowance, the court is not trying an issue in the case, but is seeking for information as the basis of its order, and is not bound by the technical rules of evidence applicable to controversies between contesting litigants." And 109 Cal. at pages 545–546, 42 P. at page 452, the court said: "The court cannot know at the commencement of the action the amount of labor that will be required, or the value of the services to be performed, in the prosecution or defense of the action on behalf of the wife, and there is no rule of procedure which requires it to fix the entire amount of counsel fees at the beginning of the action, or to prevent it from making allowances from time to time as the exigencies of the case shall seem to demand."

[4] There is, of course, no rule which expressly limits a wife to representation by a single attorney, Armstrong v. Armstrong, 81 Cal.App.2d 322, 183 P.2d 905. Furthermore, if counsel had been so minded, he could during the recess, have subpoenaed whatever records he desired.

[5] We are further of the opinion that there is no merit to the contention of the husband to the effect that the stipulation at the hearing in 1955 to fix the balance of the attorney's fees at the time of trial precluded the court from making the modification order as was done here. There was a change of circumstances and the court excercised its discretion.

This case fairly well points up the difficulties which can, and do, arise when matters are unduly delayed. Perhaps there is something which is not apparent on the face of the record in this case, but it would seem that it is an ordinary separate support and maintenance, annulment or divorce case and probably could have been heard long ago if there had been just a little diligence exercised.

The order is affirmed.

Robert F. COLLINS et al., Defendant and Respondent.*

Civ. 21779.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 20, 1956.

Hearing Granted Feb. 13, 1957.

Divorced wife's action against divorced husband to set aside property settlement agreement on ground that it was allegedly procured by undue influence and breach of fiduciary duty to disclose nature and extent of community property. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Maurice C. Sparling, J., rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that questions of whether divorced husband was guilty of breach of fiduciary duty and whether divorced wife entered into agreement voluntarily and solely in exercise of her own judgment could not be determined in entire disregard of question of fairness of agreement, and trial court's action in so doing was prejudicially erroneous.

Judgment reversed.

Vaughan & Brandlin, Vincent E. Lumbleau, Robert P. Schifferman, Los Angeles, for appellant.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from an adverse judgment in an action to set aside a property settlement agreement. The gravamen of the action is that plaintiff's consent to the agreement was procured by the exercise of undue influence by the defendant and breach of fiduciary duty to disclose to plaintiff the amount, character and value of the community property. The grounds of the appeal are that the findings are not supported by the evidence, they do not support the conclusions of law and that the court failed to make findings upon material issues.

The complaint contains several causes of action for rescission, declaration of a constructive trust, declaratory relief and to quiet title. They are but variations of the claim of plaintiff that she was overreached in entering into the property settlement agreement and that defendant received in the settlement property of many times the value of what she received.

The parties, residents of California, intermarried March 23, 1940; they have three sons born, respectively, in 1941, 1945 and 1947 and a daughter born in 1944. At the time the agreement was entered into the parties were separated. Plaintiff had gone to Las Vegas for the purpose of obtaining a divorce. She employed the firm of Ralli, Rudiak and Horsey. Mr. D. Francis Horsey wrote defendant a letter date July 10, 1953, advising him that plaintiff intended to sue for divorce upon the ground of mental cruelty and that the evidence would not involve anything that was derogatory or detrimental to defendant. Mr. Horsey was under the impression that a property settlement agreement had been executed and requested a copy of it for presentation to the court at the time of trial. Also enclosed was a power of attorney which defendant executed and which authorized a Nevada attorney to appear in the action for him. Defendant mailed to plaintiff a draft of an agreement. It provided that the home of the parties in Sherman Oaks, Los Angeles County, would remain in the names of the parties as tenants in common until the youngest child became of age, when it would be conveyed to the children. All other property was to be owned by defendant as his separate property. Plaintiff would have the right to live in the home as long as she kept the children with her. She would have physical custody of the children during the school terms and defendant reasonable rights of visitation and also custody during holidays and vacation periods. Defendant was to pay plaintiff $3,000 for her support and $100 per month for the support of each child, and pay an indebtedness of some $13,000 on the home property, keep up fire and liability insurance and pay all taxes. Plaintiff waived the right to receive support from defendant in addition to the $3,000 and there were the usual releases of rights to after-acquired property, to administer upon the estate of the other and to inherit property. Plaintiff waived the right to have the property of the parties listed in the agreement or disclosed to her by defendant. Shortly after the agreement was mailed to plaintiff, Mr. Rudiak wrote to defendant stating that plaintiff had consulted his firm relative to the proposed agreement. He requested for Mrs. Collins title to the home, a written disclosure of the community property, an appraisal of the property and an equitable division of it and a statement of defendant's income. Other requests were made.[1] Defendant did not answer the

1. "3. Mrs. Collins feels furthermore that the dwelling house at 4006 Longridge Avenue, Sherman Oaks, California, should be deeded to her outright, and that an equitable division should be made as to her community interest in the other real estate which you own together. In this connection, an appraisal of the value of her interest in such realty could be made by three disinterested persons and you could either purchase her interest therein upon a monthly basis or agree to pay her the amount of her present interest at the time the property is sold. Either arrangement would be satisfactory. In fairness to Mrs. Collins, however, since she has very little knowledge of your business affairs, we believe that you should make a written disclosure to her of all of your mutual community property interests before a final agreement relative to the disposition of such interests is made.

"4. Mrs. Collins advises that your original agreement was to pay her the sum of $600.00 per month for the support and maintenance of the children. Support money in that amount would en-letter. Mr. Rudiak also called defendant by telephone and was referred to defendant's attorney but did not contact the attorney. At defendant's telephone request plaintiff returned to California. Defendant had another agreement prepared which the parties executed August 13, 1953, and pursuant thereto plaintiff executed and acknowledged on that date conveyances to defendant of her interest in 20 parcels of real property, title to which had stood in joint tenancy. On September 4th she executed assignments of 3 trust deeds which stood in the name of defendant. The real property was in joint tenancy. The parties treated it as community property and the court so considered it. It is apparent that the vesting in joint tenancy was merely for the purpose of convenience. The agreement that was executed recited that the home stood in joint tenancy and would be transferred to plaintiff as her separate property. This was done. The provision that plaintiff would receive $3,000 in lieu of support, as stated in the first draft, was omitted from the second. Plaintiff waived the right to support. Otherwise, the two agreements were substantially the same.

Immediately after August 13th plaintiff returned to Nevada and exhibited the executed agreement to her attorneys. She filed an action for divorce and on August 27th obtained a decree of divorce which approved the property settlement. She promptly married Major Blankenship. Within a few days defendant was married to his secretary. In September 1954 plaintiff divorced Major Blankenship. She gave notice of rescission of the agreement and promptly instituted this action.

Plaintiff alleged that defendant refused to disclose, and that she did not know, the nature, extent or value of the property which she and defendant owned; she did not receive advice from her attorney respecting the settlement and did not read the property settlement agreement or the deeds or assignments which she signed. Her testimony was specific that she did not know what was in the agreement or the purport of the deeds and assignments which she executed and did not know what properties were owned or their value.

The primary factual questions were: 1, what community property was owned by the parties; 2, the value of the property; 3, did plaintiff know what property was owned, and 4, did she know its value. It was necessary that these questions be answered in order that the court would be prepared to try the further questions whether plaintiff entered into the settlement voluntarily, in the exercise of her own free judgment, or as a result of undue influence of the defendant.

able Mrs. Collins to assume payment of the encumbrance and maintenance costs upon the dwelling house at 4006 Longridge Avenue, which we suggest be deeded to her, thereby relieving you of that burden.

"5. By way of security, in the event of your demise, Mrs. Collins also feels that you should agree that you will immediately prepare and keep in force a valid Will whereby the children will be left at least two-thirds of your estate. In the same connection Mrs. Collins is willing to relinquish her community property rights in the policies of life insurance upon your life (provided you will agree to at all times keep said policies in force, unimpaired, and to irrevocably designate the children as the beneficiaries of such policies. Since the amount of your insurance coverage is also not known to Mrs. Collins, we believe a full disclosure should be made of the names of the companies, policy numbers, and principal sum indemnities of your several policies.

"6. Finally, Mrs. Collins would like to have you undertake to pay the children's tuition in private schools for so long as your income does not drop below a specified level to be agreed upon by the parties. Here, again, Mrs. Collins is at the disadvantage of having no knowledge as to the exact amount of your income or of what sum would be reasonable in this regard, and would therefore welcome your suggestions.

"We are sure you will agree, after considering these proposed changes, that they are not unreasonable. Mrs. Collins has every confidence that you will want to make fair and adequate provision for the children and that you are equally desirous that she obtain her just share of the community property."

[1] We turn to the court's findings and conclusions and we again meet a set of findings and conclusions which are eloquent of the author's unfamiliarity with the purpose served by findings, namely, the determination of the material ultimate factual issues in the case. Altogether the findings and conclusions consist of 10 closely typed pages, 7 under the head of findings and 3 under the head of conclusions. They consist of a conglomeration of evidentiary facts and conclusions. They add up to no more than a rambling and incomplete news story of plaintiff's confession of her love for Major Blankenship, the break-up of the marriage, the circumstances under which the property settlement agreement was entered into, including the subsequent marital venture of plaintiff, but omitting reference to that of the defendant.

The court made no finding as to what community property was owned by the parties, no finding as to the value of the property, no finding whether plaintiff knew what property was owned and no finding whether she knew its value. The court did find that plaintiff knew the purport of the property settlement agreement and that the parties owned the property that was described in the deeds, but in the light of the evidence and the findings as a whole, this finding means only that plaintiff knew from the fact that defendant requested her to execute the deeds that they conveyed property in which she had an interest. As we shall see, the property was not described in the agreement and the deeds were prepared and executed after the terms of the agreement had been substantially agreed upon.

The failure of the court to make a determination as to the extent and value of the property and with respect to plaintiff's knowledge of the same was due to the course of the trial as directed by the court. There was in evidence a chart prepared by defendant which listed the parcels of real property which were divided, with their cost, existing encumbrances and defendant's estimates of their values. With certain explanatory testimony the cost of the properties was shown on the chart to have been about $350,000. Defendant's estimates of the values at the time of the property settlement were substantially the same as the total cost. The balance unpaid on the trust deed notes which defendant held was something over $14,000. The chart lists the encumbrances on the real property at about $190,000. Plaintiff claimed the interest of the defendant in the home which she received was worth only $20,000. Defendant estimated it to be worth $32,500.

Counsel for plaintiff stated in the beginning of the trial that plaintiff proposed to prove that defendant received in the settlement property eight times the value of that received by plaintiff. At that time, and later in the trial, the court directed that there should first be tried the question of the validity of the agreement and later, if it should be necessary, the question of the value of what plaintiff received and what defendant received in the settlement. When plaintiff sought to prove by expert testimony that the property defendant retained was worth eight times as much as what plaintiff received, the court ruled in accordance with earlier rulings that it was trying only the issue of the validity of the agreement, and rejected the offered evidence.

[2] We do not see how it would have been possible for the court to arrive at a just decision without knowing whether the division of the property was just and equitable. Defendant was a fiduciary; plaintiff, as we shall see, was a credulous and complacent party to the property settlement. The questions whether defendant was guilty of breach of fiduciary duty and whether plaintiff entered into the agreement voluntarily and solely in the exercise of her own judgment could not be determined in entire disregard of the question of the fairness of the agreement.

We have concluded that evidence offered by plaintiff was erroneously denied admission and that there was a failure to determine issues indispensable to a decision of the cause on the merits, which necessitate a reversal of the judgment.

We do not find it necessary to go to any great length in reciting the evidence or to do more than give a general outline of the situation of the parties. When we refer to the testimony, as well as to the admitted facts, it is only for the purpose of showing the entire inadequacy of the findings on the material issues and the necessity for a new trial in which all material and relevant evidence will be received.

Defendant is a physician with a gross income in excess of $80,000 a year. For a number of years he had been speculating in unimproved real estate. He made many purchases and in one instance put on a residential subdivision which he sold out. He and the plaintiff gave many purchase money trust deeds. Plaintiff was a housewife with the care of four children. She occasionally signed escrow instructions and had signed numerous notes secured by trust deeds. Aside from this she had nothing to do with defendant's real estate operations or his business. So far as disclosed by the evidence she never questioned defendant about his business ventures.

In the latter part of 1952, the parties had discussed a divorce. Defendant testified that at that time he was opposed to it. However, when the matter was discussed again in about June 1953, defendant was agreeable to a divorce. He gave plaintiff $300 to pay for her divorce in Las Vegas. Plaintiff testified, and defendant did not deny, that he told her at that time to tell her attorneys that a property settlement had been made and that she wanted a simple divorce, as otherwise, if property was involved, the cost of a divorce would be greater. There had been discussions of a property settlement. Both parties testified to that fact and the further fact that plaintiff had asked for some of the properties and had suggested that defendant sell some of them. Plaintiff had asked for title to the home and $600 per month and this was agreed to by defendant. In plaintiff's telephone conversation with defendant and upon other occasions and at the time she signed the agreement, she asked for and was assured that she was getting the home. Instead of $600 per month, which had apparently been agreed upon, both agreements drafted by defendant provided for only $400 per month. Defendant's explanation at the trial of the terms of the first drafted agreement was that if the title to the home had been placed in the name of plaintiff he could not have received credit on his income tax liability for taxes paid. The first draft was more favorable to plaintiff than the second one, since it provided that plaintiff would receive $3,000 in lieu of support, which she was not to receive under the second agreement.

[3] Defendant testified that he never had any intention of giving plaintiff a statement of the property owned. At the same time he claimed that she knew what the properties were and it is contended now that she could have found out what they were by consulting the public records and then could have investigated their value. This, of course, would have been true if the parties had been dealing at arm's length, but it is not the rule in dealings between fiduciaries.

[4] The court found: "That at the time the said property settlement agreement was signed and prior thereto, plaintiff had legal counsel and was relying upon the advice and opinions of her said legal counsel and did not rely upon any advice, statements or opinions of the defendant with respect to any matter involved in such property settlement agreement. * * *" This finding is contrary to all the evidence on the subject. Plaintiff's attorneys objected to her entering into the agreement first drafted. The circumstances corroborate plaintiff's testimony, which was not contradicted by defendant, that defendant endeavored to avoid negotiation of a property settlement agreement through plaintiff's attorneys. Knowing the objections which the attorneys had to the proposed settlement, defendant had plaintiff come to Los Angeles where she unhesitatingly signed the agreement, which she had no opportunity to submit to her attorneys. She had been requested not to consult them with respect to the settlement. She had obeyed the instructions until the attorneys called for a copy of the agreement which they understood had been signed. Defendant knew that the attorneys had rejected the first proposed agreement. He knew, so he testified, that plaintiff was in love with Major Blankenship and intended to marry him as soon as possible. She was in haste, and for obvious reasons. There was no evidence that plaintiff knew that defendant also had plans for his own remarriage.

[5] It will be the duty of the trial court to pass upon the fairness of defendant's conduct and the ability of plaintiff to cope with defendant in the matter of the settlement. We hold that when defendant undertook to justify his actions as those of a fiduciary the burden was upon him to establish the fairness of the contract and that he did not in the slightest degree abuse the trust and confidence of the plaintiff or take any advantage of her ignorance and inexperience.

The court was in error when it ruled that the value of what plaintiff received in the settlement and the value of what defendant received was immaterial. It was the most important factual issue in the case. There was no doubt of the existence of a fiduciary relationship which imposed upon defendant the duty to take no advantage of plaintiff in the division of property. But even upon the values as admitted by defendant there was ample reason for plaintiff's contention that defendant received in value far more than the amount plaintiff received.

Knowledge of the values could not have been imputed to plaintiff except upon the theory that she could have learned of the ownership of the real property and the three trust deeds by an examination of the public records, could have had the real properties appraised, and could have ascertained from the makers of the trust deed notes the amounts of the unpaid balances. Plaintiff testified that defendant had assured her many times that he would be eminently fair with her in the settlement of property rights and would also support the children. But even without such assurances plaintiff had no reason to suspect that defendant would deal unfairly with her. She was not required to examine the public records nor make inquiry of the trust deed debtors. She had a right to rely upon the honesty and fairness of the defendant and he could not sit tight and expect her to discover what he refused to disclose to her.

[6, 7] Although the court made no finding whether plaintiff reposed trust and confidence in defendant, the fact that a fiduciary relationship existed was not open to question. In view of the evidence defendant was to be deemed a trustee for plaintiff. Civ.Code §§ 158, 2219, 2228, 2229, 2234, 2235; Fields v. Michael, 91 Cal.App.2d 443, 205 P.2d 402. The court found that defendant knew he was receiving in the settlement more of value than his wife received. The settlement was presumptively fraudulent. Defendant had the burden of showing that the transaction was fair and just and fully understood by plaintiff. In re Estate of Cover, 188 Cal. 133, 204 P. 583; Norris v. Norris, 50 Cal.App.2d 726, 123 P.2d 847; Andrew v. Andrew, 51 Cal.App.2d 451, 125 P.2d 47.

[8] The principles which control the conduct of fiduciaries, as applicable to property settlements, impose upon a husband, situated as defendant was, certain definite duties. Where the husband has had complete control and management of the community property and the wife has had nothing to do with it other than to join with him in executing documents at his request (which is a common, if not the usual situation), the husband has an affirmative duty to see that the wife is fairly and fully informed as to the extent and value of the community property, in order that he may be in a position to negotiate a property settlement agreement with her which effects a division of it. He must inform the wife of all facts of which he has knowledge which would reasonably affect her judgment and which are not also known to her. We do not say there may not be circumstances in which he would be excusable for not making a disclosure, nor do we say that a disclosure is in all cases a prerequisite to a just and fair division of property. But the present case is governed by the general rule we have stated.

Defendant contends that plaintiff and her attorneys undertook to make an investigation and that they, alone, are to blame if they did not finish it. There is no merit whatever in this contention. Defendant did all he could to separate plaintiff from the influence and advice of her attorneys in the matter of the settlement, and he succeeded. Plaintiff supinely did as requested by defendant, although it was contrary to the judgment of her attorneys.

A fact which is manifestly fatal to the judgment is that the court did not undertake to determine whether the settlement was fair, just and reasonable. No finding or conclusion was made that it was fair and just. No facts were found which would show it to be fair and just. The finding was that defendant knew he was receiving more in the settlement than plaintiff was receiving. Defendant contended, and here contends, that "Courts have no power to remake an agreement merely because it turns out to be more beneficial to one party than the other" and that "The law does not weigh the quantum of the consideration. (6 Cal.Jur. p. 169; Brawley v. Crosby Research Foundation, Inc., 73 Cal.App.2d 103, 166 P.2d 392.)" This argument prevailed in the trial court. In announcing its decision and the reasons for it, the court stated: "It further appears at that time for reasons possibly best known to her the plaintiff, particularly wanted a divorce. That appears to have been paramount in her mind. Possibly the agreement which she signed did not constitute an equal or possibly even on the face of things a fair division of the community property. Yet it was what the plaintiff wanted, bargained for and accepted, other factors then possibly being more important to her."

[9] Throughout the trial and on the appeal defendant has contended that the property settlement should be regarded as one between parties who were dealing at arms' length, and that if plaintiff did not receive a fair share of the property it is her own fault. All his arguments as to the benefits he conferred upon plaintiff do not conceal the skeleton upon which they are draped. It came to view in the testimony of defendant that he never had any intention of informing plaintiff or her attorneys what property was owned or its value. It is shown throughout the briefs of defendant. He says, in substance, that plaintiff was in love with Major Blankenship, she was in a hurry for a divorce so she could remarry, and was less interested in getting a fair share of the property than in acquiring a new husband. This does appear to have been her immediate motive. But defendant had no right to take advantage of the fact that her romantic illusions obscured whatever business judgment she possessed. She was all the more in need of protection against her own impulsive action. The fact that defendant gave plaintiff her freedom does not bear upon the fairness of the division of the property. In that connection he gave no more than he received. He, also, had plans, but was shrewd enough not to divulge them. To say that plaintiff received what she asked for is not an answer to the question whether she would have been given more upon a fair and equitable division.

It may well be that if the court had found how much more was allotted to defendant than to plaintiff, the disparity would have been so great as to render the settlement grossly inequitable. That is an indispensable issue which must be determined by the trial court and it is one as to which the evidence should be complete and the findings explicit.

Although defendant placed in evidence the Nevada decree he did not plead it nor rely upon it as an adjudication that the property settlement agreement was valid. That question is not present.

The judgment is reversed.

ALPHA BETA FOOD MARKETS, Inc., a corporation, et al., Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

AMALGAMATED MEAT CUTTERS AND BUTCHER WORKMEN OF NORTH AMERICA, an unincorporated voluntary association, et al., Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 22090.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 31, 1956.

Action by certain retail food market operators against unions representing their employees for a declaratory judgment determining the validity of a provision of the parties' collective bargaining agreements. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Philip H. Richards, J., entered judgment adverse to the unions and they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that provision that all fresh meats, poultry, and fish shall be cut, prepared and packaged on the premises and dispensed by members of union, amounted to a restraint of trade on the sale of frozen commodities and was illegal and void as being in violation of federal and state anti-trust laws.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Monopolies ⇐12(9)

A union or group of unions cannot legally combine or conspire with an employer or group of employers, by means of a collective bargaining agreement, to restrain and prevent the manufacture and sale of commodities, such as frozen meats, poultry and fish, even though the objective of the union or unions may be to monopolize the work on such meat products for their own members to the exclusion of workmen employed in the plants of the processors or packers of such products. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 16720, 16722.

2. Monopolies ⇐12(9)

Provision in collective bargaining agreement between unions and employers, that all fresh meats, poultry, and fish shall be cut, prepared and packaged on the premises and dispensed by members of union, amounted to a restraint of trade on the sale of frozen commodities and was illegal and void as in violation of federal and state anti-trust laws. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 16720, 16722, 16755; Sherman Anti-Trust Act, §§ 1, 2 as amended 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1, 2.

3. Monopolies ⇐12(8)

A union may be guilty of violation of anti-trust laws if it enters into an agreement unreasonably and illegally restraining trade, notwithstanding the fact that it may have entered into such agreement in order to fulfill a lawful objective. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 16720, 16722.

4. Labor Relations ⇐434

Where arbitration provisions of a collective bargaining agreement between employers and unions related only to controversies involving the interpretation of any provisions of the agreement, a controversy as to the legality of the terms of a provision of the agreement was not submissible to arbitration, since questions of legality are not arbitrable by arbitrators. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1281.

5. Courts ⇐489(8)

A state court had jurisdiction to determine whether a provision in a collective bargaining agreement between employers and unions violated the anti-trust laws of the state, as well as federal anti-trust laws, jurisdiction not resting solely in a federal court by virtue of the fact that enforcement of federal anti-trust laws was involved. Sherman Anti-Trust Act, §§ 1, 2 as amended 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1, 2; West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 16720, 16722; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1060.

6. Labor Relations ⇐506

An action for a declaratory judgment as to whether a provision in a collective bargaining agreement between employers and unions was void as in violation of laws relating to monopolies and restraints of trade was not an action to enforce compliance with any provisions of the Labor Management Relations Act, did not involve any question as to a labor dispute, and National Labor Relations Board was without jurisdiction in such matter. Labor Management Relations Act of 1947, 29 U.S.C.A. § 141 et seq.; Sherman Anti-Trust Act, §§ 1, 2 as amended 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1, 2; West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 16720, 16722.

David Sokol, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Musick, Peeler & Garrett, Harold F. Collins, McLaughlin & Casey, James A. McLaughlin, Los Angeles, for respondents.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment in a declaratory relief action wherein the court determined that certain controversial provisions of a collective bargaining agreement were void and invalid in that such provisions violated the laws of the United States and the laws of the state of California.

The facts are substantially as follows: The action was instituted by twelve retail market operators doing business in various localities in Southern California. The four appellant unions represent the employees who are employed in the various markets of the respondents. Each union represents certain employees in a distinct geographical area in which one or more of the respondents operate markets. Agreements were entered into between the respondents and appellants and in each instance the agreement contained substantially the following language: Self-Service Markets: All fresh meats, fresh poultry, fresh fish, fresh rabbits, shall be cut, prepared and packaged on the premises and dispensed by members of Meat Cutters Local.

The agreements with which we are concerned were negotiated during November and December of 1955, and were signed as of about December 10, 1955. The same, or substantially the same language as above set forth was in earlier agreements between the parties hereto for several years immediately prior to December 10, 1955. During the immediate previous years the practice of freezing and packaging frozen meats, fish and poultry had become more widespread, whereas at the time the agreements were first entered into, there apparently was little if any pre-packaged frozen meat available at retail markets. During the latter part of 1955, and the early part of 1956, large meat packers greatly expanded their business of pre-cutting, pre-packaging and freezing all of the usual types and cuts of meat. In this new procedure, there were utilized new types of wrapping materials which were more adaptable to the continued preservation of frozen foods whereby such products could be kept substantially fresh for indefinite periods of time in self-service freezers such as were used in the respondents' markets. The process used by the large meat packers was essentially an assembly-line system where the bones and fat were removed before the cuts were packaged and frozen. The products are quickly frozen to prevent destruction of the meats and to enable them to keep fresh for an extended period of time. They are machine wrapped and packaged with special materials which tend to keep out oxygen and moisture and thereby prevent deterioration.

About January 20, 1956, each of the appellant unions directed a notice to the respondents demanding that the sale of such pre-packaged frozen meat products be discontinued until the disputed provisions of the collective bargaining agreements could be arbitrated. The respondents declined to arbitrate because they contended it was not subject to arbitration. The action here was in declaratory relief to have it determined whether the provisions of the agreement in question were illegal and void as constituting unlawful restraints of trade under both federal and state laws.

The respondents sought an injunction against the unions to restrain a threatened strike. However, the trial court denied any such injunction upon the ground, apparently, that the unions had not, in fact, called any strike.

[1] The sole question involved here, therefore, is whether a union or a group of unions can combine or conspire with an employer or group of employers, by means of a collective bargaining agreement, to restrain and prevent the manufacture and sale of commodities, such as frozen meats, poultry and fish, even though the objective of the union or unions may be to monopolize the work on such meat products for their own members to the exclusion of workmen employed in the plants of the processors or packers of such products, and regardless of whether such workmen are union members.

[2] We are of the opinion that such provisions in such a contract are illegal and void as being in violation of the federal and state anti-trust laws.

The frozen pre-packaged products are competitive to fresh meat, fish and poultry, which are regularly cut and wrapped in retail stores, and to enforce the terms of the agreement in question would obviously result in prohibiting the handling and sale of the pre-packaged frozen products in the retail markets. There is set forth in a footnote hereto the provisions of sections 16720 and 16722 of the Business and Professions Code.[1]

Section 16750 of the same Code provides a remedy to a person injured as a result of any combination or conspiracy, and section 16755 provides for criminal penalties for participating in any such violation.

In the case of Kold Kist, Inc., v. Amalgamated Meat Cutters, 99 Cal.App.2d 191, 221 P.2d 724, the defendants caused a provision to be placed in a collective bargaining agreement which prohibited the sale of frozen meat products after 6:00 o'clock p. m. from the refrigerated display cases in the retail markets. The court said,

1. "§ 16720. Trust defined: Purposes. A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for any of the following purposes:

"(a) To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce.

"(b) To limit or reduce the production, or increase the price of merchandise or of any commodity.

"(c) To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity.

"(d) To fix at any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public or consumer shall be in any manner controlled or established, any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this State.

"(e) To make or enter into or execute or carry out any contracts, obligations or agreements of any kind or description, by which they do all or any or any combination of any of the following:

"(1) Bind themselves not to sell, dispose of or transport any article or any commodity or any article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce or consumption below a common standard figure, or fixed value.

"(2) Agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity or transportation at a fixed or graduated figure.

"(3) Establish or settle the price of any article, commodity or transportation between them or themselves and others, so as directly or indirectly to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves, or any purchasers or consumers in the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity.

"(4) Agree to pool, combine or directly or indirectly unite any interests that they may have connected with the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, that its price might in any manner be affected."

"§ 16722. Contracts void. Any contract or agreement in violation of this chapter is absolutely void and is not enforceable at law or in equity."

among other things, in deciding the case the following, 99 Cal.App.2d at page 197, 221 P.2d at page 729:

"While combined action which is in restraint of trade, as the term is commonly used, is illegal, regardless of the objective of the parties, it is also illegal if it is entered into for the purpose of restraining trade. Even though it appeared to be the purpose of the unions to improve the status of their members by limiting hours of work it was a proper inquiry whether it was intended to accomplish this purpose by placing restrictions upon the trade in plaintiffs' products through the prevention of the sale thereof except through union members."

[3] Further, in answer to the contention of the appellants that as long as they are seeking only that to which organized labor is entitled, there can be no violation of the anti-trust laws, the court in the Kold Kist case, supra, 99 Cal.App.2d at pages 200–201, 221 P.2d at page 730, stated:

"As we have heretofore pointed out, defendants have not denied that detriment has resulted and will continue to result to plaintiffs' business in the manner and to the extent alleged in the complaint and supporting affidavit. Nevertheless they argue that even though there has been and will be restraint there is no remedy available to plaintiffs for the reason that they, the unions, are seeking only to obtain uniform working hours for all employees. They say that it must be demonstrated from the face of the contract or from the pleadings of plaintiffs that the purpose of the provisions of the contract is to 'directly, intentionally and specifically' unreasonably and illegally restrain trade in a way which is unconcerned with the accomplishment of a legitimate labor objective or the contract cannot be deemed an illegal restraint of trade. This is to claim, in effect, that whenever their efforts are calculated to advance the interests of their members the effect upon others is not to be considered. This contention has frequently been advanced and rejected. If we were to agree with it, the result would be that the assertion of any lawful labor objective, regardless of the means proposed for the accomplishment thereof, would preclude the courts from making inquiry to determine whether the objective was indeed lawful.

"In Giboney v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 336 U.S. 490, 69 S.Ct. 684, 93 L.Ed. 834, the union argued that the primary objective of their combination and picketing was to improve wage and working conditions, admittedly a lawful purpose, and that 'their violation of the state anti-trade restraint laws must be dismissed as merely incidental to this lawful purpose.' The Court said, quoting from International Harvester Co. v. State of Missouri, 234 U.S. 199, 209, 34 S.Ct. 859, 58 L.Ed. 1276, ' "It is too late in the day to assert against statutes which forbid combinations of competing companies that a particular combination was induced by good intentions. * * *" ' It was also said that 'To exalt all labor union conduct in restraint of trade above all state control would greatly reduce the traditional powers of states over their domestic economy and might conceivably make it impossible for them to enforce their antitrade restraint laws.' The courts of this state have held that the letter and paramount object of the law, Cartwright Act, is satisfied if the tendency of the action or proposed action is to restrain trade. [Citing cases.]

"Defendants also argue that only those combinations are in unlawful restraint of trade which seek to control prices and create a monopoly. A complete answer to this contention is found in the statute itself. Under subdivisions a, b, and c of section 16720, Business and Professions Code, it is unlawful for two or more persons to combine to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce; to limit or reduce the production of any commodity; or to prevent competition in the sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity. These enactments are distinct from the remainder of the section which has to do with price fixing. Although price fixing and monopolistic practices tend to affect competition, production and restrictions in trade, the legislature has not limited illegal combinations in restraint of trade to those which involve price fixing or monopoly. People v. Sacramento Butchers' Protective Ass'n [12 Cal.App. 471, 107 P. 712; Overland Pub. Co. v. H. S. Crocker Co., 193 Cal. 109, 222 P. 812.]"

Similar statutes in other states have been similarly interpreted, as in Austin v. Painters' District Council No. 22, etc., 339 Mich. 462, 64 N.W.2d 550; Giboney v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 336 U.S. 490, 69 S.Ct. 684, 93 L.Ed. 834; Foust v. Truck Drivers Union, (Ohio Court of Common Pleas, April 3, 1956) 38 L.R.R.M. 2645; Commonwealth v. McHugh, 326 Mass. 249, 93 N.E. 2d 751.

Appellants have cited three California cases in an effort to support the last mentioned contention, namely, that the provisions of the agreements do not violate the state anti-trust laws. One is a superior court decision, namely McDonnell v. Meat Drivers Local, 29 L.R.R.M. 2176; and the other two are Los Angeles Pie Bakers Ass'n v. Bakery Drivers, 122 Cal.App.2d 237, 264 P.2d 615, and Schweizer v. Local Joint Executive Board, 121 Cal.App.2d 45, 262 P.2d 568. None of the cases cited are, in our opinion, in point.

Coming now to the question whether the prohibitions in the agreement violated the federal anti-trust laws: We are of the belief that such language does so violate the federal law. Section 1, Title 15 U.S.C.A. specifies that contracts and combinations in restraint of trade are illegal. Section 2, Title 15 U.S.C.A., specifies that every person who shall participate in such unlawful acts is guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine or imprisonment or both.

In Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, 325 U.S. 797, 808–810, 65 S.Ct. 1533, 1539, 89 L.Ed. 1939, the unions and employers contracted to exclude electrical equipment from use unless purchased from local manufacturers, and in determining the case the court said: "We have been pointed to no language in any act of Congress or in its reports or debates, nor have we found any, which indicates that it was ever suggested, considered, or legislatively determined that labor unions should be granted an immunity such as is sought in the present case. * * But when the unions participated with a combination of business men who had complete power to eliminate all competition among themselves and to prevent all competition from others, a situation was created not included within the exemptions of the Clayton and Norris-La Guardia Acts [15 U.S.C.A. § 12 et seq.; 29 U.S.C.A. § 101 et seq.].

"It must be remembered that the exemptions granted the unions were special exceptions to a general legislative plan. The primary objective of all the Anti-trust legislation has been to preserve business competition and to proscribe business monopoly. It would be a surprising thing if Congress, in order to prevent a misapplication of that legislation to labor unions, had bestowed upon such unions complete and unreviewable authority to aid business groups to frustrate its primary objective. For if business groups, by combining with labor unions, can fix prices and divide up markets, it was little more than a futile gesture for Congress to prohibit price fixing by business groups themselves. * * *

"Our holding means that the same labor union activities may or may not be in violation of the Sherman Act [15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1–7, 15 note], dependent upon whether the union acts alone or in combination with business groups."

Also see, Anderson-Friberg, Inc., v. Justin R. Clary & Son, D.C., 98 F.Supp. 75; Manaka v. Monterey Sardine Industries, D.C., 41 F.Supp. 531; Gulf Coast Shrimpers & Oystermen's Ass'n v. United States, 5 Cir., 236 F.2d 658; United States v. Employing Plasterers Ass'n, 347 U.S. 186, 74 S.Ct. 452, 98 L.Ed. 618; Lystad v. Local Union No. 223, etc., D.C., 135 F. Supp. 337.

In our opinion the terms of the agreement in the instant case evidence a conspiracy, combination and unlawful agreement. The effect of the agreement is to bar from the markets any such frozen, pre-packaged products. To comply with the agreement would not only mean, among other things, that the sale of the products is restrained, but that the means for marketing such products are destroyed with the result that the sale and distribution of the products would be for all intents and purposes an impossibility in this area.

[4] The appellants contend that the matter should have been submitted to arbitration, under the arbitration provisions of the agreement. In the first place, the arbitration provisions relate only to "controversies involving the interpretation of any provisions of" the agreement. The controversy here is as to the legality of the terms of the agreement. Questions of legality are not arbitrable by arbitrators.

In Loving & Evans v. Blick, 33 Cal.2d 603, 610–611, 204 P.2d 23, 27, the court held that a claim arising out of an illegal provision in a contract was not subject to arbitration, saying, among other things: "Section 1281 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing for submission to arbitration of 'any controversy * * * which arises out of a contract,' does not contemplate that the parties may provide for the arbitration of controversies arising out of contracts which are expressly declared by law to be illegal and against the public policy of the state. So it is generally held that 'a claim arising out of an illegal transaction is not a proper subject matter for submission to arbitration, and that an award springing out of an illegal contract, which no court can enforce, cannot stand on any higher ground than the contract itself.' 6 C.J.S., Arbitration and Award, § 12, p. 160. Aptly illustrative of this well-settled principle is the fairly recent case of Smith v. Gladney, 128 Tex. 354, 98 S.W. 2d 351, where a dispute arose between the parties as a result of trading in 'futures' upon the Chicago Board of Trade. The matter was submitted to arbitration. When suit was brought upon the award and it was affirmed 'on the theory that (it) was final,' the appellate court, in reversing the judgment, said, 98 S.W.2d at pages 351, 352: 'It appears to be almost universally recognized that a claim arising out of an illegal transaction, such as a speculation in futures, is not a legitimate subject of arbitration, and an award based thereon is void and unenforceable in courts of the country. [Citing cases.]"

[5] The appellants further contend that jurisdiction in this matter is either in the National Labor Relations Board because an unfair labor practice is involved, or in the federal courts because the enforcement of federal anti-trust laws is involved and that therefore the state court has no jurisdiction. This is merely an action for declaratory relief to secure a ruling as to whether certain language evidences an unlawful conspiracy between employers and unions to restrict and prohibit the sale of certain commodities. The agreement was executed in California and is performable here. We believe the state court has jurisdiction to determine whether the agreement violates the law of this state as well as the federal law. Morey v. Paladini, 187 Cal. 727, 736, 203 P. 760; Building Contractors v. Gugliemelli, N. Y. Supreme Ct., 30 L.R.R.M. 2439; Commonwealth v. McHugh, 326 Mass. 249, 93 N.E.2d 751; Hunt v. Plavsa, 103 Cal.App.2d 222, 229 P.2d 482; Code Civ.Proc., § 1060; Ralphs Grocery Co. v. Amalgamated Meat etc., 98 Cal.App.2d 539, 220 P.2d 802; Harvey Machine Co. v. Western Mechanics Local Union, 76 Cal.App.2d 421, 173 P.2d 330; Harvey Machine Co., Inc., v. Alvarez, 76 Cal.App.2d 427, 173 P.2d 65.

[6] This is not an action to enforce compliance with any provisions of the Labor Management Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.A. § 141 et seq. The pleadings do not show any unfair labor practices, as defined by that Act. There is no labor dispute with any employee who manufactures the products with which we are concerned. The laws which are violated relate to monopolies and restraints of trade and the National Labor Relations Board has no jurisdiction over such matters.

There was no allegation in the complaint in this instance to the effect that the Unions had used any coercion against any employees of the markets. In this case there is no question of any "hot cargo", or any secondary boycott. It was stated by counsel for respondent in the oral argument, and apparently concurred in by counsel for the appellants, that the products in question are processed and packaged by union labor in the first instance.

Subsequent to the filing of the briefs in this cause, the parties filed a stipulation in this court to the effect that a new collective bargaining agreement between the parties hereto, effective from November 5, 1956, to November 5, 1959, had been executed, which new agreement contains certain language in lieu of the disputed language in the contract now before us. The appellants state, "it would therefore appear that the entire matter is now moot". At the same time, appellants assert that they are confronted with the judgment of the trial court, and that they cannot dismiss the appeal, thus leaving as res judicata the judgment of the trial court.

As we view it, the matter of the new agreement is not before us for any determination, and it obviously was not before the trial court. Under the circumstances, the new agreement can have no bearing on the issue which is to be decided here. It might well be that the provisions of the new agreement are legal and proper, and at least counsel for each of the parties seemed to entertain the belief that such is the case. However, we are not called upon here to decide that question. It is also true that apparently the parties have reconciled their main differences, and there appears to be no controversy over the new agreement; nevertheless, as heretofore indicated, that can have no effect upon the questions submitted to this court.

For the reasons heretofore given, the judgment is affirmed.

John OLIVEIRA and Maria Oliveira, Defendants and Appellants.

No. 17200.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 28, 1956.

Proceeding upon motion to set aside default in partition action. The Superior Court, County of Alameda, James R. Agee, J., denied motion, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that where motion to set aside default was filed more than six months from entry of default but not more than six months from entry of judgment confirming sale, motion was too late, under provision imposing six months' period of limitation on motions to set aside defaults, since period in such case ran from date of default, not from judgment confirming sale.

Order and judgment affirmed.

1. Judgment ⇐153(1)

Under provision imposing six months' period of limitation on motions to set aside defaults, limitation period runs from date of entry of default, not from subsequent entry of judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 473.

2. Judgment ⇐153(1)

Unless default itself can be set aside, none of proceedings thereafter may be set aside, under provision authorizing proceedings to set aside defaults if brought within six months. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 473.

3. Judgment ⇐153(1)

Where motion to set aside default in partition action was filed more than six months from entry of default but not more than six months from entry of judgment confirming sale, motion was too late, under provision imposing six months' period of limitation on motions to set aside defaults, since period ran from date of entry of default not from judgment confirming sale. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 473.

Edward J. Kilmartin, Oakland, for appellant.

Price, Macdonald & Knox, Oakland, Wagener, Brailsford & Knox, Oakland, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

The sole question raised by this appeal by defendants from an order denying defendants' motion to set aside default, default interlocutory decree and decree confirming sale, is whether the six months' period within which section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that a default may be set aside, runs from the date of entry of the default, or from the subsequent date of entry of judgment.

Record.

Action in partition. Defendants were served with summons and complaint in the county of their residence, one on October 16, the other on October 27, 1953. They failed to appear and their default was entered November 12th. June 23, 1955, interlocutory decree of partition was filed. August 24th, judgment confirming sale and ordering referees to execute deed filed. November 15th (more than six months from entry of default but not from judgment confirming sale), defendants filed notice of motion to set aside the default, the interlocutory decree and the judgment. The proceeding was pursuant to section 473.[1]

Time to Move.

[1] It is well settled that relief may not be granted under section 473 after the expiration of six months from the entry of the default. See Solot v. Linch, 46 Cal. 2d 99, 105, 292 P.2d 887; Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. King Land & Improvement Co., 162 Cal. 44, 120 P. 1066; Jones v. Evarts, 114 Cal.App.2d 496, 498, 250 P.2d 671, and cases there cited; Castagnoli v. Castagnoli, 124 Cal.App.2d 39, 41, 268 P.2d 37. These were all cases where, as here, it was contended that the time runs from the entry of judgment and not from the entry of default.

[2] Defendants contend, however, that although there are no cases so holding, a different rule should apply in partition actions. They rather ingeniously refer to the language of section 473 authorizing relief to a party from a "judgment, order, or other proceeding * * *" and contend that the entry of default, the entry of the interlocutory decree and the entry of the judgment in a partition suit, are each a separate step, "judgment, order, or other proceeding" and that each may be vacated by an application for relief within six months of that particular "judgment, order, or other proceeding." The same argument could be made concerning the entry of default and the entry of judgment in any character of action, and yet as we have heretofore shown, it is well settled that unless the default itself can be set aside, none of the proceedings thereafter may be set aside.

1. Inasmuch as the parties assume that the denial was on the ground that the six months' period set forth in the section had expired, we will not discuss the sufficiency of the moving papers.

As we pointed out in Cumberpatch v. Nolan, 125 Cal.App.2d 205, 207, 270 P.2d 540, vacating the judgment (if this could be done where more than six months had expired from the entry of default), would be of no value, as it would be the duty of the court immediately to enter a judgment of like effect, and the defendants, still being in default, could not be heard in opposition thereto.

[3] Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 94 Cal. 33, 29 P. 332, holding that a party may be relieved under section 473 from default due to failure to serve a bill of particulars in time, if application is made within six months, for the reason that the settlement of such a bill is a "proceeding" under the section, and there is no action of the court until such settlement, is no support for defendants' contention. Pollitz v. Wickersham, 150 Cal. 238, 88 P. 911, cited by defendants, held that where a proposed bill of exceptions was not served in time, the court had power under section 473 to relieve the party from such default if the motion was made within six months from the time when the objection to the late service is first made to the court by the opposing party on the theory that no "proceeding" has been taken by the adverse party until the objection is made. In Faeh v. Union Oil Co., 107 Cal.App.2d 163, 236 P.2d 667, it was held that this case is no longer the law, and moreover, that the situation in the Pollitz case does "not refer to the initiatory steps which vest the court with jurisdiction * * *", 107 Cal.App.2d at page 169, 236 P.2d at page 671. In Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., 150 Cal. 575, 89 P. 335, 338, the court held that stockholders of a corporation that had become legally dead could move to vacate a default judgment against the corporation, where the motion was made within six months of entry of judgment but more than six months from entry of default. While the opinion stated that the motion to vacate did not come too late "even if it be assumed that the provisions of section 473, Code of Civ.Proc. * * * are applicable to a case of this character," it is obvious that the case was decided upon the theory that the judgment was void because a legally dead corporation cannot be served with process.[2] If it holds that relief can be granted from a default judgment although the default cannot be set aside, then the case is contrary to the great weight of authority in California.

Order and judgment affirmed.

Civ. 21841.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 27, 1956.

Wife's action to establish a Nevada decree of divorce as judgment of California and to enforce husband's obligations thereunder and under property settlement agreement incorporated therein. From a judgment and parts of a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clarence B. Runkle, J., both parties appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that in property settlement agreement making the "earnings" of the husband the measuring stick by which to determine amount to be paid for support of wife and children, quoted word was used to indicate amount produced, and not what might be left after deducting community interest of husband's second wife.

Affirmed in part and reversed in part with directions.

1. Husband and Wife ⇐279(1)

In property settlement agreement making the "earnings" of the husband the measuring stick by which to determine amount to be paid for support of wife and children, quoted word was used to indicate amount produced, and not what might be left after deducting community interest of husband's second wife.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Earnings".

2. Evidence ⇐65

Parties to property settlement agreement would be presumed to have known at time agreement was executed that provision for support of children was subject to modification by order of court. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1655.

3. Husband and Wife ⇐279(1, 6)

Child custody and child support provisions of property settlement agreement were not severable, and provision for support of each child was impliedly conditioned on child's mother's having its custody; and, accordingly father was under no obligation to make payments for support of child whose custody had been relinquished by mother to father.

4. Divorce ⇐255

Nature of property settlement agreement, its provision that it should be embodied in and made part of divorce decree, and plain language of divorce decree made conclusion inescapable that merger was intended, thereby substituting rights and duties under decree for those under agreement.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Plaintiff brought this action to establish a Nevada decree of divorce as a judgment of this state and to enforce defendant's obligations thereunder and under a property settlement agreement.

The parties were married in 1936. They have two children. They separated in early 1946. On February 18, 1946 they entered into a property settlement agreement. The material parts of the agreement are these:

"The wife shall have the permanent and exclusive custody, care, maintenance and education of the children during their respective minorities. * * *

"The husband during his lifetime shall provide the means for the separate support and maintenance of the wife and for the support, maintenance and education of the children in the following manner:

"The sum of One Hundred Seventy-five ($175.00) Dollars commencing at the time of the signing of this agreement, and monthly thereafter. * * *

"In the event that the husband in any year shall earn a sum in excess of Six Thousand ($6,000.00) Dollars after the payment of State and Federal Income taxes upon his earnings, he shall be obligated to pay to the wife for her separate support and maintenance and for the support, amintenance [sic] and education of the children, in addition to the sums already provided for herein, Forty (40%) per cent of so much of such excess earnings as exceed Six Thousand ($6,000.00) Dollars and do not exceed Twelve Thousand ($12,000.-00) Dollars and thirty-three and one-third (33⅓%) of any excess over and above Twelve Thousand ($12,000.00) Dollars. For the purpose of determining the amount of the husband's liability under this provision the husband shall be obligated to submit to the wife, not later than April 1, in each year, sworn, true and accurate copies of his State and Federal Income Tax Returns, evidencing his earnings for the preceding calendar year and such returns shall constitute the basis for computing the husband's liability. Any excess sums over and above the base and minimum figure of One Hundred Seventy-five ($175.00) Dollars monthly, hereinbefore provided for, shall be paid to the wife within ten days after such determination.

"All payments made to the wife shall be deemed to be apportioned as follows:

"One-third-(⅓) for the separate maintenance and support of the wife, and one-third (⅓) for the separate maintenance support and education of each of the children."

"The provisions of this agreement shall not be construed to prevent either party from suing for an absolute or limited divorce in this or any other competent jurisdiction upon such grounds as they shall elect or as they may be advised; buthany [sic] decree so obtained by either party shall in no way affect this agreement or any of the terms, covenants, or conditions hereof; it being agreed, that in the event a temporary or final judgment or decree shall be rendered in any action or proceedings between the parties hereto in which provision for the maintenance and support of the wife and minor may be appropriate, whether it may be a judgment or decree of absolute divorce or otherwise, such judgment or decree shall provide for the maintenance and support of the wife and said minor children according to the terms of this agreement, and this agreement shall be embodied in and made a part of such judgment or decree. It is agreed that this agreement is absolute, unconditional and irrevocable, and both parties intend during their respective lifetimes to be legally bound thereby."

On May 23, 1946 defendant obtained a decree of divorce in Nevada. The decree contained this provision:

> "It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the written agreement of plaintiff and defendant, entered into on February 18th, 1946, having been introduced in evidence as Exhibit 'A', is in all respects, just, fair, reasonable, equitable and it is, by this Court, ratified and approved and the provisions thereof are hereby adopted by this Court."

Since the decree, defendant has remarried. Plaintiff has not remarried. In 1950 defendant earned $1,438.81 in excess of $6,000 after payment of state and federal income taxes; in 1951, in excess of $3,841.92; in 1952, in excess of $4,064.80; in 1953, in excess of $1,176.63; in 1954, in excess of $4,080.77. He paid nothing to plaintiff on account of such excess earnings.

The judgment established the Nevada decree as a judgment of this state, declared it to be in full force and effect, and adjudged that plaintiff recover from defendant the agreed percentage of his excess earnings less certain credits. Defendant appealed from the entire judgment; plaintiff appealed from parts thereof. The case is here on an agreed statement. The findings of fact and conclusions of law are not included.

[1] The principal controversy is as to the meaning of the word "earnings" as used in the agreement—whether it means the earnings of defendant without deducting the community interest of his present wife therein or whether it means after deduction of her community interest. The trial judge held it means the earnings of defendant without deducting the community interest of his present wife therein. We agree.

The learned trial judge filed a memorandum opinion which is part of the record on appeal. Rules on Appeal, Rule 5(a), 36 Cal.2d 1, 5. We are partly in accord with that opinion, and the following portion is adopted and made a part of this decision:

"On the issue of the amount due plaintiff under the contract, the first questions [sic] is the meaning and effect of paragraph 4c thereof. This contract was executed in New York which does not have a community property system and its execution was apparently not in contemplation of any future marriage of defendant at all, much less one in a community property state. The language is very explicit: 'in the event that the husband in any year shall earn a sum in excess of $6,000.00 after the payment of State and Federal income taxes upon his earnings * * *' The condition is his earning such excess sum and not whether by reason of any subsequent contract entered into between him and someone else, his right to the ownership or retention of the full amount of such excess sum should be terminated or diminished in favor of someone else. Certainly he could not be heard now to say that he did not owe plaintiff her percentage of such excess earnings because he had assigned the whole or any part thereof to someone else. So far as plaintiff is concerned, his contracting a marriage with another woman thereafter and his removal to the State of California where such other woman had a vested interest in half of his earnings as community property are no different in effect than his execution of an assignment of half of such earnings to some finance company in consideration of a loan. The court holds, therefore, that paragraph 4c of the contract was not altered or affected in any way by defendant's subsequent marriage."

It seems clear that the parties fixed the earnings of defendant as the measuring stick by which to determine the amount to be paid for the support of plaintiff and the children. The word "earnings" is used to indicate the amount produced, not that part only which may vest in defendant by virtue of the community property law.

[2, 3] As noted, the agreement provides that payments to plaintiff shall be deemed apportioned one-third for her support and one-third for support of each child. On July 1, 1954 plaintiff voluntarily sent one of the children to reside with and to be cared for by defendant. Apparently the court allowed defendant a credit of one-third of the amount payable to plaintiff for the period of time that the child was in defendant's custody after July 1, 1954. Plaintiff asserts the court erred in doing so. She argues the agreement is not "subject to modification because it is a fully integrated agreement purporting to settle all property rights as well as support obligations." We think the court correctly construed the agreement.

The agreement provides separately for the support of plaintiff and for the support of each child—one-third of the amount agreed to be paid for plaintiff's support and one-third for each child's support. The parties are presumed to have known at the time the agreement was executed that the provision for support of the children was subject to modification by order of court. Civ.Code, § 1655; Rapp v. Rapp, 218 Cal. 505, 507–508, 24 P.2d 161. The agreement does not provide for custody of the child alone or for his support alone. It provides for custody and support. The support provision is not severable from the custody provision. The provision for support of each child is impliedly conditioned on plaintiff's having its custody. After July 1, 1954 defendant was under no obligation to make the payments for the support of the child who was in his custody.

[4] The court held the property settlement agreement was not merged in the Nevada decree, and merely awarded plaintiff the percentage of defendant's excess earnings with interest. Plaintiff contends the agreement was merged in the decree and that defendant should have been ordered to make the payments for support therein provided.

In the recent case of Foust v. Foust, 47 Cal.2d 121, 302 P.2d 11, 13, the decree of annulment read: " 'That the properties and property rights of plaintiff and defendant herein are adjusted, settled and distributed as per the terms and conditions of that certain agreement dated July 21st, 1943, executed by plaintiff and defendant herein, a full and true copy of which agreement is on file herein attached to said Stipulation marked "Exhibit 'A' ", and which is hereby approved by the Court and by this reference embodied in and made a part of this Judgment.' " The court said "The only question to be determined is whether a property settlement agreement had been so merged into an annulment decree that its provision for monthly payments became an operative part thereof, enforceable by execution" and held 47 Cal.2d 123, 302 P.2d at page 13:

"The nature of the agreement, its attachment to the stipulation for judgment, the filing of both documents with the court, and the plain language of the stipulation and the judgment entered thereon make the conclusion inescapable that merger was intended, thereby substituting rights and duties under the decree for those under the agreement. See Rest., Judgments, § 47, com. a; Flynn v. Flynn, 42 Cal.2d 55, 58, 265 P.2d 865; Hough v. Hough, 26 Cal.2d 605, 609–610, 160 P.2d 15; 1 Armstrong, California Family Law, pp. 810–811. Since there is no evidence to the contrary, the trial court's conclusion that merger was not intended is not binding on this court. Fox v. Fox, 42 Cal.2d 49, 52, 265 P.2d 881; In re Estate of Platt, 21 Cal.2d 343, 352, 131 P. 2d 825.

"It was held in the Flynn case that incorporation of a property settlement agreement into a decree by reference does not preclude a merger. Flynn v. Flynn, supra, 42 Cal.2d at page 59, 265 P.2d at page 866. When an agreement has been incorporated into a decree, it is as effectively a part thereof as if recited therein in haec verba. It is of no consequence here that the agreement was complete in itself, for it lost its identity in the decree. It is now the decree that declares the rights and obligations of the parties, for it 'ordered and adjudged * * * that the properties and property rights of [the parties] are adjusted, settled and distributed as per the * * * agreement * * * and which is hereby approved by the court and by this reference embodied in and made a part of this judgment.' * * *

"[47 Cal.2d 125, 302 P.2d at page 14.] Whenever it is intended that a property settlement agreement shall become merged in the decree, it is undoubtedly the better practice to have the terms of the agreement set forth in haec verba in the decree or by way of exhibit attached thereto, and to have the court employ explicit language in the decree showing that the rights and obligations of the parties are adjudicated by the decree in accordance with the terms of the agreement. And while 'greater certainty and clarity' may well be required to support contempt proceedings, we are satisfied that the language of the decree here shows that the agreement, filed with the stipulation, was merged in the decree, and that the manner in which the merger was effected makes the decree sufficiently certain to render it enforceable by execution. To hold otherwise would require the parties to engage in needless further litigation to merge the agreement into another decree or judgment in order to obtain the enforcement thereof by any legal process. Such idle act should not be required."

So in the present case the nature of the agreement, its provision that "this agreement shall be embodied in and made a part of such [divorce] judgment or decree," its introduction in evidence, and the plain language of the decree "make the conclusion inescapable that merger was intended, thereby substituting rights and duties under the decree for those under the agreement." There is no evidence to the contrary.

The judgment is affirmed insofar as it establishes the Nevada decree as a judgment of this state and awards plaintiff the agreed percentage of defendant's excess earnings. It is reversed insofar as it fails to adjudge that the property settlement agreement had been merged in the Nevada decree with directions to the superior court to amend the judgment accordingly and to order defendant to make the payments therein provided. Plaintiff shall recover costs on appeal.

IMPERIAL IRRIGATION DISTRICT, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 5294.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Dec. 21, 1956.

Action to enjoin alleged nuisance and for damages resulting from location of irrigation district's electrical equipment on property adjacent to the plaintiffs' property. The Superior Court, Riverside County, Hilton H. McCabe, J., granted nonsuit, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that substantial compliance with statutory provision that a verified claim shall be presented in writing and served on secretary of district was sufficiently shown, to make it improper to grant a motion for nonsuit.

Judgment reversed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐927(3)

Where a nonsuit has been granted, plaintiff must be given benefit of every piece of evidence which tends to sustain his averments, any inferences or presumptions which might reasonably be drawn are to be drawn in his favor, and in all respects court must view evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff.

2. Waters and Water Courses ⇐228¾

Substantial compliance with requirement of statute providing that where any person or property under control of irrigation district or any officer or employee of district, has been damaged or injured, verified claim for damages shall be presented in writing and filed with officer or employee involved and with secretary of district, is all that is required. West's Ann.Water Code, § 22727.

3. Waters and Water Courses ⇐228¾

In action to enjoin alleged nuisance and for damages resulting from location of irrigation district's electrical equipment, which emitted continuous loud noises, adjacent to plaintiffs' property, substantial compliance with statute requiring that a verified claim shall be presented in writing and served on secretary of district was sufficiently shown by evidence, including disclosure that district received verified claim by registered mail, to make it improper to grant motion for nonsuit. West's Ann. Water Code, § 22727.

Best, Best & Krieger, Arthur L. Littleworth, Riverside, for appellants.

Horton & Knox, El Centro, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit. The action was one to enjoin an alleged nuisance and for damages. The plaintiffs alleged in their complaint that the defendant district had erected and installed adjacent to plaintiffs' property, certain electrical equipment which emitted a continuous loud humming noise which greatly diminished the value of plaintiffs' property. It was further alleged that on or about July 15, 1953 "a verified claim was presented to the Imperial Irrigation District by the plaintiffs herein", stating the facts upon which the claim was based. The original answer filed by the district contained, among other things, Paragraph IV, which reads: "Admits that on or about July 15th, 1953, plaintiffs filed a verified claim to which reference is made for the contents thereof." The clerk's transcript does not show the verification of this answer but it is stated by the appellants, and not denied by the respondent, that this answer was verified by the secretary of the district, Mr. Mathis, who swore that he was authorized to make the verification on behalf of the district, that he had read the answer and knew its contents, and that the facts stated therein were true of his own knowledge.

Thereafter, Mr. Mathis died and about a year and a half after the original answer had been filed the district moved for permission to amend its answer by striking therefrom Paragraph IV, and substituting a new Paragraph IV, on the ground that it was ambiguous and that by inadvertence the defendant had neglected to deny that a verified claim was served or filed in accordance with Section 22727 of the Water Code. Permission to do this was given and the answer was amended so that the new Paragraph IV reads:

> "Admits that on or about July 15th, 1953, the operating headquarters of Imperial Irrigation District, at Imperial, California, received by registered United States mail a document purporting to be the verified claim referred to in paragraph VIII of plaintiffs' complaint. Reference is made to said document for the contents thereof. Denies that a verified claim for damages was presented and/or filed as required by Water Code Section 22727."

At the trial of the case the plaintiffs introduced considerable evidence concerning the filing of their verified claim, and the claim itself was admitted as an exhibit. At the conclusion of plaintiffs' case the district moved for a nonsuit on the grounds that no cause of action had been proved, and that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that a verified claim was presented, filed, served or received by the secretary of the district as required by Section 22727 of the Water Code. The court denied the motion on the ground that no cause of action had been proved, but granted it on the ground "that no proper presentation or service was made under Section 22727 of the Water Code." A judgment for nonsuit was then entered, from which the plaintiffs have appealed.

[1] No question is raised about the validity of the claim itself, its contents or its verification. The only question raised is as to whether the evidence produced was sufficient to show a substantial compliance on the part of the appellants with the requirement of Section 22727 that a verified claim shall be presented in writing and served on the secretary of the district. In passing upon this question, where a nonsuit has been granted, the plaintiff must be given the benefit of every piece of evidence which tends to sustain his averments, any inferences or presumptions which might reasonably be drawn are to be drawn in his favor, and in all respects the court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Bosqui v. City of San Bernardino, 2 Cal.2d 747, 43 P.2d 547.

It appears from the evidence here that the attorney for the appellants sent this verified claim by registered mail to Imperial Irrigation District, and that he requested and received a registered return receipt. The original answer admits that a verified claim was filed and the amended answer admits that the operating headquarters of the district at Imperial, California, received by registered mail a verified claim but denies that it was presented or filed as required by the Water Code. The return receipt for the claim was signed by a clerk in the mailing department of the office of the district. She testified that she generally signed for registered mail, that it was the function of her department to open the mail and "distribute it to whomever it is concerned with", and that on other occasions she had seen letters making claims for damages and such letters were sent to the business manager, Mr. Jefferies. The attorney for the plaintiffs testified that he had personally investigated the filing of the claim; that he went to El Centro and talked to Mr. Jefferies, the business manager of the district; and that Mr. Jefferies stated that he remembered receiving this claim and that he gave it to Mr. Mathis, who was then secretary of the district. On cross-examination he testified that Mr. Jefferies did not say that he had delivered the claim to the secretary personally, but did say that he sent it to the secretary. Apparently, the secretary of the district, in verifying the original answer, affirmed to the truth of the statement therein that a verified claim was filed on or about July 15, 1953.

[2] It is well settled that a substantial compliance with the requirement of statutes providing for the filing of such claims is all that is required. Knight v. City of Los Angeles, 26 Cal.2d 764, 160 P.2d 779, and cases there cited. In such cases the courts look to see if the purpose of the statute has been satisfied, whether there has been a bona fide attempt to comply with the statute, and whether any prejudice to the other party appears. Natural Soda Prod. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 23 Cal.2d 193, 143 P.2d 12; Sandstoe v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 28 Cal.App.2d 215, 82 P.2d 216; Cruise v. City & County of San Francisco, 101 Cal.App.2d 558, 225 P.2d 988; Uttley v. City of Santa Ana, 136 Cal.App. 23, 28 P.2d 377.

The respondent concedes that substantial compliance with the terms of claim statutes is all that is required by recent decisions, but argues that in each of the cases so holding it appears that the governing body considered and acted upon the claim in question, and that no such evidence here appears. The fact that the claim was actually acted upon does not appear in all of the cases where it has been held that there has been a substantial compliance with the statute. Under the authorities, the controlling fact is what the claimant has done in filing or attempting to file the claim, and not whether or not the public body has had actual knowledge or has acted upon the claim. If the rule were otherwise, the public body could defeat any "substantial compliance" by failing to act on the matter.

[3] Under the authorities cited, and many others, it must be held that a substantial compliance with Section 22727 of the Water Code was sufficiently shown by the evidence to make it improper to grant a motion for a nonsuit.

It is unnecessary to consider the further question raised as to whether or not the filing of a claim was required in this action for an injunction, because of the absence of certain allegations in the complaint.

The judgment is reversed.

Dec. 27, 1956.

Hearing Denied Jan. 23, 1957.

Prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Charles W. Fricke, J., entered judgment of conviction and order denying new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that there was no error by court in the giving of and in refusing to give certain instructions and remark of district attorney was not so inflammatory as to make it reasonably probable that without such remark a result more favorable to defendant would have been reached.

Affirmed.

1. Assault and Battery ⇐96(1)

Where defendant was charged with assault with a deadly weapon, defendant was not entitled to an instruction that offense of assault with a deadly weapon necessarily included the lesser crime of assault and battery. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 245.

2. Assault and Battery ⇐66

Mere words will not justify an assault with a deadly weapon. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 245.

3. Criminal Law ⇐814(17)

In a criminal case in which the prosecution relies for conviction upon direct evidence, circumstantial evidence, if any, being merely incidental to and corroborative of the direct evidence, an instruction on the law of circumstantial evidence need not be given, and in such case it should not be intimated to jury that case of the People is one of circumstantial evidence.

4. Criminal Law ⇐824(9)

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon where conviction rested upon direct evidence furnished by witnesses and presented circumstantial proof only in the incidental and corroborative circumstances, there was no error by court in failing to give appropriate instructions upon circumstantial evidence of its own motion. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 245.

5. Criminal Law ⇐959

On a motion for new trial in criminal case because of alleged misconduct of counsel, primarily it is the duty of the trial judge to determine whether there has been a miscarriage of justice.

6. Criminal Law ⇐730(14)

In prosecution of defendant, a labor union worker, for assault with a deadly weapon upon nonunion employee working at job site, remarks of district attorney respecting "goon-squads" and "poor colored workers", that were promptly stricken by court with admonition to jury, were not so inflammatory to make it appear that in absence of such remarks, it was reasonably probable that a result more favorable to the defendant would have been reached. ASHBURN, Justice.

Defendant, having been charged with assault with a deadly weapon upon one Dene Qualls, Pen.Code § 245, was convicted and sentenced to serve three months in the county jail. He appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial. Prejudicial errors in the matter of instructions and misconduct of the deputy district attorney are asserted.

The assault was immediately followed by a vicious battery which inflicted serious injuries upon Qualls. While no claim is made of insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, the evaluation of the alleged errors requires a brief summarization of the evidence, which is sharply conflicting upon the central question of whether defendant started a fight or acted in self-defense.

On August 11, 1955, a group of five colored laborers were working upon the foundation of a building which was being constructed for Superior Overhead Garage Door Company, in the city of Compton. It had a collective bargaining agreement which covered and included Laborer's Local Union 507 of Long Beach, and which required that the workmen be union members. A subcontract has been let to Tom Erland, who claimed to the Door Company officials that he was employing union men. He had five colored laborers on the job and they did not belong to the union. About three days before August 11th a union picket was placed in front of the premises; he belonged to Local 507. In the early morning of that day the men were finishing their job when a former workman came to the property, talked with the picket and left. Soon a group of six field representatives of Local 507 arrived, led by defendant Mueller who was business manager of said Local. There were stakes lying on the ground which had been used to support foundation forms. According to the version of the prosecution witnesses defendant and his group picked up stakes as they approached the workmen. Their foreman was Pearson Petty; he met defendant and his group, asked what they wanted, and Mueller replied that it was not any of their business. Petty asked, "What are you doing on this property?" and Mueller started walking away. Petty then said, "Look, we don't want any trouble here." Mueller: "Well, I'm going to give you plenty of trouble." Petty: "I'll call the police." Mueller: "You don't know who I am, I might be the police. I'm going to give you plenty of trouble and put you in jail besides." One Evans was close to Mueller and as they raised their clubs Petty, according to his own version, ran to the truck and got a shovel to use as protection. According to other witnesses he started toward the street as if to telephone the police. When he left, Qualls, who was sub-foreman, started toward defendant. He had been using a trowel but had nothing in his hands and made no threat of any kind. Before he said anything Evans hit him from behind with a two-by-four stake, the blow landing on his shoulder. Evans then grabbed him and held his arms behind him. Thereupon defendant beat him across the head with a one-by-three piece of timber, striking him six or seven times, inflicting an open wound above the ear which bled freely. While this was going on other workmen ran to their truck to get shovels or other instruments of protection. Some got shovels, one a mattock, another two hammers. As they returned toward Qualls and Mueller, Petty and Morrah kept saying, "Dene, don't fight back. Don't fight back. You fellows please go, we don't want any trouble." As the shovel brigade neared them, Evans dropped Qualls who fell to his knees. Mueller and his group ran for his car and departed for the Union hall. In about 20 or 30 minutes they returned with about 15 men but the police were on the scene and no further violence occurred. The prosecution witnesses agreed that none of them had struck a blow or made a threat of any kind before defendant attacked Qualls; that Qualls did not start the fight and had nothing whatever in his hands when approaching Mueller. In substance the foregoing is the testimony of the five laborers, Qualls, Jones, Morrah, Abrams and Petty.

The defense version of the trouble was quite different. Mueller did hit Qualls several times with a stick but only in self-defense after Qualls had hit him with a shovel. According to the defense witnesses Mueller and his associates, though they conversed with the picket, did not know that the colored laborers were not union men. These union representatives were engaged in checking jobs that morning. They went to this one for the purpose of checking the men's cards and to ask about Jace Marshall's insurance, if perchance he was there; he was not. Mueller and Evans entered the job first. Mueller identified Petty as foreman, presented his building trades card, said he was there to check the job and to talk to Marshall if he was there. Forthwith Petty, the foreman, became violent, ordered Mueller off the job, using many nasty words. "He told me that they wasn't any so-and-so union man going to check that job and for us to get off the job." Mueller walked away from Petty, who was still calling the union men S.B.'s and ordering them off the property. As he did so, Brimhall yelled to him to watch out. Defendant turned and saw Qualls coming at him with a shovel, swinging it. He tried to dodge the blow but was knocked to the ground on one knee. He grabbed a stake as he went down and came up swinging it. Qualls was trying to hit him with a shovel but he dodged those blows and hit Qualls several times on the head, "trying to stop his advance on me." Defendant called to Evans for aid. Evans grabbed Qualls, held his arms and Mueller did not strike Qualls any more. By that time other laborers were approaching with shovels and "were all screaming and hollering to kill them." Petty hit Evans on the head with a shovel, then ran for the truck saying he had a gun in it and was going to "kill all of us union * * * [S.B.'s] if we didn't get off the job." Brimhall then asked the Petty group to please stop using shovels and "that we would get off of the job, and they was one of the colored boys that agreed to that, so everybody dropped everything they had in their hands," and the union group left. Such was the version of the defense witnesses as furnished by Mueller, Evans, Scharer, McGinnis (four of the six union men who had arrived together at the job), and one O'Malley who was working on adjoining property.

Obviously the jurors adopted the version of the facts which had been presented by the prosecution witnesses.

The first claim of error is refusal to give the following instruction which was requested by defendant: "You may find the defendant guilty of any offense, the commission of which is necessarily included in that with which he is charged, [or of an attempt to commit the offense,] if, in your judgment, the evidence supports such a verdict under my instructions.

"To enable you to apply the foregoing instruction, if your findings of fact require you to do so, I instruct you that the offense of assault with a deadly weapon, of which the defendant is charged in [~~count~~ ~~of~~] the information, necessarily include the crime[s] of assault and battery." The judge in refusing it endorsed the following words: "Assault & battery not included either as a matter of fact or matter of law."

Appellant argues that the judge was mistakenly relying upon cases such as People v. McCoy, 25 Cal.2d 177, 187, 153 P.2d 315, which hold that it is not necessary to give an instruction on a lesser offense when the evidence establishes that defendant was guilty of the greater one as charged or not guilty of any crime. It appears more probable that the ruling rests upon the principles stated in Fricke on California Criminal Law, Fifth Edition: "It has been said that 'The test in this state of a necessarily included offense is simply that where an offense cannot be committed without necessarily committing another offense, the latter is a necessarily included offense.' (People v. Greer, 30 Cal.2d 589 [184 P.2d 512].) 'If, in the commission of acts made unlawful by one statute, the offender must always violate another, the one offense is necessarily included in the other' (People v. Whitlow, 113 Cal.App.2d 804 [249 P.2d 35]; People v. Krupa, 64 Cal.App.2d [592] 598 [149 P.2d 416]). Before a lesser offense can be said to constitute a necessary part of the greater, all of the elements of the corpus delicti of the lesser offense must be included in the elements of the greater offense (People v. Whitlow, supra; People v. Greer, 30 Cal.2d 589 [184 P.2d 512].)" (P. 36.) "A charge of assault with a deadly weapon does not include battery (People v. Helbing, 61 Cal. 620; People v. McCaffrey, 118 Cal.App.2d 611 [258 P.2d 557]) or the offense (Penal Code, sec. 417) of exhibiting a deadly weapon in an angry and threatening manner (People v. Diamond, 33 Cal.App.2d 518 [92 P.2d 486]; People v. Piercy, 16 Cal.App. 13 [116 P. 322])." (P. 38.) The cited cases of Helbing and McCaffrey support the text, holding that the offense charged under § 245, Penal Code, does not include battery; that that is not an element of the offense of assault with a deadly weapon. See also, People v. McDaniels, 137 Cal. 192, 195, 69 P. 1006, 59 L.R.A. 578.

In the McCaffrey case this court said, 118 Cal.App.2d at page 618, 258 P.2d at page 562: "Simple assault is nothing more than an unlawful attempt to commit a violent injury on another. Penal Code, § 240. A battery cannot be committed without assaulting the victim. But an assault can occur without committing a battery. The gravamen of the crime defined by section 245 is the likelihood that the force applied or attempted to be applied will result in great bodily injury. Therefore, to make one guilty of violating section 245, evidence of an actual blow is not necessary; but it is requisite that proof be made of an attempt to beat another (1) with a deadly weapon or other instrument not ordinarily defined as a deadly weapon, or (2) by a means or with a force likely to produce great bodily injury. Because a battery is not essential to the crime here charged and because one may violate section 245 without actually striking another, a battery is not a 'necessarily' included offense in the crime defined by section 245. Therefore, the trial court properly refused to give defendant's instructions IV and V. People v. Meichtry, 37 Cal.2d 385, 390, 231 P.2d 847." People v. McCaffrey, 118 Cal.App.2d 611, 618, 258 P.2d 557.

[1] The tendered instruction was erroneous in that it told the jury that the offense of assault with a deadly weapon necessarily includes "the crimes of assault and battery." If the request had been confined to assault, with no reference to battery, a different question would arise. But it is unnecessary to inquire whether refusal of such request would have been error, for the evidence of simple assault is too tenuous to require the court to modify the instruction and to give it as modified upon its own motion. See People v. Warren, 16 Cal.2d 103, 117, 104 P.2d 1024.[1]

[2] Appellant argues that there was prejudicial error in the giving of the following instruction: "No words of abuse, insult or reproach addressed to a person or uttered concerning him, howsoever grievous or opprobrious the words may be, if unaccompanied by any threat of great bodily injury or any assault upon the person or any trespass against lands or goods, will justify him in an assault with a deadly weapon and the provocation only of such words will not constitute a defense to a charge of having committed such an assault." Counsel argue the matter as one of error in a self-defense instruction. It does not fall in that category, however, for it deals only with justification or excuse for assault with a deadly weapon. It correctly states the law to be that mere words will not justify such an assault. 5 Cal.Jur. 2d § 13, p. 233; People v. Iams, 57 Cal. 115, 120, 126–127, 130; People v. Washburn, 54 Cal.App. 124, 128, 201 P. 335; People v. Westlake, 62 Cal. 303, 305–306; 6 C.J.S., Assault and Battery, § 91, p. 943; 4 Am.Jur. § 53, p. 154.

Counsel for appellant place mistaken reliance upon People v. Valentine, 28 Cal.2d 121, 144, 169 P.2d 1, which deals not with words as provocation for an assault, but with the question of whether provocatory words " 'are of themselves sufficient to reduce the offense of an intentional homicide with a deadly weapon from murder to manslaughter' ", 28 Cal.2d at page 137, 169 P.2d at page 13, as a matter of law; it being held a question for the jury to decide whether the facts were sufficient to show that defendant acted under the heat of such passion as would naturally be aroused in an ordinarily reasonable person. Such cases deal with the state of defendant's mind and the effect of provocatory words upon it. That is not the problem here, which is the bald one of whether words alone will justify an assault with a deadly weapon. The instruction of which appellant complains is CALJIC No. 606. The 1953 pocket part contains the following apt discussion of the matter. "In People v. Valentine, 28 Cal.2d 121, 169 P.2d 1, the Supreme Court of California establishes the rule that words of abuse, insult or reproach may incite the heat of passion specified in Penal Code, § 192 (Manslaughter Defined), and hence may constitute sufficient provocation to reduce the offense of intentional homicide from murder to manslaughter. * * * The law thus announced in People v. Valentine has to do merely with the reduction of a homicide from murder to manslaughter, not with a total defense to or justification of homicide, or of any other attack upon the body. Penal Code §§ 692, 693 and 694 state when an assault is justifiable and not a crime. Provocation by words of abuse, insult or reproach is not among the listed circumstances. The purpose of this Instruction 606 is to state the effect of the clear statutory law." (P. 163.) There was no error in giving the instruction at bar.

1. In the case of People v. Fuentes, 74 Cal. App.2d 737, at page 742, 169 P.2d 391, at page 394, which is cited by appellant, the court held the evidence insufficient to sustain conviction of assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury, but it said: "This conclusion does not relieve defendant from the results of his admitted and unprovoked assault on Garcia. There can be no question that he is guilty of the crime of battery and that he should receive punishment therefor. As battery is a crime included in the one charged we may reduce the judgment and direct the resentence of defendant. People v. Kelley, 208 Cal. 387, 281 P. 609; People v. Cowan, 38 Cal.App.2d 231, 101 P.2d 125, [135]." The cited cases support the proposition that an appellate court in such circumstances may reduce the judgment and direct a resentencing of the defendant upon a necessarily included offense, but they do not support the statement that "battery is a crime included in the one charged," namely, assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury. In this respect the Fuentes case is out of line with the views heretofore expressed by the Supreme Court.

[3] Failure to give appropriate instructions upon circumstantial evidence of the court's own motion is claimed to be prejudicial error here. Counsel rely upon cases holding that such instructions are imperative in a trial where the prosecution relies solely or substantially upon circumstantial evidence to convict. Obviously this limitation to a case involving substantial reliance upon that type of evidence is necessary because every trial presents some circumstantial evidence, that being but another name for indirect evidence, which in turn means inferences or presumptions. (See definitions in 18 Cal.Jur.2d § 12, p. 434.) The governing rule is thus stated in People v. Lapara, 181 Cal. 66, 70, 183 P. 545, 546: "It is not now open to question that in a criminal case in which the prosecution relies for conviction upon direct evidence, the circumstantial evidence, if any, being merely incidental to and corroborative of the direct evidence, an instruction on the law of circumstantial evidence need not be given, and that, in such case, it should not be intimated to the jury that the case of the people is one of circumstantial evidence. [Citations.] The reason for the general rule in this behalf is to be found in the danger of misleading and confusing the jury, where the inculpatory evidence consists wholly or largely of direct evidence of the crime. In such cases, as courts have repeatedly pointed out, it would be most mischievous to intimate to the jury that the prosecution was relying for a conviction upon circumstantial evidence." To the same effect are: People v. Jerman, 29 Cal. 2d 189, 197, 173 P.2d 805; People v. Alexander, 92 Cal.App.2d 230, 235, 206 P.2d 657; People v. Arias, 118 Cal.App.2d 656, 659, 258 P.2d 535; People v. Shaheen, 120 Cal.App.2d 629, 637, 638, 261 P.2d 752; People v. Brophy, 122 Cal.App.2d 638, 646, 265 P.2d 593, 46 A.L.R.2d 1410; People v. Van Eyk, 133 Cal.App.2d 562, 567, 284 P.2d 970; People v. Harmon, 89 Cal.App.2d 55, 59, 60, 200 P.2d 32.

Lastly it is argued that there was misconduct of the deputy district attorney of such magnitude that the court's prompt admonition to the jury could not cure it. During the opening argument the following occurred: Mr. Jackson: "* * * Now, here is six men there, and five poor colored fellows. But listen to the testimony of the defendant's witnesses. What did they have to say? They arrived at the scene, they're just passing by looking for some fellow named Jason Marshall, works around there. Also going to check on the job there to see. Of course, what the evidence, what are the presumptions of the picket-man out there. Already they know it is not union. They go back there with six of them just to check on it. We have heard a lot of stories about how unions operate goon-squads—Mr. Sokol: To which we will object and ask the Court to advise the jury to disregard that statement. (Record read by the reporter.) The Court: That argument should not have been made. The jury is instructed to entirely disregard it. The sole question we have here, regardless of everything else, is whether or not the defendant committed an assault or whether he was acting in self-defense. You may proceed. Mr. Jackson: I'm sorry."

Counsel for appellant argue that these were highly inflammatory statements, that the district attorney was clearly seeking to convict defendant upon the prejudice that many persons undoubtedly feel toward unions and union workers, and upon prejudice in favor of a "poor colored worker" trying to hold the job. It appears, however, that the whole trial had the atmosphere of a battle between a group of non-union negroes and a delegation of white union representatives. The prosecution witnesses claimed the union men were bent on driving them off their jobs and the union group asserted that they were being assaulted and chased away. The remarks of the district attorney characterized defendant's activities in a manner which was not far removed from the evidence furnished by the prosecution witnesses. That the jurors were not carried away by extraneous considerations or by passion seems apparent. They retired to consider their verdict at 9:42 a. m.; at 11:30 they returned to court with two questions for the judge, which went to the heart of the case, and a further request to have the testimony of Qualls and Mueller read to them. The questions were, "at what time was Mr. Qualls held?" and "who struck the first blow?" Of course the court told them it was their business to answer both. The requested testimony was read and the jurors again retired at 3:10 p. m., returning with their verdict of guilty at 4:00 p. m.

[5, 6] Upon hearing of the motion for new trial, at which defendant's counsel made the same arguments of misconduct, the trial judge said: "I think that was a somewhat intemperate remark, but I don't think it was one of those improprieties which could not be removed by the instruction of the Court." Primarily it was his duty to determine whether there had been a miscarriage of justice, and denial of the motion for new trial furnished a negative answer to that question. We in turn cannot conclude that this is a case in which a miscarriage of justice has been worked. People v. Watson, 46 Cal.2d 818, 836–837, 299 P.2d 243, 254: "That a 'miscarriage of justice' should be declared only when the court, 'after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence,' is of the 'opinion' that it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to the appealing party would have been reached in the absence of the error. * * * Nevertheless, the test, as stated in any of the several ways, must necessarily be based upon reasonable probabilities rather than upon mere possibilities; otherwise the entire purpose of the constitutional provision would be defeated." It does not appear that in the absence of the incident under discussion it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to the defendant would have been reached.

The judgment and the order denying motion for new trial are affirmed.

147 Cal.App.2d 125

In the Matter of the ADOPTION of Maurice Lynn BURTON and William Darrell Burton, Minors.

Civ. 5278.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Dec. 20, 1956.

Proceeding by stepfather to adopt his wife's two sons by a former marriage, who had been awarded to the mother by a Kansas divorce decree. From an order of the Superior Court of Orange County, John Shea, J., granting the adoption, the natural father appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Coughlin, J. pro tem., construed the statute respecting the adoption of children and held that the adoption of the children was authorized without consent of the natural father.

Order granting adoption affirmed.

1. Domicile ⇐11

Residence is a question of fact involving largely a matter of intention.

2. Adoption ⇐13

In proceeding by stepfather to adopt wife's two sons by former marriage, substantial evidence sustained finding that the children were residents of California, where the custody of the children had been awarded to their mother in prior Kansas divorce decree and the mother was a resident of California.

3. Adoption ⇐13

In proceeding by stepfather to adopt his wife's two sons by a former marriage, where custody of the children had been awarded to the mother by a Kansas divorce decree finding that children were residents of California was not in conflict with a further finding that children were removed to California upon posting of a bond conditioned upon their being returned to Kansas if court of that state so ordered, since such fact did not alter mother's intention to continue their residence in California.

4. Adoption ⇐10

In proceeding by stepfather to adopt his wife's two sons by a former marriage, where sons had been awarded to mother by a Kansas divorce decree and the children were residents of California, the California court had jurisdiction.

5. Statutes ⇐190

Where meaning of statute is plain, there is no room for judicial interpretation, and only function of the court is the application of the enactment to the facts.

6. Statutes ⇐184

The interpretation of a statute must be reasonable and compatible with common sense and the dictates of justice. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3542.

7. Adoption ⇐7

The statute respecting adoption of a child and requiring consent of the parents if living, means that a legitimate child may not be adopted without consent of both parents, unless custody of child has been given to mother by a judicial decree, and, during time child is in custody of mother, father has wilfully failed to pay for support of child for one year, when able to do so, in which event child may be adopted with consent of mother alone, but only after father is served with citation requiring appearance at adoption proceeding. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 224, 226.

8. Adoption ⇐7

The statute permits adoption of legitimate children without their father's consent only when their mother has custody of them during whole of the one year period and when father fails to pay for their care, although his consent would not be necessary if he failed to pay for their care for a one year period "after" their custody was given to the mother, even though she did not retain custody during the whole of that period. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 224.

9. Adoption ⇐7

Under the statute relating to adoption of children, if father for one year wilfully fails to pay for support and education of children when able to do so, after custody of children has been given to mother by a decree, they may be adopted without his consent and failure to support for one year must occur "after" custody of the children has been given to mother. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 224.

10. Adoption ⇐7

Under statute relating to the adoption of children, at any time after conditions of statute, with respect to neglect by the father, had been fulfilled, a child may be adopted with consent of mother alone, unless court, in discharge of its obligation to approve adoption only if it is for best interests of child, should determine otherwise. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 224, 226.

11. Adoption ⇐12, 13

Under statute respecting adoption of legitimate children, father must be given notice of hearing, and court is authorized to deny the petition if best interests of child would be served by maintaining existing relation with a natural parent, in event custody has been restored to the father or he had resumed acceptance of his responsibilities. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 224.

12. Parent and Child ⇐2(1)

The law has a solicitous regard towards maintaining integrity of natural relation of parent and child, but such relation may be terminated by conduct of father regarded as unnatural and destructive.

13. Adoption ⇐7

Under statute respecting adoption of children, purpose of statute cannot be defeated by natural father who has failed to provide for child under conditions described in statute with consent of mother alone by obtaining a change in custody order, or making a support payment after filing of petition for adoption. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 224, 226.

14. Adoption ⇐10

In proceeding by stepfather to adopt his wife's two sons by a former marriage, where custody of children was awarded to mother by Kansas divorce decree, fact that Kansas court amended its order after filing of adoption petition, and awarded custody of children to natural father for the part of a year, did not preclude a California court with jurisdiction from proceeding with adoption hearing. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 224.

15. Infants ⇐18

Different courts and different proceedings may have jurisdiction over the custody of children independent of each other.

16. Infants ⇐19

A California court is not foreclosed from providing for best interests of a minor who is a resident of California because custody of that minor has been the subject of a judicial decree in another state.

17. Adoption ⇐13

In proceeding by stepfather to adopt his wife's two sons by a former marriage who had been awarded to wife by a Kansas divorce decree where father had failed to support them for a period of several years, fact that father was ill during a part of any year when he failed to provide for the children was not determinative of his ability to pay for their care during that year. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 224.

18. Adoption ⇐13

In proceeding by stepfather to adopt wife's two sons by a former marriage, which had been awarded to wife by a Kansas divorce decree, whether natural father was able to pay for support of the children during a period of more than one year prior to the filing of the adoption petition, was a question of fact. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 224.

19. Adoption ⇐13

In proceeding by stepfather to adopt wife's two sons by former marriage, awarded to wife by a Kansas divorce decree, where there were several one year periods during which natural father failed to support his children, fact that parties involved were residents of Kansas during some of such periods did not prevent a consideration thereof in applying statute respecting adoption of children. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 224, 226.

20. Adoption ⇐13

In proceeding by stepfather to adopt wife's two sons by a former marriage, awarded to the wife by a Kansas divorce decree, father's inability to provide for the children for a short time during the one year period immediately prior to adoption was not determinative of the right to adopt. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 224, 226.

Jerry B. Riseley, Studio City, for appellant.

Launer, Chaffee & Launer, Fullerton, and Thomas J. Koerber, Van Nuys, for respondent.

COUGHLIN, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from an order approving a stepparent adoption.

George Stanley filed a petition to adopt his wife's two sons by a former marriage. His petition alleges that he and Ruth Stanley, the mother of the boys, were married on June 2, 1946; formerly she was married to Maurice Burton, the father of these children, and obtained a divorce from him through a decree granted by the District Court of Rooks County, Kansas; by order of that court, in the divorce proceedings, the custody of the children was awarded to their mother; their father "for more than a year prior to the filing of this petition, to wit: since the year 1946, * * * although able to do so * * * wilfully failed to pay for their care, support and education;" and their mother is desirous that petitioner adopt these children as his own.

On September 22, 1945, the District Court of Rooks County, in the divorce action referred to, ordered that the custody of the Burton children be awarded to their mother during the nine school months of the year, and to their father during the summer months, and directed the father to pay for their support. This order was amended on June 15, 1946, when the court awarded "sole custody" to the mother, and directed that the father should have the right to visit the children at all reasonable times. On June 2, 1946, Mrs. Burton had married Mr. Stanley. Thereafter, the two boys, who then were five and seven years of age, respectively, lived with their mother and stepfather.

In August, 1952, Mrs. Stanley, the former Mrs. Burton, filed a petition in the said District Court asking permission to take the children to the state of California and alleging that Mr. Burton was "in default of child support payments in the sum of approximately $2,700"; that her present husband was required to support the children; and, for this reason, they desired to move to California where he could earn more money. The court found that the allegations in the petition were true and granted the permission requested, providing Mrs. Stanley post a bond in the sum of $1,000, conditioned upon her returning the children to the state of Kansas should the court order such return.

Thereafter, the two boys, with their mother and stepfather, moved to California; lived together; continued to be supported by their stepfather; and received no communication or support from their father.

On October 13, 1954, the petition for adoption was filed and on December 19, 1954, Mr. Burton, the children's father, was served with a citation issued out of the Superior Court of Orange county, California, pursuant to the provisions of section 224 of the Civil Code. About two weeks later, he petitioned the District Court of Rooks county, Kansas, to modify the custody decree theretofore entered. Service of the petition was made upon the mother's attorney in the divorce action. Thereupon, this attorney, purporting to act for Mrs. Stanley, the former Mrs. Burton, moved for and obtained an order from the Kansas court directing her former husband to pay her travel expenses to attend the hearing of the petition for modification. Subsequently, Mrs. Stanley discharged her Kansas attorney. On January 27, 1955, the Kansas court modified the former custody order by awarding custody of the children to their father "for a period of at least thirty (30) days during the summer school vacation."

A stipulation, dated January 24, 1955, agreeing that the hearing of the adoption be continued and stating that "Maurice W. Burton does hereby appear" was filed in the California court on February 1, 1955.

On March 11, 1955, the children's mother signed and filed a written consent to their adoption by her husband, on the form and in the manner prescribed by section 226 of the Civil Code.

The petition for adoption was heard on March 15, 1955, at which time the boys' natural father appeared in person, and by an attorney, although no written objections or answer to the petition had been filed on his behalf. Evidence was introduced. The court found that it was for the best interests of the two boys that they be adopted by their stepfather; that the mother's consent alone was sufficient to effect such adoption; and that the natural father's consent thereto was not necessary as he had wilfully failed to pay for the care, support and education of his children, when able to do so, for a period of one year during the time they were in the custody of their mother by judicial decree.

[1–4] The children involved in this proceeding had resided in California for almost two years prior to the filing of the petition for adoption. During all of this time they were in the sole custody of their mother under an order of the Kansas court. Residence is a question of fact involving "very largely a matter of intention." Dreher v. Superior Court, 124 Cal.App. 469, 476, 12 P.2d 671, 674. Upon substantial evidence the trial court found that these children were residents of California. This conclusion was legally sound, as the residence of the minor children whose custody has been awarded to their mother is determined by her residence. Titcomb v. Superior Court, 220 Cal. 34, 42, 29 P.2d 206. Contrary to appellant's contention, the finding in question is not in conflict with a further finding that the children were removed to California upon the posting of a bond conditioned upon their being returned to Kansas if the court of that state so ordered. Even though it be assumed, as argued, that the children's mother intended to return them to Kansas in the event the court of that state so ordered, this fact did not alter her intention to continue their residence in the state of California. As the children were residents of this state, the California court had jurisdiction over them, Foster v. Foster, 8 Cal.2d 719, 68 P.2d 719; Titcomb v. Superior Court, 220 Cal. 34, 39, 29 P.2d 206, which attached at the time the petition was filed. Sampell v. Superior Court, 32 Cal.2d 763, 776, 197 P.2d 739.

The natural father contends that the order of adoption should be reversed because he did not consent thereto, as required by law.

The merit of this contention depends primarily upon an interpretation of the following provisions of section 224 of the Civil Code:

> "A legitimate child cannot be adopted without the consent of its parents if living; however, after the custody of any child has by any judicial decree, been given to the mother, and the father for a period of one year shall wilfully fail to pay for the care, support and education of such child when able to do so, then the mother alone may consent to such adoption, but only after the father has been personally served with a copy of a citation requiring him to appear at the time and place set for the appearance in court * * *."

[5–6] "Where the meaning of the statute is plain, there is no room or justification for judicial interpretation, and the only function of the court is the application of the enactment to the facts at bar." Riley v. Robbins, 1 Cal.2d 285, 287–288, 34 P.2d 715, 716. Where interpretation is in order it must be reasonable. Civ.Code, sec. 3542. The interpretation of a statute as a whole must be reasonable and " 'when opportunity arises, made compatible with common sense and the dictates of justice.' In other words, it is the duty of courts not to be ingenious to find ambiguity in statutes because of extraneous matters, but to interpret them in such a manner that they may be free from ambiguity, and to give, if possible, a construction which not only renders them constitutional, but which is consistent with sound sense and wise policy, with a view to promoting justice.'" In re Estate of Todd, 17 Cal.2d 270, 275, 109 P.2d 913, 915.

[7] It is our opinion that the plain intent of said section 224 is to provide that a legitimate child may not be adopted without the consent of both parents, unless custody of such child has been given to the mother by judicial decree, and, during the time the child is in the custody of the mother, the father has wilfully failed to pay for the support, care and education of that child for a period of one year, when able to do so, in which event the child may be adopted with the consent of the mother alone, but only after the father is served with a citation requiring him to appear at the adoption hearing.

Appellant contends that the facts of this case do not bring it within those provisions of the code authorizing the adoption of a child with the consent of the mother alone. This contention is based upon the premise that, under the code section in question, the mother's consent alone is sufficient only if she has sole custody of the child to be adopted at the time she files her written consent with the court, and the father has wilfully failed to pay for the care of such child, having the ability to do so, for the one year period immediately prior to the filing of such consent. In the case at bar, after the petition for adoption had been filed but before the mother of the children to be adopted had signed and filed her consent to the adoption, as required by section 226 of the Civil Code, the order awarding her sole custody had been modified by the Kansas court, as heretofore noted.

Appellant cites the case of Miller v. Higgins, 14 Cal.App. 156, 111 P. 403, in support of his position. When that case was decided, under the provisions of section 224 of the Civil Code a child could be adopted without the consent of a parent adjudged guilty of cruelty and for such cause divorced. However, the court conducting the adoption hearing was obliged to determine from the evidence, as a jurisdictional fact, whether the parent allegedly guilty of cruelty should be present. In re Estate of McKeag, 141 Cal. 403, 408, 74 P. 1039. The cited case held that it was a fraud on the court hearing a petition to adopt a child, based on the consent of the mother alone, who had been awarded custody of that child in a proceeding in which she was granted a divorce from the father on the ground of cruelty, to withhold knowledge of a contemplated change of the custody order by the divorce court, which would have given custody to the father; and that such a fraud prevented a determination of the jurisdictional fact relating to the need for notice to the father, which authorized setting aside the adoption order.

Three other cases relied upon by appellant, in Re De Leon, 70 Cal.App. 1, 232 P. 738; In re Christie, 98 Cal.App. 158, 276 P. 1045; and Bruns v. State Bar, 213 Cal. 151, 1 P.2d 989, involved adoptions under the provisions of the former statute considered in Miller v. Higgins, supra, and held that a nonconsenting parent who had custody of the child to be adopted was entitled to notice of the adoption hearing.

In the case at bar, no fraud was committed on the court and the father was present at the hearing pursuant to a citation requiring his presence in accord with the mandate of the statute at it now exists and in conformity with the decisions in the cited cases.

Appellant also relies upon the decision in the Matter of Adoption of Cozza, 163 Cal. 514, 126 P. 161, 164, in which the court was considering the former adoption statute, which provided "that consent is not necessary from a father or mother * * adjudged guilty of adultery or cruelty and for either cause divorced * * *" and held that these provisions did not apply to the adoption of a child whose custody had been awarded to the mother in the divorce action even though she was guilty of cruelty resulting in a divorce. Literally construed, the provisions of the statute under consideration in the cited case dispensing with consent applied to any parent guilty of cruelty resulting in a divorce. No exceptions were made. Nevertheless, considering the statute as a whole, the court declared that it was the intent of the legislature to dispense with the necessity of parental consent to an adoption only "where a decree of divorce is granted on certain specified grounds and the innocent spouse is given absolutely the custody of the children—a judicial determination that he or she, on account of specific matrimonial misconduct should not have future control or custody of them—or where the children have been deserted or abandoned by their parents, and such unnatural conduct dispenses with such consent."

[8, 9] Applying the reasoning of the decision in Matter of Cozza, supra, to an interpretation of the provisions of section 224 of the Civil Code as they now exist, justifies the conclusion that those provisions permit the adoption of children without their father's consent only when their mother has custody of them during the whole of the one year period when the father fails to pay for their care, although, under a strict construction of the statute, his consent would not be necessary if he failed to pay for their care for a one year period "after" their custody was given to the mother, even though she did not retain custody during the whole of that period. However, the contention of appellant that his children were not subject to adoption without his consent, because their mother did not have sole custody of them at the time she filed her consent with the court, is not supported by the rule or reason of the cases cited by him, or the language of the statute as it now exists. Likewise, his contention that the one year period referred to in the code section, during which the father fails to pay for the care of his children, when able to do so, is the one year period immediately preceding the filing of the mother's consent, finds no support in these authorities. Section 224 of the Civil Code does not provide that the "mother alone may consent" to the adoption of her children only if she has sole custody of them at the time she files her consent with the court. Under that code section if "the father for a period of one year shall wilfully fail to pay for the care, support and education" of his children "when able to do so", after the custody of such children has been given to the mother by judicial decree, they may be adopted without his consent. The failure to support for one year must occur "after" custody of the children has been given to the mother. The statute makes no other provision relating this one year period of neglect to any other time or event.

[10, 11] In substance, Civil Code section 224 recognizes a father's right to effectively object to the adoption of his children, by requiring that he give his consent to such adoption, and provides that he may lose that right upon the happening of events which are tantamount to an abandonment. At any time after the conditions of the statute, with respect to neglect by the father, have been fulfilled, a child may be adopted with the consent of the mother alone, unless the court, in the discharge of its obligation to approve the adoption only if it is for the best interests of the child, should determine otherwise. In re Sharon's Estate, 179 Cal. 447, 454, 177 P. 283; In re Johnson's Estate, 98 Cal. 531, 536, 33 P. 460, 21 L.R.A. 380. Under the present statute, the father must be given notice of the hearing. This affords him an opportunity to contest the contention that his children may be adopted with the consent of the mother alone, and also to show that the adoption would not be for their best interests. The court is authorized to deny the petition if the best interests of the child would be served by maintaining the existing relation with a natural parent, in the event custody had been restored to the father or he had resumed acceptance of his responsibilities.

[12, 13] This interpretation is in accord with the spirit of our law which, although

"solicitous towards maintaining the integrity of the natural relation of parent and child", Matter of Cozza, supra, 163 Cal. 514, 524, 126 P. 161, 165, recognizes that this relation may be terminated by conduct of the father regarded as unnatural and destructive. The obvious purpose of the statute under consideration is to provide a child with a real father instead of one who, by his past conduct, is proven to be a father in name only, even though related by blood. This purpose would be defeated if a father who had failed to provide for his child under the conditions described in the statute could prevent the child's adoption with the consent of the mother alone by obtaining a change in the custody order, or making a support payment after the filing of the petition for adoption. A statute should not be interpreted in favor of a father who seeks the benefit of parental rights but shuns the burden of parental obligations.

[14–16] The fact that the Kansas court amended its order after the filing of the adoption petition, and awarded custody of the children to appellant for part of a year, did not preclude the California court from proceeding with the adoption hearing. Different courts in different proceedings may have jurisdiction over the custody of children independent of each other. Even though one of the elements essential to an adoption upon consent of the mother alone is a judicial decree giving her custody of the children, the adoption proceeding as such and the custody proceeding in the divorce action are not dependent on or subject to each other. Younger v. Younger, 106 Cal. 377, 381, 39 P. 779; In re Kelly, 47 Cal.App.2d 577, 118 P.2d 479. A California court is not foreclosed from providing for the best interests of a minor who is a resident of this state because the custody of that minor has been the subject of a judicial decree in another state. Sampsell v. Superior Court, 32 Cal.2d 763, 778, 197 P.2d 739; Foster v. Foster, 8 Cal. 2d 719, 726, 68 P.2d 719; Titcomb v. Superior Court, 220 Cal. 34, 39, 29 P.2d 206; Anthony v. Tarpley, 45 Cal.App. 72, 79, 187 P. 779.

[17] In the case at bar, after the custody of the children had been given to the mother, the father failed to support them for a period of several years, continuing up to the time the petition for adoption was filed. Appellant contends that the evidence does not support the findings of the trial court that he "was able to pay for the care, support and education" of his children during a "period of more than one year prior to the date of filing the petition herein" because he was under a doctor's care from February to June, 1954, and in a state hospital from July 12 to August 10, 1954.

The fact that a father may be ill during a part of any year when he has failed to provide for his children is not determinative of his ability to pay for their care during that year. Adoption of Kelly, 47 Cal.App. 2d 577, 118 P.2d 479.

bile in 1953, and a third new automobile shortly thereafter; he has been married and divorced three times since divorced by his children's mother; although he claims to be suffering from a service connected nervous affliction, on more than three occasions he was arrested and convicted for drunkenness, and on another occasion became involved in a drunken brawl which hospitalized him for three months, and it may be inferred that his alleged nervousness is the result of his intemperance. The finding of the trial court with respect to appellant's ability is adequately supported by the evidence.

[19, 20] In this case, there were several one year periods during which appellant failed to support his children. The fact that the parties involved were residents of Kansas during some of these periods does not prevent a consideration thereof in applying the statute. In re Williams' Estate, 102 Cal. 70, 80, 36 P. 407. Even though appellant might have been ill or hospitalized during a part of the one year period prior to the filing of the petition for adoption, the trial court, nevertheless, was justified in finding that he was able to pay for the care of his children during such period. Moreover, contrary to appellant's contention section 224 of the Civil Code does not provide that a child may be adopted with the consent of the mother alone only when the father's wilful failure to pay for the care of such child, when able to do so, has occurred during the one year period immediately prior to the filing of the petition for adoption. As heretofore noted, no reason appears for inferring that the legislature intended other than the plain meaning of the language used in this section to govern its application. Under these circumstances, the father's inability to provide for his children for a short time during the one year period immediately prior to the adoption is not determinative.

The order granting the petition for adoption is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Donald Eugene HAHN and Thomas George Wood, Defendants and Appellants.

Cr. 5737.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Dec. 28, 1956.

Defendants were convicted of assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury. From judgment granting probation and from an order denying motion for a new trial in the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Charles W. Fricke, J., the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that the evidence sustained conviction that the confessions were properly admitted on the ground that they were free and voluntary.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Assault and Battery ⇐92

In prosecution for assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury, evidence sustained conviction. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 245.

2. Assault and Battery ⇐71

In prosecution for assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury where both defendants were acting in concert and together in assaulting the victim and both enjoyed the fruits of the crime, both were guilty of doing whatever either did. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 245.

3. Assault and Battery ⇐55

The gravaman of the offense denounced by the statute is the likelihood of bodily injury as the result of force used or attempted to be used, and degree of force is not as important as the manner in which it is used and the measure to be applied is whether the force was likely to cause serious bodily injury and it is not measured by the intent or the injuries suffered by the victim and such injuries need not necessarily be serious. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 245.

4. Assault and Battery ⇐55

A conviction under the statute of assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury could be had where the victim was beaten with a tin beer can, though such is not regarded as a deadly weapon where the can, as applied to the victim's head, was force likely to produce great bodily injury. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 245.

5. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

A reviewing court is powerless to reverse a judgment where the facts established warrant inferences of defendant's guilt.

6. Criminal Law ⇐1153(6)

Admissibility of a confession is preliminarily addressed to the trial court and exercise of discretion will not be disturbed unless clearly shown on appeal to have been abused. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 2102.

7. Criminal Law ⇐531(3)

Evidence justified the admission of confessions of defendants in evidence on the ground that they were free and voluntary. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 2102.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Pursuant to verdict appellants were adjudged guilty of assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury. Pen. Code, § 245. They appeal from both the judgment granting them probation and from the order denying their motion for a new trial. They now demand reversal on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence and the admission of their confession assertedly not free and voluntary. They were accused in three counts, to wit: robbery, kidnapping for the purpose of robbery and assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury. Acquittal on the first two charges followed the trial.

Appellants met one Adams in a saloon in Burbank during the evening of January 5, 1956. He was a stranger to them and to a woman with whom they were drinking, but on request he agreed to drive the three to their homes after closing time at 2:00 a. m. All four left the sanctuary of Bacchus together, Hahn carrying a six-pack carton of beer. They were soon compelled to stop by reason of some defect of the conveyance. While they waited, appellants and the woman imbibed the beer in which Adams did not participate. He drove on and after letting the woman out near her apartment, the men continued. Hahn sat by Adams who drove while Wood occupied the rear seat. Pursuant to Hahn's directions, Adams drove off Olive Street. He was told to stop and as he did so he was struck on the back of his head by Wood with a beer can. He pretended to be unconscious as someone removed his wallet from his hip pocket but left undisturbed his money in other pockets. One of the men said, "If he makes a move, kill him." Hahn thereupon took the wheel and drove for several blocks. Unable to turn on the headlights, they stopped, revived Adams and as they were in the act of removing him to the rear seat, he made his escape, sought refuge in the nearby home of one Kinzler who called police. Appellants drove away in Adams' automobile while the officers conveyed Adams to the hospital where he was treated for cuts on his head. His car was soon discovered and appellants were apprehended while sitting in a conveyance at the rear of Hahn's home.

Appellants relate a rejected account of the above occurrences. Hahn testified that the three drove around, drinking beer; that Adams refused to turn off the ignition at Hahn's request; that when Hahn reached over and shut off the motor a scuffle ensued; that when Wood attempted to stop the fight he might unintentionally have hit Adams.

After appellants had been incarcerated, they signed their confessions on January ninth and tenth.

Evidence Sufficient

[1] It is contended that there was no evidence as to the size of the head wounds, nor as to the severity of the cuts; that the identity of the party guilty of the battery was not proved; that at the time he appeared at Kinzler's door there was neither blood on Adams nor any unusual mark; that his cuts did not require sutures or any follow-up treatment; that "the record is devoid of any evidence whatsoever that the force applied was likely to have effected great bodily injury."

[2] The record shows that the three men were in the automobile. Hahn sat beside the driver while Wood sat behind him. There is no proof that Adams was hit by a total stranger. The inference is reasonable that the blow was directed by Wood. But since Hahn and Wood were acting in concert and together, they both enjoyed the fruits of their crime, it follows that both were guilty of doing whatever either did. As to whether the battery was severe enough to warrant a conviction under Penal Code section 245, that was a question of fact and the jury found it against appellants. Adams testified that he was hit on the back of the head "with an empty beer can four times" but was not made unconscious; was hit "in the back of the head towards the top with a beer can"; he did "not know whether they took any stitches in his head"; was hit "in the back of the head towards the top, and a couple of other times, a total of four times" he was struck; was hit "fairly hard" the first time; was conscious but made no outcry.

[3, 4] Inasmuch as the evidence was in conflict as to whether appellants beat Adams with a tin can, the jury enjoyed the prerogative of determining whether appellants had assaulted him "by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury." While a tin beer can is not regarded as a deadly weapon, yet under the facts of this case the jury could fairly find that it was applied to Adams' head with a force likely to produce a great bodily injury. It is not necessary that it be found that the can was actually used with such force that it did cause great bodily injury. The gravamen of the offense denounced by section 245 is "the likelihood of bodily injury as a result of the force used or attempted to be used. The degree of force used is not as important as the manner in which it is used." People v. McIlvain, 55 Cal.App.2d 322, 331, 130 P.2d 131, 136. The measure to be applied to the force is whether it was likely to cause serious bodily injury. People v. Pullins, 95 Cal.App.2d 902, 904, 214 P.2d 436; People v. Schmidt, 66 Cal. App.2d 253, 256, 152 P.2d 1021. It is not to be measured by the extent of the injuries suffered by the victim. Such injuries need not be necessarily serious. Ibidem. A conviction under the section may be had where the defendant used only his fist if the circumstances of the assault and the manner of its execution warrant the jury in finding that the force used was likely to produce great bodily injury. People v. Score, 48 Cal.App.2d 495, 498, 120 P.2d 62. The crime is complete where the act of defendant was "a 'means of force likely to produce' the injury." People v. Pullins, supra [95 Cal.App.2d 902, 214 P.2d 437].

[5] Inasmuch as the reviewing court is powerless to reverse a judgment where the facts established warrant inferences of a defendant's guilt, this appeal must on that ground be denied. People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778. Appellants induced their victim to drive them to a residential section of their city. He trusted their camaraderie and ostensible good will. While he was unconscious of their intentions, and was confident that his kindness had not been misdirected, he was suddenly and repeatedly struck on the head by the person who sat behind him. He probably avoided further punishment solely by virtue of his ability to escape. The jury could hardly have been mistaken in finding that Wood delivered the blows that struck Adams down. While Hahn sat to his right, Wood sat in the rear seat. Although Adams did not see the instrument used, he knew the cans were in the car and available. The jury were reasonably justified in inferring that Wood struck him with a can.

While the wounds on Adams' head did not appear to be incurable, they were such as to require medical attention and because life-long nervous disorders are known to have resulted from no more violence than was applied to Adams, it required no great strain of the deductive processes to infer that the force used upon him was "likely to produce great bodily injuries." Such was the problem posed for the jury, People v. McCaffrey, 118 Cal.App.2d 611, 616, 258 P.2d 557, and the evidence was sufficient to support their implied findings. People v. Schmidt, 66 Cal.App.2d 253, 152 P.2d 1021.

People v. Fuentes, 74 Cal.App.2d 737, 169 P.2d 391, cited by appellants is not pertinent. Fuentes struck his victim with his fist. The latter's misfortune lay in the fact that in falling his head struck a steel rail whereby the injuries were suffered.

Confessions Free?

[6] Appellants gave written confessions to the police which at the trial they contended were not freely and voluntarily given. They now contend that they were prejudiced by the admission of such confessions. At the outset appellants are confronted with two handicaps namely, (1) the trial judge admitted the confessions on the strength of the testimony of officer Dailey supported by that of officer Sartoris who testified that he had heard the confessions, made prior to the preparation of the statements, at which time he heard them confess orally to having beaten and robbed Adams. (2) The evidence as to the signing of the documents was fully presented to the jury and they impliedly found that they were freely and voluntarily made. It is the law that the admissibility of a confession is preliminarily addressed to the court and the exercise of its discretion will not be disturbed unless clearly shown on appeal to have been abused. Code Civ.Proc., § 2102; People v. Mehaffey, 32 Cal.2d 535, 548, 197 P.2d 12; People v. Jackson, 125 Cal. App.2d 776, 778, 271 P.2d 196. But in such action the law has provided an appeal from the judge to the jury.

Because the court's ruling in admitting the confessions was not binding on the jury, after officer Dailey had positively denied that he had told both defendants or either of them that if they would sign a statement they would be charged with robbery only and would get probation, defendants and their witnesses severally testified to the contrary, that is, if Hahn did not make a statement he "would throw a book at him"; that Dailey told Hahn that the latter might go to jail for life for kidnapping but that he, Dailey, would not press the kidnapping charge and get him off with probation for second degree robbery; that Dailey induced Mrs. Hahn to get her husband to make a statement admitting the charges. Hahn testified that he had copied part of a form supplied by Dailey but was ignorant of its meaning; that Dailey had promised both appellants that for their cooperation he would get them probation; that Dailey telephoned an unidentified party and reported to appellants that all was set for them to get second degree robbery. Mrs. Hahn testified that when she talked to officer Dailey he told her that her husband stood accused of kidnapping, grand the theft and robbery and although his crimes called for lifetime in jail, he, Dailey would do all he could if she would try to get her husband to sign a confession.

Wood testified that Dailey told him that if he would make a statement, one charge of only second degree robbery would be made against him and that probation would be granted. He was supported by Wood's father who testified that Dailey had promised him that if Thomas would cooperate with the police the charge would be reduced to second degree robbery and probation would be granted.

[7] Because of the conflict in the evidence, the court properly submitted the issue to the jury for their "own independent judgment as to the free and voluntary character of the confessions to determine whether they are admissible or could be considered by you or not." By such statement and the court's subsequent charge, the jury were empowered to determine whether the confessions were free and voluntary. They found in the affirmative. Such finding left no issue undecided and the evidence was sufficient.

Judgment and the order denying their motion for a new trial are affirmed.

No. 16914.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 18, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 17, 1957.

Hearing Granted Feb. 13, 1957.

Action to set aside decree distributing estate. The Superior Court, County of Santa Clara, Leonard R. Avilla, J., gave judgment on the pleadings against plaintiff and entered order granting new trial. Defendants appealed from the order and plaintiff cross-appealed from the judgment on the pleadings. The District Court, Bray, J., held, inter alia, that where case was set for trial and as soon as case was called both sides stated that they were ready and defendant moved for judgment on the pleadings and such motion was granted, there was a "trial" within statute providing that new trial may be granted for error in law occurring at the trial, and this was so even though the motion was not accompanied or associated with other rulings.

Appeal from judgment dismissed; order granting new trial affirmed.

* Opinion vacated 315 P.2d 305.

1. New Trial ⇐33

Where case was set for trial and as soon as case was called both sides stated that they were ready and defendant moved for judgment on the pleadings and such motion was granted, there was a "trial" within statute providing that new trial may be granted for error in law occurring at the trial, and this was so even though the motion was not accompanied or associated with other rulings. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., §§ 656, 657.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Trial".

2. Judgment ⇐443(1)

Intentional failure to give notice in a probate proceeding is extrinsic and not intrinsic fraud. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 1200.

3. Pleading ⇐72

The failure to ask for a particular remedy to which the facts show that the plaintiff is entitled does not constitute a failure to plead a cause of action.

4. Pleading ⇐245(7)

If the plaintiff has a good cause of action, which by accident or mistake he has failed to set out in his complaint, the court, on motion for judgment on the pleadings, should, on plaintiff's application so to do, permit him to amend.

5. Judgment ⇐460(4)
Pleading ⇐236(6)

In heir's action to set aside distribution order in estate on ground that same was procured by fraud of administratrix in failing to notify heir of proceedings after request for special notice had been served, where complaint alleged matters as to failure to give notice and as to fraud on information and belief, there was no error in finding that complaint did not state a cause of action, but it was an abuse of discretion to deny plaintiff permission to file an amended complaint so that she could allege fraud positively. West's Ann.Prob. Code, § 1200.

6. New Trial ⇐18

Where court order properly granted judgment on pleadings because of insufficiency of complaint but also erroneously denied a right to amend, motion for new trial could be made either under subdivision of new trial statute dealing with abuse of discretion by which either party was prevented from having a fair trial, or subdivision dealing with error in law. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 657, subds. 1, 7.

7. New Trial ⇐137

Notice of motion for new trial does not have to specifically mention the subdivision or subdivisions under which it is brought or set forth the language of the subdivisions. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 657, 658.

8. New Trial ⇐137

Notice of motion for new trial is sufficient if the statement of the fact of refusal is a sufficient specification of error to acquaint both court and counsel with the particular error claimed. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., §§ 657, 658.

9. New Trial ⇐137

In action by heir to set aside order of distribution of estate on ground of fraud of administratrix, where court granted defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings, notice of motion for new trial on ground that judgment was against the law and that court erred in refusing to grant leave to amend complaint, was sufficient to fully apprise the adverse party of the grounds to be urged. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 657, 658.

10. New Trial ⇐140(3)

Ordinarily, a motion for new trial under subdivision dealing with irregularity and proceeding of court or abuse of discretion by court, cannot be granted if the motion is not supported by affidavits except where the facts upon which the party moving for new trial relies, appear on the face of the record. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., §§ 657, 658.

11. New Trial ⇐140(3)

Where court granted defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings and denied plaintiff the right to amend, and motion was made for new trial under subdivision of new trial statute respecting abuse of discretion by court, and facts relied on appeared on face of record, it was unnecessary that an affidavit accompany motion. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 657, subd. 1, 658.

BRAY, Justice.

Defendants appeal from an "Order Granting New Trial and For Filing Amended Complaint." Plaintiff[1] Rose Simmonds cross-appeals from the judgment on the pleadings entered against her.

Questions Presented.

1. Is a motion for new trial proper to review a judgment on the pleadings?

2. Did the court err in granting a new trial on the ground (a) either that the judgment was against law or of error in law occurring at the trial; (b) on the ground that the notice of motion was insufficient and not accompanied by affidavits?

Record.

Plaintiff filed a complaint for partition of real property. Defendants' demurrer thereto was overruled. Plaintiff, however, filed an amended complaint.[2] Its allegations follow:

Plaintiff is the mother of Thomas J. Simmonds and is the owner as tenant in common of an undivided one-half interest in the described real property. At the time of Thomas' death, the property was his separate property, his wife Kathleen having predeceased him, without issue.[3] Thomas then remarried. He died intestate, leaving as surviving heirs, plaintiff, and his widow, Anna Simmonds. Defendant McMinn was appointed administratrix of Thomas' estate. On October 2, 1951, plaintiff filed and served on the attorneys for the administratrix a request for special notice. On October 15th defendant McMinn fraudulently obtained a decree assigning the whole of the estate to the surviving widow, Anna. After alleging that defendants claim an adverse interest in the property, plaintiff prays that the decree of distribution be vacated and that plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner of said property; that the rights of the defendants be determined and that the property be partitioned if defendants have any interest therein. Defendants did not demur but answered. At the time set for trial both parties answered "Ready." Defendants moved for judgment on the pleadings. The motion was granted without leave to amend, although plaintiff requested permission to amend as soon as the court announced its ruling. The court first made an order granting the motion for judgment on the pleadings "without leave to amend" and then a judgment on such order. Plaintiff then filed "Notice of Intention to Move for New Trial and for Order Vacating and Setting Aside Judgment on the Pleadings and for Order Allowing the Filing of an Amended Complaint or, in Lieu Thereof, for an Order Granting Dismissal of the Action Without Prejudice to Plaintiff," accompanying it with a proposed "Second Amended Complaint to Impose a Trust, for an Accounting, for Conspiracy and for Equitable, Injunctive and Other Relief." Upon the hearing thereof, the court vacated the judgment, granted a new trial and leave to plaintiff to file the proposed amended complaint.

1. Power To Grant New Trial.

[1] Defendants contend that on the theory that there has been no trial, a trial court has no power to grant a new trial on a judgment on the pleadings. Section 657, subdivision 7, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that a new trial may be granted for "Error in law, occurring at the trial * * *." (Emphasis added.) In our case, the case was set for trial. As soon as the case was called defendant moved for judgment on the pleadings.[4] Prior to the decision in Bice v. Stevens, 129 Cal. App.2d 342, 277 P.2d 106, there seemed to be some confusion in this state as to whether a new trial could be granted on a judgment on the pleadings, where no evidence had been introduced and there were no other rulings on motions. However, that confusion was ended by the Bice case. There the court in a well reasoned opinion reviewed the various cases in California on the subject,[5] concluded that a "trial" is

3. She held the other undivided one-half interest. It went to her heirs and is not involved here.

4. The order granting motion for judgment on the pleadings recites "The above-entitled cause came on regularly for trial * * *"

5. Including Allen v. California Mut. Building & Loan Ass'n, 40 Cal.App.2d 374, 104 P.2d 851; Abbey Land & Improvement Co. v. San Mateo County, 167 Cal. 434, 139 P. 1068, 52 L.R.A.,N.S., 408; Confar v. Whelan, 8 Cal.App.2d 101, 46 P.2d 991; Hotel Park Central v. Security-First Bank, 15 Cal.App.2d 293, 59 P.2d 606, cited by defendants.

the examination of the facts or law put in issue in a cause for the purpose of determining the rights of the parties, and held that a motion for judgment on the pleadings and determination thereof constituted a trial within the meaning of section 657, subdivision 7, giving the trial court jurisdiction to grant a new trial for error in law in granting such motion.

Defendants rely on a statement in Hotel Park Central v. Security-First Bank, supra, 15 Cal.App.2d 293, 59 P.2d 606, appearing in a quotation therefrom in the Bice case, to the effect that a motion for judgment on the pleadings not accompanied or associated with other rulings made at the time of the trial falls within the rule denying the power of the court to grant a new trial. They couple this quotation with the fact that in the Bice case the motion for judgment on the pleadings did not come until after counsel for the plaintiff had made an opening statement and called one of the defendants as a witness. Thereupon the defendants moved to exclude all evidence on the ground the complaint did not state a cause of action. When this was granted and plaintiff was refused an opportunity to amend, the motion for judgment on the pleadings was made and granted. From these two factors defendants contend that the Bice case is authority for the proposition that only if other rulings besides a motion for judgment are made a new trial may be granted. But this construction of the holding in the Bice case overlooks the fact that the court there approved the holding in Tregambo v. Comanche Mill & Mining Co., 57 Cal. 501, 505, quoted from Smith v. City of Los Angeles, 84 Cal.App.2d 297, 190 P.2d 943; "'"A trial is the examination before a competent tribunal, according to the law of the land, of the facts or law put in issue in a cause for the purpose of determining such issue. When a court hears and determines any issue of fact or of law for the purpose of determining the rights of the parties, it may be considered a trial." (Emphasis added.)'" [129 Cal.App.2d 342, 277 P.2d 114.] It also quoted with approval from cases holding that orders sustaining demurrers constituted trials on the merits and that the judgments based thereon could be vacated on motions for new trial. We can see no good reason why, when a case is called for trial, there have to be preliminary motions considered in order for the action of the court in ruling on a motion for judgment on the pleadings to constitute a trial of issues of law.

It may be that the holding in the Bice case, 129 Cal.App.2d at page 356, 277 P.2d at page 115, that "whether evidence is received or not, a motion for judgment on the pleadings is granted, the ruling may be reviewed on a motion for a new trial" is dictum, for the reason that in that case, prior to the making of the motion for judgment on the pleadings the plaintiff made an opening statement and the defendant moved to exclude all evidence upon the ground that the complaint failed to state a cause of action and the court granted the motion. However, on appeal, the same contention was made by the plaintiffs as is made by plaintiff here, namely, that no issue of fact was decided by the trial court and that the judgment was decided on issues of law alone. The reviewing court analyzed cases like Abbey Land & Improvement Co. v. San Mateo County, supra, 167 Cal. 434, 139 P. 1068, and Hotel Park Central v. Security-First Bank, supra, 15 Cal.App.2d 293, 59 P.2d 606, which had held that motions for judgment on the pleadings unaccompanied by other procedure did not constitute trials of an issue of fact and that therefore no new trial would lie. The court then pointed out a number of instances in which it has been held that the determination of issues of law constituted a trial for the purposes of section 657, which provides grounds for new trial, such as granting a nonsuit upon an opening statement, Craig v. Hesperia Land & Water Co., 107 Cal. 675, 40 P. 1057; Carton Corp. v. Superior Court, 76 Cal.App. 434, 436, 244 P. 932; dismissal of a case for failure of the plaintiff to deposit in court a certain sum of money, Green v. Duvergey, 146 Cal. 379, 80 P. 234; the granting of a directed verdict, Steele v. Werner, 28 Cal.App.2d 554, 556, 83 P.2d 56. The court then quoted, 129 Cal.App.2d at page 353, 277 P.2d at page 114, with approval from Smith v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 84 Cal.App.2d 297, 190 P.2d 943; "'A definition of the word "trial," one quoted and never to our knowledge disapproved, is found in the case of Tregambo v. Comanche Mill & Mining Co., 57 Cal. 501, 505, * * *'" following with the quotation hereinbefore set forth. It further quoted from the Smith case to the effect that the sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend constitutes "'a trial on the merits * * *'", 129 Cal.App.2d at page 354, 277 P.2d at page 114, for the reason: "'The foregoing definition of a "trial" includes trials which involve only questions of law. * * *'" 129 Cal.App.2d at page 354, 277 P.2d at page 114. The court also stated 129 Cal. App.2d at page 352, 277 P.2d at page 113: "The Code of Civil Procedure declares that 'Issues arise upon the pleadings when a fact or a conclusion of law is maintained by the one party and is controverted by the other. They are two kinds: 1. Of law; and, 2. Of fact', § 588, and that 'An issue of law must be tried by the court, unless it is referred upon consent', § 591. Section 657 provides that a new trial may be granted on any one of several grounds, one of which is error in law occurring at the 'trial.'"

Illustrating the confusion in the authorities upon the subject of what is "a trial" is the situation with reference to the granting of a judgment upon the sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend. In Confar v. Whelan, supra, 1935, 8 Cal.App.2d 101, 46 P.2d 991, the court without considering the fact that the new trial section, Code Civ.Proc. § 657, provides for new trial on questions of law, held that because section 656 states "A new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision by a jury, court, or referee," a new trial can be granted only where there was an issue of fact, and could not be granted after a judgment on an order sustaining demurrer without leave to amend. Then in Smith v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 1948, 84 Cal.App.2d 297, 190 P.2d 943, the court reviewed most of the cases upon the subject prior thereto, although it did not consider the Confar case, and flatly held such judgment constituted judgment "after trial." 84 Cal.App. 2d at page 305, 190 P.2d at page 948. Among other reasons it said, 84 Cal.App.2d at pages 304–305, 190 P.2d at page 948: "The very fact that judgments have been rendered would seem to strongly imply that a 'trial' has been had, for as said by the Supreme Court in Matter of Lambert, 134 Cal. 626, 632, 66 P. 851, 854, 55 L.R.A. 856, 86 Am.St.Rep. 296:

"'* * * It is a cardinal principle in English jurisprudence that, before any judgment can be pronounced against a person, there must have been a trial of the issue upon which the judgment is given.'"

Then we have the situation with reference to a judgment upon an agreed statement of facts. In Smith v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 84 Cal.App.2d 297, at page 304, 190 P.2d at page 947, the court said in denying the respondent's contention: "Were we to follow respondents' contentions regarding what constitutes a 'trial' it would necessarily result in a determination that where a cause is submitted on an agreed statement of facts, there was no 'trial' because no determination of any issue of fact was involved, but only one of law, viz., what judgment should be entered."

Yet in Pahlka v. McCormick, 123 Cal. App.2d 763, 267 P.2d 390, Quist v. Sandman, 154 Cal. 748, 753, 99 P. 204, and Gregory v. Gregory, 102 Cal. 50, 36 P. 364, it has been flatly held that a new trial cannot be granted upon a judgment upon agreed facts for the reason that because of such agreement there can be no issue of fact before the court for decision. We would like to point out, however, that such conclusion completely eliminates without consideration subdivisions 6 and 7 of section 657. Strictly speaking, too, it would eliminate many matters which would be entitled to consideration under subdivision 1: "Irregularity in the proceedings of the court, jury or adverse party, or any order of the court or abuse of discretion by which either party was prevented from having a fair trial; * * *." Many matters covered by this subdivision are questions of law and not of fact. Section 656 must be read with section 657.

Budrow v. Wheatcraft, 115 Cal.App.2d 517, 252 P.2d 637, and Hotel Park Central v. Security-First Bank, supra, 15 Cal.App. 2d 293, 59 P.2d 606, the cases which have held that the granting of a motion for judgment on the pleadings is not a "trial" for the purposes of section 657, base their decisions primarily upon Abbey Land & Improvement Co. v. San Mateo County, supra, 167 Cal. 434, 139 P. 1068, which so held, without, however, giving any consideration to the effect of subdivisions 6 and 7 of section 657. The Abbey case, in turn, is based upon four cases, none of which dealt with this problem and none of which likewise considered subdivisions 6 and 7. The four cases are Foley v. Foley, 120 Cal. 33, 36, 52 P. 122, and Younger v. Moore, 8 Cal.App. 237, 96 P. 1093, which dealt with default judgments, Gregory v. Gregory, supra, 102 Cal. 52, 36 P. 364, which dealt with a judgment upon an agreed statement of facts, and In re Heldt's Estate, 98 Cal. 553, 33 P. 549, which dealt with an order appointing administrator in which there was no issue joined as to any fact alleged in the petitions.

We are unable to find any case other than the Bice case, which in considering new trials after judgment on the pleadings has considered the effect of subdivisions 6 and 7 of section 657. Because of that fact, we believe that the reasoning and the determination in the Bice case are the better ones. In Stow v. Superior Court, 178 Cal. 140, 172 P. 598, and Allen v. California Mut. Building & Loan Ass'n, supra, 40 Cal.App. 2d 374, 104 P.2d 851, it was held that a new trial could be granted after judgment on the pleadings because the defendant had first objected to the introduction of any evidence, and his objection had been sustained. Even the cases following the rule of the Abbey case concede that if before the defendant moves for judgment on the pleadings, he objects to the introduction of any evidence and that objection is sustained, a motion for new trial after such judgment will lie, as there has been a trial. But how is the refusal to admit evidence because the complaint fails to state a cause of action any more a "trial * * * of an issue of fact" § 656, than the granting of a judgment for the same reason? It is completely unrealistic, and bordering somewhat upon the absurd, to require such an action precedent to a determination that the defendant is entitled to a judgment not upon any issue of fact, but because the plaintiff has failed to state a case in his complaint. And how does a judgment on the pleadings differ in effect from a judgment after the sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend, which in Smith v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 84 Cal.App.2d 297, 190 P.2d 943, and Erganian v. Brightman, 13 Cal.App.2d 696, 700, 57 P.2d 971, was held to be a "trial"?

Reading sections 656 and 657 together and following the reasoning of Bice v. Stevens, supra, 129 Cal.App.2d 342, 277 P.2d 106, we are compelled to the conclusion that where, as here, a case is called for trial, the parties answer ready, and then judgment on the pleadings is granted, there has been a "trial" as contemplated by those sections.

Moreover, as will hereafter be pointed out, it has been held that the only method of obtaining in the trial court a review of that court's refusal to permit an amendment is by motion for new trial. Cook v. Suburban Realty Co., 20 Cal.App. 538, 542, 129 P. 801.

Thus the question for us to determine is whether the court erred in granting the judgment because the complaint did not state a cause of action or in refusing to permit amendment because a cause of action could be stated, or both.

2. Error. (a) Did the Amended Complaint State a Cause of Action?

[2] The gravamen of plaintiff's complaint seems to be the failure of defendant McMinn as administratrix of Thomas Simmonds' estate to give plaintiff notice of the application to set aside his estate to Anna, after plaintiff had filed request for notice. The complaint charges that she fraudulently procured the decree, that in order to do so she fraudulently and with intent to deceive represented to the court that notice had been given in all respects as required by section 1200, Probate Code (the section requiring notice to those who have requested it). The complaint then alleges certain misrepresentations concerning the value and character of the estate and other matters made by defendant McMinn to the court upon the hearing of the petition. Plaintiff was not made aware of the proceeding and therefore did not appear in court to present the true facts. Defendants contend that this is a collateral attack upon the decree because, say they, the fraud alleged is intrinsic fraud. However, the intentional failure to give notice in a probate proceeding is extrinsic and not intrinsic fraud and was so held in Purinton v. Dyson, 8 Cal.2d 322, 65 P.2d 777, 113 A.L.R. 1230. There the executor alleged in a petition for probate of a will that the only heir at law of the testatrix was a named son, well knowing that the plaintiff was a pretermitted granddaughter of the testatrix. The will left $100 to this son and $50 to another person and the residue of the estate to the executor. Without giving any notice to the plaintiff, the executor obtained a decree of distribution distributing the estate, after payment of the specific bequests, to himself. The granddaughter then learned of the situation and brought a suit in equity to recover her share of the estate. There, as do defendants here, the defendant contended that the fraud alleged was intrinsic fraud which made the attack on the decree of distribution a collateral one. The court said, 8 Cal.2d at pages 325, 326, 65 P.2d at page 779: "It is well settled that equity may afford relief from orders and decrees in probate proceedings for extrinsic fraud. [Citation.] But appellant insists that any fraud practiced by Schaffer was intrinsic. The theory of this contention is, principally, that fraud to be extrinsic must be practiced directly upon the plaintiff in such an action. * * * However, it is difficult to see how fraud could be practiced more directly upon one entitled to present his rights to a court than by keeping him in ignorance of the proceedings. It is true that in most cases of extrinsic fraud the defendant has said something directly to the person whose rights were involved amounting to representations that it was not necessary for such person to take any part in the proceedings. In other cases, acts have been held to amount to such representations. But the rule allowing the maintenance of an action in equity for extrinsic fraud should not be limited so strictly as to require as a basis evidence of representations made directly to the one defrauded."

[3] That case differs from ours in that there the fraud was practiced by the executor for his own benefit. Here it is alleged that the fraud was practiced by defendant McMinn for the benefit of defendant Anna. This fact, however, would not change the situation. In equity defendant Anna (even if she did not know of the fraud—plaintiff does not allege she did) would not be permitted to profit by defendant McMinn's fraud. The complaint prayed for the setting aside of the decree of distribution which relief could not now be granted as the estate has been closed and the administratrix discharged. The fact that plaintiff asked for relief to which she was not entitled would not deny her relief to which she was entitled. The failure to ask for a particular remedy to which the facts show that the plaintiff is entitled does not constitute a failure to plead a cause of action. MacIsaac v. Pozzo, 26 Cal.2d 809, 815, 161 P.2d 449. Plaintiff's proper request should have been to have it declared that Anna held in trust for plaintiff whatever interest the court should find plaintiff had in the property. As said in Purinton v. Dyson, supra, 8 Cal.2d 322, 327, 65 P.2d 777, 780: "The judgment in an equitable action of this nature does not set aside the judgment or order attacked, but holds the one who fraudulently secured the property under it as a trustee for the person defrauded." In effect, plaintiff did ask for that relief. She first asked that she be adjudged the owner of the property, then that defendants be required to prove their interests, if any, and that if the court should find they had any interest, the property should be partitioned according to their and her interests.

[4, 5] While badly stated and demurrable specially, had a demurrer been interposed, the complaint would have stated a cause of action for extrinsic fraud, except for the fact that it appears that the allegations as to failure to give notice and as to the fraud are on information and belief. Plaintiff should know positively whether notice was or was not given her. (In the amended complaint which the court granted her permission to file on the motion for new trial, such fact and all the allegations of fraud are alleged positively.) See Dowling v. Spring Valley Water Co., 174 Cal. 218, 222, 162 P. 894, holding that a complaint in which the allegations of fraud are on information and belief and the facts upon which that belief is based are not set forth fails to state a cause of action. For that reason the court was justified in finding that the complaint here did not state a cause of action, but at the time of the motion for judgment should have permitted plaintiff to file an amended complaint alleging the fraud positively, asking that the court decree that defendants hold in trust whatever interest the court may find plaintiff has in the property, and that if defendants have any interest therein, such interest and that of plaintiff be partitioned. "As stated in Kelley v. Kriess, 68 Cal. 210, 212, 9 P. 129: 'If plaintiff has a good cause of action, which by accident or mistake he has failed to set out in his complaint, the court, on motion for judgment on the pleadings, should, on his application so to do, permit him to amend.' The same rule applies to the defendants' pleadings; and when the facts stated indicate that the party probably has a good cause of action or defense, but that it has been pleaded imperfectly or defectively, and the defects have not been called to his attention by demurrer or by a notice of motion for judgment on the pleadings, the court should not grant the motion without first giving the party an opportunity to elect whether he will stand on his pleadings or amend them. The granting of the motion without leave to amend would in many cases be an absolute denial of justice, and is directly opposed to the policy of the law that cases should be tried and decided on the merits." MacIsaac v. Pozzo, supra, 26 Cal.2d 809, 815–816, 161 P.2d 449, 452; see also Beverage v. Canton Placer Mining Co., 43 Cal.2d 769, 772, 278 P.2d 694. The failure to do so was an abuse of discretion and as hereafter set forth justified the granting of a new trial and of permission to file an amended complaint.

2. Error.[6] (b) Notice of Motion.

[6] Plaintiff's motion was based upon two grounds: (1) that the judgment is against law; (2) that the court erred in refusing to grant plaintiff leave to amend her complaint. Defendants contend that the second ground is not mentioned in section 657, Code of Civil Procedure, which sets forth the grounds for a new trial, and that plaintiff is limited to the other ground specified in her motion, that the judgment is against law, which is a ground provided in subdivision 6. Defendants then contend that "against law" would not cover error in refusing to grant permission to amend. See Brumagim v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 24, 35, to the effect that subdivision 6 of section 657 is exclusive of any of the other subdivisions. Bice v. Stevens, supra, 129 Cal.App. 2d 342, 277 P.2d 106, holds in effect that an improper granting of a judgment on the pleadings does not come within subdivision 6 but does come within subdivision 7 as "Error in law, occurring at the trial * * *." As we have heretofore shown, that portion of the court's order which granted judgment on the pleadings (in effect, sustaining a demurrer to the complaint) was proper because of the allegations of the complaint being merely on information and belief. But the court included in the order a denial of the right to amend. This was improper. Thus the order as a whole, being partially valid and partially invalid, would be reviewable under subdivision 7 of section 657 as an "Error in law, occurring at the trial * ." It could also be reviewed under that portion of subdivision 1 which reads " * * any order of the court or abuse of discretion by which either party was prevented from having a fair trial; * * *."

6. "In determining the propriety of the action of the trial court in granting defendants' motion for a judgment on the pleadings, its ruling should be reviewed in the same manner as would be a judgment of dismissal following the sustaining of a general demurrer to the complaint." Beverage v. Canton Placer Mining Co., supra, 43 Cal.2d 769, 772, 278 P.2d 694, 697.

In Cook v. Suburban Realty Co., supra, 20 Cal.App. 538, 542, 129 P. 801, 803, it was held: "The action of a trial court refusing a party leave to amend his pleading after issue joined can only be reviewed on a motion for a new trial, and in such case, in order that a review of such action may be had, the notice '* * * must set forth" the portion of subdivision 1 of section 657 above quoted. While the Cook case states, in effect, that abuse of discretion in denying a motion to amend can only be brought under subdivision 1, that statement must be considered in connection with the type of order being there considered. The defendant had moved for permission to amend its answer. The order merely denied the motion. In our case the order did two things, one right, one wrong. In such a situation the motion for new trial to consider the order may be made either under subdivision 1 or 7.

[7–9] This brings us to the question whether the notice of motion for new trial has to specifically mention the subdivision or subdivisions under which it is brought or set forth the language of the subdivisions. We do not think so. It is sufficient if the statement of the fact of refusal (here, "That the court erred in refusing to grant plaintiff leave to amend her complaint") is a sufficient specification of error to acquaint both court and counsel with the particular error claimed. It appears that a test of the sufficiency of the notice of motion is whether the adverse party "is fully apprised of the grounds to be urged * * *." Bauer v. Helene Curtis Industries, Inc., 117 Cal. App.2d 66, 68, 254 P.2d 931, 932. Another test appears in Williams v. Hawley, 144 Cal. 97, 99, 77 P. 762, 763, see American Type Founders' Co. v. Packer, 130 Cal. 459, 461, 62 P. 744: "To enable this court to review the action of the court below, the record must show precisely what action was invoked in that court, and the precise ruling that was made therein, and consequently it is necessary to state in the motion the particular reasons upon which it will be based." The specification in our case meets both of these tests. In McNeely v. Hill, 52 Cal. App. 184, 186, 198 P. 427, 429, it was held that an order granting new trial specifying as the ground therefor "plaintiff's contributory negligence," was, in effect, an order granting the motion upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence.

[10, 11] In connection with the ground mentioned in subdivision 1 of section 657, one other matter must be considered. Section 658 provides that when an application is made under said subdivision 1, it must be made on affidavits. Ordinarily a motion for new trial under that subdivision cannot be granted if the motion is not supported by affidavits. Bakurjian v. Pugh, 4 Cal.App.2d 450, 452, 41 P.2d 175. An exception exists where the facts upon which the party moving for new trial relies appear on the face of the record. In Webber v. Webber, 33 Cal.2d 153, 199 P.2d 934, the plaintiff moved for a new trial under subdivision 1 of section 657, specifying irregularities and abuse of discretion by the court by which she was prevented from having a fair trial. The defendant contended that because she had filed no affidavits the action of the trial court in granting her a new trial on said grounds was erroneous. The reviewing court said, 33 Cal.2d at page 164, 199 P.2d at page 941: "* * * where, as here, the party moving for a new trial under subdivision one of section 657 relies wholly upon facts appearing upon the face of the record, the reason for the rule requiring affidavits ceases and such rule should be held inapplicable (Civ. Code, sec. 3510). To hold otherwise would do violence to the principle that the law does not require idle acts. (Civ.Code, sec. 3532.) While there is language in two decisions indicating a contrary view (In re Estate of Magerl, 201 Cal. 162, 168, 256 P. 204; Jennings v. Day, 7 Cal.App.2d 555, 558, 46 P.2d 193), such language is based upon a slavish adherence to the letter of the statute without consideration of the obvious reason and purpose thereof, resulting in an undue limitation upon the power of the trial court in passing upon a motion for new trial, and of the reviewing court on appeal. We therefore believe that such language should be disapproved." In our case the facts appear upon the face of the record, and to repeat in an affidavit the record showing the court's refusal to permit an amendment would be an idle and unnecessary act. To require it would be carrying technicalities to an extreme.

While it is true that the right to move for a new trial is statutory and requires that the procedure provided by section 657 et seq. be followed, as stated in Smith v. Ibos, 22 Cal.App.2d 551, 552, 71 P.2d 847, and that there must be a strict compliance therewith, we find nothing in that case or others upon the subject which conflicts with the views herein expressed to the effect that such compliance exists when the tests above mentioned have been met.

Holding, as we do, that the order granting the new trial was proper, plaintiff's appeal from the judgment becomes moot and should be and hereby is dismissed. The order granting new trial is affirmed.

v.

Maxine B. DOW, Respondent.*

No. 16994.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 21, 1956.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Jan. 18, 1957.

Hearing Granted Feb. 13, 1957.

Estate proceeding wherein widow sought allowance during daughter's appeal from decree of final distribution. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Thomas M. Foley, J., granted allowance, and daughter appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that decree of final distribution which awarded residue of estate to widow and daughter of decedent, put all property of estate beyond reach of any subsequent order and made it incompetent for court to order widow's allowance to be paid from estate.

Order reversed.

J. Oscar Goldstein, P. M. Barceloux, Burton J. Goldstein, Goldstein, Barceloux & Goldstein, San Francisco, Erskine, Erskine & Tulley, Morse Erskine, II, San Francisco, for respondent.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

In this estate a decree of final distribution was entered February 2, 1955, fixing and directing payment of certain debts, expenses of administration and a legacy, and awarding the residue in equal shares to Maxine Dow and Patricia Hutchinson, the widow and the daughter of the decedent. On the same day, Patricia appealed from the whole of the decree. On March 8, 1955, she modified the scope of her appeal by limiting it to the awards to Maxine (the legacy, a debt, reimbursement for certain expenses, and compensation as administratrix) and to awards to certain attorneys for services rendered the estate.

On February 18, 1955, the widow filed a petition for an allowance from the estate. After a hearing the petition was granted. The order (which is the subject of the instant appeal) was filed April 13, 1955. It directs that $500 a month "be appropriated from said Estate" for the maintenance of Maxine, commencing as of February 2, 1955, and continuing "during the progress of the settlement of the Estate, and the Appeal now pending from the Judgment and Decree of Final Distribution, or until the further Order of this Court."

[1] The evidence supports these findings, upon which the order is based: (1) the total assets of the estate are approximately $391,937, (2) the widow has no assets of her own to support and maintain herself pending the hearing of Patricia's appeal from the decree of distribution and is completely without funds for necessary medical care and hospitalization, (3) the widow is entitled to a reasonable allowance out of the property of the estate for her maintenance and support according to her circumstances, and (4) $500 a month is a reasonable amount to be paid therefrom for that purpose.

In view of these findings, the probate court was not precluded from making such an award by the rendition in September, 1953, of a decision, In re Estate of Dow, 120 Cal.App.2d 296, 260 P.2d 970, directing termination of a former similar award. That termination was predicated upon findings that at that time there were no matters pending which called for further administration except the payment of a claim of the administratrix (in her individual capacity) and the settlement and payment of certain expenses of administration, and that it was to the best interests of all parties interested to close the estate immediately; hence, no further time could properly be consumed in the settlement of the estate.

[2] That was a markedly different condition from that which obtained in April, 1955, when the order now under appeal was made, in view of Patricia's appeal from the final decree of settlement and distribution, following as it did a trial of some duration and presenting a number of complex problems of its own, respecting which we refer to our decision of April 2, 1956, in Dow v. Superior Court, 140 Cal.App.2d 399, 297 P.2d 30, for further details. Such a change in conditions prevented the decision of September, 1953, from precluding (by way of res judicata or as the law of the case) consideration anew of the propriety of awarding an allowance to the widow. See In re Estate of Dow, 91 Cal.App.2d 420, 427–429, 205 P.2d 698.

But the disposition which the decree of distribution made of the property in the estate put that property, all of it, beyond the reach of any subsequent order purporting to subject it to any other purpose or use; made it incompetent for the court to "appropriate" any of it for the payment of a widow's allowance.

That decree settled the administratrix' third and her fourth and final accounts and reports; found that all debts, funeral expenses and expenses of the last illness, including claims presented and allowed, have been paid, except those which it listed and ordered now to be paid; ascertained and ordered paid certain expenses of administration, to certain persons designated as entitled thereto; authorized the administratrix "to withhold the sum of $100 as and for a reserve for the closing expenses of said Estate, and for the payment of any taxes which may be properly assessed against said Estate, and to distribute the unexpended balance thereof when the statutory period of liability for such taxes has expired in the propertion of one-half thereof to Maxine B. Dow, and one-half thereof to Maxine Patricia Hutchinson"; and then decreed that "all of the balance of the * * * property of said Estate, after payment of all obligations, costs, and attorneys' fees, as herein provided [italics supplied], be, and the same is hereby divided and distributed equally between" Maxine and Patricia; also, that the administratrix file a supplemental account showing all receipts and disbursements since the date of filing her fourth and final account, to be approved in the manner provided by law; and distributed all unknown property to Maxine and Patricia in equal shares.

Manifestly, this decree did not envisage a family allowance and did not leave any property of any kind unappropriated or undistributed. Hence, when later the order for the widow's allowance was made, there was in the estate no property that could be "appropriated" for payment of the allowance.

This principle was established in this state as early as 1868, when our Supreme Court held that an order "distributing the entire estate of the executrix as sole devisee under the will, was the final order of the Court in the matter of the estate, and its effect, unless subsequently modified or reversed on appeal, was a final disposition of all the funds of the estate, and an investiture of the absolute right and title thereto in the executrix as sole devisee; nothing of the estate remained for the Court to act upon. An appeal from that order, duly perfected, suspended and stayed its vital force and effect; and, pending such appeal, no action could be taken by the Court below for the enforcement of the order, or upon any subject matter embraced therein. The subject matter of that order, from which an appeal was pending at the time this subsequent order [for payment of attorney fees for preserving the estate] now under consideration was made, was the money belonging to the estate then subject to distribution by order of the Court. This subsequent order, if effectual for any purpose, operates upon the same subject matter as the former order, and disposes of a portion thereof in direct conflict with the former order, and is, therefore, null and void for want of jurisdiction of the Court at the time it was made." In re Estate of Garraud, 36 Cal. 277, 279–280.

That principle has been consistently adhered to and applied, illustrated by the following cases: In re Estate of Freud, 134 Cal. 333, 66 P. 476, reversing an order for partial distribution because the very property involved had previously been ordered sold to pay debts and expenses of administration (the fact that the order of sale was suspended by the taking of an appeal therefrom "would not justify the probate court in so disposing of the property as to defeat the execution of the decree [of sale] in cases of its affirmance," 134 Cal. at page 337, 66 P. at page 478; In re Estate of Baird, 181 Cal. 742, 186 P. 351, reversing an order of sale of certain property which was made after the entry of and prior to the taking of an appeal from a decree distributing that very property to the sole heir; and In re Estate of Reiss, 68 Cal. App.2d 128, 155 P.2d 862, dismissing an appeal from an order denying a petition for compensation for services rendered in preserving the assets of the estate, the property of the estate having been distributed pursuant to a decree of distribution (the decree, apparently, had become final but its finality, it would seem, was not an indispensable factor for the court relied upon In re Estate of Baird, supra, also 11 Cal. Jur. 257–258, 11A Cal.Jur. 125–126, and 11B Cal.Jur. 785–786). The Supreme Court of Oklahoma, citing the Girraud and the Baird cases among others, has applied this same principle to an order for a widow's allowance made after entry of a decree distributing all of the property of the estate. In re Hicks' Estate, 189 Okl. 310, 116 P.2d 905.

[3] Respondent directs attention to the fact that, until the enactment of the Probate Code in 1931, section 1666 of the Code of Civil Procedure provided, in respect to the decree of distribution that, "Such order or decree is conclusive as to the rights of heirs, legatees, or devisees, subject only to be reversed, set aside, or modified on appeal,' and that when this provision was transferred to the Probate Code, as a part of section 1021 of the latter, it was changed to read "Such order or decree, when it becomes final, is conclusive as to the rights of heirs, devisees and legatees."

Petitioner contends that this amendment (particularly the interpolation of the words "when it becomes final") changed the very basis of the rulings in the Garraud, Freud, Baird and Reiss cases, with the result that those cases no longer correctly state the law. The 1931 amendment had no such effect. It made no substantive change. The statement that the decree is conclusive "when it becomes final" is really but a different manner of expressing the former statement that the decree is "conclusive * * *, subject only to be reversed, set aside, or modified on appeal." The decree never was regarded as conclusive until it became final. See In re Estate of Schmierer, 168 Cal. 747, 749, 145 P. 99; Drexler v. Washington Development Co., 172 Cal. 758, 760, 159 P. 166.

That this substitution of "when it becomes final" for the words previously used was made by the Code Commission and the Legislature for the purpose of simplification and uniformity additionally appears from similar changes which were made when the text of former section 1686 of the Code of Civil Procedure was carried into section 1054 of the Probate Code and the provisions of the last sentence of former section 1701 became a part of section 1123 of the Probate Code.

Moreover, the doctrine of the Garraud case was not predicated upon the finality of the decree of distribution. The decree there involved was not final; it was in a state of suspension due to an appeal which was still pending.

It seems clear, therefore, that the order appealed from must be reversed.

This, of course, is not a holding that when rendering a decree of final distribution the probate court is without power to grant or to continue or to reserve jurisdiction to grant a family allowance, nor that the entering of a decree of distribution necessarily terminates a previously issued and unrevoked order for a family allowance.

The property of a decedent is "chargeable with * * * the payment of * * * the allowance to the family." Probate Code, § 300 and the allowance is payable "during the progress of the settlement of the estate," limited to one year in the case of an insolvent estate, Prob.Code, § 680.

Precisely when "the progress of the settlement of the estate" is at an end seems not to have been definitely decided in this state, although there is some indication that it does not necessarily end until the members of the family entitled to the allowance have received their distributive shares of the estate. Thus, it has been said that this statute was enacted "to make a provision for the family of the deceased prior to the time when the estate could be finally distributed to them." In re Estate of McSwain, 176 Cal. 280, 284, 168 P. 117, 119. See also Estate of Walkerley, 77 Cal. 642, 644–645, 20 P. 150; In re Estate of Jacobs, 61 Cal.App.2d 152, 155–156, 142 P.2d 454; In re Estate of Blair, 42 Cal.2d 728, 730–731, 269 P.2d 612.

The Supreme Court of Oklahoma, construing a similar statute, has held that the entry of a decree of distribution does not, as a matter of law, terminate an order for a widow's allowance which by its terms was made to run "'until said estate is closed,'" the court saying in part "[w]e think the clear intent of the Legislature, as expressed in the statute, supra, was to make provision for the widow out of her decedent's estate until such time as she has in due process of law received the possession and use of her share of the estate so that she might apply the same to her needs. We construe the statutory expression, 'during the progress of the settlement of the estate,' to mean until such time as the above eventuality shall have occurred and hold that the term, 'until said estate is closed,' as appears in the order here involved, has the same meaning." Crane v. Howard, 1952, 206 Okl. 447, 244 P.2d 559, 562.

Similarly, under such a statute, it might be competent in a decree of distribution to grant or reserve jurisdiction to grant a widow's allowance and then order distribution of the property of the estate subject to a charge for the payment of such an allowance until the widow has received the possession and use of her share of the estate unless the allowance is sooner terminated by subsequent order of the court.

We mention these possibilities to make it clear that this decision does not preclude them. We refrain from undertaking to decide them because the facts of this case do not necessarily present them.

The order for a widow's allowance is reversed.

v.

The SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, in and for the COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, Respondent.

Mavis C. Pepe and Raymond V. Pepe, Real Parties in Interest.

Civ. 21995.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 28, 1956.

Proceeding for writ of mandate to compel the Superior Court for the County of Los Angeles to vacate a purported judgment and to grant petitioner's motion to appoint appraisers to appraise the value of property upon which petitioner had caused an execution to be levied and upon which the judgment debtor's wife had filed a declaration of homestead. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held, inter alia, that in proceeding by the judgment creditor the court was not authorized to try any question of title or to make any order terminating the lien which judgment creditor had acquired on the property, by quashing the execution levied thereon, and in purporting so to do the court acted in excess of its jurisdiction.

Writ of mandate issued in accordance with opinion.

1. Homestead ⇐199

In judgment creditor's proceeding for execution against homestead of judgment debtor, an answer or other responsive pleading is neither required nor the filing thereof proper. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1237 et seq., 1246–1248.

2. Execution ⇐161, 163

No one except judgment debtor may move to quash a writ of execution or levy thereof unless the judgment upon which it is issued is, or the writ is, void on its face.

3. Execution ⇐161

A levy cannot be quashed on grounds that the judgment debtor has no interest in property levied upon.

4. Action ⇐36
Homestead ⇐199

In proceeding by judgment creditor for execution against homestead of judgment debtor, the court may not define the interest of judgment debtor in property levied on, or turn proceeding into plenary suit in equity in nature of a creditor's bill.

5. Fraudulent Conveyances ⇐230, 237(1)

A judgment creditor had right either to bring an action in nature of a creditor's bill to set aside conveyance from judgment debtor to his wife as being a fraudulent conveyance, or under statute to disregard the conveyance and attach or levy execution upon the property conveyed. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 1237 et seq., 1246–1248, 3439.09(2).

6. Homestead ⇐201

In execution sale held after appointment of receivers and determination that property has a value in excess of homestead exemption, purchaser at execution sale will acquire only such interest as judgment debtor had in the property, and he may if he chooses take no further steps to perfect his title and await action by anyone claiming adversely, or may himself sue to quiet title against such adverse claims. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1237 et seq., 1246–1248.

7. Homestead ⇐199

Where judgment creditor caused an execution to be levied upon judgment debtor's realty upon which judgment debtor's wife had executed and caused to be recorded a declaration of homestead, which realty, after such declaration, had been conveyed by judgment debtor to the wife, court was not authorized to try any question of title, or to make any order terminating lien which judgment creditor had acquired on realty, by quashing execution levied thereon, and in purporting so to do, court acted in excess of its jurisdiction. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1237 et seq., 1246–1248, 3439.09(2).

8. Homestead ⇐199, 200

In proceeding by judgment creditor for levy of execution upon homestead of judgment debtor, the court, having found to be true all of allegations of petition and having found that property had a value in excess of homestead exemption, abused its discretion in refusing to either appoint appraisers in accordance with prayer of petition, or in the alternative to order a sale of property under execution with directions that proceeds of sale be applied in manner required by statute. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1256.

9. Courts ⇐37(3)

Except where court does not have jurisdiction of subject-matter of an action, one who invokes court's power and tenders an issue to be tried which ordinarily might not be tried in a proceeding of the character in which power of court is invoked, may be held estopped to challenge court's power to act.

10. Courts ⇐37(3)

A judgment creditor who had applied for execution against judgment debtor's homestead was not estopped to assert that court acted in excess of its powers in trying questions of title and making order terminating lien which judgment creditor had acquired, on theory that by his petition, judgment creditor tendered to court issue of fraudulent conveyance to judgment debtor's wife, where judgment creditor did not ask court to determine whether judgment debtor had any interest in property, and in his points and authorities judgment creditor asserted his rights to pursue his remedies under Section 3439 through 3439.09 of the Civil Code. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 1237 et seq., 1246–1248, 3439–3439.-09.

11. Mandamus ⇐4(4)

A judgment creditor whose execution against homestead had been improperly quashed was entitled to mandamus to compel court to vacate such judgment notwithstanding the judgment was an appealable one where remedy by appeal was inadequate inasmuch as lien of execution would expire within eight months after entry of judgment and it was improbable that record on appeal could be perfected and appeal disposed of within that time. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1237 et seq., 1246–1248, 3439–3439.09.

12. Mandamus ⇐53

A judgment creditor was not precluded from maintaining mandamus proceeding to compel court to vacate a judgment which quashed execution on ground that writ of mandate would not lie to control discretion of court, where court did not have the power to adjudicate any question of title or to quash the execution so that no question of its discretion in so doing was involved, and a writ commanding court to annul and vacate its judgment would not in anywise operate to control the court in exercise of its discretion. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 1237 et seq., 1246–1248, 3439–3439.-09.

13. Mandamus ⇐53

Where court did not have power to adjudicate any question of title or to quash execution against homestead, and having found to be true all of essential facts which it was incumbent upon judgment creditor to allege and prove, court had no discretion other than to appoint appraisers or order a sale, judgment creditor was entitled to writ of mandamus to compel court to vacate the judgment quashing execution although writ of mandate has some of the aspects of a writ of certiorari. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 1237 et seq., 1246–1248, 3439–3439.09.

Simon Taub and William M. Sternfeld, Beverly Hills, for petitioner.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel; Wm. E. Lamoreaux, Asst. County Counsel; Thomas H. Carver, Deputy County Counsel, Los Angeles, for respondent.

K. E. Nungesser, Los Angeles, for real party in interest Mavis C. Pepe.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

Petitioner seeks a writ of mandate to compel the respondent court to vacate and set aside a "purported judgment" rendered and entered by that court, and to grant petitioner's motion to appoint appraisers pursuant to section 1245 et seq. of the Civil Code to appraise the value of certain property upon which petitioner had caused an execution to be levied and upon which Mavis Pepe (hereinafter called Mavis), real party in interest here, had filed a declaration of homestead.

The facts, insofar as they are relevant to the questions presented here, are:

On February 24, 1955, petitioner commenced an action against Raymond V. Pepe (hereinafter called Pepe), the husband of Mavis, to recover upon certain promissory notes alleged to have been executed by him. Mavis was not a party to the action. This proceeding will hereafter be called "the action."

On January 13, 1956, petitioner recovered judgment against Pepe. On March 15 of that year he caused an execution to be levied upon the subject real property, and on April 5 he filed his petition for the appointment of persons to appraise the value of said property. In this petition he alleged all of the facts required by section 1246 of the Civil Code, including the fact that on the 21st of February, 1955, Mavis had executed and caused to be recorded a declaration of homestead upon the subject real property. He further alleged that on the 28th of February, 1955, Pepe was the legal and record owner of the property; that on the 28th of February Pepe executed and caused to be recorded a conveyance purporting to terminate his interest in said property and convey the same to Mavis as her sole and separate property; that said conveyance was fraudulent as a transfer in fraud of creditors in that it rendered Pepe insolvent and was made without a fair consideration; that Pepe intended and knew that he incurred debts beyond his ability to pay the same as they matured, and that the conveyance was made with actual intent to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors; and further alleged that pursuant to section 3439.09, subdivision (2), of the Civil Code he elected to disregard said conveyance and levy upon the subject property.

Petitioner did not cause this petition to be served upon Mavis, and upon the petition coming on to be heard the trial court continued the matter and ordered that the petition be served upon Mavis that she should have the right to answer or otherwise plead to the petition within the time limited in the order.

Thereafter Mavis filed her answer in which all the allegations of the petition made in conformity with section 1246, except the allegation as to the filing by her of the declaration of homestead, were denied. She admitted the conveyance of the subject property to her by Pepe, but denied that said transfer was fraudulent or made without fair consideration or with the intent to defraud creditors. As an affirmative defense she alleged that she was not a party to the action or a judgment debtor of petitioner; that prior to February 25, 1955, she and Pepe held title to the property in question as joint tenants with the right of survivorship, but that on said date Pepe conveyed all of his interest in said property to her, and since that time she had held it as her separate property and as her homestead, and that the homestead has never been abandoned.

Upon the answer being filed the court set the matter down for trial, and after receiving evidence made and filed written findings of fact and conclusions of law. The court found that petitioner had obtained a judgment against Pepe, and that pursuant thereto and within 60 days prior to the filing of the petition for the appointment of appraisers petitioner had caused a writ of execution to be levied upon the subject real property and that said judgment was not one of the classes of judgments enumerated in section 1241 of the Civil Code; that Mavis had filed a declaration of homestead upon the subject property; that said homestead had not been abandoned; that the allegations of the petition as to the value of said real property were true; and that no previous execution arising out of the same judgment had been levied upon said homestead. The court further found that Pepe had conveyed said real property to Mavis as set forth in the petition, and found that said conveyance was for a full, complete, and adequate consideration and was not fraudulent. The court further found that the judgment obtained by petitioner against Pepe and upon which the execution levied had issued was a default judgment and was of no effect but had been rendered upon a purported note not signed nor delivered by Pepe, and further found that Pepe had no right, title, or interest in or to the subject property.

From the foregoing facts the court concluded as a matter of law that Mavis was the owner of the real property and that petitioner had no legal or equitable right, title, or interest therein; that the execution levied upon the subject property should be quashed; and that petitioner was not entitled to any of the remedies provided for by division 2, part 4, title 5, chapter 1, of the Civil Code. Judgment was made and entered in accordance with the court's conclusions of law.[1]

1. In the minutes of the trial and in the findings of fact and conclusions of law and in the judgment, Mavis is denominated "intervenor," although no complaint in intervention was or could have been filed, and although she did not pray for any affirmative relief by her answer to the petition.

It is petitioner's contention that the court, in purporting to determine the question as to whether title had vested in Mavis and whether Pepe had any right, title, or interest to the property which was subject to sale at execution, acted in excess of its jurisdiction; that the judgment rendered was therefore void; and further that his petition for the appointment of appraisers having alleged all of the facts required by section 1246 of the Civil Code, and the court having found all of those facts to be true, there was no room for exercise of any discretion by the court but it was obligated to grant the prayer of said petitioners and appoint the appraisers. It is his further contention that the court was without power to quash the execution upon the application of Mavis, she not being a party to the action in which the execution had issued.

[1–4] Division 2, part 4, title 5, chapter 1, of the Civil Code makes no provision for the trying of the question as to whether the judgment debtor is the owner of or has any interest in the real property which his judgment creditor seeks to have appraised and sold under execution pursuant to the provisions of that section, nor does it make any provision for the filing by the homestead claimant of an answer or other pleading responsive to a petition filed pursuant to sections 1246–48 of the Civil Code. It has long been established that an answer or other responsive pleading is neither required nor the filing thereof proper. Stone v. McCann, 79 Cal. 460, 21 P. 863; Martin v. Hildebrand, 190 Cal. 369, 212 P. 618. It is further established that no one except the judgment debtor may move to quash a writ of execution or the levy thereof unless the judgment upon which it is issued, is or the writ is void on its face. Associated Oil Co. v. Mullin, 110 Cal.App. 385, 392, 294 P. 421; Vest v. Superior Court, 140 Cal.App.2d 91, 93, 294 P.2d 988. A levy cannot be quashed on the grounds that the judgment debtor has no interest in the property levied upon Vest v. Superior Court, supra, 140 Cal.App.2d at page 93, 294 P.2d 988; and cases there cited, and the court may not, in a proceeding had pursuant to the provisions of the Civil Code above referred to, define the interest of the judgment debtor in the property levied upon, or turn the proceeding into a plenary suit in equity in the nature of a creditor's bill. Strangman v. Duke, 140 Cal.App.2d 185, 192, 295 P.2d 12.

[5] In the present case petitioner, as the judgment creditor of Pepe, had the right to bring an action in the nature of a creditor's bill to set aside the conveyance from Pepe to Mavis as being a fraudulent conveyance, or he had the right, under section 3439.09, subdivision (2), of the Civil Code, to "Disregard the conveyance and attach or levy execution upon the property conveyed." The property conveyed being subject to a valid homestead it was necessary, in the prosecution of the right thus given him to file his petition under section 1246, to have the property appraised and its value determined. It is evident therefore that if his right to have the property appraised and then sold under execution may be defeated by the court, upon the proceedings for the appointment of appraisers, holding that there was no fraudulent conveyance, the provisions of section 3439.09 which we have quoted are rendered meaningless.

[6] In an execution sale held after the appointment of receivers and the determination that the property has a value in excess of the homestead exemption, the purchaser at the execution sale will acquire only such interest as the judgment debtor had in the property; and he may if he chooses take no further steps to perfect his title and await action by anyone claiming adversely, or may himself sue to quiet title against such adverse claims. Strangman v. Duke, supra, 140 Cal.App.2d at pages 191, 192, 295 P.2d 12.

[7, 8] It is clear, therefore, that respondent court was not authorized, in the proceeding before it, to try any question of title or to make any order terminating the lien which petitioner had acquired on the subject property by quashing the execution levied thereon, and that therefore in purporting so to do it acted in excess of its jurisdiction. Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, 17 Cal.2d 280, 291, 109 P.2d 942, 132 A.L.R. 715. It is further evident that, having found to be true all of the allegations of the petition which were essential under section 1246 of the Civil Code, and having found that the property had a value in excess of the homestead exemption of $12,500, the court abused its discretion in refusing to either appoint appraisers in accordance with the prayer of the petition, or in the alternative to order a sale of the property under the execution with directions that the proceeds of the sale be applied in the manner required by section 1256 of the Civil Code. See Stockton Savings & Loan Bank v. Mello, 201 Cal. 194, 256 P. 202; Strangman v. Duke, supra, 140 Cal. App.2d at pages 192, 193, 295 P.2d 12.

[9] Mavis asserts, however, that by his petition Blue tendered to the respondent court the issue as to the conveyance to her of the property being fraudulent, and that he is therefore estopped to now assert that the court acted in excess of its powers. It is undoubtedly true that, except where the court does not have jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an action, one who invokes the court's power and tenders an issue to be tried which ordinarily might not be tried in a proceeding of the character in which the power of the court is invoked, may be held estopped to challenge the court's power to act. Dobbins v. Economic Gas Co., 182 Cal. 616, 625–626, 189 P. 1073; 15 Cal.Jur. sec. 198, pp. 152–3; 1 Witkin, California Procedure (1954) sec. 149, pp. 412–3.

[10] A careful examination of the record before us[2] convinces us that petitioner is not estopped to now assert that the respondent court acted in excess of its jurisdiction. Petitioner did not, by his motion for the appointment of appraisers or his petition filed in support thereof, ask the court to determine whether Pepe had any interest in the property. He sought only the appointment of appraisers in order that he might sell any interest that Pepe might have in the property, and his allegations as to the fraudulent character of the conveyance by Pepe to Mavis are, on their face, only made as an explanation of his election to pursue the remedy granted him by section 3439.09 of the Civil Code. In his points and authorities filed in support of his motion, before the court had on its own motion ordered that Mavis might plead to the petition, and in his points and authorities filed with the court at the purported trial of the issues tendered by Mavis' answer, petitioner asserted his right to pursue his remedies under sections 3439 through 3439.09 of the Civil Code. It is therefore evident that neither the trial court nor Mavis was misled into believing that petitioner was submitting for trial and decision the question as to whether Pepe had any interest in the subject property. It is true that in his points and authorities petitioner also submitted to the trial court authorities on the question of whether Pepe's conveyance to Mavis was a fraudulent transfer; but inasmuch as the court had, of its own motion, permitted an answer to be filed which purported to frame such an issue of fact, it was petitioner's duty to present to the court his views of the law upon that question.

Respondent maintains that a writ of mandate should not issue here because, so it asserts, the petitioner has an adequate remedy by appealing from the judgment attacked; and because, it says, a writ of mandate will not lie to control the discretion of the respondent court.

[11, 12] We cannot uphold respondent in these contentions. It is true that the judgment rendered by the trial court is an appealable one, but the remedy by appeal is not adequate inasmuch as the lien of appellant's execution would expire within eight months after the entry of that judgment, and it is improbable that the record on appeal could be perfected and the appeal disposed of within that time. See Vest v. Superior Court, supra, 140 Cal.App. 2d at page 96, 294 P.2d 988. As respondent court did not have the power to adjudicate any question of title or to quash the execution, no question of its discretion in so doing is involved, and a writ commanding it to annul and vacate its judgment will not in any wise operate to control the court in the exercise of its discretion, nor will a writ compelling the court to either appoint the appraisers in accordance with petitioner's petition or to order a sale upon the execution levied and an application of the proceeds of the sale in the manner provided by law in any wise control the court in the exercise of its discretion; for it having having found to be true all of the essential facts which it was incumbent upon the petitioner to allege and prove pursuant to the provisions of sections 1246 and 1249 of the Civil Code, the respondent court had no discretion other than to either appoint appraisers or order a sale as heretofore indicated.

[13] It is our opinion that although a writ of mandate compelling the court to vacate its judgment has some of the aspects of a writ of certiorari, it is nevertheless a proper writ under the circumstances of this case. Andrews v. Superior Court, 29 Cal.2d 208, 214–215, 174 P.2d 313; Vest v. Superior Court, supra.

It is therefore ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate issue directing the respondent court to vacate the judgment filed in proceeding No. 640626 in the respondent court on the 11th day of July, 1956, and further directing said court to make an order appointing appraisers as provided by law, to appraise the value of the premises described in the petition filed by petitioner herein for their appointment, to determine whether that property can be divided without material injury, and to take such further proceedings as are required by sections 1253, 1254, 1255, 1256, 1258, and 1259 of the Civil Code, or that in the alternative it order the sale of the subject property under the execution levied thereon on the 15th of March, 1956, and that the proceeds of said sale be applied in the manner required by law.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Kenneth P. SCHMIDT, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5624.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 27, 1956.

Hearing Denied Jan. 23, 1957.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Kurtz Kauffman, J., of grand theft, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that the evidence sustained the conviction.

Affirmed.

1. False Pretenses ⇐12

In prosecution of president of bankrupt, corporate builder, on information charging taking of property of savings and loan association, it was not necessary to show that association had lost money in question. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 484, 490a, 952.

2. False Pretenses ⇐49(5)

It is not essential to conviction for grand theft that there be express testimony by victim that he was induced to part with money by false representations of defendant, it being sufficient if inference of reliance can be drawn from all of evidence. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 484, 490a, 952.

3. False Pretenses ⇐12

That alleged victim had issued its check to corporation, of which defendant was president, and that such corporation had in turn deposited check in bank to its credit, would not require conclusion that defendant had not been guilty of grand theft, where money had, in large part, been under control of defendant, even though in physical possession of bank. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 484.

4. Embezzlement ⇐11(1)

Any diversion of funds held in trust constitutes embezzlement, whether there is direct personal benefit or not, as long as owner is deprived of his money.

5. Embezzlement ⇐20

President of corporation would be guilty of grand theft in taking corporate funds for his personal use without authorization. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 484.

6. Corporations ⇐1

Individual's sole ownership of all of capital stock of corporation does not necessarily destroy its separate existence.

7. Corporations ⇐1

In prosecution of president of bankrupt corporation for grand theft, on information charging that he had taken property of corporation, evidence would sustain finding that corporation was not defendant's alter ego, notwithstanding his contention that he owned all of corporation's stock.

8. Criminal Law ⇐678(1), 798½

It was not error to refuse to compel State to make election as to whether it was proceeding on basis of theft by larceny, false pretenses or embezzlement, nor was it error to omit an instruction that verdict must be unanimous as to type of theft committed.

9. Criminal Law ⇐444

In prosecution for grand theft, it was not necessary to admissibility of records of alleged victim that custodian of such records be produced. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 1953f.

Morris Lavine, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., S. Ernest Roll, Dist. Atty., of Los Angeles County, Robert Charles Lutz, Deputy Dist. Atty., Los Angeles, for respondent.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendant from the judgment of conviction and the order denying a motion for a new trial.

In an information, the defendant was charged with fifteen counts of grand theft and with two counts of violating the Corporation Code. The defendant pleaded not guilty and the matter proceeded to trial with a jury, which found him guilty of grand theft as charged in counts V, VI, VII, VIII and XII, and not guilty as to all other counts.

Count V charged that the defendant took the sum of $10,330.88, the property of Mutual Savings and Loan Association, a corporation (hereinafter referred to as "Mutual"), on or about January 22, 1953; count VI charged that the defendant took the sum of $6,000, the property of Kenneth P. Schmidt Builders, Inc., a corporation, and Southwest Savings and Loan Association, a corporation (hereinafter referred to as "Southwest"), on or about February 25, 1953; count VII charged that the defendant took the sum of $5,132.44, the property of Kenneth P. Schmidt Builders, Inc., a corporation, and Mutual, on or about February 24, 1953; count VIII charged that the defendant took the sum of $4,762.25, the property of Mutual, on or about March 6, 1953; count XII charged that the defendant took the sum of $3,150, the property of Kenneth P. Schmidt Builders, Inc., a corporation, on or about March 6, 1953.

A résumé of the facts is as follows: Kenneth P. Schmidt Builders, Inc., hereinafter referred to as "the Corporation", was incorporated in California in 1947. The defendant was president of the Corporation from its inception to July, 1953, at or about which time it went into involuntary bankruptcy. There were various other officers of the Corporation from time to time, among them being Lucille Clark, who was a vice-president and also a secretary to the defendant, Stanley Schmidt as secretary-treasurer, and after January 5, 1953, Kenneth Bohard as secretary-treasurer. From 1947 to April 30, 1953, the defendant was never a licensed contractor in California. However, the Corporation was licensed with Bohard and Stanley Schmidt, a brother of the defendant, as the responsible managing employees during the period July, 1952 to July, 1953. The Corporation had a minute book and stock transfer book, although neither was produced at the trial. There was a conflict in the testimony as to the ownership of the stock, the defendant stating that it was all owned by him personally, and at the same time the books of the Corporation indicated that the defendant owned about 85 per cent of the stock, and further there was testimony that Stanley Schmidt was an owner of stock in the Corporation at the outset of the building projects of the Corporation in 1952. Early in 1952 the Corporation prepared to construct seventy-seven houses in tract 17209 in the city of Monterey Park, California. The defendant conducted negotiations for the Corporation with Mutual and Southwest. On July 1, 1952 the Corporation entered into an agreement with Mutual in which the latter was to loan to the Corporation money for the construction of dwellings on each of twenty lots in tract 17209. On August 15, 1952, the Corporation, entered into agreements with Southwest wherein the remaining fifty-seven houses in tract 17209 were to be financed by Southwest. Each of the agreements as between Southwest and the Corporation contained a trust clause which read in part as follows:

"* * * The undersigned, and each of them agree that all funds received hereunder are received in trust for the purpose of paying in full all contractors and/or material men and/or laborers (other than the undersigned) then or theretofore engaged in said construction; and that the undersigned shall not have any beneficial interest in said funds unless and until said purpose has been fulfilled."

On April 18, 1952, a bank account was opened for the Corporation by corporate resolution of April 14, 1952, at the Monterey Park branch of the Bank of America. Dealings and transactions in regard to matters having to do with tract 17209 were in the name of the Corporation. Contracts were signed by the defendant in his corporate capacity and dealings were in the corporate name with the house buyers in tract 17209, and with material and labor contractors. Accounts in the books of the Corporation showed that there was $59,888.77, which was received as payments from house buyers which was used by the Corporation for general expenses, including personal expenses of the defendant, and which sums were not placed in escrow. The defendant, acting for the Corporation, bought the land (tract 17209) from the Security Development Company for $89,600, but executed a corporate note in that sum for the purchase price. The note was to be repaid at the rate of $1,500 from an escrow on each lot as it was sold.

The check records of the Corporation and other exhibits disclose that there were various expenditures on a personal residence of the defendant in Pasadena, and such checks were posted to the general ledger account of the Corporation. The personal residence of the defendant was never an asset of the Corporation before May 22, 1953, at which time it was deeded to the Corporation. Before that time, namely on April 1, 1953, the defendant had sought to divest himself of any interest he might have had in the house by executing a grant deed of his right, title and interest to his wife, Mary W. Schmidt. There were expenditures of large sums of Corporation funds on the yacht Hilaria, which was owned by the Harrison Finance Company and the defendant as an individual, and not by the Corporation. A race horse, Pusan, was carried on the books of the Corporation, having been purchased with $4,000 of corporate moneys, and various expenditures were made on the race horse from corporate funds. No money came into the Corporation from activities of the horse with the exception of a cash deposit by the defendant in December of 1952, which apparently was the winnings, or a part of such, from a wager made on the horse when it ran at the Tanforan Race Track.

There is no contention that there were any corporate resolutions authorizing the purchase of a race horse, expenditures thereon, expenditures on a yacht, expenditures for living expenses, nor for a personal residence for the defendant, and expenditures thereon.

The funds received by the Corporation from Mutual and from Southwest were to be used solely for the construction of houses and not for preliminary expenses nor personal expense, and the proceeds of these loans were set up in the corporate books as funds held in trust.

The ledger sheets and deposit slips of the corporate bank account showed a pattern of expenditures, and considered with the books of the Corporation, showed that the books accurately reflect the business of the Corporation as to deposits and withdrawals of corporate funds, with the exception of some defalcations on the part of the defendant where information was kept from the employee of the Corporation charged with making entries in the books.

During the period from January 22, 1953, to March 6, 1953, the defendant made withdrawals from the corporate account for personal expenses in the amount of about $45,000. These consisted of expenditures on the yacht Hilaria, expenditures on the personal residence of the defendant, cash withdrawals, expenses of race horses, and living expenses, as well as the sum of $5,132.44, as charged in count VII, and $3,150, as charged in count XII, which sums were never deposited in the Corporation account and no information was given to the employee of the Corporation charged with making entries in the corporate books.

The defendant was fully aware that the Corporation was unable to meet its bills for material, labor and construction costs on tract 17209, and particularly the bills and debts in respect to the lots on which funds were advanced by the loan company.

As to count V the evidence shows that the loan from Mutual to the Corporation of July 1, 1952, included lots 48 and 51 through 57 of tract 17209, and that in accordance with the contract and in reliance upon the representations by the defendant to Mutual that all bills were paid for construction and labor on the lots above set forth, a check was issued by Mutual to the Corporation for $10,330.88, and the funds were received by the Corporation. The representations so made by the defendant were false, as shown by the books of the Corporation as of January 22, 1953, and the funds were not used for the purposes for which they were paid to the Corporation by Mutual, but were used by the defendant for his own purposes as hereinafter related.

As to counts VI and VII, the evidence showed that Southwest had agreed to loan to the Corporation about $372,000, in accordance with the agreement of August 15, 1952. In keeping with the trust clause an advance to the Corporation was made of such trust moneys by Southwest in the sum of $20,000, on February 25, 1953. This sum was deposited in the Corporation account at the Monterey Park branch of the Bank of America on February 25, 1953, and the defendant, on the same day, received $6,000 cash from the corporate bank account on a counter-receipt, and that money was paid from the trust moneys of Southwest. The $20,000 would not have been paid to the Corporation by Southwest if it had been known that the money would not be used for payment of bills on the particular lots. On the same day, February 25, 1953, the defendant cashed a check payable to the Corporation which had been issued by Mutual in accordance with the loan agreement of July 1, 1952, in the sum of $5,132.44, receiving cash for it by having a locker room attendant at a country club serve as an accommodation endorser on the check. No information was given to the employee of the Corporation charged with making the proper entries on the corporate books of this check. The check from Mutual was paid under the terms of the agreement in reliance on the representation by the defendant that all of the bills were paid. The representation was false.

It would appear that the defendant had at least $11,132.44 in cash in funds of the Corporation in his possession on February 25, 1953. On February 27, 1953, the defendant gave about $1,000 to a Raymond Thomas, a horse trainer, for the purchase of a race horse named Digno, and the defendant gave $1,129.50 to the Sheriff of Los Angeles County to release an attachment on the race horse Pusan, which was then running at the Santa Anita Race Track. Further, on February 27, 1953, the defendant paid $2,400 in cash to the Balboa Bay Club.

As to count VIII, the evidence showed a receipt by the Corporation of $4,762.25 from Mutual (tract 17209) on March 6, 1953, which sum was paid to the Corporation in reliance upon the defendant's representations that all of the bills were paid. The representations were false, and the funds were used as hereinafter set forth.

As to count XII, the evidence showed that in accordance with an agreement between the Corporation and Mutual for construction loans on twenty-nine houses to be constructed in tract 10409, Mutual delivered a check dated March 5, 1953, for $3,150, to the Corporation. The defendant cashed the check at the Bank of America, Monterey Park branch, on March 6, 1953, and did not deposit the money in the Corporation account or use it for Corporation purposes.

[1–3] The defendant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdicts. Considering first the contention as it pertains to count V, appellant states that the evidence does not disclose that Mutual ever lost the money in question. It has been held in cases of this type that it is not necessary to show that the victim was actually out of pocket. People v. Pugh, 137 Cal.App.2d 226, 233, 289 P.2d 826; People v. Gloster, 102 Cal.App.2d 872, 874, 228 P.2d 578. Further, appellant asserts that the president of Mutual was not necessarily cognizant of the particular transaction. The testimony was such that the jury could, and obviously did, conclude that the president was in a position to speak for Mutual, and that the loans would not have been made otherwise than under the conditions which were represented to them as being the truth. If there were any discrepancies or contradictions, it was up to the jury to determine such. People v. Gloster, supra. Furthermore, it is not essential that there be express testimony by the victim that he was induced to part with money by the false representations of the accused. As said in People v. Frankfort, 114 Cal.App.2d 680, at page 699, 251 P. 2d 401, at page 413: "This is not true. '* * * the express testimony of a victim of false pretense that he was induced to part with his money by the fraudulent statements of the accused is not essential. It is sufficient if the inference of his reliance could have been drawn from all the evidence.' People v. Gordon, supra, [71 Cal.App.2d 606, 163 P.2d 110]; People v. Schmidt, 79 Cal.App. 413, 418, 249 P. 832, 250 P. 1104. * * *" Appellant further makes the claim that Mutual did not deliver the money to him nor to the Corporation; that in fact, Mutual issued its check to the Corporation, which in turn deposited the check in the bank to its credit, and the funds thereby went into the general funds of the bank. There is no merit in this contention. See, People v. Frankfort, supra; People v. Hatch, 163 Cal. 368, 375, 125 P. 907. The money was, without question, in large part under the control of the defendant, even though it was, for a time, in the physical possession of the bank. It has been held that it was not necessary to show that the defendant himself actually took the full amount in question, or that he benefited personally. People v. Jones, 36 Cal.2d 373, 381–382, 224 P.2d 353; People v. Ashley, 42 Cal.2d 246, 259, 267 P.2d 271; People v. Cheeley, 106 Cal.App.2d 748, 752–753, 236 P.2d 22.

[4, 5] Referring next to count VI, appellant contends that there was no theft from Southwest because Southwest transferred the money to the Corporation without requiring any special set up directing how the funds were to be used and that therefore the funds became the property of the bank. Appellant further sets forth that the money was used to carry on a collateral business matter in the name of the Corporation and that the appellant had a right to have a drawing account for salary and otherwise, and also that the Corporation was the alter ego of the defendant. We have already discussed a part of the appellant's contentions under count V. It is clear from the evidence that the defendant applied moneys to uses and for purposes entirely different from that for which they were received. There was the requisite parting with the moneys by Southwest. The agreement between Southwest and the defendant contained a trust clause specifying that the funds received in trust were to pay contractors, materialmen and laborers. It was appropriately said in People v. Pierce, 110 Cal.App.2d 598, at page 609, 243 P.2d 585, at page 592: "* * * Any diversion of funds held in trust constitutes embezzlement whether there is direct personal benefit or not as long as the owner is deprived of his money. People v. Talbot, 220 Cal. 3, 28 P.2d 1057; People v. Braiker, 61 Cal.App.2d 406, 143 P.2d 89. * * *" The jury could reasonably conclude that the purchase of race horses, running them at various race tracks, wagering on them, supporting a yacht and moneys to a yacht club were not wholly related to the legitimate business of the Corporation. In respect to the showing of theft from the Corporation, it is sufficient that the appellant took the money of the Corporation for personal use without authorization. People v. Moorhead, 104 Cal.App.2d 688, 694, 232 P.2d 268.

[6, 7] In respect to the claim that the Corporation was defendant's alter ego, the jury had ample evidence from which they could, and did determine that there was a distinct, formal corporate existence. However, even where the circumstances indicate that all of the capital stock of a corporation is owned or controlled by one person, this does not necessarily destroy its separate existence. Erkenbrecher v. Grant, 187 Cal. 7, 11, 200 P. 641. In the case of People v. Talbot, 220 Cal. 3, at page 14, 28 P.2d 1057, at page 1061, the court said, among other things: "The element of felonious intent in every contested criminal case must necessarily be determined from the facts and circumstances of the case. People v. Kirk, 94 Cal.App. 378, 271 P. 347. In our opinion the law is well expressed in the case of Mangham v. State, 11 Ga.App. 427, 75 S.E. 512, 516, where the court says: 'An officer or agent of a corporation cannot take money of the corporation which is entrusted to him, or which comes into his possession by virtue of his office or agency, and use it even temporarily for his personal benefit and avoid criminal responsibility by calling it a loan. The law calls such a transaction a wrongful conversion, from which a fraudulent intent can be inferred'. [Citing cases.]"

In People v. Foss, 7 Cal.2d 669, 62 P.2d 372, the appellant contended that he was a member and officer of the club involved, and that as one of the owners thereof, he could not embezzle from himself. The court said, 7 Cal.2d at page 670, 62 P.2d at page 373: "The profits or proceeds from the sale of the tickets for the performance to be given were primarily for the erection of or securing a clubhouse. It therefore appears that appellant was neither a partner nor one engaged with others in a joint enterprise. He falls within the definition of an 'Agent,' given in section 2295 of the Civil Code as 'one who represents another, called the principal, in dealings with third persons.' In the transactions here complained of, and of which appellant was guilty, he was acting for and representing the Pasadena Stage and Screen Club. It has been found that he fraudulently appropriated money rightfully intended for, and the property of, the club, and he was guilty of embezzlement as defined in sections 503 and 504 of the Penal Code."

As to the remaining counts, appellant simply repeats the matters which have already been disposed of.

[8] With reference to the argument that the court erred in not compelling the plaintiff to make an election as to whether they were proceeding on the basis of theft by larceny, false pretenses or embezzlement, in our opinion an election is not required. In People v. Fewkes, 214 Cal. 142, at page 149, 4 P.2d 538, at page 541, the court said: "The information charged the offense as 'Grand Theft, a felony, committed as follows' (reciting the particulars), under the authority of sections 484, 490a, and 952 of the Penal Code as amended and added in 1927 (St.1927, pp. 1043, 1046, 1047). This was sufficient. [Citing cases.] It is not necessary that the information state the kind of grand theft with which the defendant is charged in order to comply with subdivision 2 of section 950 of the Penal Code. People v. Manchell, 91 Cal.App. 788, 267 P. 718.

"Under the new procedure, it is obviously unnecessary and improper to compel the district attorney, in advance of the proof, to elect upon what theory the prosecution is to proceed, whether larceny, false pretense, trick, and device, embezzlement, etc. These distinctions in the charge and proof obtained under the old practice, but are done away with in the new. They were eliminated, not only for the purpose of simplifying procedure, but also to relieve the courts of the necessity of drawing fine distinctions as to whether the particular crime charged had been proved, and the prosecution of charging in advance, at its peril, an offense which the evidence, because of such fine distinctions, might show not to exist, although the guilt of the defendant be manifest. People v. Myers, supra [206 Cal. 480, 275 P. 219]."

Also, in People v. Ashley, 42 Cal.2d 246, at page 258, 267 P.2d 271, at page 279, the court stated: "Although the crimes of larceny by trick and device and obtaining property by false pretenses are much alike, they are aimed at different criminal acquisitive techniques. Larceny by trick and device is the appropriation of property, the possession of which was fraudulently acquired; obtaining property by false pretenses is the fraudulent or deceitful acquisition of both title and possession. [Citing cases.] In this state, these two offenses, with other larcenous crimes, have been consolidated into the single crime of theft, Pen.Code, § 484, but their elements have not been changed thereby. [Citing cases.] The purpose of the consolidation was to remove the technicalities that existed in the pleading and proof of these crimes at common law. Indictments and informations charging the crime of 'theft' can now simply allege an 'unlawful taking.' Pen. Code, §§ 951, 952. Juries need no longer be concerned with the technical differences between the several types of theft, and can return a general verdict of guilty if they find that an 'unlawful taking' has been proved. [Citing cases.] The elements of the several types of theft included within section 484 have not been changed, however, and a judgment of conviction of theft, based on a general verdict of guilty, can be sustained only if the evidence discloses the elements of one of the consolidated offenses."

Further, in our opinnon, it was not error to omit an instruction that the verdict must be unanimous as to the type of theft committed. People v. Nor Woods, 37 Cal.2d 584, 586, 233 P.2d 897.

[9] Appellant asserts that the court erred in overruling his objections to the introduction into evidence of certain books, documents and records of the loan associations, on the ground that there was no proper foundation laid, we are of the opinion that under the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure, section 1953f, the evidence was properly introduced and that the language used in People v. Fowzer, 127 Cal. App.2d 742, at pages 747–748, 274 P.2d 471, at page 474, is appropriate, where the court said: "The records here in question were not rendered inadmissible by failure to preliminarily show that the witness was the actual custodian thereof. Section 1953f of the Code of Civil Procedure specifically provides that such records shall be competent evidence '* * * if the custodian or other qualified witness testifies to its identity and the mode of its preparation, and if it was made in the regular course of business, at or near the time of the act, condition or event, and if, in the opinion of the court, the sources of information, method and time of preparation were such as to justify its admission.' (Emphasis added.)

"The hard and fast rule that the custodian of the records must be produced is specifically dispensed with by the statute. Undoubtedly the legislature determined that such a rule provoked undue interference with the operation of business enterprises and was unnecessary to insure reliable evidence. In the words of our Supreme Court in Loper v. Morrison, 23 Cal.2d 600, 608, 609, 145 P.2d 1, 5: 'It is the object of the business records statutes to eliminate the necessity of calling each witness, and to substitute the record of the transaction or event. It is not necessary that the person making the entry have personal knowledge of the transaction. (Citing cases.)' See also Nichols v. McCoy, 38 Cal.2d 447, 449, 450, 240 P.2d 569.

"Where, as in the case now before us, the determination of the trial court that the foundation laid was sufficient is a deduction reasonably drawn from the evidence, such conclusion is binding upon an appellate court [citing cases.] In the case at bar the testimony of the witness that he was an officer of the bank and had access to the records is quite sufficient to support the ruling of the trial judge. From the testimony given by the assistant cashier of the bank it could well be inferred that the records were prepared in the usual manner and regular course of the bank's business. As was said in Thompson v. Machado, 78 Cal.App.2d 870, 873, 178 P.2d 838 * * : '" * * In the case of the conduct of the business and affairs of an establishment, it is presumed that the regular course of business of such establishment is followed, Code Civ.Proc., § 1963, subd. 20, and that the books and records of an establishment truly reflect the facts set forth in such books Code Civ.Proc., § 1953f."'"

We are of the opinion that there is no merit in the remaining contentions of the appellant, and further that the jury was fully and fairly instructed, and that there was no prejudicial error in the case.

Judgment and order are, and each is, affirmed.

BRADEN COPPER COMPANY, Petitioner,

v.

INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION of the State of California, and John C. Viera, and State of California (Subsequent Injuries Fund), Respondents.

No. 17047.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 27, 1956.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Jan. 25, 1957.

Hearing Denied Feb. 25, 1957.

Workmen's compensation case. The Commission made an award against foreign corporation, and it appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that the appellant had not made a general appearance, either by cross-examining defendant or by questioning constitutionality of Labor Code section.

Reversed with directions.

1. Workmen's Compensation ⇐1183

Where compensation claimant gave, on direct examination, testimony tending to show that defendant foreign corporation might have been active to some extent in California in recruiting engineers for work in its Chilean mine, doing so through medium of local engineering society which conducted an employment service for engineers and had been instrumental in putting claimant and defendant in touch with each other, cross-examination, by which defendant sought to keep claimant's testimony within limits of his personal knowledge, in furtherance of its theory that it had conducted no business activities of any kind in the state and had had no such contacts as would make it amenable to service of process by mail, was within scope of its special appearance, and did not constitute a general appearance. West's Ann.Labor Code, §§ 5305, 5500.5.

2. Workmen's Compensation ⇐1183

Labor Code section dealing with occupational diseases arising out of more than one employment and providing for joinder of all employers and for joint and several award, deals with subject-matter jurisdiction, rather than personal jurisdiction or manner of acquiring jurisdiction; but corporate defendant's joinder with representative of Subsequent Injuries Fund in questioning constitutionality of that section did not constitute a general appearance, where corporate defendant acted under mistaken belief that constitutionality of section might have bearing upon effect of service of process upon it by mail and where such action was not accompanied by motion or request for any relief, and was not followed up. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 5500.5.

3. Appearance ⇐9(3)

Defendant did not make general appearance when, in support of its motion to quash, it introduced (1) affidavit of one of its officers, showing it to be a foreign corporation that had not done business in California, and (2) a certificate by Secretary of State showing that it had not filed copy of its articles or other documents and had not qualified to do intrastate business in state.

4. Workmen's Compensation ⇐1930

Where Commission mistakenly found that defendant had made general appearance in workmen's compensation proceeding, but did not make finding with regard to whether single contract of employment made by defendant in state established sufficient contact or presence to justify service of process by mail, reviewing court would not make finding with regard to whether defendant was doing business in state, within purview of statutes providing for service of process upon foreign corporations. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 5305.

5. Workmen's Compensation ⇐1181

Labor Code section giving Commission jurisdiction over controversy arising out of injury received outside of state in performance of contract made in state deals with subject-matter jurisdiction, rather than jurisdiction over the person. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 5305.

Vincent H. O'Donnell, Fredrik S. Waiss, San Francisco, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten, Daniel C. Murphy, San Francisco, for Industrial Accident Commission.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen. of the State of California, Gerald F. Carreras, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent State of California and Subsequent Injuries Fund.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

The sole question upon this review of a decision of the Industrial Accident Commission is whether or not the commission acquired personal jurisdiction of the petitioner, Braden Copper Company, a Maine corporation that has an office in New York but none in California.

John C. Viera applied to the commission for a hearing of his claim that he contracted silicosis while working in mines of various employers during the period 1934 to 1945, including a Chilean mine operated by Braden. The commission caused a copy of the application and notice of the hearing (set for October 29, 1954) to be mailed to Braden at a New York address.

On the day of the hearing Braden appeared specially and moved to quash the service of the application and of the notice of hearing upon the ground of lack of jurisdiction of the person of Braden, a foreign corporation whose only mining operations are in Chile, who has never qualified to do business in California, never had an office or agent or representative here and never did business here, and the contract of employment with Viera was not made in California.

The referee thereupon said, "All right, I have your motion," and counsel for one of the other mining companies said, "before you act on it, may I refer you to" a certain case the name of which counsel did not recall at the moment. The referee replied, "You have plenty of time to cite authority as I don't intend to rule on it today," and proceeded with the hearing.

From these and other incidents it was a reasonable inference that the hearing would proceed for all purposes; i. e., for any evidence and oral argument or briefing that might be offered for or against the motion to quash or for or against any other motion that might be made (such as the motion, subsequently made by the attorney general, to dismiss as to the Subsequent Injuries Fund) or which might bear upon the merits of the application.

Quite naturally, therefore, Braden's counsel sat through the hearing and took part now and then concerning matters which seemed relevant to the question whether the commission had acquired jurisdiction over the person of Braden.

At the conclusion of the hearing, after all the evidence on every issue had been received, the referee orally announced that he was denying both motions, that of Braden and that of the attorney general. The commission in its decision, later rendered, found it had jurisdiction of Braden, made an award against Braden and dismissed as to the other mining companies and the Subsequent Injuries Fund. When denying Braden's petition for reconsideration the commission said "there is the problem of jurisdiction over the person of the defendant employer. The employer, by asking for affirmative relief, waived its defense of lack of jurisdiction of its person (by raising the issue of unconstitutionality of Labor Code section 5500.5)."

In this proceeding, before this court, the respondent commission takes the position that by questioning the constitutionality of section 5500.5 of the Labor Code and by participating in the cross-examination of Viera when he was on the witness stand, Braden went outside of the issues presented by its challenge of the personal jurisdiction of the commission, submitted itself to that jurisdiction and made a general appearance. We do not so view it.

[1] During his direct examination, Viera gave some testimony which tended to show that Braden may have been active to some extent in California in recruiting engineers for work in its Chilean mine, doing so through the medium of a local engineering society which conducted an employment service for engineers and was instrumental in putting Viera and Braden in touch with each other. Braden sought by its questions and objections to keep Viera's testimony within the limits of the latter's personal knowledge, in furtherance of the theory that Braden had conducted no business activities of any kind in this state and had had no such contacts here as would make it amenable to service of process by mail under sanction of the principles enunciated in International Shoe Co. v. State of Washington, etc., 326 U.S. 310, 316–319, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95, principles which have been considered and applied in California in such cases as Fielding v. Superior Court, 111 Cal.App.2d 490, 244 P.2d 968; Iowa Mfg. Co. v. Superior Court, 112 Cal.App.2d 503, 246 P.2d 681; Kneeland v. Ethicon Suture Laboratories, 118 Cal.App.2d 211, 257 P.2d 727; Martin Bros. Elec. Co. v. Superior Court, 121 Cal. App.2d 790, 264 P.2d 183; Estwing Mfg. Co. v. Superior Court, 128 Cal.App.2d 259, 275 P.2d 146; Duraladd Products Corp. v. Superior Court, 134 Cal.App.2d 226, 285 P.2d 699; and Smith & Wesson, Inc., v. Municipal Court, 136 Cal.App.2d 673, 289 P.2d 26.

Before entering upon this line of interrogation, Braden's counsel took the precaution to state that he would like to ask the witness questions "bearing on his initial contract of employment with the Braden Copper Company, solely in so far as these questions may bear upon the issue of jurisdiction over the Braden Copper Company," and the referee responded, "Very well. You may have all the time you want."

Such participation in the interrogation of Viera was within the scope of Braden's special appearance and did not constitute a general appearance. The fact that the same evidence may have been relevant also to the question of subject matter jurisdiction (whether the contract of employment was made in this state and thus within the purview of section 5305 of the Labor Code) does not deprive it of its bearing upon and relevancy to the question whether Braden was amenable to process, the question involved in its motion to quash.

[2] The incident concerning the constitutionality of section 5500.5 of the Labor Code occurred early in the hearing, during the period of taking stipulations and defining issues, before the taking of any testimony. After Braden announced its special appearance and made its motion to quash, stating the grounds thereof, the referee asked if there were any other motions or stipulations. The attorney general, representing the Subsequent Injuries Fund, responded: "Mr. Referee, perhaps it is premature, but we raise the constitutionality of Labor Code Section 5500.5 * * *." Thereupon, Braden's counsel said: "We will join with you in that question, or, that point." That is the whole of that incident. Nothing further was said concerning that section. It was not even mentioned in Braden's memorandum of points and authorities which it later filed with the commission.

Section 5500.5 deals with occupational diseases such as silicosis "which may have arisen out of more than one employment." It provides for joining all employers under whose employ the applicant may have been exposed to the hazards of the occupational disease in question, and for a joint and several award if two or more such employers are found liable. This section, as we read it, deals with subject matter jurisdiction, not with personal jurisdiction or with the manner of acquiring jurisdiction over the person of any such employer. However, counsel stoutly maintains that he made the quoted reference to section 5500.5 with the sole thought in mind of its bearing upon his motion to quash, an additional basis for his claim that the commission did not acquire jurisdiction of the person of Braden by serving process in the manner in which it did.

We think that is the fair import of counsel's remark, in the setting in which it was made. It followed almost immediately his motion to quash for asserted lack of personal jurisdiction and was not accompanied by a motion or request for any relief. There was no indication of an intent to seek relief different from or additional to that sought by the motion to quash. The fact that counsel was mistaken in the thought (temporarily, it would seem, for he did not follow it up) that the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of section 5500.5 had a bearing upon the effectiveness or ineffectiveness of the service of process upon Braden by mail, would not justify us in treating that mistaken notion[1] and the remark which it engendered as an intentional request for relief which may properly be made only by a party over whom the court has acquired personal jurisdiction.

This is quite like the situation which obtained in Armstrong v. Superior Court, 144 Cal.App.2d 420, 301 P.2d 51, described by the reviewing court as follows: "A reading of the notice of motion to quash makes it apparent that the only relief sought by petitioner was to quash service of summons upon him upon the grounds that the court had not thereby acquired jurisdiction of his person. The fact that he attempted to demonstrate that the court did not have jurisdiction of his person because he was not a party to the action by citing authorities which he mistakenly believed supported his contention did not change his appearance from a special one to a general one." 144 Cal.App.2d 423, 301 P.2d at page 53.

Continuing, the court in that case said: "The test as to whether an appearance is general or special is, 'Did the party appear and object only to consideration of the case or any procedure in it because the court had not acquired jurisdiction over the person of the defendant or party? If so, then the appearance is special. If, however, he appears and asks for any relief which could be given only to a party in the pending case, or which itself would be a regular proceeding in the case, it is a general appearance regardless of how adroitly, carefully or directly the appearance may be denominated or characterized as special. * * * The rule in this regard may be epitomized by saying that if a defendant by his appearance insists only upon the objection that he is not in court for want of jurisdiction over his person and confines his appearance for that purpose only, then he has made a special appearance, but if he raises any other question, or asks any relief which can only be granted upon the hypothesis that the court has jurisdiction of his person, then he had made a general appearance.' Judson v. Superior Court, 21 Cal.2d 11, 13, 129 P.2d 361, 362; see also Hernandez v. National Dairy Products Co., 126 Cal.App.2d 490, 272 P.2d 799." 144 Cal.App.2d 423, 301 P.2d at page 53.

In this connection the following observations made by the Supreme Court in Davenport v. Superior Court, 183 Cal. 506, 511, 191 P. 911, are significant: "An act of a defendant by which he intentionally submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court in that action for the purpose of obtaining any ruling or order of the court going to the merits of the case, as, for example, a motion to strike out part of the complaint, or the making of stipulations, as in the cases above mentioned, which may reasonably be construed to imply that the court has in that action acquired jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, will be equivalent to an appearance, although not strictly in accordance with the terms of section 1014." (Emphasis added.)

Our view of Braden's reference to section 5500.5 finds additional support in Dickson v. Parker, 59 Cal.App. 778, 212 P. 42, in which the court made these pertinent observations: "Each time appellant appeared before the superior court she objected to its jurisdiction.' Contention is made that in voicing her objection she used language which constituted an appearance in the action and thus conferred jurisdiction upon the court. With such contention we cannot agree. We think the record fairly shows that appellant never intentionally submitted herself to the jurisdiction of the court 'for the purpose of obtaining any ruling or order going to the merits of the case.' Davenport v. Superior Court, 183 Cal. 506, 191 P. 911." (59 Cal. App. at pages 780–781, 212 P. at page 43; emphasis added.)

1. The plausability of counsel's having harbored such a notion is enhanced by the very fact that Viera's counsel seriously yet mistakenly views another subject-matter jurisdiction section, § 5305, as one which deals with jurisdiction over the person.

[3] The attorney general erroneously contends that Braden made a general appearance when, in support of its motion to quash, it introduced the affidavit of one of its officers showing it to be a foreign corporation that had not done business in California, and a certificate by the Secretary of State of California showing that Braden has not filed a copy of its articles or other documents and is not qualified to do intrastate business in California, facts peculiarly pertinent to the issues presented by the motion to quash.

[4] Viera makes the additional argument that the commission did acquire jurisdiction over the person of Braden by the manner in which it served notice upon Braden. He starts with the commission's finding that the contract was made in California, argues that the making of a single contract in a state by a foreign corporation establishes a sufficient contact or presence to justify service of process by mail, and then points to section 5305 as, in effect, a legislative declaration (a) that the making of such a contract as that here involved establishes such contact and (b) that in such a case the employer may be served by mail. The answer to this argument is that the respondent commission has not found on this subject, has not found that it made a legally effective service of process upon Braden. Instead, it has found and here contends, simply, that Braden made a general appearance by the manner in which it participated in the hearing before the referee. Under the circumstances, we do not deem it appropriate for this reviewing court to act as a trial court and make findings that Braden was, or that it was not, doing business in this state within the meaning and purview of our statutes that provide for service of process upon a foreign corporation.

[5] For the guidance of the commission in the consideration of such a question, we may and do observe that section 5305 deals with subject-matter jurisdiction. It gives the commission jurisdiction over a controversy arising out of an injury received outside of this state in the performance of a contract made in this state. It is entirely silent as to the manner of acquiring personal jurisdiction over the employer in such a case, whether the employer be an individual or a corporation, a resident or a nonresident individual, a domestic or a foreign corporation, and if a foreign corporation whether it be qualified or not qualified to do business in this state. However, this does not necessarily mean that new or additional legislation is needed in this state to authorize the service of process upon Braden if the commission should find, upon sufficient evidence, that Braden had sufficient contacts in California to meet the minimum requirements prescribed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the International Shoe case. See Kneeland v. Ethicon Suture Laboratories, 118 Cal.App.2d 211, 222, 257 P.2d 727, 734, in which we expressed the view that " 'doing business in this State' " as used in section 411 of the Code of Civil Procedure "reflects the changing concept of 'doing business' as it has evolved over the years, and as it continues to evolve, through the decisions of the federal courts interpreting the due process clause and applying it to new and developing situations from time to time."

A further question to be considered by the commission in any such inquiry is whether the workmen's compensation statutes and the regulations of the commission effectively sanction service of process upon a foreign corporation in a manner different from that prescribed by section 411 of the Code of Civil Procedure and sections 6500 to 6504 of the Corporations Code. It does not appear, from the record before us, that Braden was served in that manner.

The decision is reversed as to Braden Copper Company with directions to take such further proceedings as may not be inconsistent with the views herein expressed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Harry Thomas COMSTOCK and Winifred June Clark, Defendants,

Harry Thomas Comstock, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5634.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Dec. 28, 1956.

Prosecution for conspiracy, for commission of grand theft and for fraudulently falsifying corporate records. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Aubrey N. Irwin, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held, inter alia, that evidence was insufficient to sustain conviction on one count charging commission of grand theft, and on one count charging fraudulently falsifying corporate records.

Judgment affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

Where defendant, in a criminal prosecution, chose to submit his defense upon a transcript of preliminary hearing, he was not entitled to a virtual new trial on appeal from a judgment of conviction, but rather court would merely determine whether there was substantial evidence supporting his conviction. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3510.

2. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇐683

When an appellate court reviews the findings of a trial court following a trial de novo of a matter adjudicated by an administrative agency, the substantial evidence test prevails regardless of whether the only evidence before the trial court was a transcript of the administrative proceeding.

3. Criminal Law ⇐742(2), 1144(13)

If it may reasonably be inferred that a witness is not an accomplice, it is for the trier of fact to determine the question of complicity, and it will be presumed that the witness was found not to be implicated in the crime where such presumption would further tend to effect affirmation of a judgment.

4. Conspiracy ⇐24

In order to establish a "conspiracy", there must be proof of a corrupt agreement between at least two persons, since the gist of conspiracy is the enhanced danger to society from wrongful combination of purpose.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Conspiracy".

5. Conspiracy ⇐47

Direct evidence of a formal understanding between confederates is not essential to proof of a conspiracy, and it is not necessary to prove that parties so charged actually met, discussed their mutual design and understanding and reached a formal agreement, since the extent to which the minds of the alleged conspirators were in accord with respect to their conspiracy must usually, from the secrecy of the crime, be deduced from the circumstances which, when taken together, indicate that they are parts of the same complete whole.

6. Criminal Law ⇐422(1)

Where facts presented by the state in prosecution for conspiracy revealed a "prima facie" showing of conspiracy charged, evidence of an extrajudicial utterance of one conspirator to the prejudice of the other was admissible.

7. Conspiracy ⇐47

Evidence sustained conviction for conspiracy to cheat and defraud by criminal means, to make false promises with fraudulent intent not to perform them, to commit grand theft, to violate the Corporate Securities Law and to falsify corporate records. West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 3020(b), 25000 et seq.

8. Criminal Law ⇐510

Statutory requirement of corroboration of accomplice testimony is based primarily upon fact that experience has shown that evidence of an accomplice should be viewed with care, caution and suspicion because it comes from a tainted source and is often given in the hope or expectation of leniency or immunity. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1111.

9. Criminal Law ⇐511(2)

Corroboration of accomplice testimony is sufficient to sustain a conviction if it tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime charged in such a way as may reasonably satisfy the jury that the witness who must be corroborated is telling the truth. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1111.

10. Criminal Law ⇐372(1), 511(4)

Proof that a defendant committed other recent and similar offenses tending to show a consistent plan or method of his conduct is admissible to prove a particular crime charged, and such evidence may corroborate the testimony of an accomplice.

11. Corporations ⇐324
False Pretenses ⇐49(1)

Evidence was insufficient to sustain conviction on one count charging commission of grand theft and on one count charging fraudulently falsifying corporate records, and was sufficient to sustain conviction on two other counts charging such falsification and on other counts charging commission of grand theft. West's Ann. Corp.Code, § 3020(b).

12. Criminal Law ⇐1035(3)

Under ordinary circumstances, an accused may not complain for the first time on appeal of the inept conduct of trial counsel of his own choosing.

13. Criminal Law ⇐641(1)

Submission of defendant's case on preliminary transcripts did not amount to a denial of defendant's right to counsel, where defendant, with full knowledge of the consequences, allowed his trial to be so conducted.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Defendant appeals his conviction on the charges of conspiring with Winifred June

Clark (who died prior to the trial of the action) to cheat and defraud by criminal means, to make false promises with the fraudulent intent not to perform them, to commit grand theft, to violate the Corporate Securities Law, Corporations Code, § 25000 et seq., and to violate section 3020, subdivision (b) of the Corporations Code relating to the falsification of corporate records (Count I); commission of grand theft (Counts II, III, IV, V, VI, X and XI); and fraudulently falsifying corporate records (Counts VII, VIII and IX).

[1, 2] The basic facts underlying the perpetration of the foregoing offenses may best be set forth in the consideration of the evidence supporting the conspiracy count. Appellant advises us that in considering the record we should not apply the familiar "substantial evidence test" but rather should satisfy ourselves beyond a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of appellant. The reasoning suggested is as follows: The rule that an appellate court will not upset the judgment of a trial court where substantial evidence supports it is based upon the premise that the trier of fact is deemed to have had the superior advantage in appraising witnesses and in evaluating their credibility, Maslow v. Maslow, 117 Cal.App. 2d 237, 243, 255 P.2d 65; therefore, where the case is submitted to the trial court upon the transcript of the preliminary hearing, as here, the cited rule no longer should prevail. Civ.Code, § 3510. However, the accused had his choice as to how the facts were to be presented to the trial court. There might have been a complete hearing with oral testimony or confrontation, or a consideration of a written transcript or, perhaps, testimony taken by deposition. His choice of submitting his defense upon the transcript of the preliminary does not entitle him to a virtual new trial in the appellate court. A situation similar to submission upon a preliminary transcript may be found in the civil cases. When an appellate court reviews the findings of a trial court following a trial de novo of a matter adjudicated by an administrative agency, the substantial evidence test prevails regardless of whether the only evidence before the trial court was a transcript of the administrative proceeding. See Hutchinson v. Contractors' State License Board, 143 Cal.App.2d 628, 300 P.2d 216.

The Conspiracy

Appellant promoted the organization and incorporation of a company known as Finance Control of Long Beach in July 1952. The primary business purpose of the corporation was purportedly to factor automobile accounts receivable paper.

Approximately one year later, appellant promoted the formation of a concern known as Finance Clearing of Beverly Hills to engage in the business of "buying and selling notes, conditional sales contracts, and other negotiable paper and choses in action of all kinds." It is his activities in the management of this corporation which provide the substance of the information filed against him.

In promoting these ventures, appellant refrained from occupying an openly official status in the corporations. They were formed by dummy incorporators. Appellant "appointed" officers of the several concerns without regard to the legal amenities that are customarily observed in the election of corporate officers. He was careful to people the responsible offices of his several concerns with persons of no experience in business management and particularly unversed in conducting a factoring enterprise. A veritable parade of secretaries, stenographers and bookkeepers were "installed" by appellant as officers of the corporations at one time or another. For example, appellant designated one Frank Maierhofer as president of Finance Clearing for a period of time during which extensive financial mismanagement occurred. Mr. Maierhofer's previous business experience had been, primarily, employment as a head waiter. Miss Aida Ferrera, then nineteen years of age, was appointed secretary-treasurer five weeks after her employment as a secretary through an employment agency. Throughout, appellant maintained sole control over the management of the enterprise under the generic title of "General Manager." The evidence leaves no doubt that Finance Clearing was merely the right arm of appellant Comstock.

Appellant's co-conspirator Clark was employed by Finance Clearing sometime in October or December 1953. Thereafter, she became vice president of that company. Whatever might be said for the activities of Miss Clark, she was not wholly devoid of previous experience in financial management.

In order to do any business, it was essential for Finance Clearing to obtain money from lenders, or investors as the case may be, so that accounts receivable could be purchased from various merchants. However, a balance sheet of December 31, 1953, probably prepared by Comstock, showed a deficit of $9,000. At least one potential investor informed appellant that he would not consider risking his funds with an organization whose financial statement showed so poor an earnings record. A response to this invitation to do something about the adverse earnings record was not long delayed.

An accountant, Yawdick, hired by Finance Clearing testified that had a balance sheet been prepared for the months of January and February, a deficit would no doubt have been revealed. However, statements prepared by the accountant for March, April, May and June of 1954 on the basis of information furnished on transmittal sheets prepared in the office of Finance Clearing showed a remarkable enhancement in the affairs of the corporation. Earnings multiplied rapidly and a surplus soon mounted. Subsequent investigation revealed that this surplus was entirely the result of fabrication.

The first instance of outright fiscal skullduggery occurred in March. In that month Finance Clearing supposedly purchased over $11,000 in accounts receivable held by E. J. Grau and Son, a plumbing concern, for the consideration of one dollar. These accounts were, at the instance of appellant, carried on the books of the corporation as an asset at their face value of $11,000 instead of one dollar, their purchase price, which would have been the proper accounting practice. Moreover, the testimony of Mr. Grau established that no accounts had ever been sold by his concern to Finance Clearing. They were entirely bogus. The false accounts were apparently first written on some blue and green sheets in the handwriting of Miss Clark. She later admitted to various persons that she had copied the names of the purported debtors from the telephone directory. The accounts were subsequently recorded on account cards in the Beverly Hills office and from there transmitted to the accountant in Long Beach who recorded them on the books of the corporation. No direct evidence was presented as to who directed the transmittal of the Grau accounts to the accountant.

[3] In subsequent months, similar false transactions with Businessmen's Association, Maxwell's Department Store, Central Chevrolet and Utter-McKinley Morticians were recorded. By this time, Miss Ferrera had been employed by Finance Clearing. She testified that both appellant and Miss Clark directed her to copy the accounts directly from the blue and green sheets onto the account cards and the transmittal sheets prepared for the accountant. Therefore, appellant knew that accounts in large sums purchased for an incredibly small consideration were being carried into the books. Furthermore, Miss Ferrera testified that this procedure was not normal in the case of the purchase of accounts. Ordinarily the account cards and transmittal sheets were prepared directly from the very contracts assigning the accounts rather than from a list prepared upon some scratch paper. Appellant was well aware of this highly irregular circumstance. Appellant insists that this very important testimony of the witness Ferrera must be accorded the usual limitations placed upon the testimony of an "accomplice." However, if it may reasonably be inferred that a witness is not an accomplice, it is for the trier of fact to determine the question of complicity. People v. Santo, 43 Cal.2d 319, 326, 327, 273 P.2d 249. It will be presumed that the witness was found not to be implicated in the crime where such presumption would further tend to effect affirmation of the judgment. (Ibid.) Here Ferrera denied any knowledge of the fictitious nature of the accounts at the time she entered them upon the records maintained by the corporation. In view of her youth, the short time she had been employed and her inexperience in business matters, it is entirely reasonable to infer that she obeyed orders issued by appellant without consideration of whether or not they were financially sound.

Appellant subsequently employed these falsely inflated financial statements to impress investors with the stability of his enterprise. Although he was the individual primarily responsible for inducing prospects to lend or invest money, Miss Clark accompanied him at least once to the home of a prospect for the purpose of inducing the victim to part with his funds.

However, the Corporation Commissioner had ordered appellant in November 1953 to cease and desist from the sale of securities without a permit. As the Commissioner began a closer and closer investigation of appellant's activities, the latter apparently became alarmed about the bogus accounts on the books. At any rate, he attempted a very transparent scheme to cleanse them from his records without affecting his statement of earnings. Miss Ferrera testified that appellant instructed her to draw checks upon the Finance Clearing account, to record those checks as payments upon the fictitious accounts whereby to reduce their credit balance, and then to deposit the checks in the very same account upon which they were drawn. In other words, total "wash" transactions whose effect would be to reduce the valuation of the fictitious assets without affording a corresponding increase in cash. When his accountant asked him what he hoped to accomplish by these transactions, appellant answered that he wished to credit the accounts with these sums but not to charge them against profit and loss. When the accountant told him that it could not be done, appellant told him to "forget it." The "wash" transactions were treated as void and were not entered on the books.

Finally, appellant decided that the accounts must be removed from the books. He instructed Miss Ferrera to prepare a transmittal sheet which would show these accounts, totaling more than $123,000, entirely charged off as bad debts. The charge-off was made as of July 31, 1954. The resultant balance sheet as of that date showed an $89,000 deficit. Although no statements were prepared during intervening months, a subsequent balance prepared as of December 31, 1954, showed that the ill-fated Finance Clearing had slumped still further into a $114,000 deficit balance. Even that final balance sheet was described as excessively optimistic by the accountant who aided in its preparation. However, appellant took care that no financial statement should reach his investors following the charge-off. He made various misrepresentations explaining his failure to continue sending the sheets. He told one investor that over $100,000 in asset accounts had been written off so as to effectuate a "tax saving."

Further to demonstrate appellant's intimate connections with his co-conspirator Clark, upon at least one occasion he showed considerable largesse in siphoning funds of the corporation into her hands. Upon learning that Miss Clark desired to own a certain collection agency in Palm Springs, appellant without further ado instructed her to write two checks totaling $5,000 against the account of Finance Clearing. The checks were signed by appellant and Clark, payable to appellant, endorsed by him and used by Clark to purchase the agency. Appellant told Miss Ferrera that he was giving Clark the sums so that she could "have something in her hip pocket." Although he took her promissory note for the sums, he did not expect Miss Clark to repay it and never demanded that she do so.

[4, 5] In order to establish a conspiracy, there must be proof of a corrupt agreement between at least two persons, People v. Gem Hang, 131 Cal.App.2d 69, 71–72, 280 P.2d 28; People v. Frankfort, 114 Cal.App.2d 680, 688, 251 P.2d 401, since the gist of conspiracy is the enhanced danger to society from wrongful combination of purpose. (Comment, 26 So.Cal.L.Rev. 64, 68.) Appellant argues that there is no evidence that he and Miss Clark ever combined forces to defraud investors or falsify corporate records; that each operated in a vacuum without common agreement or purpose. But direct evidence of a formal understanding between confederates is not essential to the proof of a conspiracy. It is not necessary to prove that the parties actually met, discussed their mutual design and understanding, and reached a formal agreement. The extent to which the minds of conspirators are in accord with respect to their conspiracy must usually, from the secrecy of the crime, be deduced from the circumstances which, when taken together, indicate that they are parts of the same complete whole. People v. Rissman, 143 Cal.App.2d 488, 299 P.2d 944; Lorenson v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 49, 57–58, 216 P.2d 859. The actions of the alleged conspirators when considered in conjunction with what must have been within their knowledge may irresistably tend to establish the existence of an agreement, tacit, perhaps, in character but nevertheless corrupt. See People v. Fratianno, 132 Cal.App.2d 610, 282 P.2d 1002; People v. Bennett, 132 Cal.App.2d 569, 282 P.2d 590; People v. Daener, 96 Cal.App.2d 827, 216 P.2d 511.

Appellant was in sole command of Finance Clearing operations, surrounded only by those subservient to him. He knew that $123,000 worth of assets were added by Miss Clark to the corporate books upon the payment of a ridiculously petty consideration. He knew that they were incorporated into the records in a highly irregular fashion from a list prepared by Miss Clark on scratch paper. He supervised the inclusion of some of those accounts on the corporation records. He subsequently attempted to "wash" them out gradually by improperly juggling the accounts. He finally charged them off altogther while withholding the resultant deficit statements from his investors. He used the bloated balance sheets to encourage new investment. "So interrelated and harmonious were the operations of defendants as disclosed by the documents and the testimony * * * that * * * honest deduction could not but reasonably have inferred their conscious collaboration with a definite purpose." People v. Gordon, 71 Cal.App.2d 606, 627, 163 P.2d 110, 124.

[6, 7] It must be conceded that the above factual statement reveals a "prima facie" showing of a conspiracy between appellant and Clark and therefore justifies admission into evidence of an extrajudicial utterance of one conspirator to the prejudice of the other. People v. Steccone, 36 Cal.2d 234, 238, 223 P.2d 17; People v. Brown, 131 Cal.App.2d 643, 655, 281 P.2d 319; People v. Sica, 112 Cal.App.2d 574, 583, 247 P.2d 72. Two witnesses, Swinford and Ferrera, stated that Miss Clark admitted to them her preparation of the bogus accounts, and further that her activities had taken place under the knowing direction of appellant.

Grand Theft

Appellant was convicted also of cozening several investors out of substantial sums of money by means of false pretenses. Their investments were not returned.

Louis Q. Sims invested $9,000 in Finance Clearing after having been shown by appellant the fraudulently bloated April balance sheet. Appellant had not informed him that the Corporation Commissioner had issued a cease and desist order against the corporation. William Gloege parted with his money in reliance upon appellant's false assertions that the sums would be held in trust by a certified public accountant bonded for $100,000 and upon one or two of the false balance sheets shown to him. Also, he was not apprised of the action of the Commissioner. Otis Swinford was similarly defrauded. When he communicated with the accountant to discover why he did not receive the July statement, appellant wrote him a letter falsely stating that appellant and the accountant had agreed upon as "continuous work sheet" method of keeping books and had not made a July statement and would not make periodic balances in the future.

E. L. Landgarten responded to a newspaper advertisement inserted by appellant on behalf of Finance Clearing. He was promised by appellant that his funds would be safe and that at all times they would be secured by fifty per cent in cash and seventy five per cent in automobile paper. The true balance sheets, minus the fictitious accounts, indicate that this promise was never kept. Appellant's dealings throughout the existence of Finance Clearing justify an inference that he never intended to live up to his promise.

Norman Jensen relied upon appellant's false representations that an investment in Finance Clearing was safer than in building and loan because the investment would be secured to 125 per cent of the money invested; that it would be backed by fifty per cent cash and 75 per cent paper; and that Mr. Jensen could get his money back upon demand. At no time was the victim informed of the cease and desist order.

Appellant was also convicted of the theft of $1,500 from Finance Clearing (Count VI). Miss Ferrera testified to the following events: By the time this transaction occurred she had discovered appellant's prior falsification of corporate records; she came to be in urgent need of $1,500; she was aware that appellant knew that she had discovered his misdeeds; she asked appellant while driving with him to the airport whether she might have a loan or an advance of the sum she needed; he told her to take a check from a pad of checks which he had pre-signed, make it out for $1,500 in favor of a fictitious payee, countersign it in her own name, indorse and cash it and enter the credit in the petty cash and miscellaneous account; she followed these instructions. The check was introduced into evidence.

[8] It is clear from the above account that Miss Ferrera was at least an accomplice to this misdeed. Her testimony was essential to the conviction of appellant on this charge. Therefore, corroboration must be found for her recital of such events. Pen.Code, § 1111. "The statutory requirement of corroboration is based primarily upon the fact that experience has shown that the evidence of an accomplice should be viewed with care, caution and suspicion because it comes from a tainted source and is often given in the hope or expectation of leniency or immunity." People v. Wallin, 32 Cal.2d 803, 808, 197 P.2d 734, 737; People v. Robinson, 43 Cal.2d 132, 141, 271 P.2d 865; and see generally re the distrust to be afforded the testimony of an accomplice, People v. Dail, 22 Cal.2d 642, 653 et seq., 140 P.2d 828. The instant situation is perfect for the application of this salutary policy. Although every physical act necessary to this crime was admittedly accomplished by Miss Ferrera, she was not prosecuted.

[9] The quantum of evidence required to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice has been detailed repeatedly by the courts, e.g. People v. Morris, 115 Cal.App. 2d 312, 316, 252 P.2d 36, usually for the purpose of pointing out how minimal it may be and yet suffice. However, as recently and workably stated, the corroboration is sufficient if it tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime in such a way as may reasonably satisfy the jury that the witness who must be corroborated is telling the truth. People v. MacEwing, 45 Cal.2d 218, 224, 288 P.2d 257. The attorney general offers the following independent items of evidence to connect appellant with the theft:

(1) Appellant's signature on the check as a drawer along with Ferrera is a signature upon an incriminating document, a fact which has been held sufficient corroboration. People v. Morris, supra. However, the witness' own testimony established that appellant was not even present when the check was prepared and that Ferrera used a check from a pad of checks pre-signed by him. In this light, how can it be said that his signature in any way "connected defendant with the commission of the crime" as required by the MacEwing case? We must rely wholly upon Miss Ferrera's unsupported word that appellant told her to use that pre-signed check.

(2) Evidence was introduced to prove that appellant had diverted corporate funds to other than corporate uses upon other occasions. For example, appellant "loaned" funds belonging to the corporation to Miss Clark for her use in acquiring a collection agency, evidently never intending to seek repayment. Also, he used Finance Clearing funds to purchase an expensive yacht after chartering it for a private junket to Mexico. The yacht was subsequently transferred without payment of consideration to a Nevada corporation acquired during the mushrooming expansion of the activities of Finance Clearing. The reason given for the transfer was to avoid (a) attachments of the corporation's properties and (b) the effect of the cease and desist order which had been levied against Finance Clearing.

[10, 11] Proof that a defendant committed other recent and similar offenses tending to show a consistent plan or method of misconduct is admissible to prove the particular crime charged. People v. Thorne, 10 Cal.2d 705, 708, 76 P.2d 491. Such evidence may corroborate the testimony of an accomplice. People v. Gallardo, 41 Cal.2d 57, 64, 257 P.2d 29; People v. Solano, 48 Cal.App.2d 126, 130, 119 P.2d 381. However, it might well be said that when a situation exists as in this case where one out of several guilty parties is caught in one or two transgressions, caution should be exercised in allowing those transgressions to justify the unloading by his confederates of their wrongdoing upon his head in exchange for leniency. Certainly the past misdeeds must unfold some characteristic technique or modus operandi before they "connect the defendant with the commission of the crime." See People v. Gallardo, supra [41 Cal.2d 57, 257 P.2d 32]. The other acts proved here establish merely that appellant was loose with corporate funds; none of the other transactions show any marked similarity to one another or to the Ferrera transaction. The transfer of the funds to Miss Clark was recorded as a loan. The yacht was purchased without any deception in books of Finance Clearing. Other than the fact that these instances disclose appellant's general misconduct, nothing connects appellant with this crime save the testimony of Miss Ferrera that he directed her actions. Thus, the judgment of conviction under Count VI must be reversed.

Falsification of Corporate Records

"Every * * * agent * * * of any corporation * * * who, with intent to defraud * * * falsifies any of the books, papers, writings, or securities belonging to the corporation, or makes or concurs in making any false entries, or omits or concurs in omitting to make any material entry in any book of accounts or other record or document kept by the corporation is guilty of a public offense." Corp.C.A. § 3020(b).

Counts VIII and IX of the information deal with the falsification of corporate records by transmittal to the accountant of the purchase of the fictitious E. J. Grau & Son and Utter-McKinley accounts, respectively. The evidence recited under the conspiracy count, supra, suffices to render appellant an accomplice of Miss Clark in the falsification of the accounts receivable with intent to inflate the financial statements of the corporation and thereby defraud future investors.

Count VII involves the entry by Ferrera of the $1,500 check prepared as a gift or "bonus" to her in the "petty cash, furniture, fixtures, and miscellaneous" account at the direction of appellant. This matter has likewise been discussed above under the heading "Grand Theft" (Count VI).

For the same reasons there presented, this count must be reversed.

Denial of the Right to Counsel?

[12] Appellant's former counsel chose, with the consent of his client, to submit the case on the preliminary transcript with very little additional evidence presented by the defense to the trial court. Appellant now claims that the submission of a case as complex as this upon the preliminary transcript constituted such gross neglect on the part of his attorney as effectively to deprive him of the right to counsel. Three answers to this contention are: (1) An abundance of case law holds that, under ordinary circumstances, an accused may not complain for the first time on appeal of the inept conduct of trial counsel of his own choosing. People v. Daniels, 145 Cal. App.2d 615, 302 P.2d 831; People v. Hood, 141 Cal.App.2d 585, 587–590, 297 P. 2d 52. (2) Submission on the preliminary transcript may have been the wisest course under the circumstances. If appellant had no true defense to present, he was entitled to avail himself of his right to have the People prove him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. The prosecution's case may appear much less convincing in a "cold" transcript than when unfolded before a trial judge. (3) The nature of appellant's crimes indicates that he is not an "ignorant" defendant likely to remain still while his counsel fails to present a bona fide defense.

[13] Although the wisdom of submitting cases on preliminary transcripts has been seriously questioned, e.g. People v. Stinchcomb, 92 Cal.App.2d 741, 743–744, 208 P.2d 396, it cannot be said that such practice denies the right of the accused to counsel where with full knowledge of the consequences he allows his trial so to be conducted.

The judgment of conviction on Counts VI and VII of the information is reversed.

In all other respects, the judgment is affirmed.

WRATHER–ALVAREZ BROADCASTING, Inc., a corporation, and Harold Keen, Petitioners,

v.

John A. HEWICKER, Judge of the Superior Court in and for the County of San Diego, State of California, Respondent.

Civ. 5472.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 10, 1957.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 22, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 5, 1957.

Television news reporter and television broadcasting company brought mandamus proceeding against the judge of the Superior Court in and for the County of San Diego, John A. Hewicker, J., to compel the judge to allow the reporter and his shorthand secretary to take shorthand notes of the testimony of witnesses at trial of kidnapping case. The District Court of Appeal held that reporter and his secretary were authorized at any public hearing in court where they were rightfully in attendance to take such notes as they might desire concerning the proceedings in any form selected by them, so long as they did not interfere with the orderly conduct of the proceedings before the court or its officers.

Writ issued.

1. Mandamus ⇐10

Mandamus is an appropriate remedy for the enforcement of a civil right.

2. Mandamus ⇐61

Mandamus was an appropriate remedy for television news reporter and television broadcasting company to compel judge of the Superior Court to permit reporter to take a shorthand secretary with him to Superior Court during trial of kidnapping case to take down testimony of witnesses for use by reporter on television news program.

3. Constitutional Law ⇐90

Right of freedom of speech and press is not subject to restraints previous to publication or censorship, though the speaker shall be held accountable for what he says or prints.

4. Contempt ⇐9

A newspaper or a reporter thereof may not be punished for contempt for reporting the truth of testimony given in a pending trial.

5. Contempt ⇐8

Publications by the press may not be punished as contempt unless they interfere with and obstruct the orderly administration of justice.

6. Constitutional Law ⇐90

The protection given to freedom of speech and press is extended to the medium of television, since there is no distinction between various methods of communications.

7. Constitutional Law ⇐90

Television news reporter and his shorthand secretary were authorized at any public hearing in court where they were rightfully in attendance to take such notes as they might desire concerning the proceedings in any form selected by them, so long as they did not interfere with the orderly conduct of the proceedings before the court or its officers. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 128, 1209.

Luce, Forward, Kunzel & Scripps, by Fred Kunzel, San Diego, for petitioners.

James Don Keller, Dist. Atty., and Claude B. Brown, Deputy Dist. Atty., San Diego, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Petitioner Wrather-Alvarez Broadcasting, Inc. operates a television broadcasting station in San Diego, and through its agent, petitioner Harold Keen, broadcasts daily news programs. Respondent judge is engaged in the trial of a certain kidnaping case attracting considerable public attention. Petitioner Keen alleges that in attending the court proceedings and reporting the news he is unable to take longhand notes rapidly enough to accurately set forth the witnesses' testimony; that on December 21, 1956, in order to assist him, he took his assistant, a shorthand secretary, with him to said court for the purpose of taking shorthand notes of certain of the proceedings so he could make an accurate broadcast of the testimony; that said judge stated to him in open court that he would not allow Harold Keen or his assistant to take shorthand notes in the courtroom; that the trial judge announced there was only one official reporter for that court and that there would be no other reporter sitting around taking shorthand notes; that if the assistant was an authorized representative of the press in her own right, designated by some newspaper in San Diego, he would let her report but that she could not do it for some other reporter; that if Harold Keen wanted a transcript of any testimony he would have to obtain it from his reporter, at the reporter's convenience, and at his own expense; and that if Mr. Keen disagreed with him he suggested that Keen obtain a writ of mandamus. Petitioner then alleges he was unable to obtain a reporter's transcript in time for his broadcast because of press of business of the reporter.

This writ is sought to compel the trial judge to allow said Harold Keen and his assistant to take shorthand notes of the testimony of such witnesses as he may desire for use in his broadcasting program. An order to show cause was issued. A demurrer to the petition was interposed and an answer was filed admitting some of these allegations, denying others, and alleging that Harold Keen was interviewing, on his program, certain of the witnesses who had testified at the trial and who had been excused, and the judge thought this might well influence the jurors if they heard it and that this might interfere with the judicial process of his court; that he had the inherent power to preclude any one in his courtroom from taking shorthand notes of the proceedings where there was an official reporter present.

[1, 2] Argument is made that the form of writ sought should have been a writ of prohibition rather than mandamus. Mandamus is the form of writ invited by the respondent court and it is an appropriate remedy for the enforcement of a civil right. Stone v. Board of Directors of City of Pasadena, 47 Cal.App.2d 749, 118 P.2d 866; Pacific Engine & Machine Works v. Superior Court, 132 Cal.App.2d 739, 745, 282 P.2d 937; Hays v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.2d 260, 264, 105 P.2d 975.

[3, 4] It is a well-known rule of law that the right of freedom of speech and press is not subject to restraints previous to publication or censorship, although the speaker shall be held accountable for what he says or prints. Dailey v. Superior Court, 112 Cal. 94, 97, 44 P. 458, 32 L.R.A. 273; Near v. State of Minnesota ex rel. Olson, 283 U.S. 697, 51 S.Ct. 625, 75 L.Ed. 1357; 11 Am.Jur. pp. 1110–1111, sec. 320. A newspaper or a reporter thereof may not be punished for contempt for reporting the truth of testimony given in a pending trial. McClatchy v. Superior Court, 119 Cal. 413, 51 P. 696, 39 L.R.A. 691.

[5, 6] In Craig v. Harney, 331 U.S. 367, 67 S.Ct. 1249, 1254, 91 L.Ed. 1546, it was said:

> "A trial is a public event. What transpires in the court room is public property. * * * Those who see and hear what transpired can report it with impunity. There is no special perquisite of the judiciary which enables it, as distinguished from other institutions of democratic government, to suppress, edit, or censor events which transpire [in] proceedings before it."

Publications by the press may not be punished as contempt until they interfere with and obstruct the orderly administration of justice. In re Shuler, 210 Cal. 377, 292 P. 481; Turkington v. Municipal Court, 85 Cal.App.2d 631, 193 P.2d 795. The protection given to the freedom of speech and press is extended to the medium of television, there being no distinction between the various methods of communication. Public Utilities Commission v. Pollak, 343 U.S. 451, 72 S.Ct. 813, 96 L.Ed. 1068; Superior Films, Inc., v. Department of Education, 346 U.S. 587, 74 S.Ct. 286, 98 L.Ed. 329; Joseph Burstyn, Inc., v. Wilson, 343 U.S. 495, 72 S.Ct. 777, 96 L.Ed. 1098.

Under section 128 of the Code of Civil Procedure every court shall have power to preserve and enforce order in its immediate presence and to control, in furtherance of justice, the conduct of its ministerial officers and of all other persons in any manner connected with the judicial proceedings before it, in every matter pertaining thereto. Section 1209 thereof describes the acts or omissions constituting contempt such as "1. Disorderly, contemptuous, or insolent behavior toward the judge while holding the court, tending to interrupt the due course of a trial or other judicial proceeding; 2. A breach of the peace, boisterous conduct, or violent disturbance, tending to interrupt the due course of a trial or other judicial proceedings"; and "No speech or publication reflecting upon or concerning any court or any officer thereof shall be treated or punished as a contempt of such court unless made in the immediate presence of such court while in session and in such a manner as to actually interfere with its proceedings." Section 1211 thereof provides for summary punishment for contempt in the court's presence and also for a contempt not committed in the court's presence.

Kirstowsky v. Superior Court, 143 Cal. App.2d 745, 300 P.2d 163, involved the exclusion of the members of the press and public from the courtroom during a criminal trial. A writ of mandate was employed to test the question. It was there said that under sections 124–125 of the Code of Civil Procedure the sittings of every court of justice shall be public, with certain exceptions noted; that it applied not only to defendant but that it is a matter of public interest and concern; that the people are interested in knowing, and have the right to know how their servants, the judge, county attorney, sheriff and clerk conduct the public business; that the right of the public to attend sessions of the court is too well established by the common law and by our statutory law to permit the exclusion of the public except in cases provided for by statutes, or under circumstances which make it a proper exercise of the court's discretion in order to accord the defendant a fair trial. There, the exclusion of the public was requested by the defendant because of his personal emotional disturbance while testifying, and this request was granted by the court. The appellate court, in mandamus proceeding, under the circumstances, held that the public and press could be rightfully excluded during the hearing of defendant's testimony only, but could not be excluded during the entire trial. It was also held that members of the press are in the same position as other members of the public, and have no greater right to be present at court hearings than any other member of the public.

In so far as the facts before us are concerned, we will only consider the question of the right of petitioner or his assistant while in the courtroom, to make shorthand notes of the proceedings of the court for whatever purpose they may desire, so long as it does not then and there interfere with the orderly conduct of the proceedings before the court or its officers. What petitioners may do with said notes or the manner in which they may use them afterwards is not before us for consideration. That would be a separate proceeding and would not amount to a contempt in the presence of the court.

The court may, within reason, regulate the conduct of members of the press or the public while they are in the courtroom. Code Civ.Proc. § 128. It does not appear that the trial judge predicated his order in the instant case upon the ground that the action of the petitioner in taking shorthand notes in the courtroom was disturbing the jury, the court or the orderly conduct of the proceedings. The undisputed showing indicates otherwise.

[7] We conclude that petitioner or his assistant is authorized at any public hearing in the court where he is rightfully in attendance to take such notes as he may desire concerning the proceedings in any form selected by him so long as it does not interfere with the orderly conduct of the proceedings before the court or its officers. People v. Hartman, 103 Cal. 242, 37 P. 153; People v. Byrnes, 84 Cal.App. 2d 72, 190 P.2d 290; People v. Kerrigan, 73 Cal. 222, 14 P. 849; People v. Letoile, 31 Cal.App. 166, 159 P. 1057.

Let a writ issue as prayed for, subject to the limitation herein expressed.

On Petition for Rehearing

PER CURIAM.

On petition for rehearing it is pointed out by the respondent Judge that Harold Keen, personally, was not denied the privilege of taking notes in the courtroom, but that his order was directed solely to Keen's assistant who was there for that purpose. With this clarification, the petition for a rehearing is denied.

Clarence CLARK and Margaret L. Clark, husband and wife, Plaintiffs, Cross-Defendants, Appellants and Respondents,

v.

Carl F. REDLICH and Lura Metta Redlich, husband and wife, Defendants, Cross-Complainants and Appellants, R. L. Seal and Dorsie V. Seal, husband and wife, Defendants, Cross-Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 5299.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 10, 1957.

Action for declaratory relief that plaintiff had an easement by grant over the property of defendants and an easement by prescription over other property wherein the plaintiff obtained a temporary injunction enjoining interference with the use of the roadway. The defendants cross-complained, seeking to acquire title to their property. From a judgment in the Superior Court of Orange County, Raymond Thompson, J., both plaintiffs and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Coughlin, J. pro tem., held that the evidence supported the implied finding that plaintiff's use of a roadway was not adverse or under claim or right; that award of damages because of the preliminary injunction was unauthorized; that whether fencing or cultivation of the whole of a servient tract was adverse to the rights of the plaintiff under easement or whether implied permission was given was a question of fact; and that evidence sustained implied findings that defendants' use of servient tenement was not adverse to exercise of plaintiffs' easement.

Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

1. Easements ⇐36(3)

In action to enjoin defendants from preventing the plaintiffs' use of a roadway over the defendants' property, evidence supported implied findings that plaintiffs' use of the roadway was not adverse or under claim of right but was permissive and with consent of the owner.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐1010(1)

Whether plaintiffs' use of a roadway over the defendants' property was permissive or adverse were questions of fact, and if there was any substantial evidence to support the judgment it must be affirmed.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐931(1), 989

On appeal, an appellate court will view the evidence in light most favorable to the respondent and not weigh evidence and will indulge all intendments which favor sustaining the finding of the trier of fact.

4. Easements ⇐36(3)

Where plaintiff tried to buy a right of way for the road over the defendants' property, such an offer was a recognition of the prior owners' title and disproved any claim that the use of the roadway was under a claim of right.

5. Easements ⇐8(2)

Where use of a way by a neighbor is by the express or implied permission of the owner, the continued use is not adverse and cannot ripen into a prescriptive right.

6. Easements ⇐37

In action to enjoin the obstruction of a way over defendants' land, whether the use of the way was adverse under claim of right or a mere matter of neighborly accommodation was a question of fact.

7. Appeal and Error ⇐172(1)

Where plaintiff sought declaratory relief that plaintiff had an easement for the roadway by prescription over the defendants' land and no mention was made of an irrevocable license either in the pleadings or in the findings, such an issue could not be raised for the first time on appeal.

8. Pleading ⇐387

A plaintiff must recover if at all upon the cause of action set out in the complaint and not upon some other which may be developed by the proofs.

9. Injunction ⇐260

Damages arising out of the issuance of a temporary injunction may be recovered only in an independent action brought for that purpose and not by prayer in answer.

10. Injunction ⇐260

A judgment awarding damages because of preliminary injunction issued in a roadway dispute was unauthorized on the ground that the finding of damages was not based upon any pleadings where only claim therefor was in answer of defendant.

11. Appeal and Error ⇐931(1), 989

On appeal, when the evidence is contradictory, conflicting interpretations are presented thereby or conflicting inferences may be drawn therefrom, that favoring the judgment must be accepted as true and that which is unfavorable must be discarded as not having had sufficient clarity for acceptance by the trial court.

12. Easements ⇐36(3)

In suit to enjoin the obstruction of an easement of way over adjoining land owned by defendant which had been created by a written agreement between prior owners of property but never used, evidence did not establish that right to use way had been lost by nonuser in view that another roadway over other property was available for use by plaintiffs and where considerable grading would have been necessary to put the instant way in condition for travel.

13. Adverse Possession ⇐31, 68

The essential elements of adverse possession are a claim of right or putting the real owners on notice of the adverse claim.

14. Easements ⇐32

To terminate an easement, the use of the servient tenement must be such as is adverse to the exercise of the easement and under circumstances imparting reasonable notice of the adverse nature thereof.

15. Easements ⇐5, 32

An easement cannot be acquired or extinguished by adverse use unless a party whose rights are affected thereby has knowledge of the adverse nature of such use, and such knowledge may be either actual or constructive resulting from notice, either express or implied.

16. Easements ⇐32

Although certain uses of a servient tenement by their nature may constitute notice of an adverse claim, other uses thereof may appear to be only the reasonable exercise of proprietary rights and would not be the basis for an implication of such notice.

17. Easements ⇐32

In action to enjoin obstruction of an easement of way over adjoining land which was created by a written agreement between prior owners of the properties but never used, fencing of the servient property was not a use necessarily adverse to the exercise of the easement nor conclusive notice of such hostile claim, where servient owner gave as an excuse for not opening up the fence that the land was under water.

18. Easements ⇐37

In action to enjoin obstruction of a way over adjoining land, which easement was created by written agreement between prior owners, whether fencing or cultivation of the whole of the servient property was adverse to the rights of the dominant owner under the easement or with his implied permission was a question of fact.

19. Easements ⇐36(3)

In action to enjoin obstruction of an easement of way over lands of defendant created by written agreement between prior owners of the properties, evidence sustained finding that plaintiffs did not have notice or knowledge of the adverse nature of the use by the servient owners.

Preston Turner, Anaheim, for plaintiffs-appellants Clark.

Wm. P. Webb and Webb & Lae, Anaheim, for defendants-appellants Redlich.

Head, Jacobs, Corfman & Jacobs, Santa Ana, for respondents Seal.

COUGHLIN, Justice pro tem.

In 1945, the plaintiffs Clark purchased a parcel of land, near the intersection of Lincoln Avenue and Hanson Street in Orange County, together with an easement of ingress and egress over adjoining land owned by the defendants Redlich. This easement had been created in 1929 by a written agreement between the prior owners of these properties, but never has been used. Instead, the Clarks have used a lane or road, originally described as a "two-wheel wagon track", along the southerly boundary of the land now owned by the defendants Seal.

The Clarks built two houses upon their property; the first in 1946 and the second in 1953. They lived in the first house; the second house was occupied by tenants. All of the people living in these houses used the road over the Seal property as their means of ingress and egress.

In 1948 or 1949, preliminary to straightening out this road, Clark endeavored to purchase a right of way for this purpose from the prior owner. In discussing this matter with a Mr. McDowell, the agent for this owner, Clark said that he had a right of way to Lincoln Avenue but wanted one to Hanson Street. Although unsuccessful in his attempt to buy a right of way Clark was given permission to use the road temporarily, until the property was sold, but was advised that the owner anticipated selling the property and would not give him a perpetual right of way.

In 1952, Clark endeavored to get a Mr. Mackay, who then owned the property, to sell him a right of way for the road, or permit the county to put through a street. Clark told Mackay that "he didn't claim any way over the road, that he wasn't making any claim on it as being his." Mackay was unwilling to sell a right of way; permit the roadway to be paved; or deed a "full width street off of one side of the property" to the county. However, he told Clark that he would not work a hardship on him, but advised him "if he had any other way he could get out of there, to try to make some arrangement because he did figure on selling." Thereafter, Clark continued to use the road, grading it about twice a year, until the property was purchased by the Seals who built a house thereon, and constructed a fence enclosing it which prevented further use of the roadway.

In the meantime, little had been done to put through a road along the easement over the Redlich property. From 1946 to 1948, Redlich had row-cropped his land, including the easement; in 1948 sowed it to permanent pasture; and thereafter fencing of the entire property was completed. In 1947, and again in 1949, Mr. Clark asked Mr. Redlich to "open up" but could get no answer.

After the construction of the Seal fence the Clarks filed an action for declaratory relief; alleged that they had an easement by grant over the Redlich property and an easement by prescription over the Seal property; and obtained a temporary injunction restraining Mr. and Mrs. Seal from preventing the Clarks' use of the roadway in question. The Redlichs answered and cross-complained seeking to quiet title to their property. The Seals answered and prayed that they be awarded damages incurred as a result of the temporary injunction and the use of their land thereunder by the plaintiffs.

The trial court found that the Clarks had an easement over the Redlich property; did not have an easement over the Seal property; and that Mr. and Mrs. Seal sustained damages in the sum of $200 resulting from the issuance of the preliminary injunction. Judgment was entered accordingly, from which both the plaintiffs Clark and the defendants Redlich have appealed.

The Clarks contend that the judgment in favor of the defendants Seal was in error, as the facts establish that they acquired an easement by prescription over the Seal property, arising out of the use of the roadway in question; that, if they did not acquire such an easement, at least, they obtained an irrevocable license; and that the award of damages was improper.

[1–3] Contrary to plaintiffs' contention, the evidence fully supports the implied finding of the trial court that their use of the roadway was not adverse or under claim of right, but was permissive and with consent of the owner. These are questions of fact and "if there is any substantial evidence to support the judgment, it must be affirmed." O'Banion v. Borba, 32 Cal.2d 145, 147, 195 P.2d 10, 12. Plaintiffs' argument is based on a statement of facts which ignores the general rule that, on appeal an appellate court will "(a) view the evidence in the light most favorable to the respondent (b) not weigh the evidence", and "(c) indulge all intendments which favor sustaining the finding of the trier of fact, * * *". In re Estate of Isenberg, 63 Cal.App.2d 214, 216, 146 P.2d 424, 425.

[4, 5] In 1948 or 1949, and again in 1952, Clark tried to buy a right of way for the road in question. Such an offer was a recognition of the prior owners' title and disproves any contention that the use of the roadway was under a claim of right. Central Pac. R. Co. v. Mead, 63 Cal. 112. Although refusing to sell a right of way, the former owners gave plaintiffs permission to use the road. "[W]here the use of a way by a neighbor is by the express or implied permission of the owner, the continued use is not adverse and cannot ripen into a prescriptive right." Jones v. Tierney-Sinclair, 71 Cal.App.2d 366, 370, 162 P.2d 669, 671. Whether the use of a roadway is adverse and under a claim of right or a "mere matter of neighborly accommodation" is a question of fact to be determined in the light of all of the circumstances disclosed by the evidence. O'Banion v. Borba, 32 Cal.2d 145, 150, 195 P.2d 10.

The plaintiffs rely on the cases of Yuba Consolidated Goldfields v. Hilton, 16 Cal. App. 228, 116 P. 712, 715; Crawford v. Lambert, 136 Cal.App. 617, 29 P.2d 428, and Crossett v. Souza, 3 Cal.2d 721, 45 P.2d 970, in which reference is made to a presumption, arising from long continuous use, that such a use was adverse, under claim of right, and with knowledge of such claim by the owners of the property involved. Each of these cases sustain a finding of adverse possession made by the trial court. In O'Banion v. Borba, 32 Cal.2d 145, 150, 195 P.2d 10, 13, the court said: "While many of the cases mention presumptions, the problem actually discussed therein is the sufficiency of the evidence in the light of all the circumstances disclosed." In the instant case, there is ample evidence to support the finding of the trial court. The cited cases are not authority for plaintiffs' position.

[6, 7] The Clarks also contend that, even though they may not have acquired a right of way over the Seal property by prescription, they did obtain an irrevocable license to use the roadway. The complaint, which is for declaratory relief, sets forth only a controversy between the plaintiffs Clark and the defendants Seal over an alleged "easement by prescription". The prayer of this complaint asks for judgment declaring whether the plaintiffs have such an "easement by prescription". No mention is made of an irrevocable license either in the pleadings, or in the findings of the trial court. Such an issue may not be raised for the first time on appeal. Eger v. May Department Stores, 120 Cal.App.2d 554, 561, 261 P.2d 281; Stinson v. Blodget, 123 Cal. App.2d 390, 391, 266 P.2d 947. "A plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon the cause of action set out in the complaint, and not upon some other which may be developed by the proofs." Mondran v. Goux, 51 Cal. 151, 153; Reed v. Norton, 99 Cal. 617, 619, 34 P. 333; Schirmer v. Drexler, 134 Cal. 134, 139, 66 P. 180.

[8, 9] The trial court found that the defendants Seal "have been damaged in the sum of $200 by virtue of the preliminary injunction heretofore ordered at the request of the plaintiffs", and awarded judgment accordingly. This finding was not based upon any pleading. The only mention of such a matter is in the prayer to the answer of the defendants Seal which asks for damages in an undisclosed amount, incurred as a result of the issuance of the preliminary injunction. The issue of such damages was not properly before the trial court; was not a proper subject for consideration by that court; and the judgment awarding such was erroneous. Damages arising out of the issuance of a temporary injunction may be recovered, if at all, only in an independent action brought for that purpose. People v. Hawley, 207 Cal. 395, 407, 279 P. 136.

The defendants Redlich appeal from that part of the judgment declaring the right of plaintiffs to use the easement described in the written agreement executed in 1929. These defendants contend that this easement was lost by adverse possession; was extinguished by their use of the servient tenement, for the statutory period governing adverse possession, in a manner adverse to the exercise of the easement, citing the case of Glatts v. Henson, 31 Cal.2d 368, 370, 188 P.2d 745. In the cited case the court held that the partial occupancy of an easement by permanent buildings constituted an adverse possession which extinguished that part of the easement so occupied.

[10] In the case at bar, it is argued that the enclosure of the whole of the servient tenement, including that part subject to the easement, by a fence, for over six years prior to the filing of the complaint, its use as a pasture during that time and its prior use for farming purposes, constituted a use adverse to the exercise of the easement. This conclusion, it is claimed, is supported by Clark's nonuser of the easement. Reliance also is placed on the testimony of the Redlichs that, in conversations between themselves and Clark in 1947 and 1949, they refused to permit him to open up the easement. This testimony is contradicted by the testimony of Clark. Conflicting interpretations thereof and conflicting inferences which might be drawn therefrom, also are presented. On appeal, when the evidence is contradictory, conflicting interpretations are presented thereby, or conflicting inferences may be drawn therefrom, that which favors the judgment must be accepted as true, and that which is unfavorable must be discarded as not having had sufficient verity for acceptance by the trial court. In re Estate of Teel, 25 Cal.2d 520, 524, 154 P.2d 384; Crawford v. Southern Pacific Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183; Tobola v. Wholey, 75 Cal.App.2d 351, 355, 170 P.2d 952.

Clark testified that, in 1947 he asked Redlich to open up and "I couldn't get no answer". "He just didn't open up, that's all"; "I don't say he did refuse but he didn't open up"; and that in 1949 "I asked him to open up again." Clark was asked, "What happened then?" and replied: "No results." When asked "And did he refuse?" he answered: "I didn't get no results." To the inquiry, "What do you mean by that?" Clark said "he did not open up."

[11] Redlich testified that, at the 1947 conversation with Clark, "I just told him he couldn't go through, its all fenced" and "* * * I just said * * * I have got cattle in it and it's impossible to go through", and that at the 1949 conversation, "I said 'it is all under water in the first place, you couldn't drive through, you would have to have a boat to get through.'" It appears that a part of the property is in a flood area and, at times, under water. This testimony does not establish the assertion of an adverse use under claim of right.

Clark said he used the right of way to Hanson Street over the Seal property because there was a trail there, whereas there was no road or trail across the Redlich place and it would take a "lot" of grading to get over that property.

[12] The testimony concerning the conversations in question is not conclusive evidence that the Redlichs' use of the property subject to the easement was adverse, under claim of right or put the Clarks on notice of such a claim. These are essential elements of adverse possession. Furtado v. Taylor, 86 Cal.App.2d 346, 352, 194 P.2d 770.

The trial court was justified in rejecting the evidence of nonuser of the easement as proof of an adverse use. There was good reason for not using this easement in view of the fact that the roadway over the Seal property was available, whereas considerable grading would have been necessary to put the Redlich property in condition for travel. An easement by grant may not be lost by mere nonuser. Glatts v. Henson, 31 Cal.2d 368, 371, 188 P.2d 745; Furtado v. Taylor, 86 Cal.App.2d 346, 352, 194 P.2d 770. The effect, if any, of such nonuser, as a factor in accomplishing the extinguishment of an easement by adverse possession, involves the determination of a question of fact committed to the legal discretion of the trial court.

[13–16] Likewise, under the circumstances of this case, whether the fencing and cultivation of the servient estate constituted acts of adverse possession was a question of fact. To terminate an easement, the use of the servient tenement must be such as is adverse to the exercise of the easement, Glatts v. Henson, 31 Cal.2d 368, 371, 188 P.2d 745, and under circumstances which impart reasonable notice of the adverse nature thereof. Furtado v. Taylor, 86 Cal.App.2d 346, 352, 194 P.2d 770. An easement cannot be acquired or extinguished by adverse use unless the party whose rights are affected thereby has knowledge of the adverse nature of such use. This knowledge may be either actual or constructive, resulting from notice either express or implied. O'Banion v. Borba, 32 Cal.2d 145, 195 P.2d 10; Clarke v. Clarke, 133 Cal. 667, 66 P. 10; Hibberd v. McCosker, 55 Cal.App. 568, 569, 203 P. 810. Although certain uses of a servient tenement by their very nature may constitute notice of an adverse claim, Glatts v. Henson, 31 Cal.2d 368, 371, 188 P.2d 745, other uses thereof may appear to be only the reasonable exercise of proprietary rights, and would not be the basis for an implication of such notice. Pabst v. Finmand, 190 Cal. 124, 129, 211 P. 11.

[17] Fencing the Redlich property was not a use necessarily adverse to the exercise of the Clark easement, nor conclusive notice of a hostile claim. Mattes v. Hall, 21 Cal.App. 552, 560, 132 P. 295; Mattes v. Hall, 28 Cal.App. 361, 365, 152 P. 436; Hibberd v. McCosker, 55 Cal.App. 568, 203 P. 810. Moreover, the effect of the fencing of the servient tenement as an act of hostility toward the continued existence of the easement, or the assertion of a claim of right was negatived by Redlich's giving an excuse for not opening up the fence, when he said that the land was under water and it would be necessary to get a boat to go through.

The acts of cultivation present a similar situation. The fact that the right of way was in pasturage did not prevent its use as a means of ingress and egress, nor was it conclusive evidence of a hostile act.

[18] Whether the fencing or cultivation of the whole of the Redlich property was adverse to the rights of Clark under the easement, or with his implied permission and indulgence, was a question of fact. O'Banion v. Borba, 32 Cal.2d 145, 147, 195 P.2d 10; Van Amersfoort v. Young, 105 Cal.App.2d 22, 232 P.2d 569; Storrow v. Green, 39 Cal.App. 123, 127, 178 P. 339.

[19] There is substantial evidence to sustain the implied findings of the trial court that the Redlichs' use of the servient tenement was not adverse to the exercise of the Clark easement; that such use was with the implied permission of the Clarks, and not under claim of right; and that the Clarks did not have notice or knowledge of the adverse nature of that use.

The judgment in favor of the plaintiffs and respondents Clark and against the defendants and appellants Redlich is affirmed: said respondents to recover from said appellants their costs incurred in the appeal taken by said appellants. That part of the judgment in favor of the defendants and respondents Seal and against the plaintiffs and appellants Clark awarding $200 damages is reversed, but in all other particulars is affirmed: said respondents to recover their costs on appeal from appellants Clark.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Joe VACA et al., Defendants,

Gilbert Lechuga, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5547.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 10, 1957.

Prosecution on three counts of forcible rape. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Joe Raycraft, J., entered a judgment of conviction, and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that evidence supported conviction as against defendant's contention that prosecutrix' testimony was inherently improbable.

Affirmed.

1. Rape ⇐59(24)

In forcible rape prosecution, where accused admitted that he and another who allegedly had sexual intercourse with prosecutrix were at automobile at same time, instruction relative to aiding and abetting was proper.

2. Rape ⇐51(4)

Evidence was sufficient to support conviction of forcible rape, as against defendant's contention that prosecutrix' testimony was inherently improbable.

Angelo L. Baldwin, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendants Lechuga, Joe Vaca and Jesse Barrera were convicted, in a jury trial, of three counts of forcible rape. Lechuga, 18 years of age, was committed to the Youth Authority. Lechuga appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant contends that the court erred in instructing the jury; and that the testimony of the prosecutrix was inherently improbable.

On March 4, 1955, about 8 p. m. Patricia, an unmarried girl 14 years of age, and her girl friend LaVeta went to a dance at a schoolhouse. While they and Eddie Alfaro, LaVeta's friend, were standing outside the schoolhouse, Donald Matheny, who was Patricia's friend, drove up in an automobile. Several Mexican boys were in the automobile with him. He asked Patricia to go with him. She declined, stating there were too many boys in the automobile. Then Donald drove away. Patricia asked Eddie where Donald had gone. About 9 p. m. Patricia, LaVeta and Eddie went away from the schoolhouse, in Eddie's automobile, and after driving about 15 minutes they arrived at a place in a field where a bonfire was to be started. Several boys were at that place. Eddie stopped his automobile near Donald's automobile. Eddie told Donald that Patricia wanted to talk to him. After Donald and Patricia had talked about 5 minutes, she entered Donald's automobile, which was a 2-door Buick, and he drove around the corner and parked. They sat in the automobile and talked about 10 minutes. Then "a bunch of Mexican boys got around the car." Patricia locked the door of the automobile, on the side where she was sitting. Donald got out of the automobile and talked, in Spanish, to the boys. Then Patricia got out, on the driver's side of the automobile. A boy asked her where she was going. She said she was going where LaVeta and Eddie were. Then the boys pushed her into the back seat of Donald's automobile. When she was pushed into the automobile there were three boys in the back seat and four boys in the front seat. Donald got into the driver's seat. She screamed, and they threw a coat over her head and tore and pulled her underclothing off. The automobile was driven a short distance, and then the coat was removed from her head. After the automobile was stopped, about 17 boys had sexual intercourse with her without her consent. She struggled, screamed and cried. Part of the time the coat was over her head. They struck her several times. Every time she screamed one of the boys would hit her. When she was screaming, Joe Vaca had hold of her leg. He had a needle and a bottle, and he told her that if she did not keep quiet he would shoot the needle in her leg.

Patricia testified that defendants Lechuga, Vaca and Barrera, and other boys by the names of Mugica, S. Alfaro and Villareal, were some of those who had sexual intercourse with her on said occasion. (Barrera and the three boys last referred to were charged, in another information, with forcible rape and the crime against nature. The two causes were consolidated for trial and were tried together.) She also testified that Lechuga (appellant) "is the one that kept hitting me. He hit me in the temple once with his fist and kept slapping me around." After being at that place approximately two hours, Donald took her, in his automobile, to Eddie's automobile. Eddie and LaVeta took her to her home, arriving there about midnight. On the way home she told LaVeta and Eddie what had happened. When she arrived home she did not tell her mother what had happened, because the boys had threatened her. The next morning she told her mother, and they went to a physician who examined Patricia. Patricia testified that, prior to said March 4, she had not had sexual intercourse.

Dr. Julien, the physician who examined Patricia, testified that he examined her on March 5, 1955; he found contusions on her temple, the back of her head, her chest, arms, thigh, and knee; he found a laceration on her lip; he found multiple scratches on her buttocks, thighs and hands; there were traumatic injuries to her private parts; in his opinion the hymen lacerations were not more than 12 to 24 hours old, and she was a virgin prior to those lacerations.

A deputy sheriff testified that, in a conversation with Lechuga on March 8, 1955, Lechuga said that he had not been present at the scene of the alleged occurrences and he did not know anything about the affair; the deputy (witness) told Lechuga that other persons involved in the offense had stated that Lechuga was there, and that Joe Vaca had said that he and Lechuga had walked together to Donald Matheny's car; that Lechuga then said that he had been on one side of the car looking through the windows at the time Patricia had an act of intercourse with Mugica and Villareal; that Lechuga denied that he had intercourse with her.

Defendant Lechuga testified that about 10:30 o'clock on the evening involved here he and Joe Vaca arrived, by automobile, at Hawaiian Gardens (the area where there was to be a bonfire); they parked the automobile, walked into a field where there was another automobile, and looked in the automobile and saw who was there; he (Lechuga) was on the driver's side of the automobile when he was looking to see what was going on; he saw Donald Matheny and Gaxiola in the front seat, and a girl and Mugica in the back seat; Lechuga thought Mugica was having sexual intercourse with the girl; Lechuga and Vaca stayed there about half a minute and then went home.

Joe Vaca testified in substance the same as Lechuga testified.

Jesse Vaca (brother of defendant Joe Vaca) testified that he was in Matheny's car about 45 minutes; he did not see Lechuga at Matheny's car.

Gaxiola and Johnny Barrera (brother of defendant Jesse Barrera) testified that they did not see Lechuga there.

[1] Appellant contends that the court erred in giving the following instruction: "In this connection you are instructed that, if an act of forcible rape or the infamous crime against nature is in progress and if one man is the actual perpetrator of either of those crimes against a female person, any other confederate of the perpetrator who, knowingly and with criminal intent, and in concert with the perpetrator, stands by, without any show of resentment against the perpetrator of the acts and without any show of concern for the female person, and who stands by in sympathy with, or in encouragement of such act of rape or crime against nature, or who keeps watch against intrusion, each such confederate has aided and abetted the actual perpetrator and is therefore a principal in such crime. Thus, if you find that, in this manner, any defendant in this case aided and abetted any other defendant in the commission of one or more of the acts alleged, you may find him guilty as a principal." Appellant argues to the effect that the instruction was not applicable to the facts involving appellant; there was evidence that appellant was not present; and there was no evidence that he aided or abetted in the commission of a crime. In the present case a group of boys surrounded the automobile in which Patricia was sitting with Matheny, and then the boys began to commit acts of intercourse upon her. She testified that appellant, Vaca, Barrera, Mugica, S. Alfaro, Villareal, and several other boys had intercourse with her; all the boys hit her, and every time she screamed one of the boys would hit her; appellant hit her in the temple with his fist and he is the one who kept hitting her and slapping her around; all the boys threatened her if she told what happened. Appellant admitted that he and Vaca were at the automobile at the same time. It was not error to give the instruction. See People v. Mummert, 57 Cal.App.2d 849, 855, 135 P.2d 665; and People v. Griffin, 106 Cal.App.2d 531, 536, 235 P.2d 424.

[2] Appellant also contends that the testimony of Patricia was inherently improbable. After stating this contention appellant quotes various portions of the testimony of Patricia, and he refers to portions of the testimony of Jesse Barrera, Jesse Vaca, Eddie Alfaro, and the physician. Appellant does not present any argument with respect to those quotations or references. One of such quotations from the testimony of Patricia is: "The only one I see, the only one I can really identify is the one in the purple shirt." The person in the purple shirt, so referred to, was defendant S. Alfaro. Although appellant has not presented any argument with respect to that quotation, he apparently intended that the quotation should be understood to mean that Patricia testified that the only one she could identify, among those who had intercourse with her, was S. Alfaro. The quotation should not be so understood. That testimony, so quoted, related to whether or not she observed a defendant at the bonfire (before the acts of intercourse). The reporter's transcript shows that counsel for Jesse Barrera, in cross-examining Patricia, asked her if she had seen Barrera "around the bonfire before that [referring to intercourse with him]?" She replied, "No." While she was answering a question as to when she first saw Barrera, she was interrupted by counsel. Then the following occurred:

"The Court: It sounded like you started to answer one and were interrupted. Had you finished your answer?

"The Witness: He asked me if I seen him around the bonfire.

"The Court: Had you finished your answer to his questions?

"The Witness: No.

"The Court: You may finish your answer. * * *

"The Witness: The only one I see, the only one I can really identify is the one in the purple shirt."

It is clear that she was testifying that S. Alfaro was the only one she could identify as having been at the bonfire. She identified appellant as one of those who had intercourse with her. She said he kept hitting her and slapping her around. She identified several of the other boys who had intercourse with her, including defendants Vaca and Barrera. Her testimony was not inherently improbable.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

KAISER COMPANY, a corporation, E. F. Mitchler, Western Pacific Railway, a corporation, John William Bass, et al., Defendants, Kaiser Company, a corporation, Respondent.*

No. 17041.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 21, 1956.

Hearing Granted Feb. 13, 1957.

The Superior Court, County of Alameda, James R. Agee, sustained demurrer without leave to amend to plaintiff's third amended complaint as amended, and plaintiff appealed from judgment. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that if defendant, who owned and controlled premises on which it maintained large sand piles, knew or should have known that children were actually playing on piles, jury, under circumstances, in view of propensities of children to play on sand piles, could find that piles were source of danger to children, which danger defendant could easily and inexpensively have guarded against, and that defendant was liable for death of ten year old who was asphyxiated when pile collapsed.

Judgment reversed.

1. Negligence ⇐111(1)

Allegations, in case involving asphyxiation of child while playing on defendants' sand pile, that children of tender age were in habit of playing upon premises and piles and belt, and were by their ordinary predelictions and impulses attracted to them, and that defendant knew or should have known of that fact and of danger to children, satisfied certain of requirements of rule relating to liability of landowner to trespassing children.

2. Negligence ⇐111(1)

Allegations, in case involving liability for asphyxiation of child while playing on defendants' sand pile, that children because of their youth were unable to and did not discover condition or realize risk involved in coming into area and in intermeddling in piles, satisfied requirement of rule relating to liability of landowner to trespassing children, to effect that children because of their youth do not discover condition or realize risk involved in intermeddling in it or in coming within area made dangerous by it.

3. Negligence ⇐111(1)

Allegation, in case involving liability for asphyxiation of child on defendants' sand pile, that fence, guard or railing would have prevented children from coming on premises and intermeddling, satisfied requirement of rule relating to liability of landowner for injuries to trespassing children, to effect that utility to possessor of maintaining condition is slight as compared to risk to young children involved therein.

4. Negligence ⇐39

The doctrine of attractive nuisance does not allow recovery for injuries caused by a danger which a child would be expected to recognize, nor from dangers which could not be remedied without unreasonable trouble or expense, or without destroying utility of the property.

5. Negligence ⇐136(19, 24)

Whether defendant, who owned and controlled premises on which were located sand piles on which child was asphyxiated when it collapsed, knew or should have known that children were in habit of playing on piles, and whether to fence or guard piles would not cause unreasonable trouble or expense, or in any wise destroy utility of property, within rule relating to liability of landowner for injuries to trespassing children, would be questions for jury.

6. Negligence ⇐33(3)

In cases of injury to trespassing children, the customary rules of ordinary negligence cases apply, and the true basis of liability in the particular instance is the foreseeability of harm to the child.

7. Negligence ⇐136(19, 24)

If defendant, who owned and controlled premises on which it maintained large sand and gravel piles, knew or should have known that children were actually playing on piles, jury, under circumstances, in view of propensities of children to play on sand piles, could find that piles were source of danger to children, which danger defendant could easily and inexpensively have guarded against, and that defendant was liable for death of ten year old child who was asphyxiated when pile collapsed.

Charles O. Morgan, Jr., San Francisco, for appellant.

Frederick M. Van Sicklen, James C. Calkins, Alameda, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

Defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's third amended complaint as amended was sustained without leave to amend. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment thereon and presents as the sole question: Does the attractive nuisance doctrine in California apply to sand and gravel piles?

Complaint.

Plaintiff was the mother of Johnny William Bass, Jr., who, at the time of his death, was 10 years old. Defendant owned, maintained, operated and controlled certain premises in Stockton on which it maintained large sand and gravel piles and a large conveyor belt. Alongside the piles and the belt was a road or pathway. "* * * children of tender age were in the habit of being upon and playing upon the said premises and the said sand and gravel piles and conveyor belt, and by the ordinary predelictions and impulses of normal children were attracted to and induced to come and to be upon and to play upon the said premises, said sand and gravel piles and conveyor belt; all of which was well known to the defendants, its servants, agents and employees, or by the exercise of reasonable care on their part would have been known to them. * * * the defendants knew and realized, or should have known and realized, that the said sand piles, gravel piles and conveyor involved an unreasonable risk of death or serious bodily harm to children playing on the same as aforesaid in that the children could be injured or killed from falling from the same, from the same falling upon them and in other manners and ways. * * * said children because of their youth were unable to and did not discover the condition or realize the risk involved in intermeddling in said condition or coming within the area made dangerous by the same. * * * a fence, guard or railing would have prevented said children from coming upon and being upon said premises and condition and from intermeddling in same."

On August 20, 1953, Johnny had been attracted to come upon and to play upon the said piles and belt. Being of tender years he was unable to perceive or appreciate the danger confronting him. Defendant negligently maintained said premises in that it failed to place any fences, guards or railing or other means of excluding small children therefrom. As a result of said negligence Johnny while playing and digging on and in the said piles was asphyxiated, resulting in his death, when one of the sand piles on or in which he was playing collapsed upon him.

Defendant demurred generally and specially. The demurrer was sustained apparently on the theory that in this state the attractive nuisance theory does not apply to sand and gravel piles. Admittedly this question has not heretofore been presented in this state. As we pointed out in Marino v. Valenti, 118 Cal.App.2d 830, 841, 259 P.2d 84, there are a number of exceptions to the general rule that the owner or occupier of land owes no duty to trespassers thereon, except to put or keep it in a reasonably safe condition for them, or to conduct his activities in a manner not to endanger them. One of these in favor of trespassing children is "if their trespass is foreseeable, if the condition of the premises involves an unreasonable risk of harm to them in view of their immaturity, and if the burden of rectifying the condition is slight in comparison with its usefulness and the magnitude of the risk." 118 Cal.App.2d at page 842, 259 P.2d at page 90. As we stated in the Marino case, the so-called "turn-table" cases started this doctrine, to which the confusing name "attractive nuisance" has been applied, and we suggested that a more appropriate term would be "injuries to trespassing children." See Prosser on Torts, 1941, pp. 617–620.

In the Marino case we pointed out that there was considerable confusion in the authorities as to whether the rule as to trespassing children set forth in the Restatement of Torts, section 339, applied in this state. We endeavored to reconcile the cases upon the subject, including the majority opinion in Puchta v. Rothman, 99 Cal.App.2d 285, 221 P.2d 744 (child injured in an uncompleted building), relied upon by defendant here, which seemed to cast some doubt upon California having adopted the Restatement rule, and we finally concluded, 118 Cal.App.2d at page 842, 259 P.2d at page 80: "Our review of the decisions in this state convinces us that the rule today in California is substantially as expressed in § 339 of the Restatement of the Law of Torts: * * *"[1]

[1] Applying that rule here we find that all its elements appear in plaintiff's complaint. 1. It is alleged that children of tender age were in the habit of playing upon the premises and the piles and belt, and were by their ordinary predelictions and impulses attracted to them and that defendant knew or should have known of that fact and of the danger to the children. This could meet the first and second requirements of the Restatement:[2] "A possessor of land is subject to liability for bodily harm to young children trespassing thereon caused by a structure or other artificial condition which he maintains upon the land, if (a) the place where the condition is maintained is one upon which the possessor knows or should know that such children are likely to trespass, and (b) the condition is one of which the possessor knows or should know and which he realizes or should realize as involving an unreasonable risk of death or serious bodily harm to such children * * *."

[2] 2. It is alleged that the children, including Johnny, because of their youth, were unable to and did not discover the condition or realize the risk involved in coming into the area and in intermeddling in the piles. This could meet requirement (c) of the Restatement: "(c) the children because of their youth do not discover the condition or realize the risk involved in intermedding in it or in coming within the area made dangerous by it * * *."

[3] 3. It is alleged that a fence, guard or railing would have prevented the children from coming on the premises and intermeddling. This could meet requirement (d) of the Restatement: "(d) the utility to the possessor of maintaining the condition is slight as compared to the risk to young children involved therein."

Apparently there are only two cases[3] applying the attractive nuisance doctrine to a sand pile. One is Holmberg v. City of Chicago, 1927, 244 Ill.App. 505, where an 11-year-old boy was suffocated by collapsing sand in which he was digging. The pile of sand was about 50 feet in length and about 8 feet in height. The court, in holding that the attractive nuisance doctrine was applicable and that the judgment for plaintiff should be affirmed, said that "It may be assumed, as a matter of common knowledge, that a pile of sand, especially

1. It appears, however, that California, although accepting the Restatement rule, has jointed those states (see 65 C.J.S., Negligence, § 29(14), p. 479) which have refused to apply it to ponds, reservoirs and swimming pools. See California Annotations to the Restatement of the Law of Torts, 141–142; Wilford v. Little, 144 Cal.App.2d 477, 301 P.2d 282; Lake v. Ferrer, 139 Cal.App.2d 114, 293 P.2d 104 (hearing in both of these cases denied by Supreme Court). The reason given in the Wilford case, 144 Cal.App.2d at page 481, 301 P.2d at page 285, is: "Courts in California have held repeatedly that a body of water, natural or artificial, is not such a thing as may be held to constitute an attractive nuisance. It may be attractive to children but it is also of a common and ordinary nature of that which is to be found anywhere."

2. By the expression "could meet" in this and other sentences, we mean that a jury could so find, in effect.

3. Baxter v. Park, 1925, 48 S.D. 506, 205 N.W. 75 and Hawley v. City of Atlantic, 1894, 92 Iowa 172, 60 N.W. 519, cited by plaintiff as dealing with sand piles, do not. They involved collapse of sand from the side of a pit or excavation.

when located on a public street, would prove attractive to the children of the neighborhood," at pages 509–510 and "at first blush, knowing the instincts and the natural urge of children to play and make certain childish adventures, and particularly their natural liking, one might almost say passion, for a sand pile as a source of pleasure, one is inclined to conclude that just such a calamity as happened might have been expected, or anticipated, or thought of as not unreasonably probable." At pages 511–512. In that case the sand pile was located in a public street, differing thereby from the facts in our case. The other case is Foster v. Lusk, 1917, 129 Ark. 1, 194 S.W. 855. There the complaint charged the defendant with maintaining an insecure stack of ties near a pile of sand, both on the defendant railway's right of way, which pile of sand was attractive to children, which fact was known or should have been known to the defendant; that the 4-year-old plaintiff was attracted to the sand pile and was injured by the stack of ties falling on her. In reversing the trial court's holding that the complaint did not state a cause of action, the reviewing court said, 194 S.W. at page 857: "* * * it is alleged that the attractive sand pile and the insecure stack of ties in juxtaposition created a dangerous situation, the maintenance of which constituted negligence for which defendants are liable. * * *

"The defendants are not responsible for the negligent act of the tie company in piling the ties insecurely, but their responsibility is for allowing the dangerous stack of ties to remain there, if it was reasonably to be anticipated that children attracted by the pile of sand might be injured. Of that the jury should have been permitted to decide, for the facts stated in the complaint were, if established by evidence, sufficient to make out a case of culpable negligence on the part of the defendants. It cannot be said as a matter of law that a pile of sand placed in a position described in the complaint would not be such an attraction to children that the owner of the premises should not take [it] into consideration in allowing a dangerous agency to be placed contiguous thereto."

There the injury was not due to danger in the sand pile itself as it is in our case; nevertheless, we see no reason why the doctrine enunciated there should not apply here, 194 S.W. at page 856: "The plaintiff's right to recover is predicated on the doctrine, so often annouced by the courts, that where an owner permits anything dangerous which is attractive to children, and from which injury may be anticipated, to remain unguarded on his premises, he will be liable if a child attracted to the place is injured thereby."

In California the courts have refused to apply the doctrine to a pool of water or an open ditch. The leading case to which most of the cases on the subject refer is Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 345, 47 P. 113, 598, where the defendant had allowed his lot to accumulate waters and a pool by reason of an embankment thrown up by the city, which seemed to decide the matter on the theory that "as to common dangers, existing in the order of nature, it is the duty of parents to guard and warn their children * * *." 115 Cal. at page 356, 47 P. at page 599.[4] However, the refusal to apply the doctrine was extended to artificially created pools and in the following situations: King v. Simons Brick Co., 52 Cal.App.2d 586, 126 P.2d 627 (clay pit dug by the defendant in which waters accumulated); Beeson v. City of Los Angeles, 115 Cal.App. 122, 300 P. 993 (a pool of water in an open storm ditch); Melendez v. City of Los Angeles, 8 Cal.2d 741, 68 P.2d 971 (open pool in a storm drain); Polk v. Laurel Hill Cemetery Ass'n, 37 Cal. App. 624, 174 P. 414, and Betts v. City &

4. But in the Peters case the court said, 115 Cal. at page 356, 47 P. at page 599: "But, with respect to dangers specially created by the act of the owner, novel in character, attractive and dangerous to children, easily guarded and rendered safe, the rule is, as it ought to be, different; and such is the rule of the turntable cases, of the lumberpile cases, and others of a similar character."

County of San Francisco, 108 Cal.App.2d 701, 239 P.2d 456 (reservoirs); Lake v. Ferrer, supra, 139 Cal.App.2d 114, 293 P.2d 104, and Wilford v. Little, supra, 144 Cal. App.2d 477, 301 P.2d 282 (swimming pools); Ward v. Oakley Co., 125 Cal.App.2d 840, 271 P.2d 536 (mud deposited in waters by a mining company).

In certain cases our courts have worked out a theory to modify the doctrine by rather ingeniously finding a trap connected with the pool or ditch. Thus, in Sanchez v. East Contra Costa Irr. Co., 205 Cal. 515, 271 P. 1060, the doctrine was held to apply to an irrigation ditch, because the ditch had in it a concealed syphon, which constituted a trap. The bait for the trap, said the court, was the shallow body of water in the ditch. "The children assumed the risk of the open, obvious, notorious danger incident to the canal, containing about 3 feet of water; but they did not assume the risk of an unknown, concealed and unguarded danger." 205 Cal. at page 518, 271 P. at page 1061.

In Faylor v. Great Eastern Q. Min. Co., 45 Cal.App. 194, 187 P. 101, the bait was a push car in a mining tunnel, the trap was a concealed slope therein filled with water.

As pointed out in Puchta v. Rothman, supra, 99 Cal.App.2d 285, 287, 288, 221 P.2d 744, originally the attractive nuisance doctrine was applied only to machinery under certain circumstances, but it has been extended to various appliances and contrivances such as a loose guy wire which came in contact with a live wire, a wagon attached to the rear of a house being moved through city streets, unlocked ore cars left in an abandoned mining tunnel, a slowly backing railroad train, an unguarded trailer and vat of boiling tar in a city street, an abandoned box of dynamite caps left on a railroad right of way under construction. The court there also stated that its application has been denied in addition to pools, reservoirs and storm drains, to a stable, a dance hall, an icing platform, and an unfinished building. In Lopez v. Capitol Co., 141 Cal.App.2d 60, 296 P.2d 63, it was denied to a building scaffold on a public sidewalk. See 41 Cal.L.Rev. 138 et seq., for a compilation of the cases in California in which the doctrine has been and has not been applied.

[4, 5] Running through all the cases seems to be the proposition that the doctrine does not allow recovery for injuries caused by a danger which a child would be expected to recognize, nor from dangers which could not be remedied without unreasonable trouble or expense, or without destroying the utility of property. We have heretofore shown that the allegations of the complaint meet the requirements of the rule of the Restatement, which rule is recognized in California. Let us now see if they meet the above proposition. Certainly a child of tender years cannot be expected to recognize any danger from a sand pile. It is doubtful if there is anything that will attract a child and upon which he will fearlessly climb and play, more than will a sand pile.[5] Thus that requirement is met. In view of the allegations of the complaint, which, of course, we must assume are true, it is apparent that the second requirement of the proposition is likewise met. It is alleged that defendant knew or should have known that children were in the habit of playing on the piles. Certainly to fence or guard the piles would not, on the face of it, at least, cause unreasonable trouble or expense, or in anywise destroy the utility of the property. It would be for the jury to determine these questions.

Prosser on Torts, 1941 ed. pp. 619–620, states: "The better authorities now agree that the element of 'attraction' is important only in so far as it may mean that the trespass is to be anticipated, and that the basis of liability is merely the foreseeability of harm to the child, and considerations of common humanity and social policy which curtail the defendant's privilege to use the land as he sees fit." That this is the modern tendency and that the questions involved are for the jury, is well illustrated by Kahn v. James Burton Company, 1955, 5 Ill.2d 614, 126 N.E.2d 836. There a child was injured when a pile of lumber left without adequate support on a vacant lot upon which the defendant was constructing a residence, upon which he had been playing, toppled over. The court said, 126 N.E.2d at page 840: "* * * the questions whether the lumber was so piled as to create an unreasonable danger to children playing thereon, and whether it was so attractive to children as to suggest the probability that children would climb onto it, were questions for the jury under the circumstances shown in the record. * * *

5. In Holmberg v. City of Chicago, supra, 1927, 244 Ill.App. 505, at page 509, the court said that it might be assumed as a matter of common knowledge that a sand pile is attractive to children in the street. We believe that even on private property it would be equally alluring, although, of course, not so available.

"A similar conclusion must follow in the present case. The creator of certain conditions dangerous and hazardous to children because of their immature appreciation of such dangers and hazards must be held to a certain standard of conduct for the protection of such children in accordance with the attendant circumstances and conditions. Account must be taken of the cost and burden of taking precautionary measures and of the right of families and society to rear and develop children with freedom of activity in their communities, without being subject to unreasonable risks which might cause serious injury or death to such children. All men are presumed to know those things which are matters of common knowledge and must be held, in the absence of actual knowledge or notice, to have reasonably anticipated such occurrences as in the ordinary nature of things reasonable men should know will probably occur. * * * The test in the case at bar is whether the lumber company in the exercise of ordinary care could reasonably have anticipated the likelihood that children would climb onto the lumber and would be injured if it were not securely piled."

In our case it is alleged that defendant knew or should have known that children were actually playing on the piles. In the Kahn case, the court points out, as does Prosser (p. 618), that the labeling of a certain set of facts as being an "attractive" nuisance case or a "turntable" case is a misnomer and has led to undesirable conclusions. "The inclination is then to find a stare decisis pigeonhole or category." 126 N.E.2d at page 841. As a result irreconcilable conclusions have been reached. One is that because of immature judgment the child was attracted and allured to certain premises and therefore is no longer a trespasser. Another conclusion is that this same immature child was attracted to the premises by object A, but was injured by object B, and therefore his injury was not occasioned by the attracting cause. Still another conclusion relates to water courses, ponds and lakes. The water in itself has been held cannot be the attraction for liability to attach, but if the child is attracted by such attractive objects as floating logs, rafts, boardwalks, tree stumps, etc., and is drowned, liability will attach even though the death is not in the least occasioned by the attracting objects. The court then states, and we agree with the statements, 126 N.E.2d at pages 841, 842: "In view of the foregoing conflict and the fact that, as many courts have declared, a child in his youthful fancy, imagination and ingenuity can make a plaything of almost anything and is attracted by almost everything, the only proper basis for decision in such cases dealing with personal injuries to children are the customary rules of ordinary negligence cases. * * * The element of attraction is significant only in so far as it indicates that the trespass should be anticipated, the true basis of liability being the foreseeability of harm to the child. Whether the lumber pile was sufficiently attractive to entice children into climbing upon it, whether its condition would involve danger from such activity, and whether the contractor should have anticipated the probability of the accident, were matters for determination by the jury." (Emphasis added.) In Hawk v. City of Newport Beach, 46 Cal.2d 213, 293 P.2d 48, 50, a youth 17 years of age was injured when he dove into the ocean from a rock on the beach maintained by the city as a recreational area. Although not based on the attractive nuisance doctrine, but on the charge that the situation constituted a "dangerous or defective condition" of the city's property, the ruling is of some significance here, for the city contended it could not be held liable because the rock and its surrounding area were natural conditions unaltered by any act of the city. The court held that a natural condition may constitute, under certain circumstances, a dangerous or defective condition so as to permit the imposition of liability, and whether it did, was a question for the jury.

In Lopez v. Capitol Co., supra, 141 Cal. App.2d 60, at page 69, 296 P.2d 63, at page 67, the court said: "Negligence is relative to time, place and circumstances, and the question here is as to what was the duty of the respondents and as to what they should have foreseen in view of the knowledge which the complaint charges them with possessing."

[6] In view of the trend of the later cases in California, we believe that the time has come in this state to end the confusion caused by devious methods of avoiding the originally strict application of "attractive nuisance" and "turntable" cases, and to frankly apply in cases of injury to trespassing children the customary rules of ordinary negligence cases, making the true basis of liability in the particular instance the foreseeability of harm to the child, and, in the words of the Restatement, section 339, "the utility to the possessor of maintaining the condition is slight as compared to the risk to young children involved therein."

[7] Under the allegations of the complaint in our case, if, as alleged, defendant knew or should have known that children were actually playing on the sand and gravel piles, a jury "knowing the instincts and the natural urge of children to play and make certain childish adventures, and particularly their natural liking, one might almost say passion, for a sand pile as a source of pleasure," Holmberg v. City of Chicago, supra, 244 Ill.App. 505, 511, could have found that the sand and gravel piles were a source of danger to the children, which danger defendant could easily and inexpensively have guarded against, and hence could have found defendant liable for Johnny's death.

The judgment is reversed.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1957.

Hearing Denied Feb. 27, 1957.

Prohibition proceedings by county board of supervisors to prohibit further action in mandate proceedings brought by Turf Club to compel grant of application to establish race track. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that the board's order for continuance of hearing on the application and for further hearing was in accordance with prior determination of the Court of Appeals in one of the mandate proceedings.

In these proceedings, petitioners seek a writ, directed to respondent Superior Court in Riverside County and to Desert Turf Club, prohibiting (1) The enforcement of an order made by said Superior Court on October 11, 1956, in action No. 61652; (2) Any further proceedings in the matter of the petition for a writ of mandate in action No. 64722 in said court, filed August 14, 1956; and (3) Any further action upon the peremptory writ of mandate in said action No. 61652 which will in any way interfere with the board of supervisors' right to promptly call and complete a public hearing on notice on the application of the Desert Turf Club.

In July, 1954, the California Horse Racing Board issued a license to Desert Turf Club to conduct quarter horse race meetings at a proposed race track establishment to be constructed near Rancho Mirage, near Palm Springs, in Riverside county, and found that the turf club had shown that the conducting of quarter horse race meetings of the proposed Palm Springs track would be in the public interest and would subserve the purposes of the California Horse Racing Act. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 19400 et seq.

The site for the proposed track was located in M–3 zone of Riverside county, as established by zoning ordinance No. 348 of said county, and it was necessary, therefore, for the turf club to obtain a permit from the county board of supervisors before the track was established. The Desert Turf Club, in January, 1955, filed its application for such a permit with the planning commission of said county. On February 15, 1955, a public hearing on this application was conducted before the planning commission and a further public hearing was conducted thereon before the board of supervisors on March 28, 1955. Both of these hearings were conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 3.2 of article III of the said ordinance and the notices therein provided for were given as to each such public hearing.

On February 23, 1955, the planning commission made its order and decision recommending to the board of supervisors that the application be granted upon certain terms and conditions, all of which were accepted and agreed to by the applicant. The planning commission then filed with the board of supervisors, in addition to its recommendation and decision, a summary of the testimony presented at the hearing and reports and exhibits which had been introduced in evidence.

The board of supervisors, at its hearing on March 28, 1955, received in evidence the report and decision of the planning commission, the entire file and records of the commission on its hearing, the evidence of several witnesses, some for and some against the granting of the permit, and also various petitions and letters in opposition thereto. The board of supervisors then, by unanimous vote, denied the application.

On April 22, 1955, the Desert Turf Club filed its petition for a writ of mandate, praying that the board of supervisors be required to cancel its order denying the permit, and to make an order granting it.

The trial court in this proceeding (action No. 61652) denied the peremptory writ of mandate, discharged the alternative writ and determined in its conclusions of law that the order of the board of supervisors denying the application for a permit was sufficiently supported by substantial evidence and concluded further that the board did not act arbitrarily, capriciously or unlawfully; that petitioner was not denied a fair trial and that "(a)lthough the licensing throughout the State of California of horse racing tracks where pari-mutuel wagering is conducted is a matter of general and statewide concern, the same is, nevertheless, a municipal affair and is subject to local regulation as embodied by the provisions of Ordinance No. 348 of the county of Riverside, Section 3.1, article III thereof." The Desert Turf Club appealed from the judgment in this action, and the decision of this court on appeal was filed May 11, 1956, Desert Turf Club v. Board of Supervisors, 141 Cal.App.2d 446, 296 P.2d 882, 888. This court reversed the judgment of the trial court and held that the State has taken over in its entirety the whole subject of horse racing and that a board of supervisors cannot overrule the act of the People of the State in adopting a constitutional amendment and the legislature of the State in passing a full and comprehensive plan for the licensing and control of horse racing by prohibiting on moral grounds what the State expressly permits; that a board of supervisors, acting in good faith, may, by properly adopting zoning restrictions, exclude on soundly based grounds the installation of a horse racing track or any other type of activity from those portions of the county as to which such exclusion is reasonable; that, eliminating the opinion evidence and evidence in opposition to the permit on moral grounds, there was insufficient evidence to uphold the decision of the board of supervisors or the findings of the trial court; that the board of supervisors has a proper field for the operation of its discretion in the enforcement of its zoning ordinance after eliminating the moral grounds of opposition to racing, and it is not without jurisdiction to pass upon the application of the Desert Turf Club. It was further held that:

> "The writ should be directed to the Board of Supervisors and its members requiring them to cancel and annul the order denying appellant's application, and to reopen the hearing with leave to hold a supplemental hearing upon due notice if they be so advised, and to reconsider the petition of appellants as to land use, wholly excluding any consideration as to the alleged immorality of horse racing and betting as authorized by State law, and wholly excluding from such consideration all testimony not received in open hearing, and all statements of alleged fact and arguments in petitions and letters on file, except the bare fact that the petitioners or letter writers approve or oppose the granting of the petition; also wholly excluding each and every instance of hearsay testimony unless supported by properly admissible testimony, it being further required that the attorneys representing any party in interest be granted a reasonable opportunity to examine or cross-examine every new witness produced. * * *
> "The judgment is reversed, with instructions upon the going down of the remittitur to amend the findings of fact and conclusions of law in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion, and to enter a judgment granting a peremptory writ of mandate directed to the Board of Supervisors of Riverside County and the members thereof requiring them forthwith to cancel and annul their order denying appellant's petition and to proceed without delay to carry on and complete a hearing in the manner indicated and set forth in this opinion."

Following the filing of the remittitur, amended findings of fact and judgment were filed by the trial court and in its judgment, entered July 25, 1956, the court ordered that a writ of mandate be issued commanding the board of supervisors to forthwith cancel and annul the order of the board made on March 28, 1955, and to proceed to determine whether or not they should reopen the hearing upon the application of Desert Turf Club, held on March 28, 1955, and if desired by said Board hold a supplemental hearing thereon upon due notice thereof; reconsider the application of Desert Turf Club as to land use; and upon such reconsideration wholly exclude any consideration as to any alleged immorality of horse racing and betting as authorized by the State law; wholly exclude from any consideration all testimony not received in open hearing, and all statements of alleged facts and arguments in petitions and letters filed at the time of the last hearing and now on file or which may be filed, except the bare fact that the petitioners or letter writers approve or oppose the granting of said application; also wholly exclude each and every instance of hearsay testimony adduced at the hearing of March 28, 1955, as well as any such testimony which may be adduced upon a future hearing unless the same is supported by properly admissible testimony; and grant a reasonable opportunity to the attorneys representing any party in interest to examine or cross-examine any new witness which may be produced at a supplemental hearing; and determine the said application of Desert Turf Club and make proper and appropriate orders in connection with such determination.

Service of said peremptory writ of mandamus was made upon the board of supervisors on or about August 1, 1956. On August 6, 1956, said date being its first regular meeting date following such service, said board cancelled and annulled its order of March 28, 1955, by which the application of Desert Turf Club was denied and ordered "(t)hat the matter of further proceedings in connection with said application and the writ of mandate is continued to Monday, August 20, 1956, at 10:00 A.M., to allow Supervisor Berkey necessary time to examine the documents and other physical evidence on file in the proceeding so that he may participate in the decision, and at that time, the Board to determine whether or not a further hearing will be held, and if such hearing is to be held, to fix a date therefor and if such hearing is not to be held, then forthwith to determine the application on its merits."

At its regular meeting of August 20, 1956, the chairman of said board called the matter of the Desert Turf Club application for hearing. Upon motion made, seconded and carried by unanimous vote the board ordered that a decision be reached without the holding of any further hearings; and a motion made and seconded that the application of Desert Turf Club be granted failed to carry by a vote of three Noes to two Ayes.

At the regular meeting of the board of supervisors on September 4, 1956, a motion was regularly made and seconded that the order of the board of August 20, 1956, determining that a decision would be reached on the application of Desert Turf Club without holding any further hearing be set aside and that a further hearing on the application be set for October 1, 1956. The vote on said motion was two Ayes and two Noes, with one supervisor absent and the said motion failed to carry for want of a majority.

At the regular meeting of the board of supervisors on October 1, 1956, a motion was regularly made, seconded and carried by a vote of three Ayes to two Noes that a hearing be called on the application of Desert Turf Club for October 15, 1956.

At the regular meeting of the board of supervisors on October 8, 1956, a motion was regularly made, seconded and carried by unanimous vote authorizing the County Counsel of Riverside county to take such proceedings in the appellate courts, either by appeal or application for other appropriate remedy, as in his judgment will test the validity of the order entered by the superior court on October 2, 1956, in case No. 61652.

At said meeting on October 8, 1956, another motion was duly made, seconded and carried by unanimous vote ordering that the public hearing on the application of Desert Turf Club now set for hearing on October 15, 1956, "be continued until after proceedings in the superior and appellate courts in this case have been concluded and immediately thereafter a new date shall be fixed for said hearing and further notice thereof given."

On August 24, 1956, Desert Turf Club filed in said superior court action No. 61652 its application for an order compelling obedience and performance of the peremptory writ and on the same date Desert Turf Club filed a new action in said superior court (No. 64722) against the board of supervisors and its individual members, petitioning for a writ of mandate and alleging substantially the same matters therein as in its application of August 6, 1956. An order to show cause was issued upon said application for an order compelling obedience and performance of the terms of the peremptory writ in case No. 61652, returnable September 7, 1956, and an alternative writ of mandamus was issued upon said petition for a writ of mandamus in case No. 64722, also returnable September 7, 1956. Subsequently, both of said matters were continued to September 13, 1956, for hearing. The board of supervisors filed their answer to the application for an order and also filed a motion to recall and quash the peremptory writ of mandate.

On September 13, 1956, the issues raised by the application for an order compelling obedience and performance to the terms of the peremptory writ in case No. 61652 and the answer to said application filed by the board of supervisors, and a motion to quash, were argued before the superior court and submitted for decision.

On September 25, 1956, a minute order was entered in action No. 61652, stating that "The court, after reviewing the law and evidence before it, is of the opinion that the application of the petitioner, Desert Turf Club, which was filed August 24, 1956, should be and the same is hereby allowed and granted; it further appearing that the motion of respondent board of supervisors should be and the same is hereby disallowed." On October 2, 1956, the superior court signed an "order upon order to show cause in re performance and obedience to peremptory writ of mandate and order denying respondent's motion to recall and quash peremptory writ of mandate or to strike portions thereof." This order was filed in action No. 61652 on October 11, 1956, and purports to require the board of supervisors and its individual members to forthwith cancel and annul their order of August 20, 1956, denying the application of Desert Turf Club, and it further purports to order said board of supervisors and its individual members to forthwith vote in favor of granting the application of Desert Turf Club.

A petition for leave to intervene in action No. 64722 was filed on or about September 7, 1956, by owners of property in the vicinity of the proposed race track site.

The Desert Turf Club takes the position that the only legal action by the board of supervisors would be to grant its application; that the board cannot set aside either of its orders of August 20, 1956, namely, (1) The order dispensing with a further hearing; and (2) Denial of petitioner's application. We do not agree with these contentions.

The opinion of this court (Desert Turf Club v. Board of Supervisors, supra), in the last paragraph thereof, directs the entry of a judgment granting a peremptory writ, directed to the board of supervisors of Riverside county and the members thereof, requiring them to forthwith cancel and annul their order denying appellant's petition and to proceed without delay to carry on and complete a hearing in the manner indicated and set forth in the opinion.

The board of supervisors, at its regular meeting on August 6, 1956, canceled its order denying appellant's petition and reopened the hearing by ordering that the matter of further proceedings in connection with said application and the writ of mandate be continued to August 20, 1956. On that date the chairman of the board called the matter for hearing and by unanimous vote, it was ordered that a decision be reached without the holding of any further hearings. However, a motion was then made that the application of the Desert Turf Club be granted and this motion failed to carry. It appears, therefore, that the board failed to reach a decision and that it was then necessary to hold a further hearing to enable the board to finally conclude the matter and complete a hearing thereon in accordance with the judgment and opinion of this court.

Desert Turf Club argues that the order of the board that a decision be rendered without any further hearing was final and that no further hearing was necessary. However, the board has never reached a final decision in the matter and now seeks to proceed to comply with the order of this court and to complete the public hearing of March 28, 1955.

While the ordinance apparently provides that the board has the privilege (at its discretion), under certain circumstances, to grant or deny any application for a land use permit without holding a public hearing, it also provides that:

> "The Board of Supervisors may hear and consider evidence in addition to the report and supporting material from the Commission before granting, denying, revoking, modifying or refusing to revoke any permit, but shall not consider any statement, argument or evidence of any kind or nature whatsoever except such report and summary except at a public hearing, notice of the time and place of which shall be given to all persons by publication in a newspaper of general circulation, not less than five (5) days prior to such hearing, and notice to the applicant, where issuance of a permit is in question, or to the person owning the property the permit affecting which it is sought to remoke or modify, not less than five (5) days prior to such hearing, either by personal service as required for the serving of summons or by first class mail, postage prepaid."

In the instant case, where evidence was received in addition to the report and supporting material from the planning commission, it was necessary that a public hearing be had. In Desert Turf Club v. Board of Supervisors, supra, it was pointed out that the board of supervisors has a proper field for the operation of its discretion in the enforcement of its zoning ordinance after eliminating the moral grounds of opposition to racing, and that it is not without jurisdiction to pass upon the application of the Desert Turf Club. The decision orders the board to carry on and complete the hearing, thus providing the opportunity for the introduction of proper evidence, if any, on the question of granting or denying a permit to the Desert Turf Club. The order of the board of supervisors, made on October 8, 1956, which was the last order made by the board, orders that the hearing on the application of Desert Turf Club "be continued until after proceedings in the superior court and appellate courts in this case have been concluded and immediately thereafter a new date shall be fixed for said hearing and further notice thereof given." This order is in accordance with the opinion of this court and writ of mandate issued therein and also is in accordance with the provisions of the ordinance involved. At such a hearing, the board is thus entitled to reach a final decision on the application and conclude the hearings thereon.

It is therefore ordered that a writ of prohibition be issued prohibiting:

(1) Enforcement of said order filed on October 11, 1956, in case No. 61652.

(2) Any further proceedings in re the petition for writ of mandate in case No. 64722.

(3) Any further action upon the peremptory writ of mandate in case No. 61652 which will in any way interfere with the board of supervisors' right to promptly call and complete a public hearing on notice on the application of Desert Turf Club.

SUPERIOR COURT and County Clerk, COUNTY OF SOLANO, State of California, Respondents.*

Civ. 9133.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 29, 1957.

Hearing Granted Feb. 27, 1957.

Mandate to compel preparation of clerk's and reporter's transcripts on appeal from order denying motion for new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that defendant, who, upon being found guilty of violation of Penal Code, § 288a, was adjudged and committed as sexual psychopath, could appeal from subsequent denial of his motion for new trial in original criminal proceeding despite fact that original criminal proceeding had been suspended until termination of sexual psychopathy proceeding, and though rule provides that appeal from order denying new trial shall not be taken until granting of probation or rendition of judgment.

Writ issued.

* Opinion vacated 314 P.2d 6.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1023(13)

Under applicable code provisions, defendant in criminal case is given substantive right to move for a new trial, and the substantive right of appeal from order made in response to such motion, notwithstanding provisions of rule that appeal from order denying new trial shall not be taken until after granting of probation or rendition of judgment. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1182, 1237; West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 31; West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 1a.

PEEK, Justice.

By mandate petitioner seeks to compel the preparation of the clerk's and reporter's transcripts on his appeal from the order of the trial court denying his motion for a new trial.

On January 15, 1952, defendant was found guilty of violating Penal Code, section 288a. Prior to the entry of judgment, and pursuant to his request, the criminal proceedings were suspended and sexual phychopathy proceedings instituted. At the conclusion of the hearing on the psychopathy issue, petitioner was adjudged a sexual psychopath and committed to the Department of Mental Hygiene. Several months thereafter, and after like proceedings had been instituted by petitioner, section 5519 of the Welfare and Institutions Code, the respondent court on its own motion initiated a further proceeding under said section. The petitioner was again committed as a sexual psychopath on January 27, 1956. At the time of the institution of the proceedings on the court's own motion, the petitioner had filed a motion for a new trial in the original criminal proceeding. The court continued that motion pending the outcome of the sexual psychopathy proceeding then before it, and upon termination thereof adverse to petitioner, the court denied his motion for a new trial. Petitioner then sought to appeal from that order and requested preparation of the clerk's and reporter's transcripts. The trial court, by its order of April 2, 1956, found that the order denying petitioner's motion for a new trial was not appealable in that the criminal proceeding had been suspended on motion by petitioner and was still suspended; that no judgment had been pronounced nor had probation been granted in the criminal proceeding; and denied the motion for preparation of the record without prejudice until such time as the criminal proceeding had been resumed and either judgment pronounced or probation granted.

In support of the court's order and in opposition to the petition now before us, respondents contend that under Rule 31 of Rules on Appeal, an appeal from an "* * * order denying a new trial shall not be taken until after the granting of probation or the rendition of judgment, * * *"; that therefore petitioner's appeal from the order denying his motion for a new trial is premature; and that the preparation of the requested transcripts at this time would be but an idle act which mandate will not compel.

Respondents' argument wholly ignores the Constitution, art. VI, sec. 1a; the applicable statutory provisions, Penal Code, sec. 1179 et seq. and 1237; the independent collateral nature of a new trial proceeding, In re Estate of Waters, 181 Cal. 584, 185 P. 951; and apparently places complete reliance upon the quoted portion of Rule 31. Under the cited provisions of the Constitution, the rule-making power of the Judicial Council is limited to the adoption or amendment of "* * * rules of practice and procedure for the several courts not inconsistent with laws that are now or that may hereafter be in force; * * *." Since 1872, section 1179 et seq. of the Penal Code have provided the machinery for making and prosecuting a motion for a new trial, and section 1237 of that code has provided that "an appeal may be taken by the defendant * * * from an order denying a motion for a new trial." Furthermore our courts have held in reference to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure governing new trials and the granting of the right to move therefor that they "* * * clearly evidenced an intent on the part of the Legislature to make the motion for a new trial wholly independent of and collateral to the main proceeding, in effect a new action in the nature of a writ of error brought to reverse the judgment in the lower court." In re Estate of Waters, supra, 181 Cal. at page 586, 185 P. at page 952.

[1] Thus, under the applicable code provisions, a defendant is given the substantive right to move for a new trial, Penal Code, sec. 1182, and the substantive right of appeal from the order made in response to such motion. Penal Code, sec. 1237.

Additionally, our courts have jealously guarded the right of appeal, and in the early case of Ex parte Hoge, 48 Cal. 3, held this right guaranteed by the Constitution to be as sacred as the right to trial by jury. See also In re Adams, 81 Cal. 163, 22 P. 547; Smith v. McCallum, 36 Cal.App. 143, 172 P. 408.

But, says the prosecution, the petitioner has been deprived of nothing, since the criminal action was merely suspended, and therefore upon termination of the psychopathy proceedings and resumption of the criminal proceedings he may renew his motion. Prior to the 1951 amendment to section 1237 of the Penal Code allowing an appeal from an order granting probation, a somewhat similar contention was made in People v. Young, 35 Cal.2d 819, 221 P.2d 13. There the People contended that the appeal from the order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial should be dismissed as being not timely, their argument being that section 1182 of the Penal Code provided that an application for a new trial must be made before judgment; that this provision should be construed together with provisions dealing with probation, and in the light of the legislative intent to afford speedy determination of criminal actions; and that when so construed, section 1182 must be read as providing that a motion for new trial must be made before the pronouncement of judgment or the granting of probation. The court held that the contention of the prosecution read something into the section not to be found there, and "* * * would deprive a defendant of the right to attack the terms of probation by motion for a new trial or appeal from a denial thereof, and he would be left without adequate remedy since the probation order [was not at that time] appealable. Although it has been held that the right to the pronouncement of judgment is waived where probation is requested and accepted [citing cases] it does not follow that the right to move for a new trial should likewise be deemed waived upon the granting of probation in the absence of express statutory provision to that effect." 35 Cal.2d at pages 821–822, 221 P.2d at page 15.

Rule 31, therefore, insofar as it ties the substantive rights given by the applicable new trial statutes and the substantive right of appeal, also statutorily given, into the suspended criminal proceedings would affect substantial rights and cease to be merely procedural if given the application contended for by the respondents. The rule as stated in Lane v. Superior Court, 104 Cal.App. 340, 344, 285 P. 860, and approved in Stockton Theatres, Inc. v. Palermo, 47 Cal.2d 469, 304 P.2d 7, 11, is that,

> " 'The rule-making power of the Judicial Council would seem to be limited by any existing law, the Constitution reserving to the Legislature and the people the primary and higher right to provide rules of procedure for our courts with the secondary right in the Judicial Council, to adopt rules only, when and where the higher authority of the Legislature and the people has not been exercised.' "

[2] What has heretofore been said may well be illustrated by the situation where a defendant moves for a new trial and in support thereof files affidavits showing the discovery of new evidence, the availability of which would obviously depend upon the lives of the witnesses who could supply the proposed evidence by their testimony. Necessarily, therefore, the possibility of the long suspension which might arise under the literal application of Rule 31 as argued by the respondents, could easily deny the fruits of a successful new trial proceeding based upon newly discovered evidence.

Let the writ issue.

147 Cal.App.2d 455

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Napoleon SHALHOOB, Jr., Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5681.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 8, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 5, 1957.

Defendant was prosecuted for violation of the Corporate Securities Law in that he sold and issued for value to prosecuting witness a security without first obtaining the required permit and for grand theft. Judgment of conviction in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, LeRoy Dawson, J., and the defendant appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that the record did not establish an undue limitation on cross-examination of the prosecuting witness by defendant; that evidence was not inadmissible as proving an offense not charged in the information; and that instructions on embezzlement were not prejudicial.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐670

Where there was no offer of proof by defendant of what he proposed to prove in his cross-examination of a witness, there was no basis for claim of error in undue restriction of the cross-examination.

2. Stipulations ⇐14(10)

Claim of error of defendant in undue limitation of cross-examination of witness by defendant which could not be deemed prejudicial without a consideration of the entire evidence could not be considered where defendant had not made a statement of the evidence and where defendant made a stipulation containing the facts which defendant sought to prove in his cross-examination of the witness.

3. Criminal Law ⇐369(2)

In prosecution for selling a security constituting a certificate of interest in an oil and gas lease without a permit and for grand theft, where defendant claimed that he and prosecuting witness were joint adventurers in venture, admitting testimony that defendant had sold to another witness oil interest was proper as tending to prove that defendant was engaged in selling percentage interest in leases in order to finance the drilling of the well over the objection that it tended to prove the commission of an offense other than the one charged.

4. False Pretenses ⇐41

In prosecution for grand theft in connection with the sale of an interest in an oil and gas lease, evidence tending to show that the defendant was operating under a common scheme or plan to promote an enterprise by false and fraudulent representations was admissible.

5. Criminal Law ⇐814(5)

Where there was no evidence of embezzlement in prosecution for grand theft, instruction should have been limited to other forms of theft.

6. Criminal Law ⇐1172(6)

In prosecution for grand theft, instruction on embezzlement of which there was no evidence was not prejudicial where the people made no attempt to prove the offense of embezzlement and evidence of false representations made by defendant precluded any reasonable conclusion that the representations were either truthful or made with honest intentions.

Jesse A. Hamilton, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

By information Napoleon Shalhoob, Jr., was charged with the commission of four felonies, namely, in Count I with violation of the Corporate Securities Law, in violation of Section 26104(a) Corporations Code, in that he sold and issued for value to Dr. Donald E. Brannan a security, to wit, a certificate of interest in an oil and gas mining title and lease without first having applied for and secured from the Commissioner of Corporations a permit so to do, and in succeeding counts with grand theft May 12, 1954, in taking $1,500, the personal property of Dr. Brannan; in Count III with grand theft of $1,250 from the same person on May 19, 1954, and in Count IV with having taken $920 from the same person on May 26, 1954. He was convicted in a jury trial of all the charged offenses and he appeals from the judgment.

It is not contended on the appeal that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict with respect to any of the charged offenses. The points on appeal are (1) the trial court erred in excluding evidence of transactions between appellant and the prosecuting witness after May 26, 1954; (2) the trial court erred in allowing over the objection of appellant proof of facts not charged in the information, which, if true, would have constituted another offense; and (3) the court erred in giving instructions inapplicable to the issues.

Appellant's briefs do not recite the evidence and for the purposes of our opinion a brief outline of the same will be sufficient. Appellant represented to Dr. Brannan that he was the president of the Chieftain Oil Company, having a lease on 2,500 acres at Lompoc; that he was going to drill an oil well on it and needed additional financing. He represented that a group of millionaires were backing him; that they had allocated $50,000 for the venture and that he needed an additional $10,000. He showed Dr. Brannan and a Mr. Delaney a checkbook which purportedly showed a bank balance of over a million dollars. He left in the doctor's office mailbox a proposed agreement which he had signed but which Dr. Brannan did not sign when advised by his attorney that it might have the legal effect of making him a partner or joint adventurer with appellant. On May 12, 1954, the doctor met appellant on the land and invested $1,500 in reliance upon appellant's representations. On the several dates stated in the information Dr. Brannan made further investments of $1,250 and $920.

On May 12 appellant gave Dr. Brannan a receipt for $1,500 which indicated that it was paid on "an account" of $5,000, leaving a balance of $3,500. It said in part: "For Joint Enterprise–Lompoc Property Who Is A Member On The Board And Treasurer In New Corp. Well No. 1, Chftn-Larsen Trustee Account for Well #1" and it was signed "Napoleon Shalhoob, Jr." Dr. Brannan testified that appellant agreed that for every $1,000 invested the doctor would own a 1% interest in the first well drilled and in the lease on some 2,000 acres. There was no writing to that effect, although the written agreement which appellant offered, and which the doctor did not sign, purported to grant to the doctor for a $10,000 investment approximately a 10% interest in a lease on some 2,000 acres. Aside from the fact that the Chieftain Oil Company held a lease on large acreage there was evidence that all the material representations of defendant were false. He did not have the financial backing he claimed to have. The figures in his checkbook 1,273,456 followed "Invoice #", which he covered up when he showed the figures. His bank balances were small.

[1, 2] Under his first assignment of error appellant contends that his cross-examination of Dr. Brannan was unduly limited in that he was not permitted to question him as to matters occurring after May 26, 1954. He does not state in his brief what he proposed to develop in further cross-examination although he intimated to the court that his purpose was to show that the entire transaction was a joint venture. There was no offer of proof and there is no basis for the claim of error. But even if error had been committed it could not be deemed prejudicial without a consideration of the entire evidence. Appellant has not made a statement of the evidence and is in no position to claim he was prejudiced by any of the court's rulings which he criticizes. Moreover, he entered into a stipulation that in June 1954 he and Dr. Brannan became equally interested in the same Lompoc oil lease operated by the Cousins Oil Company, Inc., of which Dr. Brannan was president, that Dr. Brannan sold stock in the company and was active in its management. It was also stipulated that all the money appellant received from Dr. Brannan was used in drilling the well. These were the facts which appellant sought to prove in the cross-examination of Dr. Brannan and he was satisfied with the stipulation.

[3, 4] The second point is that the court erred in admitting evidence over objection that appellant had sold for $1,000 a 1% interest to one Brughelli in the oil lease and a well being drilled and that in negotiating the sale appellant made the same representations that he had made to Dr. Brannan. It is argued that the evidence was inadmissible inasmuch as it tended to prove the commission of an offense other than the one charged. We perceive no error in the reception of the testimony. Mr. Brughelli testified that appellant told him that he had sold or offered to sell oil interests to one E. A. Stradiotto, to one Charlie Bosio and to a man named Baker. In view of appellant's contention that he and Dr. Brannan were joint adventurers, and that the doctor was not merely an investor, it was proper to receive evidence tending to prove that appellant was engaged in selling percentage interests in the lease in order to finance the drilling of a well. People v. Dutton, 41 Cal.App.2d 866, 107 P.2d 937; People v. Whelpton, 99 Cal.App.2d 828, 222 P.2d 935; People v. Murphy, 17 Cal.App.2d 575, 62 P.2d 592. The evidence was also admissible under the counts which charged grand theft, inasmuch as it tended to show that defendant was operating under a common scheme or plan to promote his enterprise by false and fraudulent representations. People v. Gordon, 71 Cal.App.2d 606, 163 P.2d 110; People v. Silva, 119 Cal.App.2d 863, 260 P.2d 251.

[5, 6] The court in defining the three forms of theft in its instructions gave definitions of embezzlement, obtaining property by false pretense and larceny by trick and device. At the request of the People the court gave an instruction as to embezzlement which appellant contends was error. There was no evidence of embezzlement and the instructions should have been limited to the other forms of theft. This is a form of error that so frequently occurs in the use of instructions taken from so-called "CALJIC." When these form instructions are used both counsel and the court should first assure themselves that they have direct application to the evidence. The People very properly do not undertake to justify the instruction on embezzlement but contend that "the emphasis is on false pretense in the instructions having to do with theft" and that the error was not prejudicial. We agree that the error was not one which would justify a reversal of the judgment. We find upon examination of the reporter's transcript that the People made no attempt to prove the offense of embezzlement. The evidence of false representations made was so convincing as to preclude any reasonable conclusion that appellant's representations were either truthful or made with honest intentions.

The judgment is affirmed.

Paul FINSTEIN, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

COUNTY OF SAN BERNARDINO, a public corporation, Richard E. Elliott, Joseph H. Martin, Lowell E. Lathrop, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 5538.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 11, 1957.

Action to enjoin enforcement of provision of county health ordinance forbidding the keeping of fowl within 40 feet of any dwelling other than that of owner. The Superior Court of San Bernardino County, Carl B. Hilliard, J., entered judgment denying an injunction, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that as respects facilities which had been erected and used for keeping of poultry since prior to effective date of county zoning ordinance permitting the continuance of existing nonconforming uses, provision of zoning ordinance, requiring that structures for fowl be kept at least 100 feet from any dwelling on adjoining property, did not repeal by implication provision of prior health ordinance forbidding the keeping of fowl within 40 feet of any dwelling other than that of owner.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇐116

A provision of a zoning ordinance should not be interpreted as intending to repeal by implication an existing provision of a health ordinance, in absence of a clear disclosure of such an intent.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇐601(18)

The provisions of a zoning ordinance, including permissive continuance of a nonconforming use, are related to the purpose of such an ordinance and cannot reasonably be held to imply any intention to thereby exempt owner of property subject thereto from the necessity of complying with any regulation or requirement of an existing health ordinance.

3. Counties ⇐21½

That county zoning ordinance expressly repealed other specified ordinances tended to indicate an absence of any intention to repeal by implication any part of another ordinance not thus specifically repealed.

4. Counties ⇐21½

As respects facilities which had been erected and used for the keeping of poultry since prior to effective date of county zoning ordinance permitting the continuance of existing nonconforming uses, provision of zoning ordinance requiring that structures for fowl be kept at least 100 feet from any dwelling on adjoining property did not repeal by implication provision of prior health ordinance forbidding the keeping of fowl within 40 feet of any dwelling other than that of owner.

5. Municipal Corporations ⇐592(1)

An activity which is permitted by law may be constitutionally prohibited, in connection with zoning ordinances, because of the subsequent development of adjacent property.

6. Constitutional Law ⇐278(4)

Though facilities for keeping poultry were constructed in compliance with county health ordinance, then in effect, forbidding the keeping of fowl within 40 feet of any dwelling other than that of owner, subsequently requiring owner to remove his poultry in compliance with such ordinance 40 feet from a dwelling meantime erected on adjoining property would not unconstitutionally deprive owner of the use of his property.

Busch & Maroney, Uplands, for appellant.

Albert E. Weller, Counsel, J. B. Lawrence, Deputy Counsel, San Bernardino, for San Bernardino County.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment denying an injunction. The facts are undisputed, and the question presented is whether the first sentence of Section 8 of the San Bernardino County Health Code (Ordinance No. 527) is applicable to and enforceable against the plaintiff's property.

Ordinance No. 527 was adopted in 1942 and Section 8 reads as follows:

> "Domestic animals. No person shall keep any animal, fowl, or bird, wild or domestic, other than cats, dogs, canaries or birds of psittacinae family, within forty (40) feet of any school, church, hospital, public place or business, or any residence or dwelling house or other building used for the habitation of human beings, other than his own personal and private dwelling or residence. No such animal or fowl shall be kept or maintained in any yard, coop, or building which is in a foul or unsanitary condition. The provisions of this section shall not apply to accredited laboratories regulated by the State Department of Public Health."

Since July 1, 1951, the plaintiff has been engaged in the business of raising chickens on his real property. His poultry buildings at the time they were constructed were more than 40 feet from any building used as a dwelling, other than his own residence. Subsequent to July 1, 1951, a neighbor constructed a residence on an adjoining property which was within 40 feet of the plaintiff's poultry enclosure.

On July 9, 1951, the board of supervisors adopted Ordinance 678, a zoning ordinance, which became effective on August 8, 1951. Ordinance No. 678 established eleven zone districts and provided regulations therefor in the unincorporated area of San Bernardino County, and specifically repealed eighteen prior ordinances by number. The Health Code (Ordinance 527) was not named as one of the ordinances being repealed. Section 8 of Ordinance No. 678 provided for one zone in which limited agricultural uses were permitted and one of the regulations therein reads:

"h. Buildings and enclosures for fowl or livestock, small or large, placed on any given parcel of land, shall be kept at least forty (40) feet from dwellings on the property and a minimum of one hundred (100) feet from any other place used for human habitation, public park, school or 'R' District."

Plaintiff's property would be subject to that regulation except that Section 15.5 of that ordinance provides that nonconforming buildings and uses existing on the effective date of that ordinance may be continued and maintained provided there are no structural alterations. Section 19.1 of that ordinance also provides as follows:

"Interpretation: In interpreting and applying the provisions of this Ordinance they shall be held to be the minimum requirements for the promotion of the public health, safety, comfort, convenience and general welfare. It is not intended by this Ordinance to interfere with or abrogate or annul any easement, covenant or other agreement between parties. Where this Ordinance imposes a greater restriction upon the use of building or land, or upon the height of buildings, or requires larger open spaces than are imposed or required by other ordinances, rules, regulations or by easements, covenants or agreements, the provisions of this Ordinance shall control."

The plaintiff alleged in his complaint that the defendants have ordered him to remove his poultry 40 feet from the adjoining dwelling, which was erected subsequent to the construction of his facilities and subsequent to the adoption of Ordinance No. 678; that this order was based upon and made pursuant to the provisions of Section 8 of Ordinance No. 527; that the defendants threaten to prosecute the plaintiff for noncompliance with the provisions of Ordinance 527; and that plaintiff has complied with all requirements of Section 8 of Ordinance 527, except the distance requirement contained in the first sentence thereof. The prayer was that the defendants be enjoined from in any manner enforcing or attempting to enforce the provisions of the first sentence of Section 8 of Ordinance 527. At the trial it was stipulated, among other things, that plaintiff constructed a chicken house after the adoption of Ordinance No. 527, but prior to the adoption of Ordinance No. 678; that at the time of said construction there was no dwelling within 40 feet thereof; that a dwelling house was subsequently erected on adjoining property within 40 feet of the poultry house; that the applicable sections of Ordinance No. 527 are not dependent upon the existence of an actual nuisance; that the maintenance of a poultry house within 40 feet from such a dwelling house is in violation of the terms of Ordinance No. 527; and that the plaintiff contended that no violation by him appears since Ordinance No. 527, insofar as it pertained to him, was impliedly repealed by Ordinance No. 678. The court found that the plaintiff, as a nonconforming user, is not subject to the provisions of Zoning Ordinance No. 678, and that Ordinance No. 678 did not impliedly repeal Section 8 of Health Ordinance No. 527. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff has appealed therefrom.

The appellant's main contention is that the first sentence of Section 8 of Ordinance No. 527 has been impliedly repealed by the adoption of Ordinance No. 678. It is argued that the provisions of Ordinance 678, which require that buildings and enclosures for fowl shall be kept at least 100 feet from any dwelling on adjoining property, are greater and more restrictive regulations with respect to the keeping of poultry than are the provisions of Section 8 of Ordinance No. 527; that since the provisions of these ordinances, with respect to this matter, are conflicting the last ordinance adopted is controlling; and that it follows that there is an implied repeal of the first sentence of Section 8 of Ordinance No. 527, since the two statutes cannot be reconciled under any reasonable hypothesis.

[1, 2] There is some distinction with respect to the matter in question in that Section 8 of the Health Code forbids the keeping of fowl within 40 feet of any dwelling other than that of the owner, while Ordinance No. 678 relates to structures for that purpose and requires that they shall be kept at least 100 feet from any dwelling on adjoining property. It would be unreasonable to interpret a provision of a zoning ordinance as intended to repeal, by implication, an existing provision of a health ordinance, in the absence of a clear disclosure of such an intent. The purpose of a health ordinance is, of course, quite different from that of a zoning ordinance. The provisions of a zoning ordinance, including the permissive continuance of a nonconforming use, are related to the purpose of such an ordinance, and cannot reasonably be held to imply any intention to thereby exempt the owner of such property from the necessity of complying with any regulation or requirement of an existing health ordinance.

[3, 4] The fact that Ordinance No. 678 specifically repealed certain other ordinances not including any part of Ordinance No. 527, would tend to indicate an absence of any intention to impliedly repeal a part of that ordinance. Moreover, Ordinance No. 678, by its provision for the continuance of a nonconforming use, expressly exempted the appellant's facilities from the operation of that ordinance. Since appellant's facilities are not covered by that ordinance there is no conflict between the provisions of that ordinance and Section 8 of Ordinance No. 527, insofar as appellant is concerned. It follows that insofar as it relates to appellant's property the zoning ordinance (No. 678) does not impose a greater restriction in the respect here in question than is imposed or required by the health ordinance (No. 527). Section 19.1 of Ordinance No. 678 discloses a clear intention that where its provisions do not apply, as is the case with respect to a nonconforming use, it is not controlling over existing ordinances. The effect of that section and the nonconforming use section of Ordinance No. 678 clearly indicates that Ordinance No. 678 was not intended to repeal by implication any part of Section 8 of Ordinance No. 527, under the circumstances which here appear. If it be assumed that the 100 foot restriction provided for in Ordinance No. 678 was intended to apply in future cases, it did not apply to appellant's existing nonconforming use, and the two statutes may reasonably be reconciled insofar as they affect appellant or the circumstances in question. It follows that the trial court correctly found and held, insofar as this action was concerned, that the first sentence of Section 8 of Ordinance No. 527 was not impliedly repealed by the adoption of Section 678.

The appellant further contends that the enforcement of Section 8 of Ordinance No. 527 will unconstitutionally deprive him of the use of property. It is argued that said Section 8 is arbitrary and confiscatory, that he could not constitutionally be penalized because of the subsequent location of a dwelling on adjoining property, and that to hold him subject to the provisions of Section 8 of Ordinance No. 527 would be to give a retroactive effect to an existing ordinance and compel him to immediately cease an existing use in violation of the established principle of zoning ordinances that a reasonable time must be allowed in which to terminate an existing use.

[5, 6] It is well settled that an activity which is permitted by law may be constitutionally prohibited, in connection with zoning ordinances, because of the subsequent development of adjacent property. Ex parte Hadacheck, 165 Cal. 416, 132 P. 584, L.R.A.1916B, 1248; Jones v. City of Los Angeles, 211 Cal. 304, 295 P. 14; People v. Johnson, 129 Cal.App.2d 1, 277 P.2d 45. The Health Code, Ordinance No. 527, was in effect some nine years before the appellant erected his buildings, and he cannot complain because the adoption of a subsequent zoning ordinance, which exempted him from its operation, does not also exempt him from the operation of the provisions of the preexisting health ordinance. This is not a zoning case, but one involving the operation of a provision of the Health Code of that county. No defect in that ordinance is pointed out or relied on, and from its very nature there is nothing in this provision of the Health Code which discloses any intention of excluding any property from its operation because of prior use or former conditions.

The judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Eddie VICE, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 2717.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 27, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of having unlawful possession of preparation of heroin in violation of the Health & Safety Code. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, Raymond T. Coughlin, J., entered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence was sufficient to establish the offense.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Arrest ⇐63(4)

Where informers gave inspector reason to believe that the defendant was in possession of narcotics, that such narcotics were in his room, and that it was necessary for inspector to proceed immediately to the room for purpose of arresting defendant and seizing the narcotics to prevent disposal of such narcotics, arrest of defendant on such information supplied by two known and reliable informers was reasonable. West's Ann. Health and Safety Code, § 11500; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 836, subd. 2.

2. Searches and Seizures ⇐7(12)

Where arresting officer has reasonable ground to believe that person arrested has committed a felony, and the arrest is valid, search, which is conducted as an incident to such arrest, is not unreasonable. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 836, subd. 2.

3. Poisons ⇐4

To establish defendant's possession of narcotics in violation of the Health & Safety Code, it is sufficient if the articles are deposited in a place which is under defendant's possession and control. West's Ann.Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

4. Poisons ⊂9

In prosecution for unlawful possession of preparation of heroin in violation of the Health & Safety Code, evidence, which revealed that narcotics were found hidden in defendant's room and that defendant admitted the narcotics belonged to him and had been placed where they were found after he had found them elsewhere, was sufficient to establish the offense. West's Ann.Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

Eddie Vice, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., G. A. Strader, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Defendant above named was charged by information with the crime of violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code, it being alleged that he "did willfully and unlawfully and feloniously have in his possession a preparation of Heroin." He pleaded not guilty, waived a trial by jury, and following trial the court found him guilty as charged. Probation was denied and judgment was pronounced. This appeal is from the judgment.

Appellant has filed an opening brief in propria persona and raises only one point in his appeal which is the same point as that which constituted the principal defense at the trial. He contends that the evidence, consisting of the narcotics, was obtained by an unlawful search and seizure, and therefore improperly admitted in evidence. Before discussing this contention we shall give a brief summary of the evidence as shown by the record.

Eddie Vice, alias "Booster", had been known to Mr. House, the supervising narcotic inspector, for approximately two years. During that time he had associated with narcotic users and peddlers. On the night of April 18, 1956, Mr. House received a call from an informant whom Mr. House had known for some time. This informant stated that Eddie Vice "was dealing in narcotics." The following morning, April 19, Mr. House received a telephone call from a different informant who was also known to Mr. House for a long period of time and who was described by Mr. House as a reliable person in giving information. This informant stated that a man by the name of "Booster" in Room 28 in the Arcade Hotel was in possession of a quantity of narcotics which were in the room at that time; that the man was in the room but he would not stay there very long and would probably take the narcotics out. Mr. House contacted two narcotic inspectors and told them to go to the Arcade Hotel and arrest Eddie Vice.

Mr. House did not obtain a warrant because, on the basis of the information he had, he believed that the narcotic was then in the room but likely to be moved momentarily.

Pursuant to the orders given to them by Supervising Inspector House, narcotic inspectors Best and Murphy proceeded to Room 28 of the Arcade Hotel with an employee of the hotel. After knocking on the door, the officers entered when the employee opened the door with a key. After determining that the defendant was not present and after some search, they found the narcotics. The inspectors informed Mr. House that the defendant was not in the room, and Mr. House, in company with a city police officer, proceeded to the west end of Sacramento where they located defendant. Mr. House placed defendant under arrest for possession of narcotics. Upon being returned to the room after the arrest the appellant stated to the arresting officers that he had placed the articles underneath the wash stand and that he had found them in Stockton some time previously.

Penal Code, § 836, subd. 2, provides that a peace officer may make an arrest without a warrant when the person arrested has committed a felony although not in the officer's presence, but in the case of People v. Brown, 45 Cal.2d 640, 290 P.2d 528, it was stated that an arrest will not be held to have been validly made even though the arrested person was guilty of having committed a felony unless the arresting officer had reasonable grounds as a basis for making the arrest.

In Willson v. Superior Court, 46 Cal. 2d 291, at page 294, 294 P.2d 36, at page 38, the court said:

"* * * Although information provided by an anonymous informer is relevant on the issue of reasonable cause, in the absence of some pressing emergency [citation], an arrest may not be based solely on such information. [Citations], and evidence must be presented to the court that would justify the conclusion that reliance on the information was reasonable. [Citation.] In some cases the identity of, or past experience with, the informer may provide such evidence [citation], * * *."

Also, in the case of Trowbridge v. Superior Court, 144 Cal.App.2d 13, 300 P.2d 222, the court came to the conclusion that an officer is justified in acting solely upon information from an informant where that informant is known to the arresting officer and is believed by the officer to be trustworthy and reliable. People v. Gonzales, 141 Cal.App.2d 604, 297 P.2d 50, is to the same effect.

[1] We believe that under the authority of the above cases, the arrest of appellant on the information supplied by two known and reliable informers was reasonable. The informers gave Inspector House reason to believe that Eddie Vice was in possession of narcotics at that time, that the narcotics were in his room, and that it was necessary for him to proceed immediately to the room for the purpose of arresting Mr. Vice and seizing the narcotics in order to prevent their disposal.

[2] When the arresting officer does have reasonable grounds to believe that the person arrested has committed a felony, the arrest is valid and a search which is conducted as an incident to that arrest is not unreasonable. People v. Dixon, 46 Cal.2d 456, 296 P.2d 557; People v. Boyles, 45 Cal.2d 652, 290 P.2d 535; People v. Martin, 45 Cal.2d 755, 290 P.2d 855.

Here, the two inspectors went to the appellant's hotel room for the specific purpose of arresting him on a charge of possession of narcotics. When they entered the room he was not present and they so informed Supervising Inspector House. Mr. House then proceeded to the west end of Sacramento where he found Mr. Vice and placed him under arrest. In the meantime, the officers in the appellant's room had discovered the narcotics under a sink. Mr. House brought appellant to the room and appellant stated that he had placed the articles underneath the wash stand.

Recent authorities hold that in order for a search and seizure to be valid it is not necessary that the arrest precede the search and seizure. If the search and seizure are part of the same transaction, the search and seizure may occur prior to the arrest.

In the recent case of People v. Simon, 45 Cal.2d 645, at page 648, 290 P.2d 531, at page 533, our Supreme Court said:

"In People v. Brown, 45 Cal.2d 640, 290 P.2d 528, we held that a search incident to an arrest could not be justified in the absence of 'reasonable cause' under Penal Code, § 836, merely because it revealed that defendant was in fact guilty of a felony. Accordingly, the search of defendant's person may be justified only if he was committing or attempting to commit an offense in the officer's presence, Penal Code, § 836, subd. 1, or the officer had reasonable cause to believe he had committed a felony. Penal Code, § 836, subd. 5. In such circumstances, however, it has been held that it is not significant whether the search precedes or follows the arrest. State v.

McDaniel, 115 Or. 187, 231 P. 965, 237 P. 373, 376; State v. Reynolds, 101 Conn. 224, 125 A. 636, 637–638; Ingle v. Commonwealth, 204 Ky. 518, 264 S.W. 1088, 1090; Knight v. State, 171 Ark. 882, 286 S.W. 1013, 1014–1015; see also Clark v. State, 78 Okl. Cr. 423, 149 P.2d 994, 997; State v. Rotolo, 39 Wyo. 181, 270 P. 665, 666–667. Thus, if the officer is entitled to make an arrest on the basis of information available to him before he searches, and as an incident to that arrest is entitled to make a reasonable search of the person arrested and the place where he is arrested, there is nothing unreasonable in his conduct if he makes the search before instead of after the arrest. In fact, if the person searched is innocent and the search convinces the officer that his reasonable belief to the contrary is erroneous, it is to the advantage of the person searched not to be arrested. On the other hand, if he is not innocent or the search does not establish his innocence, the security of his person, house, papers, or effects suffers no more from a search preceding his arrest than it would from the same search following it. In either case the important considerations are whether the officer had reasonable cause before the search to make an arrest and whether the search and any seizures incident thereto were or were not more extensive than would reasonably be justified as incident to an arrest. See, United States v. Rabinowitz, 339 U.S. 56, 60–64, 70 S.Ct. 430, 94 L.Ed. 653. We conclude, therefore, that a search is not unlawful merely because it precedes rather than follows the arrest."

"* * * If, however, an arrest under that subdivision was lawful, the search incident thereto would not be unlawful merely because it preceded rather than followed the arrest. People v. Simon, 45 Cal.2d 645, 290 P.2d 531."

In the instant case, although the seizure of the narcotics preceded the arrest of the appellant by a half hour or so, nevertheless the arrest and the seizure were part of one single transaction. Though he was not present in the room at the time the officers arrived they went there for the specific purpose of arresting him. The finding of the narcotics by the officers after entering the room was not needed in order to make a valid arrest. The arrest was made upon the basis of information supplied by two known, reliable informants, and the arresting process began when the officers first went to the appellant's hotel room. The three officers, Inspectors House, Best and Murphy, were acting together.

[3] In regard to the question of possession, the cases hold that the narcotics need not be found on the person of the defendant, it being sufficient if such articles are deposited in a place under the possession and control of the accused. People v. Noland, 61 Cal.App.2d 364, 143 P.2d 86; People v. Sinclair, 129 Cal.App. 320, 19 P.2d 23.

[4] In regard to the question of exclusive control when the hotel also had access to the room, it has been held that where there was testimony that the defendant admitted the narcotics in the room belonged to him, there was no merit in the argument that unlawful possession might not be sustained for the reason that the evidence showed that another person had equal right and facility of access to the premises. People v. Gallagher, 12 Cal.App.2d 434, 55 P.2d 889.

In the instant case, although the narcotics were not found on the person of the appellant, the offense was adequately established when the narcotics were found hidden in his room and appellant stated that he had placed the articles underneath the wash stand and that he found them in Stockton some time previously.

In view of the foregoing the judgment is affirmed.

Aston Felbon THOMPSON, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5720.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 11, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 5, 1957.

Prosecution on two counts of robbery and one count of kidnapping. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Kenneth C. Newell, J., entered a judgment convicting defendant of both robbery counts, and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that evidence was sufficient to support conviction.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1144(13)

Evidence must be viewed most favorably to prosecution on appeal in criminal prosecution.

2. Robbery ⇐24(1)

Evidence supported conviction of two counts of robbery of the first degree.

3. Robbery ⇐24(3)

An identification of accused by victim of a robbery is sufficient to sustain an implied finding that accused committed the crime.

4. Robbery ⇐24(3)

The identification of an accused by victim of a robbery need not be corroborated by other evidence.

5. Criminal Law ⇐741(2)

In prosecution on two counts of robbery, whether discrepancy between testimony of the two victims as to robber's moustache raised reasonable doubt of accused's identity or rendered testimony of victims unworthy of belief was question for jury.

6. Criminal Law ⇐739(2)

In robbery prosecution, testimony of defendant and his witnesses, though it would have established an alibi for defendant if believed, merely created conflict in evidence and credibility of that testimony was matter for jury.

7. Criminal Law ⇐814(17)

An instruction defining jury's duties in weighing reasonable inferences to be drawn from evidence is proper only when prosecution relies wholly or substantially upon circumstantial evidence. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1831.

8. Criminal Law ⇐814(17)

Where evidence offered by People consisted of identification of defendant and that offered by defendant consisted of testimony that he could not have been at scene of robberies at the times in question, such evidence was "direct" not "circumstantial", and, hence, defendant was not entitled to instruction defining jury's duties in weighing reasonable inferences to be drawn from evidence. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1831.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Circumstantial Evidence" and "Direct Evidence".

9. Criminal Law ⇐1171(1)

In prosecution on two counts of robbery, statements of District Attorney in his closing argument to jury did not constitute prejudicial error.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Aston Felbon Thompson was charged with two counts of robbery and one count of kidnapping. It was also alleged that at the time of the commission of the robberies defendant was armed with a .22 automatic. Trial was to a jury. The kidnapping count was dismissed on defendant's motion at the close of the People's case. Defendant was convicted of both robbery counts. The jury found that he was armed at the time of the commission of the crimes and found the offenses to be robbery of the first degree. Defendant's motion for a new trial was denied. Application for probation was also denied and Thompson was sentenced to state prison for the term prescribed by law, the sentences on each count to run concurrently. Defendant appeals from the judgment and the order denying him a new trial.

Defendant contends that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdicts of guilty, that the court erred in refusing to give an instruction requested by him, and that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct during his closing argument to the jury.

There was evidence of the following facts. On December 18, 1955, Richard L. Mansfield was working at a gas station located at 2050 North Fair Oaks in Pasadena. At about 9 p. m., he closed the station and entered his car which was parked behind the station. He started the motor and turned on the headlights. Through the beam of the headlights he saw a clean-shaven Negro, wearing a dark dress coat and an unmatching pair of dark dress slacks approaching him. The man also wore a handkerchief around his neck. Mansfield identified him as defendant. When the man learned that Mansfield was in charge of the station he displayed a .22 automatic and ordered him out of the car. Mansfield did not know whether the automatic was loaded but stated that he was afraid of the gun. Defendant asked Mansfield for the bag of money. On being told that there was no bag of money, the man took Mansfield's wallet which contained $10 and his car keys and left the premises. About two weeks after the robbery Mansfield attended a police show-up and identified defendant as the man who had robbed him. At that time defendant was asked to say "Give me the bag" and Mansfield identified defendant's voice as that of the robber.

On December 24, 1955, Joseph Friedman was operating a general merchandise store at 353 North Fair Oaks in Pasadena. He lived with his family in a house at the rear of the store. At about 8 p. m., Friedman closed down the store. As he was turning the corner to go into his house, a Negro wearing a dark dress coat and dark dress slacks ran up to him. The man had a slight moustache which Friedman stated was similar to defendant's. The man poked a dark automatic into Friedman's chest and said: "It is a hold up. Give me the money." Friedman identified the robber as defendant. He took $20 from Friedman's pocket and ordered him inside the house to get more money. As they entered the house the man put a handkerchief or a T-shirt over his face and said: "Tell your wife to give me the money; if not, I will kill you." Friedman was afraid of the gun and told his wife to do as asked. When told that there was no more money, the man threatened to shoot the Friedmans and then left. Friedman testified that he identified defendant as the culprit at a police show-up a week after the robbery. Mrs. Friedman likewise testified for the People but she was unable to identify defendant as the robber.

Defendant, testifying in his own behalf, stated that he lived in Pasadena and that he had gone to the Friedman store about a week before the robbery to find some trousers to match a suit. He stated that he did not own a gun and denied committing either of the robberies. He had worn a moustache since 1947 and was wearing one on the night of both robberies. On December 18th he went to Pomona in the company of a Mrs. Carson and her daughter to visit a friend of his named John Tilton Smith. They arrived at Smith's residence at about 7 p. m., remained there for half an hour, and the party then went to Smith's studio where they listened to jazz records and talked until 10 p. m. Smith, testifying in defendant's behalf, corroborated Thompson's account of his whereabouts on the evening of December 18th.

Defendant testified that on December 24th, he visited a Mrs. Florence Morrow and her son at her apartment in Los Angeles while her husband was out of town. He arrived at about 6 p. m., and they spent the evening decorating a Christmas tree, watching television and talking. He stayed overnight in the Morrow apartment. On cross-examination, defendant admitted a prior felony conviction. Mrs. Morrow, testifying in defendant's behalf, corroborated his account of his whereabouts on Christmas Eve.

The first assignment of error to be considered is the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdicts of the jury. In this connection defendant urges that the evidence of his alibi for the evenings of December 18th and 24th was unimpeached and uncontradicted and that the descriptions of the robber given by the two victims were inconsistent, namely, that Mansfield testified that the culprit was clean-shaven, while Friedman testified that he had a moustache. Thus defendant argues that "in this case it is incredible that the same man could have committed both robberies." The argument is without merit.

[1, 2] Viewing the evidence, as we must, in the light most favorable to the prosecution, there was ample evidence to support the jury's determination that both robberies were perpetrated by the same person and that that person was defendant. The robberies occurred within a mile or so of each other. The modus operandi of the criminal was the same, namely, to approach a place of business at closing time in the hope of taking the day's receipts. Both victims testified that the robber was wearing a dark dress coat, dark dress slacks, and had a handkerchief around his neck. Mansfield and Friedman stated positively that defendant was the robber.

[3–6] An identification of an accused by the victim of a robbery is sufficient to sustain an implied finding that he committed the crime. People v. Hernandez, 47 Cal. App.2d 132, 117 P.2d 394; People v. Beltowski, 71 Cal.App.2d 18, 162 P.2d 59; People v. Calloway, 127 Cal.App.2d 504, 274 P.2d 497. The identification need not be corroborated by other evidence. People v. McNeal, 123 Cal.App.2d 222, 266 P.2d 529. Whether the discrepancy between the testimony of Mansfield and Friedman as to the robber's moustache raised a reasonable doubt of his identity or rendered their testimony unworthy of belief was a question for the jury to decide. People v. Miller, 134 Cal.App.2d 792, 286 P.2d 415. Although the testimony of defendant and his witnesses, if believed, would have established an alibi for defendant, it merely created a conflict in the evidence and the credibility of that testimony was a matter for the jury to decide. People v. Spillard, 15 Cal.App. 2d 649, 59 P.2d 887.

[7, 8] The next assignment of error to be considered is that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction at defendant's request: "If the evidence in this case (as to any particular count) is susceptible of two constructions or interpretations, each of which appears to you to be reasonable, and one of which points to the guilt of the defendant, and the other to his innocence, it is your duty, under the law, to adopt that interpretation which will admit of the defendant's innocence, and reject that which points to his guilt. You will notice that this rule applies only when both of the two possible opposing conclusions appear to you to be reasonable. If, on the other hand, one of the possible conclusions should appear to you to be reasonable and the other to be unreasonable, it would be your duty to adhere to the reasonable deduction and to reject the unreasonable, bearing in mind, however, that even if the reasonable deduction points to defendant's guilt, the entire proof must carry the convincing force required by law to support a verdict of guilt." Defendant argues that since the evidence which tended to establish his guilt was circumstantial, he was entitled to an instruction defining the jury's duties in weighing the reasonable inferences to be drawn from that evidence, citing People v. Merkouris, 46 Cal.2d 540, 560–562, 297 P.2d 999. But defendant misconceives the nature of the testimony at the trial. The evidence offered by the People consisted of the identification of defendant and that offered by Thompson consisted of testimony that he could not have been at the scene of the robberies at the times in question. Such evidence is direct, not circumstantial. Code Civ.Proc. § 1831. The instruction requested by defendant is proper only when the prosecution relies either wholly or substantially upon circumstantial evidence. People v. Monge, 109 Cal.App.2d 141, 144, 240 P.2d 432, and cases cited. In People v. Merkouris, supra, 46 Cal.2d 540, 297 P.2d 999, two witnesses testified that they saw the accused either leaving or in the vicinity of a ceramics shop in Los Angeles at the approximate time of a murder committed in the shop. Defendant's evidence was that he was out of the city at the date of the murder. The court stated, 46 Cal.2d at page 562, 297 P.2d at page 1013, that the jury could have disbelieved the identification testimony, but that if this testimony were believed, it would be no more than circumstantial evidence of Merkouris' guilt and that it was error to refuse to instruct the jury as to the "two reasonable theories" doctrine. In the instant case the jury had only to determine whether the testimony of the identifying witnesses or that of defendant and his witnesses should be believed. It was not error to refuse the requested instruction.

[9] The final assignment of error is that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct during his closing argument to the jury. We have set out the statements complained of in the margin.[1] The remarks were intemperate. Especially ill-advised was the rejoinder of the deputy district attorney after the court had stricken some of his argument and admonished the jury to disregard it. It was also improper to argue that defendant's admission on cross-examination, which went only to the question of his credibility, was a fact to be considered as tending to prove guilt. The court gave the jury a formal instruction to disregard any statements made by counsel concerning the facts of the case and not to regard them as evidence unless they amounted to a stipulation. There was no misconduct that would require a reversal.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. "He wants us to be fair. Did you ever hear of a robber being fair? This is a criminal trial. We are here to ascertain the truth. The truth is that this man is guilty as the day is long. I don't care what you do with him. It is your community. If you want people like this in it, why, remember that he is going to do big time—

"Mr. Hollopeter: All right, I assign the making of that remark as misconduct, and ask the Court to instruct the jury to disregard the remark about men like that in the community, as being inflammatory and prejudicial.

"The Court: That portion of the remark may go out, and the jury is admonished to disregard it.

"Mr. Howard: If I say anything that is inflammatory, it is because I mean it.

"Mr. Hollopeter: I will assign the making of that remark as being misconduct.

"Mr. Howard: I mean that this defendant is guilty. Mr. Hollopeter says he is not. He didn't make any admissions so therefore he is not guilty. Well, he has very begrudgingly admitted that he was convicted of a felony on this stand. He didn't want to admit it in this Court, when it happened right in this very Court. That is the type of individual you are working with here."

v.

Rosina HERZ and George A. Herz, co-executors, and Vern L. Miller and Iona B. Miller, Respondents.

Civ. 5277.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Dec. 19, 1956.

Hearing Denied Feb. 13, 1957.

Proceeding to confirm executors' private sale of realty. The Superior Court, San Bernardino County, Martin J. Coughlin, J., directed further proceedings, and entered a subsequent order confirming sale of property to original bidders and second bidders at first hearing appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that where by excusable inadvertence and mistake executors had failed to notify original bidders of time and place of hearing, and second bidders made oral bid at hearing, which bid was noted by court commissioner on the right hand margin of the "Probate and Guardianship Calendar", and thereafter court vacated minute order indicating the intention of court to accept commissioner's recommendation as to bid of second bidders, court did not abuse its discretion in reopening hearing for further proceedings on question of confirming executors' private sale to the original bidders for an enhanced bid.

Affirmed.

1. Executors and Administrators ⇐138(9)

Question whether another bidder at a hearing to confirm executors' private sale of realty acquires a vested right to a conveyance of property depends on the validity of the order made by the court in reference to the sale to the other bidder.

2. Executors and Administrators ⇐138(9)

An order confirming a sale of decedent's property by executors must be definite and complete in itself in order that it can be recorded in the office of the county recorder. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 756, 757, 785, 786, 1220–1222.

3. Executors and Administrators ⇐138(9)

A commissioner at a hearing to confirm executors' private sale of realty was not authorized to confirm sale to oral bidders at hearing, but only to make a recommendation to court in regard to oral bid.

4. Executors and Administrators ⇐149

In proceeding to set aside a subsequent order of the court confirming an enhanced bid of original bidders for purchase of deceased's property, an original order on the "Probate and Guardianship Calendar" signed by the judge after first hearing to confirm executors' private sale of realty operated as a preliminary memorandum approving the court commissioner's recommendation that decedent's property be sold to oral bidders at the hearing and was not a valid order confirming the sale to oral bidders by which oral bidders acquired a vested right to decedent's property. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 1220–1222.

5. Executors and Administrators ⇐138(9)

In view of the purpose and intent of the probate statutes to encourage competitive bidding in the sale of property, and to protect the best interest of the estate and all concerned therein, the court has certain inherent powers in connection with a hearing on a petition for confirmation of executors' private sale of realty. Frank J. Kanne, Jr., Los Angeles, for appellants.

Lonergan & Jordan, San Bernardino, for respondent executors.

Swing & Gillespie, Everett H. Swing, San Bernardino, for respondents Miller.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order directing further proceedings with respect to a confirmation of the sale of real property, and from a subsequent order confirming the sale of said property.

The executors of this estate, pursuant to authority given in the will, sold a parcel of real property at private sale to the respondents Miller for $15,000 on certain terms. They filed a return of sale and petition for confirmation and for an order directing a conveyance, which was noticed for hearing at 9:30 A.M. on May 6, 1955. This matter was the second of nine probate and guardianship matters which were listed on a "Probate and Guardianship Calendar", which was used by the court commissioner who heard these matters at that time. The Millers had not been informed as to the time and place of such hearing and were not present. The commissioner received an oral bid from the appellants which was afterwards stipulated to have been $16,700. The commissioner wrote on the right-hand margin of the calendar sheet opposite the title of this estate the following: "Bond 2000.00 Appr 15 000.00 Bid 16 250 Sale Confirmed to McCarron, Schwartz & Hubbard." At 10:39 A.M. of that day the appellants filed with the clerk a written bid of $16,700 stating that it was on the same terms as those stated in the return of sale, except that the increase in bid was to be the cash payment. At some time on that day Judge Coughlin signed a typed statement at the bottom of the probate and guardianship calendar which reads: "The foregoing recommendations of the court commissioner upon the foregoing matters heard this day are accepted and adopted as the minute orders of the court in said matters * * *". Neither the notes of the commissioner's recommendations nor this order was entered in the minute book of the court, and no order confirming a sale to the appellants or directing a conveyance to them was at any time entered at length in the minutes of the court or included in any other order signed by the judge.

On May 27, 1955, the executors and the Millers filed a verified petition and motion for an order vacating the order thus endorsed on the calendar sheet on May 6, insofar as it applied to this estate matter, and praying that the return of sale and petition for confirmation be reset for hearing before the court with notice as ordered by the court. This petition alleged, among other things, that by inadvertence and mistake the executors had failed and neglected to notify the Millers of the time and place of hearing of the petition for confirmation, and that as a result the Millers were led to and did remain away from said hearing; that the Millers intended and were prepared to attend such hearing and to make a higher bid for the property in order to protect their original offer; that without any opportunity to the Millers to be heard or to raise their offer a minute order was made announcing the intention of the court to approve the commissioner's recommendation that the sale to the appellants be confirmed; that this minute order did not set forth or contain the terms of such sale; that no written order or decree confirming said sale has been made or entered; that the Millers have at all times been ready, willing and able and, if afforded an opportunity so to do, are now ready and able to offer and bid for said property a price substantially greater than the price for which the commissioner recommended confirmation of sale to the appellants; and that it is for the best interest of the estate that said minute order be vacated and the matter of confirmation be reset for further hearing. This petition and motion was noticed for hearing before the court on June 10, at which time the appellants appeared and filed written objections thereto. At the conclusion of that hearing Judge Coughlin announced his decision to grant the petition stating, in effect, that in accordance with the practice of the court the order he had signed indicated his intention to accept the recommendation of the commissioner but did not constitute an order of court confirming the sale until the court actually acted by an order in writing accepting the bid and ordering the sale confirmed; also that a sufficient showing of mistake or excusable neglect had been made which would authorize the court to proceed under Section 473, Code Civ.Proc. On June 10, a minute order was entered stating that the court had ordered the petition granted, and ordered further proceedings in connection with the return of sale and confirmation thereof to be held on June 24, after proper notice as required by law for an original hearing, and had vacated the minute order of May 6 indicating the intention of the court to accept the bid of the appellants. On June 14, a written order signed by the judge was entered and filed vacating "that portion of the minute order dated May 6, 1955, announcing the intention of the court to confirm the sale of said real property to" the appellants; ordering that the hearing of said return of sale and petition for confirmation be reopened and further proceedings had therein at a hearing to be held on June 24, 1955; and further ordering that the clerk give notice of said hearing in accordance with Section 1200 of the Probate Code. At the hearing on June 24, the respondents Miller increased their bid to $17,500, and the appellants, through their counsel, objected to the proceedings but offered no further bid. A minute order was made on that date granting the petition for confirmation and confirming the sale to the Millers for $17,500. On June 29, a formal order in the usual form was signed and filed by the judge, confirming the sale to the Millers and directing a conveyance to them. This appeal was taken from the minute order entered on June 10, 1955, and from the order of confirmation made on June 29, 1955.

The appellants contend that after the court signed the order at the bottom of the probate calendar on May 6, 1955, it had no power to vacate the sale and order further proceedings except on a proper showing under Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the showing here made did not justify relief under that section. It is argued that the commissioner confirmed the sale to the appellants; that the order signed by the judge adopting the recommendation of the commissioner as the minute order of the court was a compliance with the provisions of Section 1221 of the Probate Code; that the probate and guardianship calendar used by the commissioner was kept with the estate papers in the clerk's office, and was a sufficient entry in the minutes; that this order of confirmation of sale to the appellants was effective as of May 6; and that by this order of confirmation the appellants acquired an absolute right to a conveyance from the executors as held in In re Estate of Leonis, 138 Cal. 194, 71 P. 171; In re Estate of West, 162 Cal. 352, 122 P. 953 and Baldwin v. Stewart, 218 Cal. 364, 23 P. 2d 283. It is also argued that the showing made did not justify relief under Section 473; that the law did not require any notice to the original bidders other than the notice of the hearing on the petition for confirmation which was posted by the clerk; and that this case is distinguishable from In re Estate of Moreland, 49 Cal. App.2d 484, 121 P.2d 867 and In re Estate of McCrae, 133 Cal.App.2d 634, 284 P.2d 914, since in the first of these cases there was an active mistake in that the bidders had been told that the hearing would be held on a different date, and in the other case the original bidder was actually too ill to attend.

[1] Aside from the question of relief under Section 473, whether a bidder acquires a vested right to a conveyance depends upon the validity of the order made. In re Estate of Leonis, supra [138 Cal. 194, 71 P. 174], it is stated that if the order of sale is regularly made and not appealed from "it is binding upon all." In In re Estate of West [162 Cal. 352, 122 P. 955], it is stated that "if [the] order was valid" it gives the purchaser an absolute right to a conveyance. Baldwin v. Stewart, also holds that a valid order confirming a sale, which has become final, "is conclusive".

[2] The sufficiency of the order signed by the judge on May 6, 1955, depends upon the meaning and intent of that order, and its effect under certain provisions of the Probate Code. Section 756 provides that the order of confirmation must show that proof of the notice of the sale was made. While Section 757 does away with the necessity for a notice of sale where a sale of the property is authorized by the will, it also provides that the executor must make a return of sale and obtain confirmation thereof "as in other cases." Section 785 provides that upon a hearing when certain facts appear the court "shall make an order confirming the sale and directing conveyances to be executed." Section 786 provides that a certified copy of the order confirming sale and directing a conveyance must be recorded in the office of the county recorder. Section 1220 provides that orders in probate proceedings need not recite the existence of jurisdictional facts but shall contain "the matters ordered or adjudged." Section 1221 provides that orders of the court or judge must be entered at length in the minute book of the court or else signed by the judge and filed. Section 1222 provides that a certified copy of an order confirming a sale must be recorded in the office of the county recorder. These sections of the Probate Code clearly require that an order confirming such a sale be definite and complete in itself, as otherwise it could not be recorded in the office of the county recorder.

[3, 4] The commisioner was not authorized to confirm the sale, but only to make a recommendation to the court in that regard. The order on the calendar signed by the judge on May 6 was not a valid order confirming sale within the meaning of Sections 1220, 1221 and 1222 of the Probate Code. It clearly appears that it was intended as a preliminary memorandum approving the commissioner's recommendations in nine different matters. It was not intended to obviate the necessity of a later order of confirmation in this particular matter, to be entered at length in the minute book of the court or signed by the judge and filed, and did not have that effect. If a certified copy of that order had been recorded it would have been meaningless, insofar as the intent and purpose of these statutes are concerned. It contained no description of the property, no terms of the sale, and no order directing that a conveyance be made. On its face it showed a bid of $16,250, which was less than the increased bid required by Section 785. While it is true that it was later stipulated, on June 10, that the oral bid made before the commissioner was $16,700, the commissioner's recommendation was not in that form when it was accepted and adopted by the court. It must be held that the court's order entered on the bottom of the commissioner's calendar on May 6 did not constitute a sufficient order of the court confirming the sale, in the absence of a more definite minute entry or specific order signed by the judge. No valid order of confirmation was entered or filed, and three weeks later the petition and motion to vacate the purported order and to reopen the matter for further bidding was filed. That motion was heard and granted. If it was within the court's power to vacate the order of May 6, no valid objection is raised to the orders subsequently made on June 24 and June 29 confirming the sale of this property to the respondents Miller, those orders being full and complete and in the usual form.

[5–7] In view of the purpose and intent of the probate statutes to encourage competitive bidding in the sale of property, and to protect the best interest of the estate and all concerned therein, the court has certain inherent powers in connection with hearing a petition for confirmation of a sale. Its power to continue the hearing is well recognized, and it should be allowed to reopen the matter for a further hearing, on proper notice, where no valid order of confirmation has been entered, where considerable time has elapsed, and where the best interests of the estate will be promoted thereby. In any event, the existence of such a situation is one of the things which may be considered in passing upon the question as to whether a trial judge has abused his discretion in granting a motion for relief under Section 473.

[8–10] It is now settled that relief under Section 473 may be granted for the purpose of vacating an order confirming a probate sale. In re Estate of Moreland, 49 Cal.App. 2d 484, 121 P.2d 867; In re Estate of McCrae, 133 Cal.App.2d 634, 284 P.2d 914. It would appear in each of those cases that a valid order confirming the sale had previously been entered since no contention to the contrary appears. If a valid order confirming a sale may be thus vacated it would seem reasonable that a less showing should be required for granting such relief where no definite or complete order of confirmation had previously been entered. The appellants argue that no mistake or inadvertence here appears because the statutes do not require that actual notice of the hearing of the petition for confirmation be given to the original bidder. That same legal situation existed in connection with the Moreland and McCrae cases, where such relief was granted. In the Moreland case the bidders had been misled as to the date of the hearing. In the McCrae case, while the bidder had not been misled in any way he had been prevented from attending the hearing by illness. The important thing in both cases seems to be not that the bidder was entitled by law to notice of the hearing, but that he desired and intended to appear and make an increased bid but through inadvertence or excusable neglect, without fault on his part, he had been unable to do so. If such a showing is sufficient to justify the granting of relief where a valid order of confirmation had previously been entered, its sufficiency should be more apparent where no valid order of confirmation had theretofore been entered. An actual inadvertence here appears, as a result of which there was no further competitive bidding at the original hearing, to the disadvantage of the estate. The question was one of fact for the trial court, and in exercising its discretion it was proper to take all of the facts and circumstances into consideration. Since there is no clear showing that the discretion vested in the trial court was abused, its orders may not be disturbed. In re Estate of Moreland, 49 Cal.App.2d 484, 121 P.2d 867.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

A. S. EPSTEIN, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 21783.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 7, 1957.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 6, 1957.

Action to recover for money allegedly due the plaintiff by defendant. From a judgment for plaintiff entered on the granting of his motion for judgment on the pleadings in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Bayard Rhone, J., the defendant appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that the answer of defendant set up a good defense and denied material allegations of the complaint and that plaintiff was not entitled to judgment on the pleadings.

Reversed.

1. Pleading ⇐345(1)

A plaintiff may recover judgment on a motion for judgment on the pleadings only if his complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and the answer neither raises a material issue nor states a defense.

2. Pleading ⇐345(1.3)

A motion by plaintiff for judgment on the pleadings is in the nature of a general demurrer to the answer and the motion must be denied if the answer raises a material issue or sets up affirmative matter constituting a defense.

3. Pleading ⇐350(1)

A motion by plaintiff for judgment on the pleadings does not operate as a special demurrer.

4. Pleading ⇐367(6)

Uncertainty and ambiguities in pleadings must be specifically raised by proper procedure.

5. Pleading ⇐345(1.3)

Where answer fairly construed suggests that defendant may have a good defense, a motion for judgment on the pleadings should not be granted.

6. Pleading ⇐350(3)

A moving party for judgment on the pleadings admits the untruth of his own allegations insofar as they have been controverted and all such averments must be disregarded whether there is a direct and specific denial or an indirect denial by virtue of affirmative allegations of a contrary state of facts and every allegation affirmatively pleaded in the answer must be deemed true.

7. Pleading ⇐345(1.3)

In action to recover money allegedly due where answer set up a good defense and denied material allegations of the complaint, it was sufficient as against a general demurrer and plaintiff was not entitled to judgment on the pleadings.

Samuel W. Blum, Irwin N. Fulop and Berne Rolston, Beverly Hills, for appellant.

Benjamin P. Riskin, Los Angeles, for respondent.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by defendant from a judgment for plaintiff entered on the granting of his motion for judgment on the pleadings.

[1] The action is for money alleged to be due plaintiff from defendant. The question is the sufficiency of the answer. A plaintiff may recover judgment on a motion for judgment on the pleadings only if his complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and the answer neither raises a material issue nor states a defense. (21 Cal.Jur. 235, § 164.) We have concluded that the answer explicitly traverses various material allegations of the complaint and that it was error to grant the motion.

Material allegations of the complaint and the answers thereto are:

	Complaint	Answer
1.	A. S. Epstein Associates Inc. is a California corporation	Admitted
2.	Defendant is the president of the corporation	Admitted
3.	The corporation is "dominated and controlled by" defendant and "there is such a unity and interest and ownership that there is no separateness in fact between" the corporation and defendant	Denied
4.	Defendant was authorized and empowered to draw checks on the funds of the corporation	Denied
5.	The transactions took place in Los Angeles and all sums became due and payable in Los Angeles	Denied
6.	On August 28, 1950 plaintiff owned $18,000 of promissory notes executed by the corporation in his favor and 9 shares of the stock of the corporation	Admitted
7.	On that date plaintiff and defendant agreed in writing that plaintiff would sell the notes to defendant for $900 cash and 7,200 Israeli pounds, 1,200 pounds to be paid on or before November 1, 1950, and 6,000 pounds on or before January 1, 1951. The moneys, except the $900, were not paid by defendant on the dates mentioned	Denied
8.	On May 7, 1951 an agreement, partly oral and partly written, was entered into between plaintiff and defendant whereby it was agreed that in lieu of the 7,200 Israeli pounds, nine checks of 1,000 Israeli pounds each, payable on demand, would be drawn by the corporation in favor of plaintiff on its funds on deposit in the Palestine Discount Bank in Tel Aviv, Israel, and defendant would guarantee in writing that the checks would equal $12,000 in American dollars according to the prevailing rate of international exchange to be paid plaintiff. It was also agreed defendant would advance to plaintiff $4,500 against the $12,000 and plaintiff would give him credit for an additional $500	Denied
9.	The written part of the agreement of May 7, 1951 was addressed to plaintiff and is as follows: "This agreement shall serve in effect as a letter of guarantee in which payment of 9,000 IL drawn in 9 1,000 IL checks on Palestine Discount Bank hereby personally guaranteed by the undersigned to be paid in America in dollars to the equal sum of $12,000 should said checks not be honored In Israel.

"These 9 checks are given for $18,000 in notes of A. S. Epstein Associates Inc. and 9 shares of stock of said Corporation.

"These checks are payable on demand when presented for payment in Israel by you or your assignees. In the event these checks are lost, destroyed or otherwise mutilated so as not to be of value the undersigned guarantees to redraw said checks and honor their payment. A. S. Epstein." Admitted

10. On information and belief, the nine 1,000 IL checks were never issued or presented for payment at the Palestine Discount Bank in Israel Denied

11. Plaintiff has performed all acts required of him to be performed pursuant to the agreement of May 7, 1951. On May 7, 1951 plaintiff delivered and transferred to defendant the $18,000 in promissory notes and the 9 shares of stock, and defendant paid plaintiff the $4,500 Denied

12. There is now due, owing, and unpaid from defendant to plaintiff $7,500, together with interest Denied

As a separate defense, defendant pleaded that the written agreement of May 7, 1951 should be interpreted so that his obligation as guarantor would mature and become operative only after the checks of the corporation, payable to plaintiff and drawn on Palestine Discount Bank, were first presented to and payment refused by the drawee bank; that plaintiff has failed to perform the conditions precedent to defendant's liability under the written instrument.

As a counterclaim defendant pleaded that on May 7, 1951 for a valuable consideration plaintiff executed to the corporation his promissory note for $5,000 payable September 1, 1951 without interest; as security for payment of the note plaintiff delivered to the corporation nine checks for 1,000 Israeli pounds each, payable on Palestine Discount Bank; the corporation assigned all its interest in the note and pledge to defendant; plaintiff has not paid any part of the note.

[2–6] Judgment was for plaintiff for $7,000 and interest.

A motion by a plaintiff for judgment on the pleadings is in the nature of a general demurrer to the answer, and the motion must be denied if the answer raises a material issue or sets up affirmative matter constituting a defense. Such a motion does not operate as a special demurrer. Uncertainty and ambiguities must be specifically raised by proper procedure. MacIsaac v. Pozzo, 26 Cal.2d 809, 812–813, 161 P.2d 449; Fabbro v. Dardi & Co., 93 Cal.App.2d 247, 252, 209 P.2d 91; Bergerow v. Parker, 4 Cal.App. 169, 172, 87 P. 248. Where the answer, fairly construed, suggests that the defendant may have a good defense, a motion for judgment on the pleadings should not be granted. Patterson v. Pacific Indem. Co., 119 Cal.App. 203, 206–207, 6 P.2d 102. The moving party admits the untruth of his own allegations insofar as they have been controverted, and all such averments must be disregarded whether there is a direct and specific denial or an indirect denial by virtue of affirmative allegations of a contrary state of facts. MacIsaac v. Pozzo, 26 Cal.2d 809, 813, 161 P.2d 449; Osborne v. Abels, 30 Cal.App.2d 729, 730, 87 P.2d 404. Every allegation affirmatively pleaded in the answer must be deemed true. Cuneo v. Lawson, 203 Cal. 190, 193, 263 P. 530.

[7] It appears from analysis of the complaint and answer that the only facts admitted by defendant cannot sustain the judgment. The denials of the answer are sufficient to, and do, create issues. Proof of the allegations of the complaint, which are denied, is necessary before plaintiff may recover judgment. Since the answer sets up a good defense and denies material allegations of the complaint, it is sufficient as against a general demurrer and plaintiff was not entitled to judgment on the pleadings.

v.

Harold J. YOUNG, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 8870.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 10, 1957.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 6, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 5, 1957.

Suit by plaintiffs as equitable owners and in possession of a lot to enjoin defendants from interfering with the use of a roadway across defendant's property. Judgment for plaintiffs in the Superior Court, Sacramento County, J. O. Moncur, J., and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that the evidence authorized the finding that a prescriptive right to use of the roadway had been acquired appurtenant to the lot of plaintiff as a dominant tenement, and that the plaintiffs had sufficient estate therein to maintain the action.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Easements ⇐36(3)

In suit to enjoin defendant from interfering with plaintiffs' use of a roadway across defendant's property, where evidence sufficiently proved actual, open, notorious, continuous and peaceable user of the roadway, the trial court could infer that the user was adverse and that a prescriptive right had been acquired appurtenant to the lot of plaintiff as the dominant tenement.

2. Adverse Possession ⇐1

Property may be acquired by occupancy as well as by transfer. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 1000.

3. Adverse Possession ⇐40

Occupancy for a period prescribed by the Code as sufficient to bar any action for the recovery of property confers a title thereto denominated a title by prescription which is sufficient against all. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1007.

4. Easements ⇐61(3)

The owner or occupant of an estate in a dominant tenement may maintain an action for the enforcement of an easement attached thereto.

5. Easements ⇐24

In action to enjoin defendants from interfering with plaintiffs' use of a roadway across defendant's property, where evidence proved a perfect title in plaintiffs' predecessors as legal owners to claimed easement acquired by prescription, prescriptive title to use the roadway having become complete during occupancy of dominant tenement by plaintiffs' predecessors in title, plaintiffs were entitled to use the road as constituting an easement appurtenant to the dominant tenement. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1000, 1007.

6. Easements ⇐5

In suit to enjoin the defendants from interfering with plaintiff's use of a roadway across defendant's property, that plaintiffs were subvendees under a vendee whose contract contained a clause forbidding "assignment" of his contract did not preclude plaintiffs from claiming title by adverse prescription to use of the roadway, since such provision is for the benefit of the owner, and evidence authorized a finding that owner continued to receive payments from vendee with full knowledge of subcontract and of subvendee's possession under it without objection.

Archibald D. McDougall, Sacramento, for appellant.

Frank E. Jones, Mary E. Jones, in pro. per.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Respondents, claiming to be the equitable owners and in possession of the northeast quarter of Lot 11 of Swanston Acres in Sacramento County, brought this action against appellant to obtain a decree enjoining him from interfering with their use of a certain roadway across appellant's property. At the trial respondents introduced evidence to the following effect: William F. and Elva Cox became the owners of the northeast quarter of Lot 11 on March 28, 1946. At that time a roadway, commonly called Memory Lane, led from the Cox property to Fulton Avenue, a public road, along the south 20 feet of Lot 12, which lies between Lot 11 and the avenue. It was a roadway improved with a graveled surface wide enough for two cars to pass and showed evidence of having been used for some time by the predecessors in interest of the Coxes. They continued to use the road and, along with other people, maintained mail boxes at the junction of Memory Lane and the avenue. On October 12, 1948 the Coxes executed a contract of sale with Richard and Virginia Savin covering the northeast quarter of Lot 11. The Savins took possession and continued the use of Memory Lane until July 9, 1949 when they contracted to sell, and delivered possession of, the northeast quarter of Lot 11 to respondents who thereafter continued the use of the roadway until prevented by barricades erected by appellant. It was shown that appellant in 1947 acquired parcels in the south half of Lot 12 which were bounded on the north by Memory Lane; that he then observed the roadway was being used, saw the mail boxes maintained at the point where the lane entered Fulton Avenue and knew that the mail boxes belonged to the Coxes and their tenants. In that year appellant graded Memory Lane and improved it with a renewed gravel surfacing to a point about 150 feet from the west boundary of Lot 12. From 1947 to 1950 appellant observed the frequent passage of automobiles traveling between Fulton Avenue and the northeast quarter of Lot 11 and along Memory Lane. In 1950 appellant acquired the north half of Lot 12 and observed the continued use of Memory Lane as a road. In May or June of 1952 appellant caused Memory Lane to be surfaced with black top from Fulton Avenue to a point about 60 feet from the west boundary of Lot 12. As he put it, he got the neighbors together to do the paving and arranged with each as to the amount to be contributed to the total cost. He told respondents he thought their proper share was one-third of the total, or about $330. It appeared that they argued over this matter of the fair share to be contributed by the respondents. Respondents offered to contribute $150 but appellant rejected that offer and when respondents refused to go higher appellant barricaded the west end of Memory Lane, excluding respondents from its use. This action followed:

> "The establishment of a prescriptive right depends upon showing a continued and uninterrupted, open and visible, use of a definite right in the land of another which is identical to that claimed as an easement and has a relation to the use of, and a direct and apparent connection with, the dominant tenement under an adverse claim of right for a period corresponding generally to the statutory period of limitations in the particular jurisdiction." 17 Am.Jur., Easements, sec. 59, p. 971.

[1] The evidence in this case sufficiently proved actual, open, notorious, continuous and peaceable user of Memory Lane and therefrom the trial court could infer that the user was adverse; that therefore a prescriptive right had been acquired appurtenant to the northeast quarter of Lot 11 as the dominant tenement. Conaway v. Toogood, 172 Cal. 706, 709, 158 P. 200; Hutton v. Ormando, 3 Cal.2d 305, 306–307, 43 P.2d 1100. This statement, of course, depends upon the right of the owner of the dominant tenement to tack the user of their tenants and vendee and of respondents as sub-vendees so as to make up the necessary five-year period. The court entered judgment, enjoining appellant from obstructing respondents' use of Memory Lane.

Appellant contends that respondents, as the conditional vendees of another conditional vendee, have no standing to claim title by adverse prescription to an appurtenant right of way over the land of appellant; that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that respondents and their predecessors used the strip five years prior to 1952 in such a way as to create title by prescription.

[2–5] We think appellant misconceives the nature of the action brought by respondents and the nature of the right by which they claim to have the use of Memory Lane as a roadway. The gravamen of respondents' action is as follows: The Coxes are the owners of the northeast quarter of Lot 11. They and their predecessors initiated a use of what came to be known as Memory Lane and by continuous use through themselves, their tenants, their vendee and their vendee's vendee acquired an easement over that portion of the property which now belongs to appellant. Respondents' position then is that this prescriptive title having become complete during their occupancy of the dominant tenement, they are entitled to use the road, the right constituting an easement appurtenant to the northeast quarter of Lot 11. We have already said that the evidence they introduced sufficiently proved a perfect title in the Coxes as legal owners of the northeast quarter of Lot 11, to the claimed easement acquired by prescription. It is, of course, familiar law that property may be acquired by occupancy as well as by transfer, Civ.Code, Sec. 1000, and that occupancy for the period prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure as sufficient to bar any action for the recovery of property confers a title thereto denominated a title by prescription which is sufficient against all. Civ.Code, Sec. 1007. Respondents' proof, therefore, showed legal title to the prescriptive right in the Coxes as owners of the dominant tenement with the same effect as though their title rested in grant. Having established ownership in the Coxes of legal title to the northeast quarter of Lot 11 and of the prescriptive right to the use of Memory Lane as a road for the benefit of said northeast quarter of Lot 11, respondents had established their right as sub-vendees in possession to a decree enjoining appellant from interfering with their use of Memory Lane. They had the right to sue for the relief the judgment herein accorded them. We quote the following from Lemos v. Farmin, 128 Cal.App. 195, 200, 17 P.2d 148, 150:

> "The law is well settled that the owner or occupant of an estate in a dominant tenement may maintain an action for the enforcement of an easement attached thereto."

[6] It is not material here that respondents are sub-vendees under a vendee whose contract contains a clause forbidding "assignment" of his contract. Such a provision is for the benefit of the owner who may waive a breach. 55 Am.Jur., Vendor & Purchaser, Sec. 436, p. 845. The trial court could, and impliedly did, infer waiver from evidence that the owner continued to receive payments from the vendee with full knowledge of the sub-contract and of the sub-vendee's possession under it, all without objection. Respondents were possessed of a sufficient estate in the dominant tenement to maintain this action.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Wilma JENKINS, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Lynn JENKINS, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 21716.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 11, 1957.

Suit by wife for a divorce, wherein husband filed a cross-complaint. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Philbrick McCoy, J., rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that wife's testimony as to numerous acts of violence and name-calling by husband was sufficiently corroborated to sustain finding that husband was guilty of extreme cruelty.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Divorce ⇐127(4)

Wife's testimony as to numerous acts of violence and name-calling by husband was sufficiently corroborated to sustain finding that husband was guilty of extreme cruelty as ground for divorce.

2. Husband and Wife ⇐264

In divorce suit, evidence that title to realty purchased with earnings of husband for use as a home was taken by husband and wife in joint tenancy solely as a matter of convenience in order to have the privilege of survivorship without probate proceedings and without any intention to alter the community character of such property was sufficient to support finding that such realty was community property.

3. Divorce ⇐286

Finding that home was the community property of husband and wife, though title thereto was held in joint tenancy, was conclusive on appeal from divorce judgment, where such finding was supported by reasonable inferences from the evidence.

4. Divorce ⇐240(1), 252

Interlocutory decree granting wife a divorce on ground of extreme cruelty properly adjudicated the property rights of the parties and the matter of support of wife by dividing certain personal property between the parties, ordering community real property sold and 75% of the proceeds paid to wife and 25% to husband and ordering husband to pay $125 per month for support of wife, and such provisions of interlocutory decree, though not immediately effective in regard to disposition of community property, should be carried into final decree.

5. Divorce ⇐252

Where wife was granted a divorce on ground of extreme cruelty, division of property so that value of personal property awarded to husband and his share of proceeds of sale of home amounted to approximately $4,000, while value of such property awarded to wife and her share of proceeds of sale of home amounted to almost $10,000 was not inequitable, in view of circumstances of the parties.

6. Divorce ⇐239

In divorce suit, finding that defendant was an able-bodied man capable of earning more than $300 per month was supported by substantial evidence.

7. Divorce ⇐240(5)

Where wife obtained a divorce on ground of extreme cruelty from able-bodied man capable of earning more than $300 per month, to whom she had been married for more than 27 years and who had no other dependent, allowance of $125 per month for wife's support was not excessive, in absence of evidence that wife was capable of supporting herself.

Barry Sullivan, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edward K. Brody, Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff sued for divorce; defendant filed a cross-complaint. Each charged the other with cruelty. Findings and judgment were in favor of plaintiff on the complaint and the cross-complaint. Defendant appeals. We will take up the points on appeal in the following order.

[1] It is contended that although plaintiff's testimony would have been sufficient, if corroborated, to establish the charge of cruelty there was legally insufficient corroborative evidence. The contention is not sustainable. Plaintiff testified to numerous acts of violence at the hands of defendant extending over a number of years and the use by defendant of much vile language and name-calling. The opprobrious epithets were those commonly employed by persons addicted to the use of bad language. Plaintiff's testimony was corroborated by that of a friend and neighbor that she frequently heard defendant shout such epithets at plaintiff, following which she had observed plaintiff suffering "heart spasms". Two notes written by defendant to his wife were placed in evidence. They furnished evidence of defendant's vulgarity. Also in evidence were numerous cigarette stubs adorned with lipstick. On three separate occasions after she had been absent from home plaintiff found the cigarette stubs in the house and asked defendant about them. His answers were uninformative and extremely rude. Plaintiff was naturally distressed. The court made no mistake in finding defendant guilty of extreme cruelty.

[2, 3] A further contention is that the home of the parties stood in joint tenancy and that the court was in error in finding that it was community property, as alleged by plaintiff. This contention also is untenable. There was evidence of the following facts: The property had been purchased with the earnings of defendant for use as a home. The parties, at the suggestion of friends and of an escrow clerk, informed the clerk that title should be taken by them in joint tenancy; at that time the parties did not know the difference between joint tenancy and community property; defendant did not know what community property was; the only reason they had for using the form of joint tenancy was that they had been told that in the event of the death of either of them title would go to the survivor without proceedings in probate; there had been no previous understanding that the property would be put in joint tenancy nor any discussion of it. The escrow clerk told them that title should be put in joint tenancy as a matter of convenience. The evidence was clearly sufficient to justify a finding that this was the sole purpose the parties had in following the advice that title should be placed in joint tenancy. It is a common practice for a husband and wife who have acquired funds as community property to use the same in the purchase of real property and to take title thereto as joint tenants, being motivated solely by a desire to have the privileges of survivorship. It frequently happens that they have no intention of abandoning community ownership and do not understand that placing the title in joint tenancy would affect the change of ownership or would serve any purpose other than to avoid the necessity of proceedings in probate. If the evidence is sufficient to convince the court that the parties had no agreement and no intention to alter the community character of the property it may properly be determined that it remains community property notwithstanding the fact that title was knowingly taken in joint tenancy. Rogers v. Rogers, 86 Cal.App.2d 817, 195 P.2d 890; Mademann v. Sexauer, 117 Cal.App.2d 400, 256 P.2d 34; Palazuelos v. Palazuelos, 103 Cal.App.2d 826, 230 P.2d 431. In the present case the finding that the property remained community property is supported by reasonable inferences from the evidence and is therefore conclusive on the appeal.

By its judgment the court divided certain personal property between the parties; it ordered the real property sold and the proceeds, after certain adjustments, to be divided 75 per cent to the plaintiff and 25 per cent to the defendant; it ordered defendant to pay plaintiff for support and maintenance $125 per month until the further order of the court. Other provisions of the decree are not material to our inquiry.

[4] The next point urged by appellant is that the court had no authority to order a sale of the real property, which the parties stipulated to be of the value of $12,000. The point is that the court had no authority to divide the community property or order a sale of it except by final decree. Respondent concedes that the disposition of the property in terms of the interlocutory decree was not immediately effective. The rights of the parties in the property and the matter of support of plaintiff were properly adjudicated and the provisions of the interlocutory decree should be carried into the final decree. Dowd v. Dowd, 111 Cal. App.2d 760, 245 P.2d 339.

[5–7] Appellant computes the value of the personal property and his share of the proceeds of a sale of the home that was awarded to him at $4,278.25 and the value of that awarded to respondent at $9,919.55. He apparently contends, without argument, that it was an unfair division. There is nothing in the circumstances of the parties that indicates to us that it was not an equitable division. Appellant argues that the allowance of $125 per month for plaintiff's support was excessive. He is a house painter. The amount of his earnings was not definitely shown but the court expressed the opinion that they amounted to somewhere between $300 and $500 per month. The court found that he is an able-bodied man capable of earning more than $300 per month. This finding is supported by substantial evidence. The amount allowed to plaintiff for support is not excessive. The parties had been married for over 27 years. There was no evidence that plaintiff is capable of supporting herself. The marriage was childless and defendant has no dependant other than plaintiff. No other points are urged by appellant which require discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 3, 1957.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 29, 1957.

Quiet title action wherein defendant cross-complained for damages resulting from trespass. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Nevada County, Arthur Coats, J., in favor of the plaintiff defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held, inter alia, that plaintiff in action to quiet title to timber on public land which had been deeded by the United States to railroad, could not rely on chain of title from railroad to plaintiff's predecessor in title where such predecessor during his lifetime had conveyed most of timber to a third party, and any title that plaintiff might have acquired from such third party's heirs after action began could not help plaintiff in such action.

Reversed.

1. Quieting Title ⇐10(1)

In order for person to prevail in quiet title action it is necessary that he prevail on strength of his own title.

2. Quieting Title ⇐10(2)

Plaintiff in action to quiet title to timber on public land which had been deeded by the United States to railroad, could not rely on chain of title from railroad to plaintiff's predecessor in title where such predecessor during his lifetime had conveyed most of timber to a third party, and any title that plaintiff might have acquired from such third party's heirs after action began could not help plaintiff in such action. Act Cong. July 1, 1862, 12 Stat. 489.

3. Quieting Title ⇐10(2)

Plaintiff in seeking to quiet title to timber on public land which had been granted by the United States to railroad could not rely on agreement with the United States in order to establish title to timber where it was conceded that United States had granted timber which was on the land at time of grant to the railroad so that United States could not later grant the same timber to another, since one cannot grant what one does not own. Act Cong. July 1, 1862, 12 Stat. 489.

4. Mines and Minerals ⇐51(5)

Where the United States in granting public land to railroad granted timber which was growing on the land at time of grant, mining locator's damages resulting from cutting of timber by trespasser would be limited to injury to their interests which would include damages for trespass.

5. Trespass ⇐57

Where person claiming title to timber on public lands was a trespasser, fact that such person complied with state and federal rules for harvesting timber would not limit damages recoverable.

Albert L. Johnson, Nevada City, and Lynne Kelly, Grass Valley, for appellants.

John L. Larue, Nevada City, for respondent Wales.

Frank A. Morrow, Sacramento, for respondents Oro Lbr. Co., Fisher and Brunning.

Frank G. Finnegan, Sacramento, for respondent Graham.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This controversy arose when Gladys M. Wales, claiming ownership of timber growing on public land on which defendants-appellants had located mining claims, went upon the land and cut and removed timber. When the timber operations began the defendants accused the logging operators of trespass. Mrs. Wales then brought suit to quiet her title to the timber. The defendants cross-complained for damages and subsequently filed separate suits for damages. All the actions were consolidated for trial.

In 1862 the Government of the United States granted to the Central Pacific Railroad certain public land adjacent to its railroad line. The grant excepted mineral lands, but provided that where the lands were mineral the timber thereon was granted to the railroad company. 12 Stat. at Large, Chap. 120. It is conceded herein that the land from which Mrs. Wales removed timber was mineral land and that the railroad company acquired the title to the timber on the land when the grant was made. To establish her title to the timber Mrs. Wales introduced in evidence a chain of title from the Central Pacific Railroad Company to one Oscar Tamm. Mrs. Tamm claimed to derive her interest in the timber from the trustees of the estate of Oscar Tamm. However, in the chain of title there appears a deed from Oscar Tamm to George C. Sargent conveying to him by far the greater part of the timber involved in this litigation.

Mrs. Wales also relied on a contract she had negotiated with the United States. By the terms of this contract she was permitted to cut and remove from the land here involved all timber over 90 years of age.

After a trial without a jury the court quieted Mrs. Wales' title to the timber and denied damages to the mining locators. The court made findings that Mrs. Wales was the owner of all the timber she cut and removed from the land; that the mining locators had no right, title or interest in that timber; that she entered the land by virtue of her ownership of the timber she took; that the harvesting of the timber was done in compliance with state and federal rules and that no damage or waste was committed while the timber was being removed; that the mining locators suffered no damage.

[1, 2] The mining locators have appealed from the judgment entered. They first contend that the court erred in quieting Mrs. Wales' title to the timber. We agree that it was error for the court to quiet Mrs. Wales' title. In order for a person to prevail in a quiet title action it is necessary that he prevail on the strength of his own title. Reed v. Hayward, 23 Cal.2d 336–339, 144 P.2d 561; 22 Cal.Jur. pp. 167–168. Mrs. Wales could not rely wholly on the contract of sale from the trustees of the estate of Mr. Tamm because Mr. Tamm during his lifetime had conveyed most of the timber to George C. Sargent. At the time this action was begun Mrs. Wales could not show title from Sargent or his heirs. Therefore, she had no title which could be quieted to any timber which had been conveyed to Sargent. Any title she may have acquired from Sargent's heirs after action begun could not help her in this suit. Reed v. Hayward, supra, 23 Cal.2d at page 340, 144 P.2d at page 563. As for the small part of the timber which Mr. Tamm did not conveyed to Sargent and which the trustees of his estate purported to sell to Mrs. Wales her proof of title is vague and unsatisfactory. But it is unnecessary to determine its sufficiency now since we must reverse the judgment and better proof may be made on retrial.

[3] Mrs. Wales could not rely on the agreement with the United States in order to establish her title to the timber. For, as is conceded here, if the United States granted the timber which was on the land in 1862 to the Central Pacific Railroad, it could not later grant the same timber to another. One cannot grant what one does not own. Ames v. Empire Star Mines Co., 17 Cal.2d 213, 221, 110 P.2d 13.

[4, 5] What we have said does not mean that the mining locators are entitled to damages for the value of the timber which was cut and removed from the land. For, if the United States granted the timber which was growing on the land in 1862 and Mrs. Wales only cut such timber, she did not take any timber to which the locators would have any right. Their damages would be limited to injury to their interest which in this case would include damages for trespass since if Mrs. Wales could show no title she was a trespasser; and was liable in damages for any injury to the land caused by the removal of the timber. Since she was a trespasser, the fact she complied with state and federal rules for harvesting timber would not limit the damages recoverable.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

Civ. 21735.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 26, 1956.

Hearing Denied Feb. 19, 1957.

Action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when his automobile collided with a steel girder which extended into his lane of travel from the edge of defendant's tractor-trailer, on which it was being transported. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Otto J. Emme, J., entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeals, Vallée, J., held that errors in instructing jury on certain statutes inapplicable to the facts of the case, in view of negligence of defendants in moving girder overhanging center line of highway 8 feet, and in view of fact that instructions read as a whole fully, fairly, and correctly charged on all basic issues, were not prejudicial.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐928(1)

In determining whether instructions given are correct district court of appeals must assume jury might have believed evidence on which the defense of the losing party and appellant was predicated, and if correct instructions had been given that the jury might have rendered a verdict in favor of appellant.

2. Automobiles ⇐170(2)

Vehicle Code sections 525, 525.1 and 525.3 dealing with driving in the right-hand lane of the highway apply only to vehicles traveling in the same direction and not to vehicles proceeding in opposite directions. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 525, 525.1, 525.3.

3. Automobiles ⇐246(8)

Where vehicles involved in a collision on a public highway were traveling in opposite directions, trial court erred in giving instructions on certain statutes pertaining to driving on the right half of the roadway except under certain conditions. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 525, 525.1, 525.3.

4. Automobiles ⇐170(2)

Statute setting forth conditions when a driver may overtake and pass to the right of another vehicle applies to vehicles traveling in the same direction, and not in opposite directions. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 529.

5. Automobiles ⇐246(8)

Where vehicles involved in automobile collision were proceeding in opposite directions, trial court erred in instructing jury on statutes pertaining to conditions when a driver may overtake and pass to the right of another vehicle. West's Ann. Vehicle Code, § 529.

6. Automobiles ⇐11

Object of Statute regulating width of vehicles on public highways is to restrict width of loads to reasonable limits so that such loads shall not protrude over the center line of a highway or over other vehicle lines in such a way as to interfere with other vehicles which are in their proper lanes and are properly using the other parts of the highway. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 694(a–c, f).

7. Negligence ⇐6, 12

An act or failure to act in violation of a statute is negligence as a matter of law, although circumstances of emergency or unusual conditions may be used to excuse or justify the violation.

8. Negligence ⇐6, 136(14)

Unless and until excuse or justification appears for violation of a statute, the violation must be treated as negligence per se, and ordinarily, the excuse or justification presents a question of fact for the jury.

9. Trial ⇐241

In action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when his automobile collided with a steel girder which extended into his lane of travel from the edge of defendant's tractor-trailer, on which it was being transported, trial court did not err in instructing jury on statute pertaining to width of vehicles in view of further instruction on right of city to permit the total outside width of a vehicle on road in the city to be in excess of limits set forth in such statute. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 694(a, f).

10. Trial ⇐252(8)

In action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when his automobile collided with a steel girder which extended into his lane of travel from the edge of defendant's tractor-trailer on which it was being transported, in view of fact there was no evidence to warrant an inference that tractor was driven in excess of any speed restrictions set forth in statutes specifying speed limits based on weight and tire equipment, trial court erred in instructing jury on such statute. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 515.

11. Automobiles ⇐246(8)

In action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when his automobile collided with a steel girder which extended into his lane of travel from the edge of defendant's tractor-trailer, in which it was being transported, trial court did not err in refusing to instruct jury that no violation of statute providing that vehicles be driven on right half of roadway results from mere fact that a load extends across center line, in view of fact such statute applies only to vehicles traveling in same direction, whereas vehicles involved in collision were traveling in opposite directions. West's Ann. Vehicle Code, § 525.

12. Trial ⇐295(1)

Where instructions, read as a whole correctly charged jury on all basic issues, any minor error that might have occurred would not be held prejudicial.

VALLEE, Justice.

Appeal by defendants from a judgment entered on a verdict for plaintiff in an action for damages for personal injuries sustained when his automobile collided with a triangular steel girder being transported on a tractor owned by defendant Almas House Moving Company and operated by defendant Stout and guided by defendant Tangen in a pilot truck. The only question is whether the trial court erred in giving and in refusing to give certain instructions to the jury; and, if so, whether the error was prejudicial.

[1] In determining whether the instructions given are correct, we must assume the jury might have believed the evidence on which the defense—the losing party—was predicated, and if correct instructions had been given the jury might have rendered a verdict in favor of defendants. Clement v. State Reclamation Board, 35 Cal.2d 628, 629, 643, 220 P.2d 897.

Defendant Almas House Moving Company, to be referred to as defendant, is a corporation engaged in the business of moving houses and oversized loads.

About 5:45 a. m. on September 24, 1953 defendant was transporting two, large, triangular, prefabricated steel girders on a flat-bed tractor and semitrailer. The tractor was about 8 feet wide. Two I-beams about 23 feet in length were crosswise on the bed of the trailer. The two girders, one on top of the other, were on top of the I-beams. The widest portion of the girders was near the cab of the tractor. From point to point of the girders the load was 24 feet and 6 inches in width, making an 8-foot overhang on both sides of the trailer. The equipment weighed in excess of 25,000 pounds.

The tractor, in addition to its usual headlights, had a fixed electric red light on top of the hood. There were a total of 14 lighted red coal oil lanterns hung from various parts of the load. About 120 feet in front of the tractor a pilot or guide truck was operated by defendant Tangen. He had in his left hand a lighted red coal oil lantern with a wire handle which, he testified, he waved. The lights on the tractor and truck were burning.

Defendant was transporting the girders from Los Angeles to Lakewood and had obtained from the city of Lynwood a permit describing the route, subject to "O.K." by the police department, which showed on its face "Okay," and a permit from the city of South Gate street department, to move the load. Neither permit authorized defendant to move the load in the center of the highway.

Defendant Stout drove the tractor easterly on Imperial Highway. When it reached the intersection of Imperial and Alameda the equipment was stopped and Tangen called the police departments of South Gate and Lynwood. Stout and Tangen had the permits with them. Tangen testified that an officer informed him South Gate did not require a police escort as long as the equipment was properly lighted and as long as he had a permit. A police car from Lynwood was dispatched to the intersection. The officers examined the permits and directed Stout and Tangen to drive down the middle of the highway "so that the truck and the load would be contained within one lane of each direction, straddling that double line." The beams protruded almost out to the single white lines on either side of the double white line.

One of the officers testified the equipment was being driven in this fashion so that traffic would be "able to move on either side of this equipment"; he did not see any red lanterns on the guide truck, nor did he see defendant Tangen wave a red lantern. The officers stayed in front of the equipment until they reached a bridge on Imperial close to the city limits of South Gate, at which point they turned off.

When the tractor reached the city limits of South Gate it was still dark. Imperial at that point was about 74 feet wide. Stout was driving to the right of the double white line in the center of the highway. About 8 feet of the load extended into the lane immediately north of the double line. Plaintiff was traveling west on Imperial in the lane near the double white line. About 70 feet in front of him, and going in the same direction, was a car driven by one Preston. Preston saw a red light, swerved to the right and avoided contact with the equipment. Almost immediately thereafter plaintiff collided with the left-hand side of the load, sustaining serious injuries. The accident occurred near the boundary line between Lynwood and South Gate. The evidence is in conflict as to whether the point of impact was in Lynwood or in South Gate. There was evidence from which the jury could have found either way. Plaintiff testified he did not see any red light other than the rear end light of Preston's car in front of him.

The court read sections 515; 525; 525.1; 525.3; 529; 694(a), (b), (c), and (f); and 710 of the Vehicle Code to the jury.[1]

1. Sections 515, 525, 525.1, 525.3, 529, 694 (a), (b) and (c) were read at the request of plaintiff; sections 694(f) and 710 at the request of defendants.

Section 515: "Speed Law Based on Weight and Tire Equipment.

"(a) No person shall operate upon any highway any of the following vehicles when equipped entirely with pneumatic tires at any speed in excess of 40 miles per hour:

"(1) Any motor truck and trailer.

"(2) Any motor truck alone or truck tractor with semi-trailer having a gross weight, of vehicle and load or of such vehicles and load of 25,000 pounds or more.

"(b) No person shall operate upon a highway any vehicle equipped with any solid tire when such vehicle has a gross weight as set forth in the following table at any speed in excess of the speed set forth opposite such gross weight:

When gross weight of vehicle and load is:	Maximum speed in miles per hour:
10,000 lbs. or more but less than 16,000 lbs.	25
16,000 lbs. or more but less than 22,000 lbs.	15
22,000 lbs. or more	12

Section 525: "Drive on Right Side of Roadway—Exceptions.

"(a) Upon all roadways of sufficient width a vehicle shall be driven upon the right half of the roadway, except as follows:

"(1) When overtaking and passing another vehicle proceeding in the same direction under the rules governing such movement.

"(2) When placing a vehicle in a lawful position for, and when such vehicle is lawfully making a left turn.

"(3) When the right half of a roadway is closed to traffic while under construction or repair.

"(4) Upon a roadway designated and signposted for one-way traffic.

"(b) The State Department of Public Works shall by regulation determine a distinctive roadway marking which shall indicate no driving over such marking, and is authorized either by such marking or by signs and markings to designate any portion of a State highway where the volume of traffic or the vertical or other curvature of the roadway renders it hazardous to drive on the left side of such marking or signs and marking. When such markings or signs and markings are in place, the driver of a vehicle shall not drive along the highway to the left thereof, but this shall not prevent turning to the left across any such markings at any intersection or private driveway.

"(c) It is unlawful to drive any vehicle upon any highway which has been divided into two or more roadways by means of a physical barrier or by means of a dividing section of not less than two feet in width delineated by curbs, lines or other markings on the roadway except to the right of such barrier or dividing section, or to drive any vehicle over or across any such dividing section, or to make any left turn or semi-circular or U-turn on any such divided highway, except in a crossover or intersection."

Section 525.1: "Driving in Right Hand Lane. Upon all highways any vehicle proceeding at less than the normal speed of traffic thereon shall be driven in the right hand lane for traffic or as close as practicable to the right hand edge or curb, except as otherwise provided in Section 525 of this code."

Section 525.3: "Certain Vehicles to be Driven in Right Hand Lane.

"When any vehicle included in Section 515 is being driven on any highway, it shall be driven in the right hand lane for traffic or as close as practicable to the right edge or curb, except when overtaking and passing another vehicle proceeding in the same direction or when preparing for a left turn at an intersection or into a private road or driveway. Vehicles included in this section when overtaking and passing another vehicle shall use the lane to the immediate left of the right hand lane for traffic, except when overtaking and passing to the right of another vehicle as permitted under the provisions of this code."

Section 529: "When Overtaking on the Right Is Permitted.

"(a) The driver of a motor vehicle may overtake and pass to the right of another vehicle only under the following conditions:

"(1) When the vehicle overtaken is making or about to make a left turn.

"(2) Upon a city street with unobstructed pavement of sufficient width for two or more lines of vehicles in each direction.

"(3) Upon a one-way street.

"(4) Upon any highway outside of a

The jury was then told that conduct in violation of the sections constitutes negligence per se, subject to being overcome by a showing that the conduct was excusable or justifiable.[2] This was followed by another instruction to the effect that a violation of city with unobstructed pavement of sufficient width and clearly marked for four or more lines of moving traffic.

"(5) Upon a highway divided into two roadways where traffic is restricted to one direction upon each of such roadways.

"(b) The driver of a motor vehicle may overtake and pass another vehicle upon the right only under conditions permitting such movement in safety. In no event shall such movement be made by driving off the paved or main traveled portion of the roadway.

"(c) The provisions of this section shall not relieve the driver of a slow moving vehicle from the duty to drive as closely as practicable to the right-hand edge of the roadway."

Section 694 (a), (b), (c), and (f):

"[Width of Vehicles]

"(a) The total outside width of any vehicle or the load thereon shall not exceed 96 inches, except as otherwise provided in this section.

"(b) When any vehicle is equipped with pneumatic tires the maximum width from the outside of one wheel and tire to the outside of the opposite outer wheel and tire shall not exceed 100 inches, but in such event the outside width of the body of such vehicle or the load thereon shall not exceed 96 inches.

"(c) When any vehicle carries a load of loosely piled agricultural products such as hay, straw, or leguminous plants in bulk but not crated, baled, boxed or sacked, such load of loosely piled material and any loading racks retaining the same shall not exceed 120 inches in width. * * *

"(f) Any city organized under a freeholders' charter may by ordinance permit a total outside width of vehicle and load in excess of the limits set forth in this section when such vehicle is used exclusively within the boundary limits of such city."

Section 710: "Permits for Increased Size, Weight, Etc.

"(a) The State Department of Public Works with respect to highways under its jurisdiction and local authorities with respect to highways under their jurisdiction may at their discretion upon application in writing and if good cause appears issue a special permit in writing authorizing the applicant to operate or move a vehicle or combination of vehicles or special mobile equipment of a size or weight of vehicle or load exceeding the maximum specified in this code, or to use corrugations on the periphery of the movable tracks on a traction engine or tractor the propulsive power of which is not exerted through wheels resting upon the roadway but by means of a flexible band or chain, or, under emergency conditions, to operate or move a type of vehicle otherwise prohibited hereunder, upon any highway under the jurisdiction of the party granting such permit and for the maintenance of which said party is responsible.

"(b) The application for any such permit shall specifically describe the vehicle or vehicles and load to be operated or moved and the particular highways over which permit to operate is requested, and whether such permit is requested for a single trip or for continuous operation.

"(c) The State Department of Public Works or local authority is authorized to issue or withhold such permit at its discretion; or, if such permit is issued, to limit the number of trips, or to establish seasonal or other time limitations within which the vehicle or vehicles described may be operated on the highways indicated, or otherwise to limit or prescribe conditions of operation of such vehicle or vehicles, when necessary to assure against undue damage to the road foundations, surfaces or structures, and may require such undertaking or other security as may be deemed necessary to protect the highways and bridges from injury, or to provide indemnity for any injury resulting from such operation."

2. "Conduct which is in violation of * * 515, 525, 525.1, 525.3, 529, * * *. 694a, b, c, f; 710 of the Vehicle Code just read to you constitutes negligence per se. This means that if the evidence supports a finding, and you do find, that a person did so conduct himself, it requires a presumption that he was negligent. However, such presumption is not conclusive. It may be overcome by other evidence showing that under all the circumstances surrounding the event, the conduct in question was excusable, justifiable and such as might reasonably have been expected from a person of ordinary prudence. In this connection, you may assume that a person of ordinary prudence will reasonably endeavor to obey the law and will do so unless causes, not of his own intended making, induce him, without moral fault, to do otherwise."

law is of no consequence unless it was a proximate cause of an injury suffered by the plaintiff. Judgment was for plaintiff. Defendants appeal.

First, defendants assert the court erred in reading sections 525, 525.1, and 525.3 [3] to the jury and stating that violation of these sections constituted negligence per se.

The court first read section 515, which provides that vehicles of specified weight and tire equipment shall not be operated in excess of designated speeds. It then read section 525.3, which in essence provides that vehicles included in section 515 shall be driven in the right-hand lane or as close as practicable to the right edge or curb.[4] It then read section 525.1, which provides that vehicles proceeding at less than normal speed of traffic shall be driven in the right-hand lane. This was followed by section 525 which states that a vehicle shall be driven on the right half of the roadway except under certain conditions.

[2, 3] Section 525 is not applicable where vehicles are passing each other going in opposite directions. Mathers v. County of Riverside, 22 Cal.2d 781, 784, 141 P.2d 419; Morrison v. Jose, 57 Cal.App.2d 795, 801, 135 P.2d 586. Sections 525, 525.1, and 525.3 contain the identical language: "when overtaking and passing another vehicle proceeding in the same direction." Each of these sections applies only to vehicles traveling in the same direction and not to those proceeding in opposite directions. See Lewis v. Western Truck Line, 44 Cal. App.2d 455, 468, 112 P.2d 747. It was error to give the instructions based on sections 525, 525.1, and 525.3 as those sections are not applicable to the facts at bar. The vehicles involved were traveling in opposite directions. Neither party requested that section 527, which applies to vehicles proceeding in opposite directions, be read to the jury, nor was it instructed thereon.[5] Bennett v. Chandler, 52 Cal.App.2d 255, 263, 126 P.2d 173; see People v. Kiss, 125 Cal. App.2d 138, 143, 269 P.2d 924; Morrison v. Jose, 57 Cal.App.2d 795, 801, 135 P.2d 586.

[4, 5] Defendants' second assignment of error is that the court erred in reading section 529, which states the conditions when a driver may overtake and pass to the right of another vehicle. Plaintiff argues the instruction was given because paragraph (c) thereof provides that the provisions of the section shall not relieve the driver of a slow-moving vehicle from the duty to drive as closely as practicable to the right-hand edge of the roadway. This section applies to vehicles traveling in the same direction and not in opposite directions. The evidence is uncontradicted that as defendants were driving easterly on Imperial they were not attempting to pass any other vehicle driven in the same direction. The instruction was not applicable to the facts and should not have been given.

Defendants next contend the court erred in reading subsection (a) of section 694. It is argued that although subsection (f) was read at their request there was no reason to read subsection (a) in view of the

3. All references are to sections of the Vehicle Code.

4. The phrase "and as close as practicable to the right-hand curb or edge of," was deleted from section 525 in 1945. Stats. 1945, c. 493, p. 990, § 1. However, when section 525.1 was added to the code in 1947, Stats.1947, c. 788, p. 1879, § 7, the phrase "or as close as practicable to the right hand edge or curb" was included in the section, and when section 525.3 was added in 1953, Stats.1953, c. 421, p. 1671, § 1, the phrase "or as close as practicable to the right edge or curb" was included in that section.

5. Section 527 reads: "Passing Vehicles Proceeding in Opposite Directions.

"(a) Drivers of vehicles proceeding in opposite directions shall pass each other to the right, and, except when a roadway has been divided into traffic lanes, each driver shall give to the other at least one-half of the main traveled portion of the roadway whenever possible.

"(b) Whenever upon any grade the width of the roadway is insufficient to permit the passing of vehicles approaching from opposite directions at the point of meeting, the driver of the vehicle descending the grade shall yield the right of way to the vehicle ascending the grade and shall if necessary back his vehicle to a place in the highway where it is possible for the vehicles to pass."

evidence that the oversized load was being carried pursuant to permits from the authorities.

[6] The object of section 694(a) is to restrict the width of loads to reasonable limits so that such loads shall not protrude over the center line of a highway or over other traffic lines in such a way as to interfere with other vehicles which are in their proper places and are properly using the other parts of the highway. Albania v. Kovacevich, 44 Cal.App.2d 925, 928, 113 P.2d 251.

[7–9] An act or failure to act in violation of a statute is negligence as a matter of law. Circumstances of emergency or unusual conditions may be shown to excuse or justify the violation. Unless and until excuse or justification appears, the general rule applies and the violation must be treated as negligence per se. Each violation must be considered in connection with the surrounding circumstances. Ordinarily the excuse or justification presents a question of fact for the jury. Here, the instruction relative to negligence per se stated that the violation of section 694(a) may be explained by circumstances surrounding the event. The court read subdivision (f), which qualified the effect of subdivision (a). There was no error in reading subsection (a) of section 694.

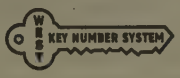
[10] The fourth claimed error was the reading of section 515 which specifies speed limits based on weight and tire equipment. Plaintiff concedes the only reason this instruction was given was to make section 525.3 applicable, in that the latter section provides that when a vehicle included in section 515 is being driven on the highway it shall be driven in the right-hand lane or as close as practicable to the right edge or curb, with certain exceptions. As noted, section 525.3 applies to vehicles traveling in the same direction and not in opposite directions. There is no evidence to warrant an inference that the tractor was driven in excess of any of the speed restrictions set forth in section 515. Section 515 should not have been read.

[11] Finally, defendants contend the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that if a vehicle is driven on the right half of the roadway no violation of section 525 results from the mere fact that the load extends across the center line.[6] Since section 525 applies only to vehicles traveling in the same direction, the court was correct in refusing to give the instruction. Furthermore, the instruction was inapplicable to the facts. The evidence was uncontradicted that the vehicle was driven in the center of the highway, not on the right half.

There remains the question whether reading sections 515, 525, 525.1, 525.3, and 529 to the jury, together with the instruction that conduct in violation of any one of the sections constituted negligence per se subject to being overcome by a showing that the conduct was excusable or justifiable, was prejudicial.

A judgment may not be set aside on the ground of misdirection of the jury unless, after an examination of the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Const., art. VI, § 4½.

[12, 13] The facts were fully developed. It is not contended the evidence does not support the verdict. There is substantial evidence that defendants were negligent. The court instructed the jury with respect to negligence, proximate cause, and contributory negligence. Obviously the jury found defendants were negligent and plaintiff was not contributorily negligent. When the instructions are read as a whole, it is manifest the jury was fully, fairly, and correctly charged on all basic issues.



6. The refused instruction reads: "California Vehicle Code Section 525 provides that upon all roadways of sufficient width a vehicle shall be driven upon the right half of the roadway with certain exceptions not applicable in this situation.

"However, if the vehicle itself is driven on the right half of the roadway the fact that the load thereon extends across the center line to the left half of the roadway does not result in a violation of this code section."

Under such circumstances any minor error that may have occurred in the instructions cannot and should not be held to have been prejudicial. Florine v. Market St. Ry. Co., 64 Cal.App.2d 581, 586, 149 P.2d 41. Regardless of the requirements of sections 525, 525.1 and 525.3 defendants were clearly negligent in moving the equipment with 8 feet of overhang north of the center line and we think the jury undoubtedly would have found negligence for that reason. Although some of the instructions complained of were erroneous under the circumstances of this case, it cannot be said the errors resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Lewis v. Western Truck Line, 44 Cal.App.2d 455, 468, 112 P.2d 747; Bennett v. Chandler, 52 Cal.App.2d 255, 263, 126 P.2d 173; Morrison v. Jose, 57 Cal.App.2d 795, 803, 135 P.2d 586.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Kern County, California.

Nov. 14, 1956.

As Amended on Denial of Rehearing Nov. 30, 1956.

Proceeding to set aside summary judgments entered against a number of bail bondsmen after nonappearance of defendants. The Municipal Court, Bakersfield Judicial District, J. Kelly Steele, J., granted motions to set aside such summary judgments and State appealed. The Superior Court, Appellate Department, Main, J., held that statute requiring that actions for recovery upon an undertaking in a criminal action must be commenced within one year, is not applicable to summary judgment proceedings against bail bondsmen under Penal Code, and a court may enter summary judgment against bondsmen more than one year after entry of declaration of forfeiture for failure of defendant to appear.

Reversed with instructions.

1. Bail ⇐86

Statute requiring that actions for recovery upon an undertaking in a criminal action be commenced within one year is not applicable to summary judgment proceedings against bail bondsmen under Penal Code, and court may enter summary judgment against bondsmen more than one year after entry of declaration of forfeiture for failure of defendant to appear. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1278, 1305, 1306; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 335, 340, subd. 2.

2. Forfeiture ⇐5

"Common-law" or "judicial forfeiture" requires the taking of some action by one of the parties litigant in order to establish the forfeiture or perfect the judgment. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11610 et seq.; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 942.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Common-Law Forfeiture" and "Judicial Forfeiture".

3. Forfeiture ⇐5

"Legislative" or "statutory forfeiture" requires no act to be performed by any litigant to establish forfeiture or to perfect the judgment, but only the ministerial act of the court. West's Ann.Bus & Prof. Code, § 25353.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Legislative Forfeiture" and "Statutory Forfeiture".

4. Bail ⇐77(2)

Under provisions of Penal Code providing for summary judgment against bail bondsmen upon nonappearance of defendant, upon the unexcused nonappearance of the defendant the surety becomes liable by operation of statute and court's action in making a record of the fact is ministerial and mandatory. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1305, 1306.

Roy Gargano, County Counsel, Kern County, and M. W. Creagh, Deputy County Counsel, Bakersfield, for appellant.

Donahue & Goldberg, Bakersfield, for respondents Devenney.

Norbert Baumgarten, Bakersfield, for other respondents.

MAIN, Judge.

The appeal in each of the ten captioned cases involves the validity of a summary judgment against bondsmen upon undertaking of bail in a criminal case, which judgment was entered more than one year after the entry by the lower court of the declaration of forfeiture for failure of the defendant to appear. Penal Code Sections 1278, 1305, 1306.

With exceptions noted, the record in each case discloses the following actions:

1. Defendant was charged with a criminal offense in the Municipal Court, was taken into custody, and was released upon posting an undertaking of bail furnished (exception in case A–12) by a corporate bondsman, the National Automobile and Casualty Insurance Company.

2. Defendant failed to appear when ordered to do so, and thereafter the Municipal Court entered in its minutes a declaration of forfeiture of the bond. In each instance the forfeiture was declared within one year of the failure to appear.

3. More than one year after entry of the forfeiture, the Municipal Court entered a summary judgment upon the bond. In some instances the judgment was entered against the corporate surety only, and in some cases also against one Walter E. Binger, presumably the attorney in fact for the corporate surety.

4. The docket contains an entry: "Summary judgment entered. Bondsman notified." The record does not contain other proof of service, copy of the notice, nor indication of what person or persons were notified. The only appearance of record in opposition to the appeal is by attorney Norbert Baumgarten, appearing "for respondent Walter E. Binger." Neither Mr. Baumgarten nor other counsel appear for the corporate surety.

5. A motion was made in the Municipal Court by Attorney Baumgarten to set aside the summary judgment so entered. The docket does not disclose the identity of the moving party, but only of counsel.

6. On February 27, 1956, the Municipal Court entered its order in each case, setting aside the summary judgment previously rendered.

7. The People (County Counsel of Kern County) appeal from the orders setting aside the summary judgments.

In setting aside the judgments, the Municipal Court in effect decided that entry of such summary judgments was barred by the one-year limitation of Sections 335 and 340(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, reading:

> "The periods prescribed for the commencement of actions other than for the recovery of real property, are as follows: * * * An action upon a statute, or upon an undertaking in a criminal action, for a forfeiture or penalty to the people of this State."

In other words, the holding is that the court cannot enter the summary judgment on a date more than one year after its declaration of the forfeiture. No such limitation of time is contained in the Penal Code Sections. Only a minimum time is mentioned, in that the defendant and his bail are now allowed ninety days from the declaration of forfeiture within which to appear and offer excuses, before summary judgment can be entered.

Since 1927 the Penal Code Sections 1305, 1306 has required the court in which a bail bond has been filed to perform specified acts as a means of fixing liability of bail after the unexcused non-appearance of the defendant. There is no civil action on the bond by the district attorney, as formerly.

Prior to 1927 the method provided for enforcing a forfeiture of bail under Penal Code Sections 1305 and 1306 was by civil action upon the bond, brought by the District Attorney, which action could only be commenced after a declaration of forfeiture by the court in which the principal had failed to appear, and the lapse of twenty days more during which the non-appearance remained unexcused.

In the case of Los Angeles County v. Metropolitan Casualty Insurance Company, 1933, 135 Cal.App. 26, 26 P.2d 699, 700, based on the pre-1927 law, it was held that the court might declare the forfeiture even after five years time from the date of non-appearance of the defendant; and that his further failure to appear for the twenty-day period then provided by Penal Code Section 1305 entitled the district attorney to proceed with his action on the bond. "It cannot be said * * * that such obligation [became] actionable until established by the procedure" prescribed by Penal Code Sections 1305 and 1306 as they then read. The opinion does not mention Section 340(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, but does uphold a judgment against the bondsman in a suit filed less than one year after the accrual of the cause of action. The district attorney in filing such suit was following the mandate of Penal Code Section 1306 as it read before 1927, that he might "proceed by action against the bail upon their undertaking."

However, by the amendments of 1927 the legislature put into operation an entirely new scheme for fixing liability of sureties on bail bonds. The bail bondsmen were required, P.C. Section 1287, to consent to summary judgment against themselves as an integral part of the undertaking. Section 1306 of the Penal Code was recast to provide that ninety days after the declaration of forfeiture, unless set aside, the court "shall * * * enter a summary judgment" against the bail. All directions to the court as to its duties are mandatory. As to the new system, the court said in People v. New York Indemnity Company, 1931, 113 Cal.App. 487, 298 P. 849, 850:

> "Section 1306 is so radically changed that nothing remains of the former enactment, the section as amended providing for the entry of a summary judgment against each bondsman named, in place of the action against the bail on their undertaking as theretofore provided. It is to be observed that the amendment adds to the form of the bond provided by section 1278 of the Penal Code an express consent to the entry of such summary judgment by the bondsman and also by 'the defendant if he be a party to the bond.' Necessarily the bond would have to be signed by the surety, thereby making such consent effective. Here we have a very important change in the form of the bond, making effective by consent the summary judgment provided for in the amendment to section 1306."

[1] No change was made in 1927 in the language of C.C.P. Section 340(2), perhaps in view of the large number of outstanding bonds enforceable only by the old procedure because they lacked the consent clause. Whether this section ever became applicable to bonds given since the 1927 changes does not seem to have been decided. We believe that on principle and in view of the drastic and specific changes above referred to, the section has no application to bonds given under the new law.

It will first be observed that Sections 1305 and 1306 are specific statutes concerning obligation of bail, and so "are governed by the statutes specially applicable thereto." Section 2781 of the Civil Code. They do not provide for the filing of an action as did the old law. They contain no reference to periods of limitation within which the specified acts must be performed by the court, and no limitation can be imported from a general statute.

[2] Next, the law recognizes two types of forfeiture, 22 Cal.Jur. 510, and has done so in this state at least since 1882. See Upham v. Hosking, 62 Cal. 250; People v. Broad, 216 Cal. 1, 12 P.2d 941. The first, called common-law or judicial forfeiture, requires the taking of some action by one of the parties litigant in order to establish the forfeiture or perfect the judgment. Of this character are actions to forfeit vehicles used in the transportation of narcotics. Health and Safety Code Section 11610 et seq., require a series of steps by the state as litigant before forfeiture can be adjudicated. Similarly the liability of sureties upon an undertaking to stay execution of a civil judgment is fixed only by the making and granting of a motion by a litigant. C.C.P. Section 942.

[3, 4] The second type of forfeiture, called legislative or statutory, requires no act to be performed by any litigant, but only the ministerial act of the court. An example is found in the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act; see Business and Professions Code Section 25353. In the cases now on appeal the liability of the bail derives from a single event: the unexcused non-appearance of the defendant. Upon the happening of this event, the surety becomes liable by operation of the statute. The court's action in making a record of the fact is ministerial and mandatory.

The distinction is spelled out further in People v. Grant, 1942, 52 Cal.App.2d 794, 127 P.2d 19, 22; hearing in the Supreme Court denied. There the state sought to confiscate and forfeit under Penal Code 325 a quantity of coins taken some twenty-two months before from slot machines by the sheriff. Since forfeiture could be accomplished only by the bringing and trial of a civil action, the court held recovery to be barred by the Statute of Limitations, C.C.P. Sec. 340(2). The forfeiture sought was common-law or judicial, not merely confirmation of a legislative forfeiture. But, said the court:

> "Where no action for a forfeiture is required to be brought, or where the statute itself prescribes the periods within which the procedural steps must be taken, certainly said section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure would have no application."

To us it appears quite clear that in 1927 the Legislature purposely changed the character of proceedings for forfeiture of bail. The characteristics of both types of proceedings were known from the decisions of the appellate courts, and the change was recommended by the Commission for the Reform of Criminal Procedure, in its 1927 report to the Legislature. See Vol. 5 of the Appendix to Journals of the Senate and Assembly, 47th session, 1927. Section 1306 of the Penal Code was completely re-cast. The effect was to remove bail forfeiture proceedings from the category of judicial forfeitures and place them within the classification of legislative or statutory forfeitures.

The orders of the Municipal Court granting motion to vacate and set aside summary judgment are therefore reversed as to National Automobile & Casualty Company in all cases in which judgment was rendered against said Company, namely:

A– 3	People v. Burton
A– 4	" v. Hammond
A– 5	" v. Guster
A– 6	" v. Martinez
A– 7	" v. Bizzel
A– 8	" v. Plaster
A– 9	" v. Puckett
A–10	" v. Chapman
A–11	" v. Nobles

Case No. A–12 involves different bondsmen, but all parties in that case have stipulated that the appellate court's ruling on the legal questions involved in the other appeals shall be conclusive in A–12 also. Accordingly, in case numbered A–12, People v. Teague, the order of the Municipal Court granting motion to vacate and set aside summary judgment against Harry F. Devenney, Margaret L. Devenney and Carl H. Devenney, is reversed.

In the cases next tabulated the docket entries reflect judgments against one Walter Binger; but the record fails to show that any person of this name was ever a party defendant or otherwise to the prosecution or the undertaking. He is referred to at times as "respondent Walter Binger". As to Mr. Binger the orders granting motion to set aside purported summary judgment are reversed, with instructions to vacate and set aside any purported judgment appearing of record against him, in the following cases:

A– 6	People v. Martinez
A– 7	" v. Bizzel
A– 8	" v. Plaster
A– 9	" v. Puckett
A–10	" v. Chapman
A–11	" v. Nobles

LAMBERT, P. J., and BRADSHAW, J., concur.

PER CURIAM.

Good cause appearing, it is ordered by the court that

1. The captions of the cases on appeal as shown on the opinion of the court be amended to read as set forth above.

2. The petition for re-hearing in each of said cases be and the same is hereby denied.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

John G. OPPENHEIMER, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. A. 3538, 3539.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.

Dec. 11, 1956.

Proceeding on motions to vacate judgments in criminal cases. The Municipal Court of the Los Angeles Judicial District, Ben Koenig, J., entered order denying this motion and forfeiting bail, and defendant appealed from both orders. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court held, in part, that defendant, who had, by motion to have judgment set aside, laid foundation for new appeal that stayed execution of judgment until appeal had been heard and determined, could not repeat process by making subsequent motion to vacate judgment, and appeal from order denying subsequent motion to vacate judgment would be dismissed.

Appeals dismissed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1023(12)

Appeal from order denying motion that was repetition of motion, already made and denied, to set aside judgment on grounds available and considered upon appeal from judgment would be dismissed for lack of compliance with Code of Civil Procedure. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1008.

2. Criminal Law ⇐1023(12)

Order made after judgment in criminal case is not appealable where motion merely asks court to repeat or overrule the former ruling on same facts.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1023(12)

Defendant, who had, by motion to have judgment in criminal case set aside, laid foundation for new appeal that stayed execution of judgment until appeal was heard and determined, could not repeat process by bringing subsequent motion to vacate judgment; and appeal from order denying subsequent motion to vacate judgment would be dismissed.

4. Criminal Law ⇐1023(3)

Order forfeiting bail in criminal case is not an appealable order. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 1305.

5. Bail ⇐79(2)

Appeal will lie from order refusing to set aside forfeiture of bail. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 1305.

6. Bail ⇐79(2)

Order denying motion to set aside forfeiture of bail is an indispensable prerequisite to an appeal by defendant on question of forfeiture of bail. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 1305.

7. Criminal Law ⇐1023(3, 12)

That defendant had petitioned for removal of criminal case to federal district court 19 months after trial, despite provision of federal removal statute allowing removal in criminal cases only before trial, would not make appealable otherwise non-appealable orders entered by state court denying second motion to vacate judgment and forfeiting bail. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1446.

BY THE COURT.

These cases have a common history, and all references to one relate to the other as well. We need begin back no further than January of 1955 when, after a trial by the court sitting without a jury, the defendant was convicted and sentenced, in each case, to serve five days (the sentences to run consecutively). He immediately appealed and the judgments were affirmed in May 1955. Making a gesture toward taking the cases to the United States Supreme Court, the defendant secured a stay of execution until August 15, 1955. Later this stay was extended, indefinitely, but was vacated early in April, 1956, when it became known that the defendant had failed to take the steps necessary to get a hearing before the United States Supreme Court. Without noting all the maneuvers that took place (affidavits of prejudice, appeal from "all void orders" etc., etc.) in March, 1956, we have a motion by the defendant to set aside or suspend the judgments, to grant probation and to reduce bail. This motion, as to the judgment, was based on grounds that were in existence, and relied upon, in the appeal from the judgment. It was denied by the trial court, and the order of denial affirmed on appeal in July, 1956. On August 6 the defendant was notified to appear in the trial court on August 13 to answer to the judgment. On August 9 he filed a notice of a new motion to vacate or suspend the judgments, based on the grounds that had become familiar. On August 10, a Petition for Removal to the Federal Court was filed in that court. This petition was denied August 17, but meanwhile, August 13, the defendant failed to appear and his motion was denied in the municipal court, and his bail forfeited.

These cases are now before us on a notice of appeal, divided into two parts: "1. Defendant hereby appeals from the order of August 13, 1956, denying written motion to vacate judgments * * *. 2. Defendant also appeals from the order of August 13, 1956, forfeiting his bail * * *."

[1] We are dismissing the first of these appeals, the one from the order denying a motion that was a repetition of a motion, already made and denied, to set aside a judgment on grounds available and considered upon an appeal from the judgment. Compliance with the requirements of section 1008, Code of Civil Procedure, was lacking in the making of the last motion. The authority given by the section to punish for contempt for a violation of its terms is not the only result of a violation, but the motion should be denied, as it was in this case.

[2, 3] If a defendant may, by a motion to have a judgment set aside, lay the foundation for a new appeal that stays execution of the judgment until the appeal is heard and determined and may then repeat this process, with another stay, no defendant, so long as there is pen and paper at his command would ever have to serve a sentence imposed upon him. The State is not so impotent. The principle is thus stated in People v. Brattingham, 1928, 91 Cal.App. 527, 528, 267 P. 120, 121: "* * * the rule is well established that an order made after judgment is not appealable where the motion merely asks the court to repeat or overrule the former ruling on the same facts." Authorities are cited in support of the rule, and the passage we have quoted appears, in People v. Vivian, 1941, 46 Cal.App.2d 163, 166, 115 P.2d 559, 560. A death penalty was involved in People v. Smith, 1933, 218 Cal. 484, 24 P.2d 166, 168, where procedural steps, closely paralleling those taken in this case, were condemned, the court saying: "This appeal is entirely frivolous. * * * It must have occurred to appellant's attorney that he has long since exhausted all legal remedies which this court is empowered to grant. A repetition of the practice herein attempted will call for the exercise of the disciplinary powers of this court." In all these cases, and in People v. Howerton, 1953, 40 Cal.2d 217, 220, 253 P.2d 8, 10, the appeals were dismissed, and we deem that the appropriate action in this case.

[4–6] The attempted appeal from the order of August 13, 1956, forfeiting bail must also be dismissed because it is not an appealable order. Penal Code 1305 provides that after a defendant's bail has been declared forfeited the court may direct the forfeiture to be discharged if the defendant within 90 days after the forfeiture appears and satisfactorily excuses his previous failure to appear. An appeal will lie from an order refusing to set aside the forfeiture. People v. Calvert, 1954, 129 Cal.App.2d 693, 277 P.2d 834; People v. Niccoli, 1951, 102 Cal.App.2d 814, 228 P.2d 827; People v. Kersten, 1943, 60 Cal.App.2d 624, 141 P.2d 512. In People v. Hodges, 1928, 205 Cal. 476, 271 P. 897, the court dismissed an appeal from a summary money judgment on a forfeited bond and the court refused to review the order forfeiting the bond saying, 205 Cal. at page 478, 271 P. at page 897: "Appellant should have moved, within the ninety-day period allowed by section 1305, to discharge the order of forfeiture if improperly made." The order denying a motion to set aside the forfeiture of bail is an indispensable prerequisite to an appeal by the defendant. The reason for this is obvious. The defendant does not present to the court his excuses for not appearing until he makes his motion to set aside the forfeiture. Then, for the first time there is a record from which the appellate court can pass upon the validity of the order appealed from.

[7] The defendant is in no position to contend that the trial court had no authority to make the orders at the time that it did, because the federal court had been given jurisdiction by defendant's act in filing a petition there. Authority to file such a petition is given in criminal cases, by section 1446, of 28 U.S.C.A., but only "at any time before trial." Defendant's petition was filed some nineteen months after his trial—unless, of course, we look only to defendant's petition wherein is alleged "that a trial in said cases * * * is set for August 13, 1956," without even a suggestion appearing that the cases had already been tried. But if, as a result of misrepresentation and silence, the federal court technically had jurisdiction, that would not make appealable orders which are not appealable under state law, now that the cases have been remanded.

The appeals are dismissed.

v.

Claude S. SPENCE, Defendant and Cross-Complainant in Certain Pleadings, Appellant.

Civ. 21738.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 16, 1957.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 14, 1957.

Proceeding to determine rights of assignor and assignee under written assignment of motion picture in certain funds held by stakeholder. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Newcomb Condee, J., entered judgment for assignor, and assignee appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where written "release and assignment" of motion picture did not purport to be a compromise or accord and satisfaction, and was signed only by assignor, and assignor claimed that assignment was given as security for debt and was not intended as an outright transfer of property, extrinsic evidence was properly admitted to show true purpose of assignment, the relative rights of parties, and real ownership of property.

Affirmed.

See also 141 Cal.App.2d 213, 296 P.2d 577.

1. Evidence ⇐384

The rule excluding extrinsic or parol evidence is not a rule of evidence, but is a part of substantive law.

2. Evidence ⇐397(2), 458, 461(1)

The parol evidence rule is not applicable where written instrument does not purport to be complete statement of entire agreement of parties, and in such cases extrinsic evidence should be admitted for purpose of showing circumstances under which writing was signed and delivered and intention of parties at that time.

3. Evidence ⇐462

Where written "release and assignment" of motion picture did not purport to be in compromise or accord and satisfaction, and was signed only by assignor, and assignor claimed that assignment was given as security for debt and was not intended as outright transfer of property, extrinsic evidence was properly admitted to show true purpose of assignment, the relative rights of parties, and real ownership of property.

4. Evidence ⇐462

Extrinsic evidence which is admissible to show true purpose of assignment which it is claimed was given as security for debt may consist of acts, conduct, and circumstances, and the question whether the showing is clear and convincing is primarily for the arbiter of facts.

5. Chattel Mortgages ⇐39

Evidence was sufficient to sustain finding that "release and assignment" of motion picture was given as security for debt which assignor owed to assignee and was not an outright transfer.

Robert C. McMahon, James A. Broderick, Jr., Los Angeles, for appellant.

Morton R. Goodman, Beverly Hills, for respondent Sydney M. Williams.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Defendant Claude Spence appeals from a judgment declaring the rights of the parties in certain funds then held and later to be collected by cross-defendant Quality Films, Inc., under a contract for the distribution of a certain motion picture.

By appellant's cross-complaint he alleges a controversy existing between respondent and appellant as to the ownership of the picture and of the distribution contract and seeks a declaration of such rights, and particularly a declaration that appellant is the owner of the film and rights to the proceeds of the distribution contract by virtue of an assignment executed by respondent.

It is conceded by all parties that Quality Films, Inc., is a mere stakeholder awaiting adjudication of the rights of appellant and respondent. The distribution contract is a mimeographed form letter addressed to Quality Films, Inc., dated December 12, 1951, signed by Claude S. Spence and Sydney M. Williams and accepted and approved for Quality Films, Inc., by Charles Weintraub, its president. By the terms of that letter agreement, there appears no difference between appellant and respondent. Each agrees that Quality Films is to distribute the picture, collect the revenue, retain 20% of the gross proceeds, and "remit to the undersigned the total proceeds" less 20%. Each agrees to supply prints, reels and shipping cases. Each "warrants and represents" that he "has the right to enter into this agreement * * * and that such telecasting will not violate the rights of others * * *".

Appellant contends that respondent "was present at the negotiation conferences with Quality Films as his attorney; was acting in that capacity at the time he signed said contract, and failed to inform defendant (appellant) of any claim to the motion picture or proceeds of distribution". The court found upon substantial evidence that "It is true that plaintiff Sydney M. Williams is, and for some years has been, an attorney licensed to practice in the State of California, and pursuant to said license has so practiced. It is not true that plaintiff Sydney M. Williams acted as an attorney for the defendant Claude S. Spence in relation to any matters which are the subject of this litigation."

Respondent was the producer and first owner of the picture. By the terms of a letter agreement between appellant and respondent dated July 12, 1944, and signed by both, appellant loaned $25,000 to respondent to be repaid "solely from the so-called producers' share of the gross receipts of the picture * * * prior to the repayment to myself (respondent) from the receipts of said picture of all sums which I may have invested or advanced * * *. You (appellant) acknowledge that I may repay from the receipts of the picture other production loans prior to the repayment of your loan * * * As compensation to you for the making of said loan, I agree that you shall be paid the following: (a) * * * the sum of $28,750 instead of the sum of $25,000; (b) a sum equal to 15% of the profits to be received by me from the distribution of the picture. The term 'profits' as used herein shall mean the amount by which the moneys paid by Republic Pictures Corporation * * * exceeds the total cost of production of the picture * * *." A check from respondent to appellant, dated March 15, 1946, for $4,450 bears the following endorsement signed by appellant: "Payment en re: The Big Show Off including $3,750.00 interest as per agreement, balance due $22,600.00 to be paid as per agreement only as follows: 50% of proceeds of producers' share until such sum of $22,600 is paid in full. Thereafter, when, as, and if, the said producers' share shall have reached the sum of $150,000 said Claude S. Spence is entitled to receive 15% of any and all further receipts of said producer's share on the Big Show Off."

The facts next summarized were found by the trial court to be true. Payments were made under the terms appearing on the back of said check from March 15, 1946 until August 5, 1949, when respondent executed and delivered to appellant "a full and complete assignment of all of plaintiff's (respondent's) right, title and interest in and to said motion picture and the proceeds from its distribution". At that time, August 5, 1949, there was still owing to appellant from the proceeds of said picture the sum of $6,000 (not yet collected from said picture by Republic, the then distributor); and respondent then owed appellant an additional $4,000 advanced to him in merchandise for his business in Chile, etc. "Said assignment, although absolute on its face, was given by plaintiff (respondent) to secure to defendant (appellant) payment of $10,000.00 * * *." After said assignment appellant received $10,573.95 and respondent received nothing from the proceeds of said picture. As of January 15, 1956, Quality Films had on hand available for distribution to plaintiff and defendant $3,849.98, and the producer's share referred to in the agreement endorsed upon the check of March 15, 1946 has reached $150,000.

Appellant urges three grounds for reversal: (1) prejudicial "error in admission of extrinsic evidence contradicting the terms of the compromise set forth in 'assignment and release' dated August 5, 1949"; (2) lack of substantial evidence to support the finding that "said assignment, although absolute on its face, was given by plaintiff (respondent) to secure to defendant (appellant) payment of $10,000.00 * * *"; and (3) absence of a finding that "plaintiff and defendant did or did not enter into and execute oral agreement modifying the assignment and release".

Appellant, in his brief, discusses at length the rule excluding extrinsic evidence, 18 Cal.Jur.2d 737 et seq., admits there are some miscellaneous exceptions, and then states that in the instant action there were no facts warranting the admission of parol evidence.

[1, 2] The rule excluding extrinsic or parol evidence is not a rule of evidence, but is a part of the substantive law. Hale v. Bohannon, 38 Cal.2d 458, 465, 241 P.2d 4. Therefore, it is unnecessary to consider what objections, if any, were made by appellant in his effort to exclude such evidence in the instant action. The rule, however, is not applicable where the written instrument does not purport to be a complete statement of the entire agreement of the parties. In such cases, extrinsic evidence should be admitted for the purpose of showing the circumstances under which the writing was signed and delivered and the intention of the parties at that time. Love v. Gulyas, 87 Cal.App.2d 608, 614, 197 P.2d 405.

[3] In the instant action, the written "Release and Assignment" does not purport to be a compromise or accord and satisfaction. It is an assignment signed only by respondent. The testimony of both appellant and respondent was that said assignment was executed by respondent when he was in Chile in order that appellant might present it to Republic, the then distributor of the picture, and procure from Republic a cancellation of its contract with respondent. Appellant, in his briefs, assumes that the term "Release" is conclusive evidence that, in consideration of an absolute assignment to him, he released respondent from all liability for the $4,000 debt due him as well as the $6,000 which he still had coming to him from the picture. Appellant did not sign the instrument, and it contains no compromise of his claims against respondent. According to the testimony, the appellant and respondent had for many years been very close and trusting friends. The assignment was presented by appellant to Republic, whose contract was then cancelled. Later an agreement with Quality Films was made for TV releases.

Appellant has cited many decisions involving controversies growing out of integrated mutual agreements in writing or assignments or conveyances delivered without accompanying act, circumstance, or word to indicate that the purpose of the transfer was to secure payment of a debt. None of the cited decisions considers facts analogous to those of the instant action. It would serve no useful purpose to discuss them here.

[4] When, as in the instant action, it is claimed that an assignment was given as security for a debt and was not intended as an outright transfer of property, extrinsic evidence may be admitted to show its true purpose and object, the relative rights of the parties and the real ownership of the property. Renton v. Monnier, 77 Cal. 449, 457, 19 P. 820; Sherman v. Panno, 129 Cal. App.2d 375, 388, 277 P.2d 80. Such evidence may consist of acts, conduct and circumstances, and the question whether the showing is clear and convincing is primarily one for the arbiter of the facts. Hansen v. Bear Film Co., Inc., 28 Cal.2d 154, 173–175, 168 P.2d 946.

In our opinion, the admission of parol and other evidence of the intent and purpose for which the assignment was executed was not error in the instant action.

[5] There is in the record evidence sufficient to support the finding that said assignment was given as security. The testimony of respondent, if believed by the court, is sufficient. The testimony of appellant to the contrary, even ignoring the many inconsistencies therein, did not take from the trial judge the duty to find true the testimony believed by him.

In the instant action, however, the trial judge was not required to rely upon the testimony of respondent alone. Charles Weintraub, president of Quality Films, Inc., testified that it was respondent who contacted him in regard to the distribution of the picture; that all parties signed the contract in the presence of each other; that appellant and respondent each referred to the picture as "our picture"; that respondent, in appellant's presence, told him that appellant "had money coming from the picture and to make all payments to appellant until further notice"; that respondent instructed him, in the presence of appellant, to change the production credit on the picture to "Williams-Spence" or "Spence-Williams"; and that the first check was sent to respondent and no complaint was made to him or his employees by appellant. There is also evidence of similar conduct of the parties in negotiations with other distributors before the agreement with Quality was made.

In the instant action, the court having found and concluded that the assignment was intended as security for payment to appellant of his debt only, no finding that "plaintiff and defendant did or did not enter into an executed oral agreement modifying the assignment and release" was required.

The judgment is affirmed.

Olive MARLOWE, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

The CITY OF LOS ANGELES, a municipal corporation, and Department of Water & Power of the City of Los Angeles, Defendants.

The City of Los Angeles, a municipal corporation, Respondent.

Civ. 21758.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 18, 1957.

Action under Public Liability Law against city and its water and power department for injuries sustained in street fall allegedly due to defendants' negligence in allowing accumulation of water and slippery materials at entrance to sewer. After jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, A. A. Scott, J., rendered order granting defendants a new trial, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that evidence on issue of whether plaintiff had either been contributorily negligent or had assumed risk of condition supported order.

Order affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐854(6)

If there is substantial evidence on any theory that would support judgment in favor of party whose motion for new trial is granted, order granting it will not be reversed.

2. New Trial ⇐68

In action under Public Liability Act against city and its water and power department for injuries sustained by plaintiff when she slipped and fell on street allegedly due to defendants' negligence in allowing an accumulation of water and slippery substances at sewer entrance in street, wherein jury returned verdict for plaintiff, evidence on issues of whether plaintiff had either been guilty of contributory negligence or had assumed risk of condition sustained action of trial court in granting defendants a new trial. West's Ann.Gov. Code, §§ 53050, 53051.

3. Negligence ⇐65, 105

There is difference between contributory negligence and assumption of risk, and if a plaintiff fails to exercise degree of care reasonably required of her under circumstances, she is guilty of contributory negligence, though she may not be aware of the extent of danger, but if she has knowledge and appreciation of danger and voluntarily accepts it, she is guilty of assumption of risk.

Walter H. Young, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Roger Arnebergh, City Atty., Bourke Jones, Asst. City Atty., Joseph N. Owen and Weldon L. Weber, Deputy City Attys., Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from an order granting defendant a new trial in an action for personal injuries brought pursuant to the provisions of the Public Liability Law, sections 53050 and 53051 of the Government Code. The complaint alleged that defendant negligently failed to keep a public highway within the city of Los Angeles free from an accumulation of water, moss, debris, algae and other slippery substances; that defendant had notice of such dangerous and defective condition and both means and opportunity to remedy the same; that while stepping into the street, which had become slippery due to the alleged condition, plaintiff slipped and fell, suffering a broken ankle. The answer denied these allegations and pleaded the defenses of contributory negligence and assumption of risk. Trial was to a jury which returned a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $3,500. Defendant's motion for a new trial was granted upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. The sole question presented on this appeal is whether the court abused its discretion in granting the motion.

There was evidence of the following facts. Ledgewood Street is a public highway in the city of Los Angeles which winds uphill into the Hollywood Hills. Mr. and Mrs. Rex Bartlett lived on the west side of Ledgewood from 1950 until sometime after plaintiff's accident. Rogerton Street crosses Ledgewood above the Bartlett home. During the time the Bartletts lived at 3035 Ledgewood, water from springs and other sources on Rogerton Street continually flowed down Ledgewood in the gutter along the west side of the street. There were large openings in the curb in front of the Bartlett house leading into an underground conduit. These sometimes became clogged up, impeding the flow of water. The water carried with it moss, algae and other debris which remained in the gutter even when there was no water in the street. Water would gather in front of the house nearly every day and would dry up for a short time only in dry spells. The stream of water was from 6 inches to 3 feet wide. Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett testified in plaintiff's behalf that the gutter was very slippery; Mrs. Bartlett slipped and fell in the gutter on three occasions; Mr. Bartlett slipped and fell four times; a similar misfortune happened to one of their house guests. Mr. Bartlett stated that from 1951 through 1953 he made numerous complaints to various agencies of defendant about the condition of the street, after which crews were sometimes sent to clean up the street. The last complaint made prior to plaintiff's accident was in the spring or early summer of 1953.

There was no sidewalk in front of the Bartlett residence. A retaining wall was built on the curb. The house could be reached either by climbing a flight of steps that led directly from the curb, or by using a walk leading through a vacant lot above the house.

On September 13, 1953, plaintiff visited the Bartletts late in the afternoon. She had visited them on many previous occasions, on the average of once every month or six weeks. She stated that when she drove to their house she usually turned around at the top of the hill, parked her car above the Bartlett house by the vacant lot and crossed it to a side entrance. There was usually less water there and she could always step across it. She did not park there on September 13th because there were cars parked bumper to bumper beside the lot, which prevented her from reaching the path. She parked her car a little downhill from the house. There was a stream of water flowing in the gutter next to the curb in front of the house. She alighted from her car through the left door, walked around behind it, crossed the water to the curb and in so doing placed both feet in the water and entered the house with wet feet. It was dark by the time plaintiff left. Mr. Bartlett accompanied her out of the house and held her arm as they descended the steps. The lighting was very bad there. When they reached the curb Mr. Bartlett told her to be careful because there was water in the gutter. Plaintiff saw that the stream had widened to three feet. Mr. Bartlett jumped across the stream and told plaintiff to take his hand. She stepped into the flowing water with one foot and as she placed her other foot into the water she slipped and fell, fracturing her ankle. Mr. Bartlett brought a flashlight to see what had happened. He testified that plaintiff had slipped on an accumulation of algae, moss and dirt under the water. There were twigs, leaves, dirt and other debris at the spot where she fell.

[1] In Williams v. Field Transportation Co., 28 Cal.2d 696, 698, 171 P.2d 722, 723, the Supreme Court said: "An order granting a new trial upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the judgment will not be disturbed upon appeal, unless there be a clear showing of abuse of discretion. 'All presumptions are in favor of the order and it will be affirmed if it is sustainable on any ground. Mazzotta v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 25 Cal.2d 165, 169, 153 P.2d 338, and cases cited. The trial court in considering a motion for new trial is not bound by a conflict in the evidence, and has not abused its discretion when there is any evidence which would support a judgment in favor of the moving party.' Ballard v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 28 Cal.2d 357, 170 P.2d 465, 467. Even if the evidence is uncontradicted, the trial judge may draw inferences from it contrary to those made by the jury, and it is his duty to resolve such conflicts in determining whether the issues should be retried. Only when, as a matter of law, there is no substantial evidence to support a contrary judgment, may an appellate court reverse an order granting a new trial. Brooks v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 27 Cal.2d 305, 163 P.2d 689; Mazzotta v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., supra." If there is substantial evidence on any theory that would support a judgment in favor of the party whose motion is granted, the order will not be reversed. Gilbert v. Yellow Cab Co., 123 Cal.App.2d 782, 267 P.2d 392; Gainey v. Gainey, 119 Cal.App.2d 564, 259 P.2d 984.

[2] The verdict implied that the city was negligent in maintaining a dangerous condition in the street; that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence and that she did not assume the risk involved in wading through the water. The order granting a new trial implies that the court concluded that each of these implied findings of the jury was contrary to the preponderance of the evidence. In order to earn a reversal of the order it would be necessary for plaintiff to establish the incorrectness of each of these conclusions of the court. We are of the opinion that the order is sustainable either upon the ground that plaintiff was negligent or that she assumed the risk, and that it is unnecessary to consider the question of the alleged negligence of the city.

[3] There is a difference between contributory negligence and assumption of risk. If plaintiff failed to exercise the degree of care that was reasonably required of her under the circumstances and conditions of the crossing she was guilty of contributory negligence even though she may not have been aware of the extent of the danger. If she had knowledge and appreciation of the danger involved and voluntarily accepted the risk, she alone would have to bear the responsibility for her injury; if she did accept the risk her use of the care that was demanded would not relieve her of that responsibility. Prescott v. Ralphs Grocery Co., 42 Cal.2d 158, 265 P.2d 904.

It was inferable from the evidence that plaintiff knew the surface of the street at the point where she fell presented a more hazardous condition than would have been found further up the street. This was indicated by the fact that plaintiff usually parked her car higher up the hill and had always been able to step across the water at that point. This was the only reason she gave for her practice of parking well above the Bartlett premises. It would not have been unreasonable for the court to conclude that when she observed the excessive flow of water in front of the house she should have looked for a safer place at which to cross. And it could also have been inferred that when she prepared to leave the house she should have anticipated that there would be a heavy flow of water in the street since she had gotten both feet wet when she crossed it the first time. We cannot hold as a matter of law that plaintiff was free from contributory negligence.

A reason for the order that may be even more sound is that plaintiff knew the extent of the danger and voluntarily assumed the risk. She had known from previous experience that the street was littered up in front of the Bartlett house and had avoided crossing the gutter at that point. Just before her accident she was aware of the fact that there was considerably more water to cross than was running at the time she entered the house. Mr. Bartlett told her to be very careful and he held her by the hand. The court necessarily weighed the evidence and the inferences with respect to the extent of plaintiff's knowledge of the conditions and appreciation of the danger. Plaintiff took a chance and lost. All the evidence indicated she knew she was taking a chance. It could be argued that even though she knew she could not cross in complete safety she did not appreciate the extent of the danger, since she had crossed safely a few hours before. And it could be argued, with reason, that she used a considerable degree of care in proceeding deliberately, and accepting the assistance of Mr. Bartlett. But these were arguments properly addressed to the trial court. In order for us to hold that plaintiff did not voluntarily accept the risk we would have to be convinced to the exclusion of every contrary reasonable inference that she believed the risk would be minimal or that there was no danger of injury. Even if opposing reasonable inferences as to the extent of plaintiff's knowledge would be permissible, we would have no authority to reject those drawn by the trial court and substitute those which we might deem equally or even more reasonable. If the jury had found that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence or that she assumed the risk of walking through the water the finding would have had substantial support in the evidence and would have warranted a verdict for the defendant.

The order is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

William D. HUNTER, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 1132.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 9, 1957.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 5, 1957.

Defendant was convicted in Superior Court, Riverside County, Hilton H. McCabe, J., of grand theft of an automobile and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that evidence which established that defendant took automobile to try it out but instead of signing written contract as agreed, placed license plates from another automobile on it and departed for another city with all his possessions was sufficient to sustain conviction.

Affirmed.

1. Larceny ⇐65

Evidence which disclosed that defendant took automobile to try it out but instead of signing written contract as agreed, placed license plates from another automobile on it and departed for another city with all his possessions, did not establish debtor-creditor relationship and was sufficient to support conviction for grand theft. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 484.

2. Embezzlement ⇐1

False Pretenses ⇐1

Larceny ⇐1

The crime of grand theft is complete when a man takes property not his own with the intent to take it, and a defendant may be convicted of grand theft upon proof of facts establishing embezzlement, larceny, or obtaining property under false pretenses. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 484.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1036(2)

Exclusion of testimony offered for impeachment purposes was not shown to be prejudicial error, where no offer of proof was made and the purpose of the testimony was not disclosed by the record.

4. Criminal Law ⇐369(5)

In prosecution for grand theft of automobile, admission of testimony regarding ownership of another automobile which defendant had in his possession but in no way indicating that defendant had been guilty of any offense in connection therewith, was not improper.

Lionel Richman, San Bernardine, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MUSSELL, Justice.

Defendant was charged with violation of section 484 of the Penal Code (Grand Theft) in that on or about March 18, 1956, in Riverside county, he did wilfully and unlawfully take a 1949 Lincoln automobile, the property of J. G. Anderson. At his arraignment in the superior court, defendant's counsel, after a discussion with the defendant, made the following statement:

> "Your Honor, in this matter I represented the defendant at the preliminary hearing and I discussed this matter with the District Attorney and at this time the defendant will enter a plea of not guilty, and we will waive a jury trial and stipulate that the evidence produced at the preliminary hearing can be heard by this court as if on a trial, and submit it to the court on that basis."

The deputy district attorney, then present, stated that the statement made by counsel for defendant was agreeable and the matter was then submitted to the court. Defendant was found guilty as charged in the information and, after the report of the probation officer had been read and considered by the court, the defendant was sentenced to the state prison for the term prescribed by law.

It appears from the record of the preliminary examination that the defendant was employed by the Massey Rock and Sand Company of Indio. Mr. J. G. Anderson, superintendent of the company, owned a 1949 Lincoln automobile, registered in his wife's name, and some time in March, 1956, Anderson endeavored to sell the car to the defendant. Anderson testified:

> "He, I think Mr. Cook, one of the boys that work for us told me Hunter wanted a car, I believe he brought him over to the house or sent him over to the house. I told him I hadn't drove the car for a year, didn't know what shape it was in, I would let him take it and try it out and we would make some kind of deal, I let him take the car from the house to try it."

Anderson further testified that the car had 1955 plates and he expected the defendant to take out insurance on it and get current plates; that three or four days later he had a conversation with the defendant, as follows: "I just asked what he thought of the car, he said he thought if it was fixed up it would be a pretty good car; I asked if he wanted to buy it, said he did. Said he didn't have much money, I said anything agreed to would be all right with me—long as he was working twenty-five dollars ($25.00) a week payments. I told him to come on over and we would draw up the papers and have it transferred to his name and * * *"; that the defendant did not come over to draw up the papers and within a day or two defendant left his employment at the rock and sand company; that he saw the defendant the next day and told him to go to Garnet at 7:00 or 7:30 in the morning; that he (Anderson) would be there; that he was late and did not go to Garnet until about 9:00 or 10:00 o'clock a. m. and the defendant had left; that he met the defendant coming back from Garnet in the Lincoln automobile; that he did not see the defendant after that until he appeared in court and he had not seen his Lincoln; that he heard that the defendant had left town and he reported the matter to the police; that he looked around for his car, went to the defendant's residence, and there found that the defendant had moved all his belongings out of the house; that defendant had stated that he could make a down payment on the car but that he had not paid the sum of $50 or any other sum, on the purchase price of the automobile.

The defendant testified that on March 4, 1956, he went to see Anderson about the car and took it on a try-out basis; that on March 8, 1956, Anderson agreed to take a $50 down payment on the car and that he paid that sum to him the next morning; that he then went to the Garnet plant and, after waiting there until 11:30 a. m., returned to Indio; that he stayed in Indio until March 18, 1956, when he went to Red Bluff, California; that he left in the Lincoln and had transferred the license plates to it from an Oldsmobile which he left in Indio.

[1] Defendant contends that the evidence was insufficient to support the judgment; that the court erroneously prevented the impeachment of the complaining witness; and that the court improperly admitted evidence of other acts. These arguments are without merit.

[2] As is said in People v. Corenevsky, 124 Cal.App.2d 19, 23–24, 267 P.2d 1048, 1050:

> "The crime of grand theft is complete when a man takes property not his own with the intent to take it, and a defendant may be convicted of grand theft upon proof of facts establishing (a) embezzlement, (b) larceny or (c) obtaining property under false pretenses. * * *
>
> "It is likewise established that where criminal acts may constitute one of two or three forms of theft, depending upon how the jury views the evidence, and the facts so warrant, the verdict of conviction can be sustained on either theory. (People v. Von Badenthal, 8 Cal.App.2d 404, 408, 48 P.2d 82; People v. Chamberlain, 96 Cal.App.2d 178, 182 et seq., 214 P.2d 600.)"

Embezzlement is the fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom it has been entrusted. Pen.Code, Sec. 503. The essential elements of this crime are set forth in People v. Borchers, 199 Cal. 52, 56, 247 P. 1084, 1085, as follows:

"* * * In order to sustain a conviction upon such a charge it must at least be shown, first, that the accused was the agent or bailee of the prosecuting witness in holding the alleged embezzled property; second, the property must actually belong to the alleged principal, the prosecuting witness; third, it must be lawfully in the possession of the accused at the time of the alleged embezzlement; fourth, the accused must have been guilty of the conversion which the statute denounces; and, fifth, there must be shown an intent on the part of the accused to deprive the prosecuting witness of his property unlawfully. * *"

Appellant contends that the facts do not show the elements of embezzlement because they show a debtor-creditor relationship. This contention is not supported by the evidence. In People v. Baker, 64 Cal.App. 336, 341, 221 P. 654, 656, the court said:

"One of the principal tests by which to determine whether any particular contract creates a mere bailment or is a sale on credit is this: Was there a binding promise on the part of the person to whom the possession was given to pay for the article? If there was such promise, then the contract is ordinarily held to be one of sale and not of bailment; and, conversely, if there was no such binding promise to purchase on terms agreed upon, then the transaction is ordinarily held not to be a sale. * * *"

In the instant action the appellant took possession of the automobile involved to try it out and then to buy it or return it to Anderson. He agreed to sign a written contract before obtaining the registration slip and this he failed to do. He placed the plates from another car on the Lincoln, departed for Red Bluff, California, with all his possessions, and failed to return the car to Anderson. Before leaving Indio, the defendant had indicated verbally that he would purchase the vehicle but was to come to Anderson's place to make out the papers. However, he left Indio without meeting Anderson, as agreed.

In People v. Baker, supra, 64 Cal.App. 336, 342, 221 P. 654, where the defendant had been given the right to drive an automobile to a given place within the county to enable him to raise money for a payment thereon if he elected to purchase it, the fact that he took the car to Mexico was held sufficient to warrant the inference that he converted the car to his own use in a manner inconsistent with the nature and purpose of the bailment. Since the amendment in 1927 to section 484 of the Penal Code, a defendant may be convicted of grand theft upon proof showing either larceny, embezzlement or obtaining money by false pretenses. People v. Cannon, 77 Cal.App.2d 678, 688–689, 176 P.2d 409. In the instant case there is substantial evidence to support the inference drawn by the trial court and to support its findings and judgment.

[3] Appellant complains that the court erred in preventing the impeachment of the complaining witness. This claim is based on a ruling of the trial court sustaining an objection to testimony as to a conversation by telephone between Anderson and one Roger Hutchinson. No offer of proof was made and the purpose of the testimony in this connection is not disclosed by the record. No prejudicial error appears in connection therewith. People v. Monson, 102 Cal.App.2d 308, 313, 227 P.2d 521.

[4] Appellant further argues that the court improperly admitted evidence of other acts. This contention likewise is without merit. The testimony admitted in this connection with as to the ownership of an Oldsmobile which defendant had in his possession and apparently was buying from someone in Missouri. The evidence admitted in no way indicated that the defendant had been guilty of any offense in connection with this car and no error appears in the trial court's ruling.

The judgment is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 16, 1957.

Actions by payee on notes given in connection with sale of payee's partnership interest and by partner for money allegedly due from maker for transactions arising out of partnership business. The maker filed answer and cross-complaints. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., entered identical minute orders appointing referee to take an accounting and directing payee to mark cancelled and transfer to maker the three promissory notes, and both plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that minute orders were merely expression of trial judge as to decision he ultimately intended to make on one phase of the cases and were not appealable.

Appeals dismissed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐66

An appeal does not lie from an interlocutory or intermediate order unless it be designated by statute as one of those from which an appeal may be taken.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐80(3)

If an order be in its nature such as to be subject, before enforcement or execution, to further action of the court, either by decree or later order, order complained of is not final and review must be sought by appeal from the decree or order subsequently entered.

3. Judgment ⇐217

A judgment is a "final judgment" when it terminates the litigation between the parties on the merits of the case and leaves nothing to be done but to enforce by execution what has been determined.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Final Judgment".

4. Appeal and Error ⇐533(1)

5. Appeal and Error ⇐123

Where actions were brought by payee on notes given in connection with sale of partnership interest and by partner for money allegedly due from maker for transactions arising out of partnership business and court made a minute entry appointing a referee to take an accounting and directing payee to mark cancelled and transfer to maker the three promissory notes, such minute entry was merely an expression of trial judge as to decision he ultimately intended to make on one phase of case and was not a decision or judgment of the court that was binding on the court or the payee, and hence was not appealable.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeals by plaintiffs from identical orders made in two actions appointing a referee to take an accounting, and directing plaintiff Wrena Ulrey to mark "cancelled" and transfer to defendant three promissory notes signed by defendant in her favor. The appeals involve the same questions and will be determined in one opinion. Defendant contends the order is not appealable. We agree.

In November 1953 plaintiffs were partners operating a retail electrical motor sales and service business under the name "Ray Ulrey Electric Motors." At that time plaintiffs and defendant entered into an agreement to be effective January 18, 1954, whereby plaintiff Wrena Ulrey withdrew from the partnership and a new partnership was formed between plaintiff Ray Ulrey and defendant. Defendant paid $5,000 to the Ulreys and executed three promissory notes to plaintiff Wrena Ulrey dated January 18, 1954, each in the amount of $5,000 with interest at 5 per cent, payable January 18, 1955, January 18, 1956, and January 18, 1957.

Plaintiffs operated the business until January 16, 1954, when the new partnership took over. By June of 1954 differences had arisen between plaintiff Ray Ulrey and defendant, and that partnership was terminated. The present litigation ensued.

Plaintiff Wrena Ulrey brought an action against defendant on the three promissory notes. Plaintiff Ray Ulrey brought a separate action against defendant for money allegedly due under a contract of sale of his half interest in the Ulrey-Gillett partnership on the dissolution of the partnership. Defendant's answer to plaintiff Wrena Ulrey's complaint pleaded lack of consideration; fraud; rescission; and mistake, inadvertence, and neglect in omitting a provision from the agreement relative to the manner of paying the promissory notes from his share of the profits from the new partnership. Defendant filed in each action a cross-complaint for money allegedly due from plaintiffs, naming both plaintiffs as cross-defendants; and in his amended cross-complaint filed in plaintiff Ray Ulrey's action he also prayed for an accounting of the business when plaintiffs were partners and when he and plaintiff Ray Ulrey were partners. The two actions were consolidated for trial.

After submission, identical memorandum opinions were filed by the court in each action. These were followed by identical minute entries in each action appointing a referee to take an accounting and stating:

> "That Mrs. Ulrey is hereby ordered to transfer over, marked cancelled, unto Mr. Gillett, the three promissory notes, dated January 18, 1954, signed by Glenn D. Gillett, in favor of Wrena M. Ulrey, each in the amount of Five Thousand Dollars, and due, respectively, on January 18, 1955, January 18, 1956, and January 18, 1957."

No findings of fact or conclusions of law were made and no judgment has been rendered in either action.

Although plaintiffs appeal from the entire minute order, they contend only the quoted part thereof is appealable. See Berry v. Berry, 140 Cal.App.2d 50, 61, 294 P.2d 757. They say that part of the order is final.

[1, 2] An appeal does not lie from an interlocutory or intermediate order unless it be designated by statute as one of those from which an appeal may be taken. Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. California Dev. Co., 159 Cal. 484, 486, 114 P. 838. If an order be in its nature such as to be subject, before enforcement or execution, to the further action of the court, either by decree or later order, the order complained of is not final and review must be sought by appeal from the decree or order subsequently entered. Berry v. Berry, 140 Cal.App.2d 50, 61, 294 P.2d 757.

[3] A judgment is final "'when it terminates the litigation between the parties on the merits of the case and leaves nothing to be done but to enforce by execution what has been determined.'" Doudell v. Shoo, 159 Cal. 448, 453, 114 P. 579, 581; David v.

[4] From the tenor of the memorandum opinion and from the order itself it is evident the trial judge intended that the order should be only interlocutory. In the memorandum opinion, which is part of the record on appeal, Rules on Appeal, Rule 5(a); 36 Cal.2d 1, 5, the trial judge stated that the contract entered into between plaintiffs and defendant was for the sale of a half interest in a partnership; plaintiff Ray Ulrey agreed to contribute a sum equivalent to $17,500 by placing in the partnership assets from the Ray Ulrey Electric Motors partnership in that amount; the assets which plaintiff Ray Ulrey turned over after taking out certain property equaled only $21,000, therefore his half share was only $10,500; defendant owned at least $10,500 of these assets by virtue of the $20,000 he had paid for them by cash and notes; defendant was to put in $17,500; the assets to be turned over were to be taken at book value; the value placed on the assets by plaintiff Ray Ulrey in determining the book value probably was not correct—it appeared to be in excess of $4,000; between November 9, 1953 and January 16, 1954 plaintiffs operated the business and sold items out of stock which should have been but were not replaced or accounted for; plaintiff Ray Ulrey should account for sums paid to "informers"; many collections made by defendant on sales should have been received by the partnership and many should have been received by him alone; "hence it is going to be necessary, to get a complete detail, to appoint an accountant-referee to trace the items of Electric Motors from, say, the 1st of November onwards." The judge concluded: "If we take the position that Gillett is stuck with the business and hence owes Ulrey $12,500.00 for his share, there must yet be offset against that amount the four thousand odd dollars excess valuation Ulrey placed on certain assets which he put in the business and which he had no right to put in the business as he was only to put in $17,500.00 in assets, and not some $21,000.00 and then draw down from the business in cash the difference and these offsets which Gillett would, therefore, have as against the $12,500.00 payable by him, will be reduced by that $4,000.00 and by a good many other items, I am sure, and hence it is quite possible that he will wind up owing nothing, or certainly less than $6,000.00. As Gillett paid $5,000.00 in cash to the Ulreys, he is entitled to offset against that anything that he may be owing and to have his notes for $15,000.00 cancelled. From the foregoing it is apparent that the Court is of the view that before it can enter a judgment it is necessary that there be an accounting." (Italics added.)

The accounting period is to begin November 1, 1953, before the date of the contract between plaintiffs and defendant. Defendant's defenses to plaintiff Wrena Ulrey's action are dependent on the accounting.

[5] A minute entry made shortly after trial by a judge is merely evidence of the intention of the court as to its decision—the finding of fact and conclusion of law he intends to ultimately make. Bastajian v. Brown, 19 Cal.2d 209, 215, 120 P.2d 9. So here, the part of the order challenged is merely an expression of the trial judge as to the decision he ultimately intends to make on one phase of the case. It is not the decision or judgment of the court. It is not binding on the court and it is not binding on plaintiff Wrena Ulrey. Reimer v. Firpo, 94 Cal.App.2d 798, 800, 212 P.2d 23.

We reach the conclusion that the minute entry is an interlocutory order from a study of the extensive pleadings and the lengthy memorandum of the trial judge, from which it appears that it was not the intention of the court to render a judgment in either action until it was in a position to finally settle the entire controversy between all the parties. The order is not appealable.

The appeal in each action is dismissed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Alton Gordon GARDNER, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5678.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 11, 1957.

Prosecution for robberies. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Joseph M. Maltby, J., entered judgment upon conviction and denied defendant's motion for new trial. Defendant appealed from judgment and order. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held, in part, that defendant, who was not charged with conspiracy, was not prejudiced by poorly worded instructions on conspiracy, where evidence was sufficient to warrant finding of conspiracy, and, under circumstances, jury could not have been misled by instruction on conspiracy.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1159(4)

A reviewing court in a criminal case cannot reject testimony of a witness that has been believed by the trier of fact unless it is a physical impossibility that it be true, or its falsity is apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions.

2. Criminal Law ⇐1159(4)

In order to say that testimony of witness in criminal case is inherently improbable it must appear that what was related or described could not have occurred; testimony which is subject to justifiable suspicion is not inherently improbable.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

A reviewing court in a criminal case will not hold unsupported a jury's finding of guilt merely because it might reasonably draw an inference different from one jury reasonably drew, or might not be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of guilt of defendant.

4. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

Function of District Court of Appeal on review in criminal case is to determine whether evidence, if believed, is of sufficient character to justify a conviction.

5. Robbery ⇐24(3)

In prosecution for robbery of liquor store by defendant who was identified as robber by operator, in view of fact that identification of defendant by operator was not so inherently improbable as to be unbelievable, and in view of sufficiency of other evidence that, disregarding identification of operator, defendant was driver of getaway automobile, evidence supported conviction.

6. Criminal Law ⇐814(1)

Where defendant was not charged with conspiracy, and instructions on conspiracy were poorly worded, they could properly have been omitted.

7. Criminal Law ⇐427(1)

As general rule, evidence of conspiracy is properly admissible even though a conspiracy is not charged in information.

8. Criminal Law ⇐791

When evidence is sufficient to warrant finding of conspiracy, appropriate instructions on subject may be given.

9. Criminal Law ⇐1172(6)

Defendant, who was not charged with conspiracy, was not prejudiced by poorly worded instructions on conspiracy, where evidence was sufficient to warrant finding of conspiracy to commit robberies, and, under circumstances, jury could not have been misled by instructions on conspiracy.

10. Criminal Law ⇐814(16)

Where instructions correctly defined confession and admission, and left question whether a confession had been made, and if so whether it was true, to jury, instruction was not improper, though there was no actual confession in the case.

11. Witnesses ⇐258

A witness who has no present recollection of the facts and who is permitted to refresh his memory from a memorandum, may, in testifying to the facts, read directly from the writing. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 2047.

12. Witnesses ⇐258

Police officer, who was present during transcription of conversations between officers and defendant and others suspected of robberies, and who could not recall conversations, was properly allowed to refresh his memory by examining transcribed conversations, and to read it aloud in witness box. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 2047.

13. Criminal Law ⇐784(1)

Where connection of defendant with robbery offenses was based entirely on circumstantial evidence, it was error to refuse to give instruction with respect to circumstantial evidence, to effect that each fact which is essential to complete chain of circumstances that will establish guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

14. Criminal Law ⇐829(15)

Error in refusal to give instruction on circumstantial evidence, to effect that each fact essential to complete chain of circumstances must be proved beyond reasonable doubt, in case where connection of defendant with offenses was based entirely on circumstantial evidence, was not prejudicial, where court instructed with respect to presumption of innocence, burden of proof, reasonable doubt, direct and circumstantial evidence.

15. Robbery ⇐24(1)

In prosecution for robberies of bar and liquor store, evidence connecting defendant with robberies in form of his alleged conversations related by police officers, and of his statement that what other alleged robbers said was true, was sufficient to warrant conviction.

16. Criminal Law ⇐1037(1, 2)

Argument of prosecutor in robbery prosecution could not be grounds for reversal of conviction as prejudicial misconduct, where no objection was made to argument at time, and it was not assigned as misconduct, and court was not requested to admonish jury to disregard it, and argument was not such as would not require assignment of misconduct or request for admonition or instruction.

17. Criminal Law ⇐715

That prosecutor in robbery prosecution had held gun, which was in evidence, before jury during part of argument, was not misconduct, in view of nature of evidence.

Simon & McKinsey and Harry J. Simon, Long Beach, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen. of the State of California, Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., and Victor Griffith, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VALLÉE, Justice.

By information defendant was charged in seven counts with robbery. He was convicted by a jury of the offenses charged in Counts I, III, IV, and V, and acquitted of the other three. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Count V

Gilbert Meischke was employed as a clerk in Benson's Liquor Store in Long Beach. About 1 a. m. on October 15, 1955 James Polk robbed him of $155. The first time Meischke saw defendant was in a police line-up.

Count IV

Fred Stager managed the Sands Bar & Café in Long Beach. About 12:30 a. m. on October 20, 1955 James Polk and Billy Gardner, brother of defendant, robbed him of $189 and his wallet containing $10 or $12. As they left one of them fired a shot into the ceiling. A Mercury was parked in front of the bar. No one saw defendant in the bar that night. The first time Stager saw defendant was at a police station.

Count III

Claude Heater operated Jack's Liquor Store in Long Beach. About 1 a. m. on October 27, 1955 he was getting ready to close. There was a customer in the store. Heater testified defendant entered the store and asked for a package of cigarettes; as he reached for the cigarettes defendant pulled a gun on him and told the customer, "You stay where you are. Don't you make a move"; defendant ordered Heater to open the cash register; he did, and defendant took $44 from it; defendant slowly backed out of the door and across the front of the store; there was a car parked outside with the motor running; defendant was very agile, he walked with a steady gait, nothing unusal struck him about defendant's walk except that he "moved awfully slowly." Heater identified defendant from others in a police line-up.

Count I

James Browning operated a grocery store in Long Beach. About 11:30 a. m. on November 28, 1955 one Robertson robbed him of $93 in the store. Robertson left the store, followed by Browning. Before leaving, Browning told his wife to call the police. Robertson got into a new, cream-colored Mercury. Browning followed in his car. The Mercury stopped in front of an apartment house. The police arrived on the scene, entered the apartment house, saw Robertson, searched him and found $93 in his pocket. After the officers had taken the $93 from Robertson, one of them climbed to the roof on a ladder. Defendant was lying on his stomach at the edge of the roof. Glass in the skylight leading to the roof had been broken. The officer took defendant from the roof and had a conversation with him. The officer said, "Well, it looks like you got yourself in a pretty good mess this time," to which defendant replied, "It looks that way." Defendant told the officers he would tell the truth and said, "I did not know he was going to hold up that market [Browning's—Count I]. He told me to stop, that he wanted some cigarettes," that when Robertson returned from the market he (Robertson) said, "I just held up that market. Let's go." An officer testified:

"Q. Following that conversation what next occurred? What was said and done within your immediate sight and hearing? A. I recall after that statement he stated that he was trying to get into the apartment, that Robertson had already succeeded in getting into the apartment through the skylight, and that he was entering and that he observed a motor officer approaching and went and hid on the roof.

"Q. Did you ask him why he hid when he saw a motor officer arrive? A. Yes.

"Q. What did he say to that? A. He said, 'I was scared.'

"Q. Did you ask him what he was scared of? A. Yes.

"Q. What did he say to that? A. Being caught.

"Q. Did you ask him why he was, why he was afraid of being caught? A. He stated that the situation probably looked bad and it would be figured that he had been in on the robbery." In the room occupied by Robertson the officers found a .38 Smith & Wesson revolver loaded with six shells. The officers called Browning into the apartment house. Defendant was sitting on the floor. Browning had not seen him in the grocery store. Defendant was then taken to the police station.

Additional Evidence

At the police station defendant told an officer he had bought the new Mercury—he had traded his green '50 for it; that he drove the car but did not know what was taking place; that Robertson came out "in a hurry, so I had to take off in a hurry."

On November 29, 1955 two officers talked to defendant. He told them he would plead guilty if he could get the same deal as the other defendants in the case were getting (plead guilty to one offense), his "priors" were not charged, and he would get a county jail sentence. One of the officers told him they were not making deals.

Later that day the officers talked to Polk, Billy Gardner, Robertson, and defendant together in the interrogation room of the jail. Defendant refused to answer any questions, saying, "I have nothing to say." Billy Gardner said he and Polk held up the Sands bar (Count IV); Polk fired a shot into the ceiling as they left; defendant was waiting outside in his Mercury; after the robbery they went to Polk's apartment and divided the $190 three ways; defendant received one-third. Polk stated that what Billy Gardner had said was "all true." Polk said defendant had been living with him; he had held up Jack's Liquor Store (Count III); he took $45 from the cash register; defendant was driving the getaway car and knew he was going to hold up the store; immediately after the robbery they split the money "50-50." An officer then said to defendant, "Q. Al Gardner, have you got anything to say about this?" to which defendant replied, "No." Polk said he had held up Benson's Liquor Store (Count V); he took $140 from the cash register; defendant knew he was going to hold up the place and waited outside in his Mercury; after the robbery he split the $140 with defendant. The officers then asked defendant if he had anything to say, to which he replied, "No."

An officer then removed defendant from the interrogation room. In the elevator going up to the jail the officer asked him "if these other boys were lying." Defendant "sort of grinned" and said he would like "to have a deal where he could get a County Jail sentence." The officer told him that was up to the court. After further conversation the officer asked defendant "if what they said about him was true," to which defendant replied, "Yes, it is all true." Defendant was then returned to the interrogation room and in the presence of the officers, Polk, Billy Gardner, and Robertson the following conversation between one of the officers and defendant occurred: "Q. Now, all that they said in your presence a while ago, are those statements true? Alton Gardner: True."

One of the officers had several conversations with defendant about the Mercury. Defendant first told the officer he bought it at a used car lot; the price was $3,200, and he had traded in another Mercury. Later the officer asked him if he had not stolen the Mercury in South Gate near the General Motors plant. Defendant replied that he had and that he had "doctored" the ownership certificate to fit the Mercury and put it in the window of the car.

Defendant's first assignment of error is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict as to Count III, robbery of Jack's Liquor Store. The contention is that the testimony of Claude Heater identifying defendant as the robber is so inherently improbable as to be unbelievable. The contention is predicated on the following: Uncontradicted evidence of a physician that defendant sustained a compound fracture of his left tibia on July 1, 1955 and that it was placed in a nonweight-bearing cast; on October 7, 1955 the fracture "had not healed very much"; it would not have healed very much by October 27, 1955 (date of robbery of Jack's) and defendant would not then have been able, without a cast, to bear the weight of his body unaided by crutches. Testimony of the customer who was in the store at the time of the robbery that defendant was not the robber. Testimony of Heater that at the time of the robbery he thought defendant was very agile, had a steady gait, and there was nothing unusual about his walk, and that he (Heater) was under medical care at the time of the trial.

[1–5] A reviewing court cannot reject testimony of a witness that has been believed by the trier of fact unless it is a physical impossibility that it be true, or its falsity is apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions. People v. Huston, 21 Cal.2d 690, 693, 134 P.2d 758. In order to say that testimony is inherently improbable it must appear that what was related or described could not have occurred. Testimony which is subject to justifiable suspicion is not inherently improbable. People v. Dragoo, 121 Cal.App.2d 322, 324, 263 P.2d 90. A reviewing court will not hold unsupported a jury's finding of guilt merely because it might reasonably draw an inference different from the one the jury reasonably drew or might not be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of defendant. People v. Tollack, 105 Cal.App.2d 169, 172, 233 P.2d 121; People v. Cahan, 141 Cal.App.2d 891, 897, 297 P.2d 715. Our function is to determine whether the evidence, if believed, is of sufficient character to justify a conviction. We cannot say as a matter of law that the identification of defendant by Heater is so inherently improbable as to be unbelievable. Further, the jury may have disregarded the identification of Heater and concluded defendant was the driver of the getaway car.

The court gave seven instructions on the subject of conspiracy at the request of the People. They defined a conspiracy; stated that after a conspiracy has been proved each member is liable for and bound by the acts and declarations of each and all the conspirators; stated the manner in which a conspiracy may be proved; stated that the jury should determine from the facts and circumstances shown by the evidence "whether or not a criminal combination or agreement did in fact exist as charged in the case"; defined an overt act; and stated that no agreement amounts to a conspiracy unless an overt act is done by one or more of the conspirators for the purpose of accomplishing the object of the agreement and that an overt act "must be proved to support a conviction for conspiracy." They referred to an "alleged conspiracy," an "alleged conspirator," to a "conspiracy as alleged." Defendant asserts that since he was not charged with a conspiracy the court erred in giving these instructions.

[6-9] Since defendant was not charged with conspiracy and since these instructions were poorly worded, they could well have been omitted. People v. Talbott, 65 Cal.App.2d 654, 664–665, 151 P.2d 317. However, we do not think defendant was prejudiced. The evidence was sufficient to warrant the jury in concluding that a conspiracy to commit robberies existed between Polk, Robertson, Billy Gardner, and defendant. As a general rule evidence of a conspiracy is properly admissible even though a conspiracy is not charged in the information. People v. Rivas, 92 Cal.App. 2d 663, 667–668, 207 P.2d 1062. When the evidence is sufficient to warrant a finding of a conspiracy, appropriate instructions on the subject may be given. People v. Weaver, 56 Cal.App.2d 732, 740–741, 133 P.2d 818. The jury was well aware that defendant was not charged with conspiracy. On voir dire examination the court told the jurors defendant was charged with seven counts of armed robbery. The clerk read the information to the jury. The verdict forms related to robbery, not conspiracy. It is evident the jury was not confused or misled by the instructions on conspiracy.

[10] The court instructed the jury relative to confessions and admissions.[1] Defendant claims "there was no actual con-

1. "Evidence has been received in this case tending to show that on an occasion other than this trial the defendant himself made a statement relating to the issues in this case.

"[A statement thus made by a defendant may be either a confession or an admission.]

"A confession is a statement that was made by one who is a defendant in a criminal trial, at a time when he was not testifying in that trial, by which he acknowledged certain conduct of his own that constituted a crime for which he is on trial, a statement which, if true, discloses his guilt of that crime and excludes the possibility of a reasonable inference to the contrary.

"If under my instructions you find that a voluntary confession was made, you are the exclusive judges as to whether or not the confession was true; and in decid-fession in the case," hence it was error to instruct on the subject of confessions. We find no error. The instruction correctly defines a confession and an admission. People v. Connelly, 195 Cal. 584, 597, 234 P. 374; People v. Chan Chaun, 41 Cal.App.2d 586, 593, 107 P.2d 455. It left the questions whether a confession had been made, and if so whether it was true, to the jury. There was no error in giving the instruction. It did defendant no harm.

The conversations which took place on November 28, 1955 between the officers, Polk, Billy Gardner, Robertson, and defendant in the interrogation room were taken down in shorthand and transcribed by two court stenographers. Officer Decker, who was present during all the conversations, was called by the People. He testified: he read a typewritten transcript of the conversations the next day; the transcript accurately recorded the conversations; he cannot, without referring to the transcript, narrate accurately the conversations; he is unable to remember them; he would have to refresh his memory; his memory as to what they were is "in the most part" completely gone; he has no independent "memory and recollection of the conversation"; he could relate some of the conversations but "I doubt if it could be wholly correct to my recollection"; his use of the transcript would be merely to refresh his recollection. Over defendant's objection Officer Decker was then permitted to read aloud the transcript of the conversations which took place in the interrogation room in the presence of defendant. The transcript was not admitted in evidence.

Defendant asserts it was error to allow the transcribed conversations to be read verbatim to the jury. He argues its "proper use could only be (1) to refresh the memory of the witness, if he had a memory, or (2) to allow a witness without memory, to read it and thus testify from it; provided, in both cases, the document meets the requirements of C.C.P. Section 2047.[2] Unless it is made to appear that the memorandum complies with the requirements of the statute, the witness may not use it to refresh his memory or testify therefrom"; that the transcript does not meet the requirements of section 2047 in that it appears the witness did not prepare it and it does not appear that it was prepared under his direction.

Carpenter v. Ashley, 16 Cal.App. 302, 116 P. 983, was an action for slander. The defendant, a district attorney, was a witness in his own behalf. He was asked to narrate the colloquy occurring between him and the plaintiff during which the alleged slanderous words were uttered. He testified that he, as district attorney, directed the official reporter to take down the testimony of the witnesses and what occurred during the colloquy and that the reporter did take down all that was said and wrote it out soon thereafter and that he, the witness, examined the transcriping that question you should consider all the circumstances connected with the making of the statement, as shown by the evidence.

"[An admission is something less than a confession in that it does not concede so much pointing toward defendant's guilt, and does not alone, even if true, support a deduction of guilt. It may consist of any statement or other conduct by a defendant whereby he expressly or impliedly acknowledges a fact that contributes in some degree to the proof of his guilt of an alleged crime for which he is on trial, and which statement was made or conduct occurred outside of that trial.]"

2. Section 2047: "A witness is allowed to refresh his memory respecting a fact, by anything written by himself, or under his direction, at the time when the fact occurred, or immediately thereafter, or at any other time when the fact was fresh in his memory, and he knew that the same was correctly stated in the writing. But in such case the writing must be produced, and may be seen by the adverse party, who may, if he choose, cross-examine the witness upon it, and may read it to the jury. So, also, a witness may testify from such a writing, though he retain no recollection of the particular facts, but such evidence must be received with caution."

tion; that it was a true and correct statement. He was then permitted to refresh his memory from it. The ruling was held not to be error.

"Deputy Sheriff Morrell, who spoke Spanish as well as English, questioned appellant, after his arrest, partly in English and partly in Spanish. The questions and answers as interpreted by Deputy Sheriff Morrell were reduced to writing by a stenographic reporter. Thereafter at the time of the trial Mr. Morrell used, for the purpose of refreshing his recollection as to his conversation with appellant, the transcribed notes of the reporter. This procedure was proper. Mr. Morrell stated when questioned by the district attorney that it was necessary for him to use the memorandum for the purpose of refreshing his recollection. This was sufficient foundation, together with the showing as to the method of preparation of the notes to permit Mr. Morrell to use the memorandum in testifying as to the statements made by appellant in his presence. The law is established that one who is present at a conversation and has heard the same and knows the facts may use any writing whether made by himself or another to refresh his memory when subsequently testifying. Section 2047, Code Civ. Proc.; Beecham v. Burns, 34 Cal. App. 754, 758, 168 P. 1058; People v. Lee Fat, 54 Cal. 527, 531; see, also, 27 Cal.Jur. (1926) 88, secs. 68 and 69; vol. 7, No. 5, February, 1941, p. 315, Current Legal Thought."

Brown, 3 Cal.App. 178, 84 P. 670.[3] A witness who has no present recollection of the facts and is permitted to refresh his memory from a memorandum may, in testifying to the facts, read directly from the writing. Anderson v. Souza, 38 Cal.2d 825, 832–833, 243 P.2d 497; People v. Vera, 131 Cal.App.2d 669, 675–676, 281 P.2d 65. The court did not err in permitting Officer Decker to refresh his memory from the transcriptions of the conversations and to read directly therefrom.

[13, 14] The court declined to give an instruction with respect to circumstantial evidence requested by defendant.[4] Error is claimed. The connection of defendant with the offenses charged in Counts IV and V was based entirely on circumstantial evidence. It was therefore error to refuse to give the instruction. People v. Watson, 46 Cal.2d 818, 829–832, 299 P.2d 243. The court instructed with respect to the presumption of innocence; the burden of proof; reasonable doubt; direct and circumstantial evidence, equally entitled to consideration; definitions of direct and circumstantial evidence; where the evidence is susceptible of two constructions it is the jury's duty to adopt that construction which admits of defendant's inno-

3. Theoretically it should make no difference what is used to refresh the recollection of a witness. A witness should be permitted to use anything which has some logical tendency to stimulate his memory. (3 U.C.L.A.Law Rev. 616, 627; 24 Mich. Law Rev. 420; 17 Or.Law Rev. 78; 9 Kan.Bar Asso.Jour. 296.) However, legislation would be necessary to change the rule in California.

4. "When the case which has been made out by the People against a defendant rests entirely or chiefly on circumstantial evidence, and in any case before the jury may find a defendant guilty basing its finding solely on such evidence, each fact which is essential to complete a chain of circumstances that will establish the defendant's guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt."

cence; and that the jury was not permitted on circumstantial evidence "to find the defendant guilty of any crime charged against him unless the proved circumstances not only are consistent with the hypothesis that the defendant is guilty of the crime, but are irreconcilable with any other rational conclusion." Under these circumstances it does not appear in the present case that the court's refusal to give the instruction requested resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

[15] Next defendant contends the evidence is insufficient to sustain the convictions of the charges in Counts IV (robbery of Sands bar) and V (robbery of Benson's Liquor Store). He concedes the corpus delicti as to these counts was clearly proved but argues that his connection with each robbery "hangs by two thin threads"—his alleged conversations related by the officers, and his statement that what the robbers said was "True." The evidentiary effect of the so-called "thin threads" was for the jury. The evidence was sufficient.

[16, 17] Lastly it is contended the prosecutor was guilty of prejudical misconduct in his argument to the jury. The parts of the argument complained of are set out in the margin.[5] No objection was made to the argument at the time. It was not assigned as misconduct, nor was the court requested to admonish the jury to disregard it. This is not a case in which the argument was such as not to require an assignment of misconduct and a request for an admonition or instruction. We find nothing prejudicial in the argument. Defendant also asserts misconduct because

5. "I don't know a fair way to present it. I can't make this explanation to you because I don't know what goes on in that defendant's mind, but we do know this, and you people know it, he decided apparently sometime or other that he was not guilty for one, or he may do like so many people do, come to a jury in spite of this tremendous evidence against him when they don't have the nerve to plead guilty and do a fair thing, wait to see if a jury would be gullible enough, in spite of the physical evidence and the oral evidence which I have just re-read to you here against them, or maybe that they will feel that now, upon a demonstration of a claim of illness, crippleness, and so on, a jury will get sympathetic and decide it could not happen that way and a crippled fellow could not do it."

"Let us get down to merry old England. He says in England the prosecutor is bound to turn over evidence to the counsel if it proves innocence. We have a slightly different system in this country, but it is just as effective and I don't want you to take this by way of personal opinion in this case, and sometime later I will tell you why I don't give jurors opinions. The reason we don't necessarily do that in this country in America the case is a simple one. We don't have to prosecute the cases where the evidence proves innocence. You have the same results by not even starting the prosecution."

"That is difficult, because I have to hedge, keep to 38 or something cases to get to the things that are permitted in this case. In fairness to Mr. Simon, it is the duty of the attorneys who represent the respective clients that you see before you here, to as far as possible prevent mistakes."

"The defendant is there with them. 'Now, you just heard what your pal said, what have you got to say about it?' 'I ain't saying nothing.' That is the gist of it, the vernacular of it, he is given a fair opportunity, as that instruction that Mr. Simon referred to gave you, and he wants, in connection with that talk about this instruction, that has to do with pain and suffering and advice of counsel. The defendant probably knows the law of self-incrimination as well as any Fifth Columnist to hear him talk. You and I know that, too.

"If one of you citizens were interrogated by some officer, you would tell him the truth, because you have nothing to tell. It is all well and good that the law provides for Fifth Columnists or under investigation to take that attitude. We believe in the Constitution. We still have to be realistic to this extent, when a person is accused, is given a fair opportunity to give an explanation and fails to do so, the law, in its wisdom, says any trier of fact—it can be a judge without a jury, it is again a privilege of the defendant."

the prosecutor held a gun, which was in evidence, before the jury during part of his argument. In view of the nature of the evidence there was nothing improper in his doing so.

We find no prejudicial error in the record.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

Martinha ENNES, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Alfred J. ENNES, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 16995.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 15, 1957.

Action by wife for an accounting and for partition of realty under a property settlement agreement executed by the parties. Husband filed a cross-complaint in which he set forth the accounting and requested approval of the accounting and specific performance of the agreement. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Milton D. Sapiro, J., entered judgment adverse to wife, and wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held that, where, after date of property settlement agreement, husband paid taxes on wife's separate property without authorization, and wife also paid the taxes, husband was a mere volunteer and would not be entitled to recover the amount which wife had also paid, but wife should, in good conscience, make available to husband wife's receipts, if she possessed them, to enable husband to get a refund.

Judgment reversed.

1. Trusts ⇐325

Trustee of property has burden of establishing the account.

2. Trusts ⇐30½(2)

Where, under property settlement agreement, husband had duty of managing parties' joint properties until their sale, husband served in capacity of a trustee.

3. Husband and Wife ⇐279(1)

Where husband, who regularly made to wife the payments required by separate maintenance order from time of order until time of subsequent property settlement agreement but had not withdrawn all that he could have withdrawn for his own support under the order, subsequent charge, in an accounting by husband, of the amount he could have withdrawn was improper, in view of fact that the agreement purported to be complete settlement. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1541.

4. Husband and Wife ⇐279(1)

Where husband failed to make, in accordance with separate maintenance order, withdrawals authorized from income from property of husband and wife in full amount authorized up to date of subsequent property settlement agreement and then, in sale of certain income producing property in accordance with the agreement, failed to deduct from wife's share the support payment withdrawals he had not made, husband would not thereafter be heard to contend that, under the agreement, he would be entitled to credit for the withdrawals not made.

5. Husband and Wife ⇐279(1)

Where property settlement agreement stated that cost of accountant and any other bills of any kind in connection with realty of husband and wife, including insurance, should be paid by husband, accountant's fee would have to be paid entirely by husband as well as the insurance expense.

6. Husband and Wife ⇐279(1)

Where property settlement agreement is clear, trial court must apply it according to its plain meaning.

7. Husband and Wife ⇐279(1)

Property settlement agreement provision requiring written permission from wife's attorney for repairs on parties' property did not include the type of repairs which would be considered ordinary maintenance.

8. Husband and Wife ⇐279(1, 6)

Where, under property settlement agreement, husband was to pay $5,000 to wife for certain realty but wife refused to tender the deed to him, husband could not have been placed in default for failure to make such payment, in view of fact that wife had refused to tender the deed to him, and, therefore, no interest would be due to wife on such sum.

9. Husband and Wife ⇐279(1)
Interest ⇐39(1)

Where, under property settlement agreement husband was to pay out of his own funds the sum needed to clear encumbrance on certain property which was allotted to wife, husband's duty constituted an independent covenant which was not to wait for performance until the final accounting after sale of all the properties under the property settlement agreement, and, therefore, wife would be entitled to interest on such sum from time payment was made by her to save the property after husband had refused to pay off the encumbrance.

10. Husband and Wife ⇐279(1)

Where, by terms of property settlement agreement, husband was to deliver secured note free of all claims, trial court's failure to order husband, who delivered the note in court, to produce security for the note was not error, in view of fact that the security was then nonexistent.

11. Taxation ⇐531(1)

Where, after date of property settlement agreement, husband paid taxes on wife's separate property without authorization, and wife also paid the taxes, husband was a mere volunteer and would not be entitled to recover the amount which wife had also paid, but wife should, in good conscience, make available to husband wife's receipts, if she possessed them, to enable husband to get a refund.

12. Husband and Wife ⇐279(1)

Where unpaid support installments owed wife subsequent to property settlement agreement were balanced by unpaid installments due husband, denial of wife's claim as to such installments in action for an accounting and for partition of realty under the property settlement agreement was not error.

Hutchinson & Quattrin, San Francisco, for appellant.

Thomas Pierce Rogers, San Francisco, for respondent.

KAUFMAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment entered on December 22, 1954, in an action for an accounting and for partition of real estate brought by appellant Martinha Ennes against her husband Alfred J. Ennes, under a property settlement agreement executed by the parties. Respondent filed an answer and a cross-complaint setting forth the accounting. He asked that said accounting be approved and requested specific performance of the property settlement agreement.

The count asking partition of real estate was dismissed before trial, inasmuch as the real property involved therein had been sold.

Appellant had brought an action for separate maintenance against respondent on September 8, 1950. On September 19, 1950, on hearing of an order to show cause $250 per month for support was ordered paid to appellant by respondent, and it was ordered that the attorney of the parties select an accountant to ascertain the financial condition of respondent and the income of the parties from their properties.

On October 26, 1950, the court made an order in which it recited that it had continued the matter until it received the report of a certified public accountant, and then ordered $250 per month to be paid appellant pendente lite, and further ordered that respondent is "authorized to withdraw from the income of the properties involved in this action" the sum of $250 per month for his support and maintenance. Two thousand dollars counsel fees were allowed to each party out of the properties owned by the parties. It was also ordered that if the parties agreed upon the sale of any piece of property, the restraining order which had been previously issued, preventing respondent from disposing of any of the properties is so modified as to permit such sale.

Although respondent states that the court ordered respondent to continue management of the community properties, there is no such specific order in either the order of September 19, or October 26, 1950. There is nothing in the latter order that indicates that the court was to receive any further accounting reports. Moreover, the second report of the accountant, received in evidence, is dated October 31, 1951, which is subsequent to the interlocutory decree of divorce which states that the parties have settled all their property rights in accordance with a written contract which is made a part of the decree.

On June 12, 1951, the parties executed a property settlement agreement, which was thereafter incorporated into the Interlocutory Judgment of Divorce on July 17, 1951. Final Judgment in Divorce was entered on July 22, 1952, shortly after this action had been commenced.

The property settlement agreement states that it is the purpose of the parties to "fully, completely and absolutely settle, fix and terminate any and all of their property rights." Several pieces of real property are therein allotted to one or the other of the parties free of all claims of the other. None of these parcels are involved in this case. It is provided that the real property at 7040 Geary Street, San Francisco, shall be sold and the net proceeds divided equally. Paragraph 20 of said agreement provides that real property at 746 Geary Street and 1054 Sutter Street, San Francisco, shall be sold at the best obtainable price, approved by both parties. Before division of the proceeds of these sales, expenses of the sale such as commissions are to be deducted, as well as income and capital gains taxes. Real estate taxes "now delinquent on said properties and all other properties of the parties hereto shall, upon the following conditions, be payable out of the proceeds of the sale of all of the properties in this instrument provided for to be sold, to wit:

"That first the Second Party shall show that he has well, truly and conscientiously accounted for every dollar of income and every dollar of expense derived from any and all of said properties referred to anywhere in this agreement, and that if it shall appear that he has not well and truly paid out all of the returns received from the sale of said properties, excepting only the sum of $250 drawn by him for living expenses, and a like amount paid to the First Party, then and in that case, Second Party shall bear and pay any difference which may exist as shown by said accounting between the money so received by him and the taxes not paid by him and for which he received the moneys and did not account. It is understood and agreed that all other bills of every kind, including cost of deposition, cost of title report, and cost of C. T. Plummer, Accountant, and any and all other bills of any kind in connection with the said real property, including insurance, shall be paid by the Second Party [respondent]."

Paragraph 23 provided that the parties waived all rights of inheritance against each other, "all rights to family allowance, all rights to alimony, support or maintenance or counsel fees, except as herein referred to and already allowed herein" and agreed that this was a "full, complete, absolute release and settlement of all property rights." The only reference in the agreement to support or alimony was that referred to above in paragraph 20, allowing the husband to withdraw $250 for his support and a like amount to appellant from the proceeds of the sales, and the final paragraph of the agreement which provided that it was understood "that the alimony payment of $250 to the First Party shall continue until the sale of the properties, and that the same amount shall also be paid to the Second Party, as heretofore ordered by the Court."

Counsel fees of $2,000 had been previously awarded for each party to be paid by respondent. The agreement provided that $250 of the First Party's attorneys fees had been paid, that respondent should pay $500 additional counsel fees, making a total of $2,250.

Paragraph 27 of the agreement provides that until the properties are sold, respondent "shall incur no debts against the property for repairs or any matter or thing, without having the express written approval therefor of Joseph A. Brown, one of the attorneys for the First Party."

The complaint herein charged failure of respondent to pay $5,000 under paragraph 9 of the agreement, which provided that he was to pay that sum as consideration for receiving fee simple title to the Faxon Avenue property of the parties; that he had failed to deliver the promissory note referred to in paragraph 7 of the agreement; that he had failed to pay the mortgage on property at 109 Gennessee Street in the sum of $2,431.46 as provided in the agreement. Certain other failures to perform were alleged, one being a failure to pay appellant $250 per month since August 1, 1951.

Respondent denied all these charges, alleged that he had diligently managed the property from the date of the filing of the divorce action until March 3, 1953, the date when the last of the properties was sold. He alleged that the accountants reports which had been made from his record showed that he had obligated himself in the sum of $14,130.80 in excess of money received by him in the management of the parties' properties, that this excess accrued after August 10, 1951, following the sale of the only substantial income producing property. The answer admits that respondent promised to pay appellant under the agreement the sum of $5,000 and the balance due in the deed of trust on the Gennessee property, a total of $7,006.21, but alleges that the amount which appellant owes him totals $7,886.12 or more than what he owes her. He alleges that the accounting shows that prior to August 10, 1951, appellant had received her support allowance of $250 per month and respondent was credited with $2,427.35 (which he had not withdrawn as he had been authorized to do by court order of October 26, 1950).

Appellant contends that the testimony of respondent Alfred Ennes and all evidence in support of his alleged expenditures is inaccurate and inherently improbable. But as there is nothing on its face inherently improbable in the testimony of either respondent or the accountant, there is no merit in this charge.

[1, 2] It is urged that the reports of the certified public accountant, Plummer, were not admissible in evidence. Appellant complains that they were not admissible because she or her representative were not present when they were made. This accountant was, however, selected by appellant's attorney, and the parties named him as their accountant in the property settlement agreement. There is no evidence that appellant ever asked to be present when these reports were made. Undoubtedly, respondent had a very informal method of keeping records, considering the substantial nature of the properties here involved, but the record shows that the accountant had access to all the records which appellant kept, check stubs, copies of rent receipts issued, bills, bank deposits records, income tax reports. It is true, however, as appellant states in her reply brief, that the burden of establishing the account is upon the trustee of the property and respondent undoubtedly served in the capacity of a trustee in view of his management of the joint properties until their sale. McKay v. McKay, 184 Cal. 742, 746, 195 P. 385. In Purdy v. Johnson, 174 Cal. 521, 527, 163 P. 893, which appellant contends is very similar to the present case, the court reversed the judgment when the trustee presented to the court a restatement of the account by an expert accountant. The trustees did not testify on direct examination but were subjected to cross-examination by plaintiff. The court stated that the course pursued was irregular. The court there found that the charges attacked were not supported by vouchers or testimony. The expert had based such charges on memorandum checks or tags found among papers at the bank and not signed by plaintiff, and they were held not to constitute vouchers sufficient to show payment to the beneficiary. In the present case respondent Ennes testified on direct examination as to how he kept his accounts, that they were complete, and that all of them had been available to the accountant in preparing his reports. He also testified that no major repairs had been made to the properties without the consent in writing of appellant's attorney, Mr. Brown. This case is therefore distinguishable from that cited above, in that respondent herein did testify as to the validity of the accounts on direct examination, and offered testimony which, though certainly not very detailed, if believed, would substantiate the charges made for repairs, maintenance, and operating expenses of the properties.

[3] It is appellant's position that the charge of $2,427.35 for support allowance was improper. We agree. Prior to the property settlement, respondent had paid to appellant the $250 per month alimony pendente lite ordered by the court. He had, however, drawn but $322 from the income of the properties for his own support although he had been given authorization to draw $250 per month from said income. He testified that the income was insufficient to provide the payments to himself during this period. As this charge against the joint properties all accumulated prior to the execution of the property settlement agreement appellant maintains that the language therein declaring that "this is a full, complete, absolute release and settlement of all property rights", and that "all rights to alimony, support or maintenance * * * except as herein referred to and already allowed herein" are waived. The previous reference to the $250 support allowance in the agreement states that respondent must account for the returns from the sales of the property, "excepting only the sum of $250.00 drawn by him for living expenses, and a like amount paid to the First Party." This obviously contemplates future payments following the execution of the agreement, for appellant had been paid in full up to that time, and both were to receive a like amount. They would not be receiving like amounts if it were contemplated that $2,427.35 not drawn by respondent previously, was also to be paid to him. The final paragraph of the agreement allowing alimony payments to appellant to continue with a like amount to be paid respondent, clearly contemplates the future.

[4] It is noteworthy that when the largest piece of income producing property was sold shortly after the agreement was executed, the only deductions made from the proceeds were those listed in the property settlement agreement, that is, expenses of sale, commissions, taxes. Additional expenses, such as cost of title report, were deducted from respondent's share as per that agreement. Nothing was deducted from appellant's share for this charge of respondent's unpaid support. If the provision for the drawing of living expenses contemplated the past as well as the future, then it would seem only reasonable that respondent would have deducted that amount from the wife's share. He did not then apparently so construe the agreement and he is not now in a position to change the construction of the agreement.

Respondent contends that appellant did not raise this issue at the trial, nor was it raised in the pleadings. However, appellant's attorney did question this item at the trial, respondent admitted that it all accumulated prior to the agreement, and when asked why it wasn't excepted in the property settlement agreement if he meant to preserve the claim, respondent said simply, "Well, now, don't ask me." The accounting report of October 31, 1951, the first made after the agreement and following the sale of the first piece of property, included this charge, and respondent says there was no evidence that appellant protested it. However, the suit asking for an accounting was filed some months later, prior to any of the other reports which repeat this charge.

It seems clear that the property settlement agreement clearly constitutes a release of all rights to family allowance not therein preserved. Civ.Code, § 1541; Pellett v. Sonotone Corporation, 26 Cal.2d 705, 160 P.2d 783, 160 A.L.R. 863; Faye v. Feldman, 128 Cal.App.2d 319, 328, 275 P.2d 121. The same type of release was given as to counsel fees, and it is to be noted that the agreement very carefully provides in paragraph 19 for the preservation of the debt for those fees that were then due from respondent.

[5, 6] Despite the fact that the agreement states very clearly that "the cost of C. T. Plummer, accountant, and any and all other bills of any kind in connection with said real property, including insurance, shall be paid by the Second Party," appellant has been charged with half of the expense for the accountant, as well as insurance. There can be no question but that the accountant's fees must be paid entirely by respondent, as well as insurance. Where the agreement is clear, the trial court must apply it according to its plain meaning. Messenger v. Messenger, 46 Cal. 2d 619, 297 P.2d 988.

[7] Appellant contends that the trial court misconstrued the property settlement agreement in deciding that the provision requiring written permission for repairs on the property from appellant's attorney, did not include the type of repairs that would be considered ordinary maintenance. This appears to have been an entirely reasonable construction. The agreement prohibited respondent from incurring any debts against the property for repairs without written permission. The trial court interpreted this to mean repairs of such substantial nature that a contractor's lien might be placed against the property. The one large item of repairs which was strenuously objected to by appellant, the replacement of a boiler for the sum of $1,053.04, was shown to have been approved by appellant's attorney. Attorney Joseph Brown stated in a letter to appellant's attorney that Mr. Ennes was to pay the bill for the heater, and was entitled to have it "taken into account in the accounting between the parties, arising out of the management, by Mr. Ennes of the properties of the parties to be made by Mr. Ennes to Mrs. Ennes."

[8] It is true that respondent admits that he did not pay the $5,000 due to appellant for the Faxon Street property. That he was well able to pay it after the sale of the most substantial piece of the property in August, 1951, is apparent. Even if all of the charges made against Mrs. Ennes were correct, they had not then reached the sum of $5,000. However, since there is some evidence in the record that she had refused to tender the deed to him, he would not have been placed in default, hence no interest would be due to her on this sum. The deed was delivered to the court during trial and the judgment decreed that it was to be delivered to respondent.

[9] As to the sum which was to be paid by respondent out of his own funds to clear the encumbrance on the property at 109 Gennessee Street, allotted to appellant, it appears that she would be entitled to interest on that sum from the time the payment was made by her to save the property after respondent's refusal to pay off the deed of trust. This duty on his part was clearly an independent covenant that was not to wait for performance until the final accounting after the sale of all the properties. The respondent undertook to pay this sum "out of his own funds."

[10] By the terms of the agreement respondent was to deliver the Aby note (secured) and free of all claims by respondent. This note was delivered at the trial. Appellant had been receiving the collections on the note since the execution of the agreement, although she did not have the note. There is testimony that respondent had security for this note at first, apparently a second mortgage, that this security was released when a new financing agreement was entered into, and that Mrs. Ennes, and her niece, Mrs. Aby, participated in these negotiations. There was no error on the part of the trial court in not ordering respondent to produce the security for the note which was then nonexistent.

[11] Respondent was given credit for taxes which he paid on appellant's separate property after the date of the property settlement agreement. Mrs. Ennes had also paid these taxes. It appears that respondent was a mere volunteer in paying the taxes on her separate property without authorization, and that he should not recover the amount which she also had paid. There is evidence that he cannot get a refund unless appellant furnishes her receipts. If she has this evidence in her possession, she should in good conscience make it available in order that respondent may recover the double payment.

[12] Since the unpaid installments of $250 per month owed to appellant for every month since August 1951 subsequent to the property settlement agreement were balanced by the unpaid installments due to respondent since that time, there was no error in denying appellant's claim in this regard.

In view of the errors noted, this matter must be retried and, accordingly, the judgment must be reversed.

Judgment reversed.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 21, 1957.

Hearing Granted Feb. 19, 1957.

Action for declaration that plaintiff was lawful wife of defendant and for decree of separate maintenance, or, in the alternative, if court determined marriage to be invalid, for damages for alleged fraudulent misrepresentations leading to marriage ceremony and for award of quasi-community property of parties, and for other relief. Nine appeals were taken by the parties from judgments and orders of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Stanley Mosk and Orlando H. Rhodes, JJ. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held, inter alia, that in view of fact that no marriage existed between parties, plaintiff was not entitled to support, counsel fees or costs pendente lite or following judgment, but that trial court did not abuse discretion in allowing her counsel fees and costs on appeal from order denying support, fees and costs pendente lite, that trial court's allocation of community property had been proper but that its action in entering non-

Appeal from one order dismissed; another order reversed with directions; and other orders affirmed. One judgment reversed with directions; and other judgment modified and affirmed.

1. Divorce ⇐209, 221
Husband and Wife ⇐295

The existence of marriage is jurisdictional prerequisite for support, costs, and counsel fees pendente lite in action for divorce or separate maintenance. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 137.2, 137.3.

2. Divorce ⇐39
Husband and Wife ⇐288

The invalidity of a marriage may be shown at any time, in action for divorce or separate maintenance. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 61, subd. 1.

3. Divorce ⇐214(3)
Husband and Wife ⇐295

The evidence to establish a disputed marriage need not be as complete and satisfactory upon application for temporary support as on trial of issue, in action for divorce or separate maintenance, but the party seeking relief must make a reasonably plain case of existence of a marriage. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 61, subd. 1; §§ 87, 137.2, 137.3.

4. Divorce ⇐320

A marriage contracted in Mexico four days after one party's receiving interlocutory decree for divorce in California is contrary to express public policy of state, and illegal and void from its inception. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 61, subd. 1.

5. Husband and Wife ⇐205(6)

Where, in alleged wife's action wherein she sought declaration that marriage was valid, decree for separate maintenance, or, in alternative, if marriage were held invalid, damages because of alleged husband's alleged fraudulent representations and award of quasi-community property, on application for support, counsel fees and costs pendente lite, she virtually established that she was not wife of alleged defendant, she was not entitled to such relief pendente lite. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 61, subd. 1.

6. Marriage ⇐36

In view of public policy against remarriage within proscribed period following entry of interlocutory divorce decree, in alleged wife's action for declaration of validity of marriage and for other relief, alleged husband was not estopped to deny the validity of marriage on any theory that his misrepresentation that marriage would be valid had led her to putative marriage. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 61, subd. 1.

7. Husband and Wife ⇐205(6)

The showing of a marriage in existence is a jurisdictional prerequisite to granting of support, counsel fees and costs pendente lite, and where, on application therefor it appears that there is no marriage, such may not be awarded even though putative spouse may be entitled to interest in property accumulated during putative marriage. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 61, subd. 1; §§ 87, 137.2, 137.3.

8. Appeal and Error ⇐837(1)

Trial court's ruling is required to be viewed as of the time it was made on the then state of the record.

9. Appeal and Error ⇐172(1)

In alleged wife's action for separate maintenance, and damages for alleged husband's alleged fraud in inducing putative marriage, if it were void, even if complaint indicated that alleged wife was entitled to annulment, where it was not drawn upon such theory and, at hearing on order to show cause, there was no suggestion made on her behalf that she was entitled to counsel fees and costs pendente lite on theory that she was seeking an annulment, she was not entitled to have order denying such reversed on appeal upon her belated suggestion that she was seeking an annulment. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 87.

10. Husband and Wife ⇐205(6), 295

Plaintiff in action for declaration of validity of marriage, separate maintenance, and damages, if marriage be declared void, was not entitled to have order denying her support, costs, and counsel fees reversed on appeal, on any theory that defendant's answer showed that marriage was void and that she was consequently entitled to such award on ground that she was seeking an annulment, in view of fact that such answer was not filed until after hearing and ruling on her order. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 87.

11. Husband and Wife ⇐295

Where alleged wife in action for separate maintenance, and, in alternative, if marriage be determined invalid, damages because of alleged husband's alleged fraud in inducing putative marriage failed, on application for support pendente lite, to show existence of marriage, she was not entitled to award of support pending appeal from such order. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 87, 137.2.

12. Husband and Wife ⇐205(6)

In alleged wife's action for declaration of validity of marriage and for other relief, wherein trial court entered order denying her support, counsel fees and costs pendente lite, on ground that no marriage existed, and alleged wife's attorney advised her that she had good cause for appeal, trial court was satisfied that appeal was taken in good faith, alleged wife had no funds to finance appeal but alleged husband was amply provided with funds, trial court's allowance to wife of counsel fees and costs on appeal was not an abuse of discretion. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 61, subd. 1; §§ 87, 137.2, 137.3.

13. Husband and Wife ⇐205(6)

For alleged wife, in her action for declaration of validity of marriage and for other relief, to be entitled to counsel fees and costs on appeal from order denying her support, costs, and counsel fees pendente lite she was not required to demonstrate that appeal would be successful but only to show to satisfaction of trial court that appeal was taken in belief, and upon advice of attorneys, that she had good grounds to expect a reversal. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 61, subd. 1; §§ 87, 137.2, 137.3.

14. Appeal and Error ⇐119

In alleged wife's action for declaration of validity of marriage and for other relief, trial court's order allowing her counsel fees and costs on appeal from its order denying her support, costs, and counsel fees pendente lite was an appealable order. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 87, 137.2, 137.3.

15. Appeal and Error ⇐113(1)

An appeal from an order denying motion to vacate appealable order does not lie if grounds upon which movant sought to have order vacated existed before its entry and were available on appeal therefrom.

16. Appeal and Error ⇐119

In alleged wife's action for declaration of validity of marriage and for other relief, order denying alleged husband's motion to vacate order granting alleged wife counsel fees and costs on appeal from order denying her support, counsel fees and costs pendente lite was not an appealable order. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 87, 137.2, 137.3.

17. Husband and Wife ⇐248
Marriage ⇐54

Where no marriage de jure exists between parties, no true community interest in property accumulated during putative relationship of parties as alleged husband and wife exists, and correlative rights of parties in such property derive from principles of equity and justice designed to effect suitable division of property acquired through joint efforts of both. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 61, subd. 1.

18. Marriage ⇐54

Woman who is good-faith party to invalid marriage earns interest in property accumulated by putative spouses by her wifely services, regardless of her proportionate contribution towards the acquisition of quasi-community property. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 61, subd. 1.

19. Marriage ⇐54

Where invalid marriage has been procured by fraud of de facto husband, and putative wife has rendered services in course of their cohabitation, she is entitled to quasi contractual recovery of amount equal to value of her services over and above value of support and maintenance received from de facto husband. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 61, subd. 1.

20. Marriage ⇐54

Where putative wife had received substantial award of quasi-community property in return for her conjugal contribution, in her action against putative husband, and such award was not inadequate in relation to the value of the services which she rendered, she was not entitled to receive in addition a quasi contractual recovery for the services rendered. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 61 subd. 1.

21. Breach of Marriage Promise ⇐14

A putative wife's action against putative husband, sounding in tort for deceit for alleged fraud in inducing her to enter into putative marriage relation is not proscribed by statute abolishing actions for breach of promise of marriage. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 43.5(d).

22. Fraud ⇐28

An innocent woman who is induced by fraud and deceit to contract a void marriage and who subsequently cohabits with her putative spouse in performance of supposed conjugal relations is entitled to recover damages in an action for fraud where any illegal conduct of woman was induced solely by man's fraud. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 43.5(d).

23. Election of Remedies ⇐1

There are three essential elements to the doctrine of "election of remedies", (a) existence of two or more remedies, (b) inconsistency between the remedies, and (c) choice, with knowledge of the facts, of one of the remedies, and if any one of these elements is absent, preclusion does not follow.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Election of Remedies".

24. Election of Remedies ⇐3(1)

There is no inconsistency, so as to force an election of remedies, between a suit to settle the property rights between parties who had entered into a void marriage and an action for damages for fraudulently inducing plaintiff to enter into the void marriage. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 61, subd. 1.

25. Fraud ⇐10

Where parties occupy a confidential relationship, deception as to the state of law constitutes a fraudulent representation.

26. Fraud ⇐23

If, at time parties were engaged to be married, woman reposed trust and confidence in man and relied on his statements which he knew to be false, that their forthcoming marriage in Mexico, which was subsequently performed four days after entry of interlocutory divorce decree in her favor in California, would be valid everywhere and she, by entering into relationship, relied upon such misrepresentations to her detriment, she was entitled to recover damages, from him for such fraudulent misrepresentation.

27. Marriage ⇐1

It is the policy of State to foster and protect marriages and to encourage spouses to live together, especially where there are minor children involved.

28. Contracts ⇐111

The public policy forbids any agreement either between husband and wife or between either and a stranger, having as its purpose the facilitation or promotion or procurement of divorce.

29. Contracts ⇐111

Where at time woman was still cohabiting with her husband, defendant made oral contract with her under which he agreed to divide his property with her and to support her children if she married him, even if her marriage was unsuccessful and she had previously contemplated divorce, such contract was promotive of divorce, and hence unenforcible as against public policy of State, precluding her recovery thereon in action against defendant maintained after she had divorced former husband and entered into invalid union with defendant. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 61, subd. 1.

30. Contracts ⇐111

Contract based on any offer to divide his property with woman and to support her children and made after she had filed complaint for divorce but prior to entry of interlocutory decree was invalid and unenforcible as promotive of divorce, in view of fact there was still time for woman and her husband to compose their differences.

31. Contracts ⇐137(1)

Where contract for division of property and support of woman's children if she would marry man was void as promotive of divorce with woman's then spouse, the underlying illegality tainted transaction as a whole making no part of its obligations enforcible even as to support of woman's children who were not parties to the contract.

32. Husband and Wife ⇐262(1)

Unless contrary is shown, law presumes that money used in maintenance of family is drawn from community funds before there is encroachment on separate property.

33. Marriage ⇐54

Where parties had entered into putative marriage relationship, putative husband was under no obligation to support putative wife's children by former marriage out of his separate property, but as they were part of "family" their support was properly a quasi-community expense to be deducted from the quasi-community property, in making division between putative spouses.

34. Husband and Wife ⇐205(6)

In view of fact that existence of marriage is jurisdictional prerequisite to granting award for support, attorneys' fees and costs, where court in action by alleged wife against alleged husband properly found that no marriage existed but awarded alleged wife share of quasi-communal property, she was properly denied support, attorneys' fees and costs. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 61, subd. 1; §§ 87, 137.2, 137.3.

35. Fraud ⇐64(1)

In putative wife's action against putative husband for, inter alia, alleged fraud in inducing her to enter into union, evidence on issue of whether putative wife, during the entire period of cohabitation and even after she had been informed by her attorney that validity of marriage lay in an unsettled area of law and after trial court, on application for support pendente lite, declared that parties were not married, continued to believe that they were legally married was for trial court. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 61, subd. 1; §§ 87, 137.2, 137.3.

36. Husband and Wife ⇐205(6)

In view of jurisdictional prerequisite for award of support money, costs, and counsel fees, of establishment of existence of valid marriage, where court, in putative wife's action against putative husband determined that marriage had been invalid from its inception, it properly denied her support and suit money on appeal from judgment which awarded her share of property but denied her damages for fraud. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 61, subd. 1; §§ 87, 137.2, 137.3.

37. Husband and Wife ⇐205(6), 295

In alleged wife's action against alleged husband for separate maintenance, or, in alternative, share of quasi-community property and other relief, where trial court entered order denying her support money and fees pendente lite but allowed alleged wife counsel fees and costs of appeal therefrom and, implicit in that appeal was issue of validity of marriage, she was not entitled to support and suit money on appeal from judgment determining that marriage was invalid as she was not entitled to two awards of funds to test same question. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 61, subd. 1; §§ 87, 137.2, 137.3.

38. Equity ⇐8
Judgment ⇐363

A party may have relief in equity from consequences of his mistake of fact, and where he would be entitled to such relief in an independent suit in equity, he may have relief on motion under statute relating to relief from judgment or order taken by mistake. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 473.

39. Costs ⇐315

The fact that order taxing costs was appealable did not preclude its being set aside under statute relating to relief from orders and judgments entered by mistake. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 473.

40. Costs ⇐315

Where both parties mistakenly believed that no order had been made for a daily transcript and matter had inadvertently escaped judge's mind, order denying the proper taxing of costs for such transcript was result of inadvertence and mistake of fact, relief from which was available on motion. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 473.

41. Replevin ⇐119

Where sheriff's deputies entered owner's residence and took control of her automobile by placing seal of their office upon it, they thereby exerted official dominion over automobile, bringing it in custodia legis, and their actions constituted a sufficient "taking" within the meaning of the claim and delivery statute so that owner was entitled to recover on undertaking against one who had directed the taking. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 512.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Taking".

42. Process ⇐168

The gravamen of action for abuse of process is established when there has been a perversion of court processes to achieve some objective which process was not intended by law to accomplish or which seeks to compel the party against whom it is used to do some collateral thing which he could not be legally compelled to do.

43. Process ⇐168

An action for abuse of process will lie, even though process has been validly issued, upon proof of an ulterior purpose and wilful act in use of process, not proper in regular conduct of proceeding.

44. Process ⇐171

In action by putative wife against putative husband, for abuse of process in having claim and delivery writ issued, resulting in taking of her automobile at time when title to property was in issue in separate proceeding which she had instituted against him, where he had, in claim and delivery proceeding, designated her by surname of her divorced husband rather than by his surname, evidence sustained finding that if writ was properly issued, putative husband had misused legal process of court which court found was done to induce her to discontinue action.

45. Process ⇐168

Putative husband's misuse of provisional remedy of claim and delivery against putative wife to accomplish result not lawfully obtainable, to induce her to discontinue domestic relations action constitutes an actionable abuse of process where injuries are caused.

46. Process ⇐171

Damages recoverable for abuse of process are compensatory for harm proximately flowing from wrong, and recompense for special damage such as mental suffering is legitimate element of damage.

47. Process ⇐171

In abuse of process action, counsel fees incurred in attempting to protect one's self from abuse is proper item of damages but only to extent that such expense relates to services required to obtain relief from misused process.

48. Process ⇐171

In abuse of process action based on taking by sheriff under claim and delivery writ issued on application of defendant, in view of fact that plaintiff had been relieved from effects of process under a restraining order, she was not entitled to recover, in addition to counsel fees for procuring restraining order, counsel fees in defense of claim and delivery action. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., § 512.

49. Replevin ⇐80

Attorney's fees may not be awarded as damages in actions for the recovery of personalty.

50. Process ⇐171

Under statute relating to exemplary damages, in abuse of process action, court upon finding that defendant was actuated by malice and was guilty of oppression in abusing process, could properly assess exemplary damages. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3294.

Leonard Horwin and Richard I. M. Kelton, Beverly Hills, for appellant and respondent Annelen Spellens.

Pacht, Ross, Warne & Bernhard, Isaac Pacht, Stuart L. Kadison and Harvey M. Grossman, Los Angeles, for respondent and appellant Sol Carl Spellens.

FOX, Justice.

The nine appeals arising out of this litigation present a great variety of legal questions in the field of domestic relations as well as in certain other phases of the law.

I. Résumé of the Facts.

Plaintiff (sometimes referred to as Annelen), married Robert Seymon in Germany in 1937. They came to America a year later. They had two children, born, respectively, in 1942 and 1947. Seymon was a traveling salesman with only a moderate income. It was necessary for Annelen to work, from time to time, as a dressmaker and seamstress to provide additional family support. Seymon declined to change to a type of employment which would permit him to spend more time at home with his family and increase his earnings. He assertedly associated with a girl friend and Annelen became involved with a married man. It appears that during the last several years of their marriage the Seymons lived in a state of discord and unhappiness. Annelen had threatened on a number of occasions to divorce Seymon.

In October, 1950, defendant (also identified herein as Sol) told Annelen that he was in love with her and wished to marry her. She had known him as a family friend. He was foreign born, a man of substantial wealth, extensive business experience, and represented himself as having wide legal experience. He had been married and divorced twice and was the father of three children. He was approximately 69 years of age; Annelen was 35. Sol stated that he was aware of the unhappy state of affairs between her and her husband and of her husband's failure to adequately provide for his family. Sol told her she was entitled to a divorce and, if she would get a divorce and marry him, he would take care of her and her children and make her a partner in all of his property. Annelen advised her husband of Spellens' interest in her and the proposition he had made. She sought for some three months to have her husband improve his marital conduct, show her affection, provide a greater income, and thus save the marriage. Her efforts, however proved fruitless.

In January, 1951, Annelen decided she was going to divorce her husband and so informed Sol, who made arrangements for her to obtain an attorney, and provided her with funds therefor. She filed suit for divorce on grounds of extreme cruelty on February 21, 1951. After the action was filed, Spellens and Annelen conferred with Seymon regarding a property settlement. Spellens advised Annelen to waive her rights to any community property and all but nominal ($1 per month) alimony. She followed this advice. Spellens promised Annelen again that he would support the children as his own and provide them with an education and he would make her a partner in all of his property.

Annelen was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce on March 13, 1951. About that time Spellens represented to Annelen that upon the interlocutory divorce decree being granted, they could be legally married in Mexico and that such marriage would be valid everywhere. Spellens took Annelen to Mexico where he procured an attorney who advised her to the same effect. Four days after the interlocutory decree was granted, Spellens and Annelen returned to Mexico and interviewed the same attorney. Spellens showed the attorney Annelen's interlocutory decree of divorce.

After examining the document, the attorney confirmed his previous advice that they could immediately enter into a legal marriage there which would be valid everywhere. Thereupon Sol and Annelen went through a marriage ceremony performed by the attorney. They immediately began living together as husband and wife, with Annelen's children as part of the family. In November, 1951, Annelen became pregnant and had a miscarriage in January, 1952.

During the period the parties lived together Sol was guilty of extreme cruelty toward plaintiff that caused her great mental anguish. In March, 1952, Sol suggested that they separate. When Annelen objected, Sol told her that he had been advised they were not legally married. Plaintiff then consulted counsel, telling him the facts concerning her relationship with Sol. She was advised that the validity of her marriage lay in the field of unsettled law, but that he thought he could establish its validity on the theory that Sol was estopped to deny its validity. The original complaint was thereupon filed on March 24, 1952.

The parties separated for a brief period after this action was commenced but soon went back together, and lived together as husband and wife until Sol moved out on September 22, 1952.

In her first amended complaint plaintiff sought, inter alia, a declaration that the marriage was valid and a decree for separate maintenance, or, in the alternative, if the court determined the marriage was invalid, damages because of Sol's fraudulent representations and promises, and an award of the "community property" of the parties.[1]

At this state of the case, plaintiff sought support pendente lite, attorney's fees and costs. Her request was denied in its entirety. She appealed from the order. Plaintiff then moved for support pending the appeal, and for attorney's fees to prosecute the appeal, and for costs. The court denied her support but ordered defendant to pay counsel fees of $2,500 and the actual cost of reporter's and clerk's transcripts and printing of briefs. She has appealed from the order denying her support. Sol moved to vacate the order awarding attorney's fees and costs on appeal. His motion was denied. He then appealed from the order making the award and from the order denying his motion to vacate it.

In due course, the trial court determined that the parties were never legally married and that defendant was not estopped to deny that he is or ever had been married to plaintiff.

Thereupon plaintiff, with the court's permission, filed her second amended complaint. She alleged three causes of action: (1) for damages, both actual and punitive, for fraudulently inducing her to enter into a void marriage; (2) in the alternative, to enforce defendant's agreement that he would give her one-half of his property if she would marry him, and for an award to her of all the "community property" the parties acquired while they lived together as husband and wife, i. e., from March 17, 1951, to September 22, 1952; and (3) as guardian ad litem of her two children, to recover damages based on defendant's promise to support and educate them. The trial court granted a nonsuit on plaintiff's causes of action for damages and to recover a one-half interest in defendant's property; also, on her suit on behalf of her children to recover for their support and education. Plaintiff challenges each of these rulings on this appeal. She also complains because the judgment did not provide for her support, attorney's fees and costs.

The court awarded plaintiff the entire quasi community property. Defendant's expense of $7,200 in maintaining plaintiff's two children from March 17, 1951 to September 22, 1952, was, however, deducted therefrom, leaving her a net of $10,052. Plaintiff attacks the ruling by which the expense of maintaining the children was charged against the quasi community property. Defendant, on the other hand, appeals from that portion of the judgment which awards plaintiff quasi community property accumulated after March 20, 1952,[2] or, in any event, after May 29, 1952.[3]

The facts with respect to Annelen's appeal from an order involving an item of costs and Sol's appeal from a judgment in a claim and delivery proceeding growing out of his and Annelen's affairs will be stated when we come to discuss the questions raised by those appeals.

The court found, inter alia, that Annelen believed and relied on Sol's promises and representations; that he intended that she should believe and rely on them; that she acted in good faith in going through the marriage ceremony and in living with Sol as husband and wife until September 22, 1952, and that up to that time she believed, in good faith, that they were legally married. The court further found that "Spellens knew that he was not legally married to plaintiff and intended from the beginning that his marriage with plaintiff be invalid."

II. Was Plaintiff Entitled to Support, Counsel Fees and Costs Pendente Lite?

[1–5] "Fundamentally, as declared in Colbert v. Colbert, 1946, 28 Cal.2d 276, 279, 169 P.2d 633, 'The existence of the marriage is a jurisdictional prerequiste for the right of the court to order support, costs, and counsel fees pendente lite in an action for divorce or separate maintenance. [Citations.] And the invalidity of the marriage * * * may be shown at any time.' [Citation.]" Dietrich v. Dietrich, 41 Cal.2d 497, 502, 261 P.2d 269, 272. While the evidence to establish a disputed marriage need not be as complete and satisfactory upon an application for temporary support as that required on the trial of the issue Colbert v. Colbert, supra, 28 Cal.2d at page 280, 169 P.2d 633, the party seeking such relief, however, must make a reasonably plain case of the existence of the marriage. Dietrich v. Dietrich, supra, 41 Cal.2d at page 504, 261 P.2d 269; Bancroft v. Bancroft, 9 Cal.App.2d 464, 468, 50 P.2d 465; Hite v. Hite, 124 Cal. 389, 391–392, 57 P. 227, 45 L.R.A. 793; Carbone v. Superior Court, 18 Cal.2d 768, 772, 117 P.2d 872, 136 A.L.R. 1260. Measured by these principles, plaintiff failed to establish that she was entitled to pendente lite relief. As a matter of fact, she virtually established she was not entitled to such relief since the evidence incontrovertibly showed that she went through the marriage ceremony with defendant in Mexico only four days after receiving an interlocutory decree of divorce in this state from Seymon, who was still living. A marriage contracted under these circumstances is contrary to the express public policy of this state and is illegal and void from its inception. Civ.Code, sec. 61 (1); Sullivan v. Sullivan, 219 Cal. 734, 736, 28 P.2d 914; Dominguez v. Dominguez, 136 Cal.App.2d 17, 20, 288 P.2d 195; In re Estate of Elliott, 165 Cal. 339, 343, 132 P. 439; Parmann v. Parmann, 56 Cal.App.2d 67, 69, 132 P.2d 851. In the Sullivan case, supra, the parties, as in the instant case, went through a marriage ceremony in Tiajuana after the woman had obtained an interlocutory decree but before she had secured a final decree of divorce. The court stated 219 Cal. at page 736, 28 P.2d at page 915: "There can be no question that the attempted marriage was illegal and void under Civil Code, §§ 56 and 61."

[6] To supply the deficiency in her status as a legal wife, plaintiff argues that because of defendant's fraudulent representations and promises and her bona fide reliance thereon he should be estopped to deny the validity of their marriage in Mexico. In support of her position, plaintiff relies on a line of cases, of which Rediker v. Rediker, 35 Cal.2d 796, 221 P.2d 1,

2. It was on this date that plaintiff's attorney advised her that the validity of her marriage lay in the field of unsettled law.

3. Plaintiff was in court at a hearing on her order to show cause and heard Judge Mosk declare that he was convinced the parties were not and never had been husband and wife.

20 A.L.R.2d 1152, and Harlan v. Harlan, 70 Cal.App.2d 657, 161 P.2d 490, are representative, that hold in effect, that a party to a domestic relations action is estopped to deny the validity of a divorce he has secured, or that he has assisted the other party to procure from a former spouse, and on the strength of which the parties have later married. The estoppel doctrine declared in this line of cases has been applied to applications for relief pendente lite. Dietrich v. Dietrich, supra. Plaintiff contends that the principle of these cases should be extended to her situation and thus prevent defendant from asserting the invalidity of their marriage.

Absent aspects of public policy, plaintiff's argument would be persuasive. But we have a legislative declaration of public policy that covers this precise situation. It is in clear and unequivocal language. It states, section 61 (1) Civil Code: "In no case can a marriage of either of the parties during the life of the other, be valid in this state, if contracted within one year after the entry of an interlocutory decree in a proceeding for divorce." (Emphasis added.) This sentence was added to the section in 1903. The phrase "in no case" is significant. The Supreme Court, in the Rediker case, supra, has indicated that in such circumstances estoppel does not come into play. The court stated 35 Cal.2d at page 808, 221 P.2d at page 8: "Since the application of the doctrine of estoppel presupposes the entry of a final deree, cases involving remarriage after the entry of only an interlocutory decree [citations] are not in point." Here, the Mexican "marriage" was entered into four days after plaintiff received her interlocutory decree from Seymon and he was still living. To hold that defendant was estopped to deny the invalidity of the Mexican "marriage" would be to circumvent the plain language of the statute and erode the public policy the legislature has established. Our courts have shown no disposition to ameliorate the unhappy status of the parties even by the application of equitable principles where the marriage occurs during the interlocutory period. Parmann v. Parmann, supra; Dominguez v. Dominguez, supra.

The New York courts have frequently considered the application of the doctrine of estoppel in factual situations similar to the one at bar. They have consistently rejected its application. Landsman v. Landsman, 302 N.Y. 45, 96 N.E.2d 81; Schein v. Schein, 169 Miss. 608, 8 N.Y.S.2d 463; People v. Kay, 141 Misc. 574, 252 N.Y.S. 518; Beaudoin v. Beaudoin, 270 App.Div. 631, 62 N.Y.S.2d 920; Green v. Green, Sup., 124 N.Y.S.2d 432.

The following statement of the court in Green v. Green, supra, 124 N.Y.S.2d at page 433, is apposite to the problem at hand: "In this action for a separation the defendant husband moves for summary judgment dismissing the complaint. The plaintiff and one Myers were married in 1912. In 1923 Myers obtained a judgment of divorce in this state against the plaintiff because of her adultery. Thereafter the plaintiff and the defendant were married in this state in 1935, although the plaintiff had never obtained permission of the court to remarry. Myers is still living. The plaintiff cannot prevail in this action for a separation because she is not married to the defendant. There was never any valid marriage between the parties and no doctrine of estoppel can be invoked against the defendant's making the claim of invalidity. The marriage was void as against our public policy and the conduct of the parties cannot change that."

The Rediker and Harlan cases, in their holdings, illustrate the principle that one may be estopped to deny the validity of a final decree obtained prior to the marriage. But the language quoted from Rediker, supra, in harmony with the public policy announced in Civil Code section 61 (1), negates the argument that an estoppel may operate to create a marriage or the right to future support where only an interlocutory decree has been obtained by one of the parties. Public policy forbids such an extension of the doctrine of estoppel.

[7] Plaintiff argues that even though she has not established a marriage, the trial court should have awarded her support, counsel fees, and costs pendente lite as a putative spouse by analogy to the rights of a legal spouse. Pendente lite relief is granted to a legal spouse by virtue of the provisions of sections 137.2 and 137.3, Civil Code. To be entitled to an award under these sections the petitioning party, as we have previously pointed out, must make a reasonably plain showing of the existence of the marriage for this is "a jurisdictional prerequisite" to the granting of such relief. Colbert v. Colbert, 28 Cal.2d 276, 279, 169 P.2d 633, 635. Since she is unable to meet this requirement there is no authority in the court to grant her pendente lite relief. This is simply one of the recognized differences between the rights of a legal spouse and a putative spouse. The fact that a putative spouse may be awarded an interest in the property accumulated during the putative marriage, by analogy to the community rights of a legal wife under the last cited code sections, does not strengthen her argument for pendente lite relief. The reasons for granting a putative spouse an interest in the accumulated property are to prevent the unjust enrichment of the other spouse and because of the contributive effort of the putative spouse. No such considerations are recognized in passing on an application for relief pendente lite by a putative spouse whose marriage occurred during the interlocutory period.

[8] Plaintiff argues that in any event the trial court should have awarded her attorney's fees and costs pendente lite under Civil Code section 87, which authorizes such relief in actions for annulment. She asserts that her complaint included an action for annulment and that defendant's pleadings show that he also sought an annulment. The ruling, of course, must be viewed as of the time it was made and on the then state of the record.

[9] It may well be that plaintiff's first amended complaint contained allegations indicating that she was entitled to an annulment but her pleading was not drawn upon that theory and she did not pray for such relief. She sought a declaration that the marriage was valid, separate maintenance, and damages, both actual and punitive, for defendant's fraud. Examination of the transcript (Rep. Tr. Vol. 2) of the hearing on the order to show cause fails to disclose any suggestion on behalf of plaintiff that she was entitled to counsel fees and costs pendente lite under section 87, Civil Code, on the theory that she was seeking an annulment. She is not entitled to have the order reversed upon this belated suggestion.

[10] In support of her theory, plaintiff points to the allegations and prayer of defendant's answer to her first amended complaint. He alleged that the marriage was void and requested the court to so declare. But the significant fact is that the answer was not filed until more than ten days after the hearing and ruling on plaintiff's order to show cause. Obviously she cannot rely on that pleading to determine the character of the action.

It is apparent that the order of May 29, 1952, denying plaintiff any relief pendente lite must be affirmed.

III. Appeal No. 20318

Upon denial of her request for pendente lite relief plaintiff appealed. She thereupon cited defendant on a new order to show cause re support pending appeal, and attorney's fees and costs with which to prosecute her appeal. The court denied her support but granted attorney's fees and costs on appeal. Plaintiff appealed from the order denying her support and defendant appealed from the order granting suit money.

A. Plaintiff's Appeal

[11] By stipulation, the evidence taken at the hearing on the pendente lite order to show cause was before the court on this hearing. No significant additional evidence on the questions of plaintiff's right to support was received. On this record the court denied plaintiff support pending appeal. What we said above in affirming the order denying plaintiff support pendente lite applies with equal force to the order denying her support pending appeal. For those reasons the order must be affirmed.

B. Defendant's Appeal

[12, 13] The reasons which impelled the trial court to deny suit money pendente lite are not controlling on an application for such relief pending appeal. While the trial judge of course believed his previous ruling was correct, he nevertheless realized it might be upset by a reviewing court. Plaintiff's attorney had advised her "on the basis of extensive research" that she had "good cause for appeal." The court was satisfied the appeal was taken in good faith. Plaintiff did not have the funds to finance the appeal. Defendant was amply able to provide them. In such circumstances it is not an abuse of discretion to award counsel fees and costs to enable the plaintiff to have the trial court's decision reviewed. Coleman v. Coleman, 23 Cal.App. 423, 426, 138 P. 362. Plaintiff, of course, "was not required to demonstrate that her appeal will be successful; she was only required to show to the satisfaction of the lower court that the appeal was taken in the belief, and upon the advice of her attorneys, that she had good grounds to expect a reversal * * *." Gay v. Gay, 146 Cal. 237, 240, 79 P. 885, 887. Plaintiff fully met this test. The court correctly awarded her suit money on appeal. The appeal from this order must be affirmed.

IV. Appeal No. 20236

[14–16] Following the granting of counsel fees and costs on appeal, defendant moved to vacate the order. His motion was denied. He attempted to appeal from this latter order. The earlier order awarding suit money was, of course, appealable and we have reviewed it above. An appeal from an order denying a motion to vacate an appealable order does not lie if the grounds upon which the moving party sought to have the order vacated existed before its entry and were available on appeal therefrom. Colbert v. Colbert, 28 Cal.2d 276, 281, 169 P.2d 633; Litvinuk v. Litvinuk, 27 Cal.2d 38, 44, 162 P.2d 8. This is the precise situation here involved. The order denying defendant's motion to vacate the order granting attorney's fees and costs is not appealable and the purported appeal therefrom must be dismissed.

V. The Appeals From The Judgment

The trial court in effect found that the quasi community property earned during the period the parties lived together, that is, from March 17, 1951, to September 22, 1952, was $58,574 and that after deducting the quasi community expense there was a balance of $10,052, all of which was awarded to plaintiff. Included in such expense and therefore deducted in arriving at the quasi community income was the sum of $7,200 which was expended by Sol during said period in the support of Annelen's minor children.

Annelen is dissatisfied with the amount awarded her on two grounds. In the first place, she contends she was entitled to an additional award to cover the reasonable value of the services she rendered during the period in question. Her second contention is that Sol should have borne the expense of maintaining her children and that such expense should not have been included in the quasi community expense, thus reducing the net quasi community income and ultimately the amount awarded to her.

Sol, on the other hand, argues that the quasi community income should terminate either on March 20, 1952, the date on which Annelen's attorney advised her that the validity of her marriage lay in the field of unsettled law, or, in any event, on May 29, 1952, at which time Judge Mosk, in denying relief pendente lite, stated from the bench in her presence that in his opinion the marriage was not valid.

A. Quasi Contractual Recovery Properly Refused

We turn first to Annelen's complaint that although the trial court found she had rendered substantial services to Sol in the belief that she was his wife, she was denied compensation for the value of her services. She argues that the right to recover quasi community property and the reasonable value of the putative spouse's services are not alternative but supplemental rights. This argument, it would seem, fails to take cognizance of certain inherent and fundamental considerations relating to the doctrine of putative marriages.

[17–20] Since no marriage de jure exists, there is no true community interest in property accumulated during the putative relationship of the parties as husband and wife. Coats v. Coats, 160 Cal. 671, 678, 118 P. 441, 36 L.R.A.,N.S., 844; Schneider v. Schneider, 183 Cal. 335, 341, 191 P. 533, 11 A.L.R. 1386. The correlative rights of the parties in such property derive from principles of equity and justice designed to effect a suitable division of property acquired through the joint efforts of both. Caldwell v. Odisio, 142 Cal.App.2d 732, 299 P.2d 14. To achieve this objective with optimum fairness, the rights of the parties are ordinarily assimilated to those subsisting under or incident to a valid marriage, and the property accumulated during the period of the communal venture is allocated in such proportion as the equities of the situation dictate. Turknette v. Turknette, 100 Cal.App.2d 271, 274–275, 223 P.2d 495; Vallera v. Vallera, 21 Cal. 2d 681, 683, 134 P.2d 761; Coats v. Coats, supra. The woman who is a good-faith party to an invalid marriage earns her interest by her wifely services regardless of her proportionate contribution towards the acquisition of the quasi community property. Vallera v. Vallera, supra; Santos v. Santos, 32 Cal.App.2d 62, 65–66, 89 P.2d 164; Macchi v. LaRocca, 54 Cal.App. 98, 201 P. 143; Caldwell v. Odisio, supra, 142 Cal.App.2d 732, 299 P.2d 14. Where the invalid marriage has been procured by the fraud of the de facto husband, and the wife has rendered services in the course of their cohabitation, it has been held that she is entitled to quasi contractual recovery of an amount equal to the value of her services over and above the value of the support and maintenance received from the supposed husband. Sanguinetti v. Sanguinetti, 9 Cal.2d 95, 100, 69 P.2d 845, 111 A.L.R. 342; Mixer v. Mixer, 2 Cal.App. 227, 83 P. 273; Marsh v. Marsh, 79 Cal.App. 560, 250 P. 411. See Lazzarevich v. Lazzarevich, 88 Cal.App.2d 708, 200 P.2d 49. In all these latter cases, such recovery is permitted where there is either no quasi community property or the accumulated property is so meager in amount that distribution thereof would not constitute adequate compensation for the wife under the circumstances. Implicit in these decisions, of course, is the concept that the man would be unjustly enriched if he were allowed to profit from the uncompensated services of a woman disappointed in her belief that she had the legitimate status of a wife. However, whether the award made to the woman is that of a suitable division of the accumulated property or damages based on the contract implied in law, the recovery allowed stems from her contribution of services as wife, homemaker and helpmate. The good-faith spouse enters not into a contract of employment but a relationship—not, unfortunately, the one she contemplated but yet analogous to the marital relation. The property acquired during this relation constitutes the fruit of the joint labors of the man and wife. Thus, where the allocation of the quasi community property provides a fair adjustment of the property rights between the spouses, it would be permitting a double recovery to compensate the wife in addition for the very services which have earned her the right to a share in the accumulations of the community. Such a result would transcend the restitutionary principles and distort the equitable foundations upon which have been established the doctrine of the putative spouse. When, therefore, as in this case, the spouse has received a substantial award of quasi community property in return for her conjugal contribution, and there is no showing of its inadequacy in relation to the value of her services, she is not entitled to receive in addition a quasi contractual recovery for services rendered. Not even a lawful wife possesses such rights.

However, as will be shown in the succeeding discussion, Annelen is not without other remedy by reason of Sol's fraud.

B—Nonsuit of Annelen's Fraud Count Improper

In the allegations of her first cause of action in her second amended complaint, Annelen set out facts purporting to state a cause of action against Sol for fraud in inducing her to enter what he represented was a valid marriage. The court found that Annelen was engaged to Sol and trusted him; that Sol represented to Annelen that if she married him in Mexico after obtaining an interlocutory decree of divorce in California the marriage would be valid everywhere; that Sol intended that Annelen should rely upon this representation and that she did so rely in marrying him; that Sol knew at all times that his marriage was not legal and that he intended from the beginning that his marriage with Annelen would be invalid; that as a result of this cohabitation, Annelen became pregnant and suffered a miscarriage which required medical treatment and surgery and caused her great pain and suffering. However, the court granted Sol's motion for nonsuit as to so much of the first cause of action which sought damages for Sol's fraud in inducing Annelen to enter into a void marriage. The court predicated its decision on the ground that the action was barred by section 43.5, subdivision (d), of the Civil Code, providing that a cause of action does not lie for "breach of promise of marriage."

[21] Annelen's cause of action, which sounds in tort and is an action for deceit for Sol's fraud in inducing her to enter the marriage relation, is not proscribed by section 43.5, subdivision (d), of the Civil Code. Langley v. Schumacher, 46 Cal.2d 601, 603, 297 P.2d 977. The Langley case concerned the right of one induced to enter a voidable marriage to bring a cause of action against her former spouse for fraud. In that case, plaintiff procured an annulment of her marriage based upon her complaint that defendant had fraudulently induced her to marry him by promising to maintain a normal marital relationship although he secretly intended not to consummate the marriage. After the annulment was granted, plaintiff commenced an action to recover damages for the fraud thus practiced upon her. She alleged she had resigned from a paying job to marry defendant and that the latter fraudulently represented he would cohabit with her in a normal marital relationship. It was held that plaintiff's complaint stated a cause of action for fraud for an injury to a property right.

[22] The instant case is more aggravated. The court found, in effect, that Annelen had been tricked by Sol into entering a void marriage. It is the prevailing American view that an innocent woman who is induced by fraud and deceit to contract a void marriage and subsequently cohabits with her putative spouse in performance of her supposed conjugal obligations is entitled to recover damages in an action for fraud. Jekshewitz v. Groswald, 265 Mass. 413, 164 N.E. 609, 62 A.L.R. 525; Sears v. Wegner, 150 Mich. 388, 114 N.W. 224, 14 L.R.A., N.S., 819; Larson v. McMillan, 99 Wash. 626, 170 P. 324; Morrill v. Palmer, 68 Vt. 1, 33 A. 829, 33 L.R.A. 411; Humphreys v. Baird, 197 Va. 667; Amsterdam v. Amsterdam, Sup., 56 N.Y.S.2d 19; Blossom v. Barrett, 37 N.Y. 434; Mashunkashey v. Mashunkashey, 189 Okl. 60, 113 P.2d 190; 2 Schouler on Marriage, Divorce, Separation & Domestic Relations, 6th Ed., sec. 1146, p. 1406. See Restatement of Torts, sec. 555. These authorities recognize that an innocent woman induced by misrepresentation to contract a void marriage suffers a wrong in the nature of a personal injury. A woman so imposed upon has undergone a radical change of status in the critical eye of organized society and has been enticed into a meritricious liaison with all the attendant personal humiliation, social obloquy and mental anguish accompanying such a situation. The principle upon which the authorities cited permit recovery of damages for fraudulently inducing one to enter a void marriage is recognized by way of obiter dicta in People v. Chadwick, 143 Cal. 116, 76 P. 884, a case in which defendant was prosecuted for sending a telegram to which he had forged the name of his fiancee's mother. The telegram induced in his fiancee, Norine Schneider, the belief that her mother had withdrawn her objection to Norine's marriage with defendant. It was contended on appeal that a marriage so induced did not constitute deceit since no financial loss would accrue to the person deceived. The court stated 143 Cal. at page 121, 76 P. at page 886: "Where, as in this case, a person is induced to change her status from that of an unmarried to that of a married woman, with all of the duties and obligations pertaining to the changed relationship, if this result is accomplished by deceit, she has, within the law, been deceived; she has been induced to do that which, but for the false practice, she would not have done, and has been led to change her position in most vital respects—respects which may affect her financially as certainly as they affect her social and domestic status." This is a wholesome principle. "The injury to one's person by the fraud of another is quite as serious as an injury to his pocketbook." Flaherty v. Till, 119 Minn. 191, 137 N.W. 815, 816.

We are in accord with the cases from other jurisdictions cited above which follow the line of reasoning expressed in Langley v. Schumacker, supra, and People v. Chadwick, supra, and hold that an action for deceit for fraudulently inducing a party to enter into a void marriage may be maintained. Considerations of public policy would not militate against recovery where the situation is such that no moral turpitude can be imputed to plaintiff and any illegal conduct on her part was induced solely by defendant's fraud. Mixer v. Mixer, 2 Cal. App. 227, 231, 83 P. 273. As stated in Work v. Campbell, 164 Cal. 343, 348, 128 P. 943, 945, 43 L.R.A.,N.S., 581; "It has been held that, where the fraudulent representation is intended to create and actually does create in the mind of the party a belief that under the circumstances represented the act which he is induced to do is neither illegal nor immoral, he may recover the damages he has sustained, even though a statute makes the act a criminal offense. [Citations.]"

[23, 24] Sol urges that Annelen, having accepted an award of quasi community property as a putative spouse, has made an election of remedies and may not also recover on the theory of fraud. It is settled that there are three essential elements of the doctrine of election of remedies, (a) the existence of two or more remedies, (b) inconsistency between the remedies, and (c) choice, with knowledge of the facts, of one of the remedies; and if any one of these elements is absent, the result of preclusion does not follow. Schumm v. Berg, 37 Cal.2d 174, 189–190, 231 P.2d 39, 21 A.L.R.2d 1051; Verder v. American Loan Society, 1 Cal.2d 17, 33, 32 P.2d 1081. It is clear that there is no inconsistency between a suit to settle the property rights between parties who have entered into a void marriage and an action for damages for fraudulently inducing one to enter the void marriage. In the first case, the putative spouse merely obtains an adjustment of property rights acquired during the existence of the quasi community, a right founded upon her status as a participant in a marital relationship in the good faith belief of its validity. Vallera v. Vallera, 21 Cal.2d 681, 683, 134 P.2d 761; In re Estate of Krone, 83 Cal.App.2d 766, 769, 189 P.2d 741. In the second case, she sues in tort for the redress of wrongs personal to herself,—for having been fraudulently induced to change here status and position, for humiliation, disgrace, or mental anguish sustained in entering a void, if not bigamous, marriage, for the value of the comfort, love and society she has bestowed on the putative husband, or, as appears in the case at bar, the physical injuries and suffering caused by her miscarriage during her pregnancy—all of which flow directly from the fraud perpetrated by defendant. Thus Annelen had two independent but consistent causes of action giving rise to distinct remedies which she was entitled to pursue. Bohn v. Watson, 130 Cal.App.2d 24, 36, 278 P.2d 454. In this connection, we deem it of interest to refer to section 555 of the Restatement of Torts, which reads: "One who by conscious misrepresentation that he is free to contract a lawful marriage or by a failure to disclose a bar thereto induces a woman to live with him as his wife is liable to the woman for any harm suffered because she has been induced to live with him in a meretricious relation." Comment (a): "Under the rule stated in section 152 of the Law of Restitution a woman who is induced to live with a man as his wife in reliance upon fraudulent misrepresentations that he is free to contract a lawful marriage or by his failure to disclose a bar thereto, is entitled to recover from the man the value of the services which she rendered during the continuance of the meretricious relationship. The rule stated in this Section gives to such a woman a right to recover, in addition, damages to compensate her for the humiliation which she has sustained and for the harm done to her social standing."

[25, 26] The court found that when Sol and Annelen were engaged to be married, Annelen reposed trust and confidence in him and relied on Sol's statement, which he knew to be false, that their marriage in Mexico would be valid everywhere. Where parties occupy a confidential relationship, deception as to the state of the law constitutes a fraudulent representation. Terry v. Bender, 143 Cal.App.2d 198, 300 P.2d 119. The record shows that Annelen justifiably relied on Sol's misrepresentations to her detriment. The essential elements of fraud thus appearing and there being no statutory bar to the action, we conclude, for the reasons discussed, that it was error to grant a nonsuit on the cause of action for fraud.

C—The Property and Support Agreement Unenforceable

One of Annelen's causes of action was to recover on an oral contract under which Sol agreed to divide his property with her and support her children if she married him. In this connection, Annelen testified that she and Mr. Seymon had an unsuccessful marriage and that she had contemplated divorce on two occasions. Her husband showed no affection for her and the children, according to her testimony, and did not work energetically enough to adequately support the family. In October, 1950, Sol and Annelen met for lunch, at which time Sol professed his love for her and promised that if she would marry him he would make her a partner in his business and take care of her children as though they were his own. Annelen told her husband of Sol's proposal and asked him to behave with greater affection and consideration so their 13-year marriage might survive. She testified Mr. Seymon brushed the matter off and remained indifferent as a husband and father. In February, 1951, she engaged an attorney with Sol's help and filed an action for divorce within four months after Sol's proposal. Shortly after the divorce action was filed, Sol advised Annelen to waive alimony and her rights in the community property and again promised that he would take care of her and her children and make her a partner in everything he had if she married him.

At the conclusion of Annelen's case in chief, the trial court granted a motion for nonsuit on Annelen's cause of action for recovery on this agreement, pronouncing the contract promotive of divorce and hence unenforceable as against public policy. Annelen appeals from this judgment. The appeal is without merit.

[27] It is the policy of this state to foster and protect marriages and to encourage spouses to live together, especially where there are minor children involved. Hill v. Hill, 23 Cal.2d 82, 93, 142 P.2d 417; Moss v. Moss, 20 Cal.2d 640, 128 P.2d 526, 141 A.L.R. 1422. In Moss v. Moss, supra, the Supreme Court held that an agreement supported by a consideration designed solely to effect the severance of the marriage relationship is abhorrent to public policy and therefore unenforceable. The authorities are uniform in support of the principle of refusing to sanction agreements which have a direct tendency toward dissolving marriages. The Restatement of Contracts encapsules this policy in two sections. Section 586 reads: "A bargain to obtain a divorce, or the effect of which is to facilitate a divorce, is illegal." Section 588 provides: "A bargain by a married person to marry another than his present spouse on the death or divorce of the latter is illegal." In 17 Am.Jur., sec. 14, p. 1756, we find the following statement: "The rule is well established that any agreement whether between husband and wife or between either and a third person intended to facilitate or promote procurement of a divorce, is contrary to public policy and void." (Italics added.)

[28, 29] This pronouncement of public policy is adhered to in this state. In Smith v. McPherson, 176 Cal. 144, 146, 167 P. 875, L.R.A.1918B, 66, a breach of promise case, the court said: "Appellant contends that, as the original promise of marriage was given by defendant at the time defendant was a married man, and must necessarily rest for its fulfillment upon the basic consideration of securing a divorce, the plaintiff's whole case must fall to the ground. It is unquestionably true that a promise given under such circumstances is against the manifest policy of the law, and therefore wholly void. [Citations.] Nor will this court in the slightest modify so salutary a principle." In Hillbert v. Kundicoff, 204 Cal. 485, 486, 268 P. 905, the court reiterated this rule, citing Smith v. McPherson with approval. That this is the prevailing rule appears from numerous cases including the Smith case, cited in an annotation in 130 A.L.R. 1008. One of the reasons for holding void agreements of this class is pointed out by the annotator at page 1011, where he says, "* * * the fact that such an agreement encourages divorce is obvious."

Such being the settled law, the trial court correctly refused to enforce the contract sub judice. Patently the agreement between Sol and Annelen was intended to encourage the obtaining of a divorce and was necessarily promotive of the dissolution of the marriage relationship between Annelen and her husband. It was manifestly aimed at stimulating Annelen to divorce Seymon, for unless she bent her energies to obtain a divorce she could not marry Sol, and only by her success in obtaining such a result would she be free to marry Sol and receive the benefits of the contract. The natural and inevitable tendency of such a contract as that between Annelen and Sol is the destruction of a marital relationship. It must therefore receive the disapprobation of the courts.

[30] Annelen seeks to avoid the impact of these principles by reliance on Smith v. McPherson, supra, asserting that Sol renewed his promise shortly after she filed her action for divorce based on a fully matured cause of action. However, in the Smith case, the promises were renewed years after defendant was divorced and his former wife had remarried and when there was no obstacle to marriage. In the instant case, when Sol allegedly renewed the promise, in February, 1951, Annelen was still married to Seymon, with only a divorce complaint on file. There was still time for them to compose their differences and become reconciled as they did in 1942 and in 1947. The possibility of a reconciliation between a husband and wife after separation should not be inhibited or frustrated by the conduct of third parties. When a stranger to the marriage commits himself to an obligation in the wife's favor conditioned upon dissolution of her existing marriage relationship such an agreement is repugnant to the public interest and against the public policy of this state. It can hardly be doubted that the arrangement between Sol and Annelen precipitated the destruction of the latter's existing conjugal relationship. Annelen moved to sunder a marriage of 13-years' standing within four months after first hearing Sol's beguiling proposal. Annelen's release from the trammels of a current marriage being the sine qua non of the contract sued upon, it was clearly obnoxious as a bargain between a third party and a married person in derogation of the latter's marriage status.

[31] There is no merit to the additional argument that the contract is enforceable at least to the extent of requiring Sol to support Annelen's children, who were not parties to the unlawful contract. It plainly appears that the contract sued upon was entire and indivisible, each and every part being material and nonseverable. The essence of the agreement was that Annelen divorce Seymon and marry Sol. This underlying illegality of the bargain tainted the transaction as a whole, making no part of its obligations enforceable. Heaps v. Toy, 54 Cal.App.2d 178, 128 P.2d 813,—in which a contract for support of plaintiff and her children was held unenforceable in its entirety because founded on a consideration against public policy; Prost v. More, 40 Cal. 347, 348; Conte v. Busby, 115 Cal.App. 732, 734, 2 P.2d 458.

The cases relied on by Annelen do not uphold agreements in any sense similar to the one here involved. In Howard v. Adams, 16 Cal.2d 253, 105 P.2d 971, 130 A.L.R. 1003, plaintiff contemplated a divorce from her husband in California. Plaintiff's aunt, fearful that the publicity might injure her business and social connections, promised to support plaintiff and her children if plaintiff procured her divorce in Nevada instead of California. By doing so, plaintiff could not obtain alimony and child support from her husband. The agreement of the aunt was enforced. It did not have divorce as its object, but rather the situs of a divorce already decided upon. Hill v. Hill, 23 Cal.2d 82, 142 P.2d 417, announces the proposition that a property settlement agreement between spouses contemplating a divorce upon failure of their marriage is not a contract contra bonos mores. Krieger v. Bulpitt, 40 Cal.2d 97, 251 P.2d 673, was a case in which defendant, who had been sued for divorce, engaged plaintiffs as his attorneys in defending the action. The fee was contingent on the value of the property obtained for defendant. The court upheld this agreement because "it did not have for its object the dissolution of a marriage. Rather * * * plaintiffs undertook the defense of a divorce action already instituted by the client's wife and the rendition of services for the protection of his interests upon any division of the community property." 40 Cal.2d at page 100, 251 P.2d at page 674. In Norman v. Burks, 93 Cal. App.2d 687, 209 P.2d 815, plaintiff and his wife had entered into a property settlement agreement and the wife had commenced a divorce action. At this time plaintiff and defendant, a young woman, became very friendly and plaintiff caused title to a dwelling and expensive furnishings to be placed in her name. However, defendant advised plaintiff she was marrying another man—and did so. Plaintiff sued for recovery of the house, furnishings and a ring he had given defendant. He prevailed on the theory that defendant held the property for plaintiff, who had paid therefor, on a resulting trust. It is clear none of these cases is analogous to the instant one, which directly precipitated divorce proceedings and induced permanent estrangement of Annelen and her husband.

D—Support of Children a Proper Community Expense

The simple answer to Annelen's argument that Sol should have borne the expense of supporting her children out of his separate property is that they were not his children, and he was therefore under no legal duty to support them. They were her children and, as between her and Sol, the obligation to support her children was hers.

[32, 33] The children were, of course, a part of the family. Their maintenance was therefore a family expense. "Unless the contrary is shown, 'the law presumes that money used in the maintenance of the family is drawn from community funds before there is encroachment on separate property.'" Logan v. Forster, 114 Cal.App.2d 587, 601–602, 250 P.2d 730, 738; In re Estate of Tompkins, 123 Cal.App. 670, 675, 11 P.2d 886; In re Estate of Cudworth, 133 Cal. 462, 468, 65 P. 1041. The court obviously followed this rule in charging the maintenance of the children to quasi community expense. There was no error in the court's ruling on this aspect of the case.

[34] Plaintiff complains because the judgment did not award her support, attorneys' fees and costs. We need not elaborate on this point in view of our previous discussion. Suffice it to say here that the decision is proper since it was established at the trial on the merits that the marriage was void from its inception. Civil Code sec. 61(1); Rediker v. Rediker, 35 Cal.2d 796, 808, 221 P.2d 1, 20 A.L.R.2d 1152. She failed to establish the jurisdictional prerequisite for such relief. See Colbert v. Colbert, 28 Cal.2d 276, 169 P.2d 633.

E. Sol's Appeal from Portion of Judgment

[35] The trial court found that "at all times from and after March 17, 1951, to and including September 22, 1952, plaintiff believed in good faith that she was legally married to defendant." The trial court therefore used this period as the basis for determining the amount of quasi community property. Sol contends, however, that the evidence does not support this finding. His first argument is that Annelen could not entertain such belief after the conference with her attorney on March 20, 1952, at which time he advised her that the validity of her marriage lay in an unsettled area of the law. Her attorney also advised her that "he thought he could establish an estoppel operating against defendant" and thus establish the validity of the marriage. When cross-examined with reference to her attorney's advice, she testified, "I took his word for it." Whether, following this conference, she believed in good faith she and Sol were legally married was a question of fact. In view of her attorney's advice and her reliance on him it was a reasonable inference that she believed in good faith that they were legally married. Certainly we cannot say, as a matter of law, that she did not so believe after that interview.

Sol argues that, in any event, there is no evidence to sustain the finding of Annelen's bona fide belief in the validity of the marriage after she heard Judge Mosk declare from the bench that she and Sol were not and never had been legally married on May 29, 1952, when the judge denied her any pendente lite relief. It will be noted, however, that she filed notice of appeal from the order five days after it was made. Upon being cross-examined about her knowledge that the judge had expressed the opinion that the marriage was not valid she stated: "I believed at the time I could prove my marriage to be valid * * *." Not without significance is the fact that at the hearing on the order to show cause in August, 1952, the judge conceded the possibility that he might be in error and that his previous ruling might be upset on appeal; determined that the appeal was taken in good faith; and ordered Sol to pay counsel fees and costs for its prosecution. On cross-examination of plaintiff the Reporter's Transcript discloses the following:

> "Q. Nevertheless, despite the fact that you filed this lawsuit against Mr. Spellens, you continued to have sexual intercourse with Mr. Spellens? That is correct, is it not?
>
> "A. Yes, because in my way of thinking, we were married.
>
>
> "Q. And that continued for some months, did it not?
>
> "A. Yes."

During the course of the trial on March 4, 1953, Annelen testified: "I am still sure I am married to Mr. Spellens." These facts and circumstances and this testimony amply support the finding that Annelen believed in good faith that she and Sol were legally married up to the date of their final separation on September 22, 1952.

VI. Support and Suit Money on Appeal from Judgment

[36] Following the entry of judgment, plaintiff sought an order for support pending her appeal from the judgment and counsel fees and costs with which to prosecute such appeal. Her request was denied in its entirety. She appealed from that order (Civ. No. 20987). The case having been tried on its merits and the invalidity of the marriage from its inception having been established, the ruling of the court was correct. As previously noted in connection with a similar request on the part of plaintiff, she failed to establish the jurisdictional prerequisite for such relief. See Dietrich v. Dietrich, supra, 41 Cal.2d 497, 502, 261 P.2d 269.

[37] Furthermore, plaintiff previously had been allowed suit money to test the correctness of the court's preliminary order which denied her pendente lite relief. Implicit in that appeal was the validity of the marriage. That question is the heart of her appeal from the judgment. To have allowed her suit money on appeal from the judgment would be to provide her with such funds twice to test the same question. This order must, therefore, be affirmed.

VII. Annelen's Appeal Re Costs

In a proceeding after judgment, Sol moved to re-tax costs. His motion was directed to an item of $220.60 which Annelen had paid for the reporter's transcript of the proceedings for a certain period. Such an item was taxable if the court had made an order therefor. The only question was whether in fact such an order had been made during the course of the trial, which took place almost a year previous to the hearing. Counsel for defendant mistakenly represented to the court that no such order was made. Counsel for plaintiff was under the mistaken belief that the court had not formally ordered the transcript. The judge also had apparently forgotten the making of the order. As a consequence, costs were re-taxed, eliminating the item in question.

The mistake was discovered when plaintiff's attorney received copies of the minute orders of the trial prepared for the appellate record. These minutes were received by counsel on July 16, 1954. An entry on July 17, 1953, stated: "A daily transcript is ordered." Annelen promptly moved, under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, to be relieved of the order taken against her by mistake and inadvertence. The motion was made well within the six months' period required by law. At the hearing the court stated: "If the law permits, the court is presently disposed to correct what appears to be an error, in view of the minute order. If it does not permit, the motion will be denied." The court accepted the minute order as correct.

Counsel present the question of whether this was a judicial error, or one due to inadvertence or mistake. Regardless of what the law may be as to correction of judicial errors in this manner, it appears that the ruling operates upon a mistake of fact entertained by both counsel as well as the judge and the motion should have been granted.

[38] The record is clear that counsel for both parties mistakenly believed no order had actually been made for a transcript and the matter had inadvertently escaped the judge's mind. Consequently, the order was the result of inadvertence and mistake of fact. A party may have relief in equity from the consequences of his mistake of fact. Vartanian v. Croll, 117 Cal.App.2d 639, 646, 256 P.2d 1022; Soule v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 495, 497, 89 P. 324. And where he would be entitled to such relief in an independent suit in equity he would have made sufficient showing for relief on a motion under section 473. Vartanian v. Croll, supra.

Watkins v. McCartney, 70 Cal.App. 137, 232 P. 982, is somewhat analogous to the case at bar in that the court made an order unaware of a prior order made by another judge. On August 5 Judge Willis ordered that a writ of execution issue; on August 8, Judge Reeve ordered that the writ of restitution be recalled. On August 9 Judge Reeve ordered that "The order heretofore inadvertently entered on August 8, 1922, is hereby vacated and set aside and the order of August 5, 1922, is restored to full force and effect * * *." The "inadvertence" referred to "arose out of the fact that Judge Reeve did not know and was not advised at the time of signing the order of August 8th that relief of similar effect had been denied by Judge Willis on August 5th." 70 Cal.App. at pages 142–143, 232 P. at page 984. The court held that the facts entirely justified the order of August 9th and that it was in the proper exercise of the court's discretion.

[39, 40] The fact that the order taxing costs was appealable does not preclude the court from setting it aside under section 473. Harth v. Ten Eyck, 16 Cal.2d 829, 832, 108 P.2d 675.

The order denying plaintiff's motion to set aside the court's previous order retaxing costs in the sum of $220.60 for the reporter's transcript must be reversed with directions to grant plaintiff's motion.

VIII. The Claim and Delivery and Abuse of Process Judgment

[41] On about December 3, 1952, following the final separation of the parties, Sol, on the advice of his counsel at that time, brought a claim and delivery action to recover a Cadillac automobile in Annelen's possession as well as certain furniture and furnishings located in Annelen's residence (which they had formerly occupied as putative spouses). Issue as to the ownership of this property had been joined by these parties in their domestic relations action which was then pending and awaiting trial. In the caption of the claim and delivery complaint Annelen was designated as "Annelen Seymon." At the same time, Sol caused a writ of claim and delivery to be issued directing the Sheriff of Los Angeles County to take possession of the property in question.

Deputies from the sheriff's office came to Annelen's residence at approximately 9:00 a. m. and served her with the writ. They then proceeded to place their seal upon the Cadillac and commenced an inventory of the furnishings. Sol and his attorney visited the premises while these events were taking place. Sol told Annelen she could retain the property if she would abandon the domestic relations proceedings in which the parties were involved. However, Annelen immediately notified her counsel of the attempted removal. Shortly thereafter, Annelen's attorney obtained an order of court restraining further proceedings on the claim and delivery writ pending trial of the domestic relations action. The order was served on the deputies at about 12:30 p. m., following which they left the premises.

Five days later, Annelen filed her answer to Sol's claim and delivery action, as well as a cross-complaint, later amended, for damages on the theory of abuse of process.

The trial court, after finding the facts above recited, also found that the furniture was community property and that the Cadillac was the separate property of Annelen. It found (1) that Sol acted maliciously in causing the issuance of the writ of claim and delivery knowing that the question of title to the property was in issue in the marital proceeding; (2) that his designation of Annelen as "Annelen Seymon" in the claim and delivery action was the only occasion since the putative marriage in which Sol described her otherwise than by the name Annelen Spellens and the use of such nomenclature was likely to mislead, so that it would not be known that the same property was in issue between the parties in the domestic relations action; and (3) that one of Sol's purposes in the use of the writ was to compel Annelen to give up the said action.

The court further found that by reason of Sol's conduct, Annelen suffered mental anguish, emotional shock and embarrassment and was so damaged in the sum of $500; that Sol was guilty of oppression and malice in abusing the process of court in connection with the writ of claim and delivery, entitling Annelen to $1,000 as exemplary damages; and that Annelen was forced to incur attorney's fees both to obtain the restraining order and in defending the claim and delivery action, the reasonable value of which was $1,500.[4] Judgment was

4. Annelen's counsel testified (1) that the value of his services in connection with entered against Sol on the claim and delivery action and for Annelen on her amended cross-complaint in the amount of $3,000, consisting of $500 actual damages, $1,000 exemplary damages, and $1,500 attorney fees.

One further proceeding need be noted. At the time he procured the writ of claim and delivery, Sol deposited a cash undertaking in the sum of $16,000. After entry of the judgment, Sol moved to exonerate the undertaking. The court ordered exoneration only to the extent of $12,000, and directed the release of this amount.

In connection with his appeal from the above judgment, Sol contends, in effect, that he is entitled to a return of his undertaking since there was no "taking" of property by the sheriff which would authorize recovery on the undertaking. He contends that Annelen's possession of the chattels to which the writ was directed was never disturbed. This argument cannot prevail in the light of the evidence. The record discloses that the sheriff's deputies entered Annelen's residence and took control of her automobile by placing the seal of their office upon it. By so doing, they physically exerted their official dominion over this property and brought it into custodia legis. Until it was redelivered upon divestment of the sheriff's control, it was in his keeping and Annelen was ousted of her immediate right to possession. This constitutes a sufficient taking within the meaning of the claim and delivery statute, section 512 of the Code of Civil Procedure. See Prescott v. Farquhar, 135 Cal.App. 469, 27 P.2d 390.

Lamb v. National Surety Co., 108 Cal. App. 297, 291 P. 647, is obviously inapplicable. In that case the sheriff at no time made any attempt to take possession of the property. As stated at page 299 of 108 Cal. App., at page 648 of 291 P.: "No affidavit or demand was deposited with or delivered to the sheriff, nor did the latter at any time have possession of the car." In this case, Sol directed the sheriff to take the property described in the complaint, and the sheriff did, in fact, affix the indicia of his office to the car and assumed control over it. He did not relinquish such control until served with the restraining order.

[42, 43] The point next presented is a consideration of the appeal from the judgment in Annelen's favor founded on Sol's alleged abuse of process. An examination of the authorities discloses that the gravamen of the action is established when there has been a perversion of court processes to achieve some objective which the process was not intended by law to accomplish or which seeks to compel the party against whom it is used to do some collateral thing which he could not legally be compelled to do. Tranchina v. Arcinas, 78 Cal.App.2d 522, 524–525, 178 P.2d 65. As noted in the Restatement of Torts, section 682, and cited with approval in the Tranchina case, supra, the action will lie even though the process has been validly issued upon proof of an ulterior purpose and a wilful act in the use of the process not proper in the regular conduct of the proceeding. These principles are supported by a wealth of authorities. Hall v. Field Enterprises, D.C.Mun. App., 94 A.2d 479; Italian Star Line v. U. S. Shipping Bd. E. F. Corp., 2 Cir., 53 F.2d 359, 80 A.L.R. 576; Ash v. Cohn, 119 N.J.L. 54, 194 A. 174; Dean v. Kochendorfer, 237 N.Y. 384, 143 N.E. 229; Ellis v. Millen Hotel Co., 192 Ga. 66, 14 S.E.2d 565; Coplea v. Bybee, 290 Ill.App. 117, 8 N.E.2d 55; 3 Restatement of Torts, sec. 682. In the second edition of his thesis on Torts, Dean Prosser epitomizes the matter thus: "The essential elements of abuse of process, as the tort has developed, has been stated to be: first, an ulterior purpose and second, a wilful act in the use of the process not proper in the regular conduct of the proceeding * * * The improper purpose usually takes the form of coercion to obtain a collateral advantage, not properly involved in the proceeding itself * * * by the use of the process as a threat or a club. There is, in other words, a form of extortion, and it is what is done in the course of negotiation, rather than the issuance or any use of the process itself, which constitutes the tort." (Pp. 668–669.)

the obtaining of a restraining order against the sheriff were reasonably worth $500; and (2) his services in contesting Sol's claim and delivery action were reasonably worth $1,000.

[44–50] Applying these tests and the law stated in the Tranchina case, supra, it becomes unnecessary even to dwell on the circumstances, however worthy of stricture, that in procuring the writ, Sol designated Annelen under the surname "Seymon" and acted at a time when title to the property was in issue in a separate proceeding. Assuming the writ was properly issued, the trial court was justified in concluding that Sol had misused the legal process of the court. The trial court found that one of Sol's purposes in procuring the writ of claim and delivery was to cause Annelen to discontinue her domestic relations action. The employment of such writ as an instrumentality for exerting pressure to obtain a collateral advantage to which a party is not legally entitled is precisely the type of coercive conduct which the cases have denounced as the use of legal process for an improper purpose. Sol's misuse of the provisional remedy of claim and delivery by attempting to accomplish a result not lawfully obtainable under it constituted an abuse of the process of the law and was actionable as such in view of the injury caused. "Once the tort is proved, the damages recoverable are in general much the same as in cases of malicious prosecution." (Prosser on Torts (2d ed.), p. 669.) Damages recoverable for abuse of process are compensatory for the harm proximately flowing from the wrong and recompense for special damage such as mental suffering is a legitimate element of damage. Adelman v. Rosenbaum, 133 Pa.Super. 386, 3 A.2d 15, 17; Saliem v. Glovsky, 132 Me. 402, 172 A. 4, 8; 1 Am.Jur., sec. 38, p. 41. Counsel fees incurred in attempting to protect one's self from an abuse of process is likewise a proper item of damage, Barnett v. Reed, 51 Pa. 190; 72 C.J.S., Process, § 124, p. 1203, but only to the extent that such expense relates to services required to obtain relief from the misused process. See Stevens v. Chisholm, 179 Cal. 557, 178 P. 128. In the case at bar, Annelen's counsel testified that $500 was the reasonable value of his services in connection with his procurement of a restraining order against further proceedings under the writ. However, the court, in addition to allowing this amount as damages, also awarded counsel fees of $1,000. This award was the expense incurred in defending the claim and delivery action. This was error, since the defense of the principal action was not required to relieve Annelen from the effects of the process, which had been fully accomplished under the restraining order. Attorney's fees may not be awarded as damages in actions for the recovery of personal property. LeFave v. Dimond, 46 Cal.2d 868, 870, 299 P.2d 858. In addition to compensatory damages, the court awarded $1,000 as exemplary damages. Under Civil Code section 3294, punitive damages may be awarded where malice, fraud, or oppression exists. Livesey v. Stock, 208 Cal. 315, 321, 281 P. 70; Alterauge v. L. A. Turf Club, 97 Cal. App.2d 735, 739, 218 P.2d 802. In view of the finding that Sol was actuated by malice and was guilty of oppression in abusing the process of the court, the court was warranted in assessing exemplary damages.

The judgment in this matter should be modified by reducing the amount allowed for attorney's fees by $1,000, and as so modified affirmed.

IX. Disposition of Appeals

The appeal from the order denying defendant's motion to vacate the order of August 29, 1952, awarding plaintiff attorney's fees and costs on appeal is dismissed (Civil No. 20236).

The order re-taxing costs is reversed with directions to grant plaintiff's motion (Civil No. 21015).

The judgment (SMD–9365) is reversed with directions to determine the single question of whether the fraud (already found) damaged plaintiff more than the amount awarded to her as quasi community property, and, if so, to increase the recovery by such excess, but no more, and to enter a new judgment accordingly (Civil No. 20975).

The judgment in Civil No. 20986 (Claim and Delivery and abuse of process—Superior Court No. 606810) is modified by reducing the award for attorney's fees from $1,500 to $500 and correspondingly reducing the amount of the judgment from $3,000 to $2,000. As so modified the judgment is affirmed.

All other orders appealed from are affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, acting BY AND THROUGH THE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

J. P. LOUBET COMPANY, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 5502.

District Court of Appeal,
Fourth District, California.
Jan. 14, 1957.

The State brought action against owner of truck for damages for destruction of bridge, which was struck by truck in accident in which both truck driver and his helper were killed. The Superior Court of Riverside County, John G. Gabbert, J., entered judgment for the owner of the truck, and the State appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that evidence sustained the verdict for the owner of the truck.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Death ⇐58(1)

In action by the State against owner of truck for damages for destruction of bridge, which was struck by truck in accident in which both truck driver and his helper were killed, owner of truck was entitled to presumption of due care on part of truck driver.

2. Bridges ⇐27

In action by the State against owner of truck for damages for destruction of bridge, which was struck by truck in accident in which both truck driver and his helper were killed, evidence sustained verdict for owner of truck.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐1050(1)

In action by the State against owner of truck for damages for destruction of bridge, which was struck by truck in accident in which both truck driver and his helper were killed, admission of testimony that truck driver had worked for his father hauling hay for three or four years was not prejudicial error.

4. Bridges ⇐27

In action by the State against owner of truck for damages for destruction of bridge, which was struck by truck in accident in which both truck driver and his helper were killed, the competency or incompetency of the truck driver or his reputation for care was not the proper subject of inquiry.

5. Witnesses ⇐319

Where statement of defendant's witness was stricken out by the trial court, and jury was instructed to treat the statement as if jury had never heard it, trial court did not err in denying plaintiff right to impeach the witness with respect to such statement.

6. Bridges ⇐27

In action by the State against owner of truck for damages for destruction of bridge, which was struck by truck in accident in which both truck driver and his helper were killed, question whether truck driver was negligent was to be determined by facts existing at time of accident, and it was immaterial whether he had a license to drive the truck when no causal relationship between the accident and the failure to have such a license existed.

George C. Hadley and Richard L. Franck, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Shaw & Barnett, Riverside, for respondent.

MUSSELL, Justice.

This is an action brought by the State of California to recover damages for the destruction of one of its bridges, alleged to have been caused by defendant's truck and trailer. The first trial of the action resulted in a verdict for plaintiff. A new trial was granted on all issues and a second trial resulted in a verdict for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment thereupon entered for defendant.

The bridge involved was located on United States Highway 99, about 18 miles south of Indio, in Riverside county. The concrete highway at that point runs generally north and south, is straight and level, and there is no obstructed visibility for a considerable distance north and south of the bridge.

Defendant's truck and trailer, loaded with approximately 22 tons of baled hay, left an inspection station approximately 35 miles south of the bridge at about 11:30 p. m. on the night of January 20, 1950. The driver, Sidney Charles Thomas, and his helper, Cruz Gomez, were driving the truck and trailer in a northerly direction on highway 99 when the truck gradually crossed the center line of the highway into the southbound traffic lane, ran into the oiled shoulder of the highway, collided with the southwest wing of the bridge and rolled off the bank into the stream bed. The trailer came to rest on its wheels and the truck was upside down. When the California Highway Patrol officers arrived at the scene, approximately one hour after midnight, they found the bridge, its understructure, the truck, the trailer and the baled hay all burning. The fire burned for several hours and was finally put out by the Division of Forestry. The driver of the truck, Sidney Charles Thomas, and his helper, Cruz Gomez, were both dead when the officers arrived and there were no eyewitnesses to the accident. The bridge was destroyed as a useable structure and this action was brought to recover the replacement cost thereof.

[1] Appellant contends that the verdict is not supported by proper evidence; that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable and that the negligence of defendant is therefore inferred. However, since the driver of the truck and his helper were both killed in the accident, defendant was entitled to the presumption of due care. In Scott v. Burke, 39 Cal.2d 388, 398, 399, 247 P.2d 313, 319, the court, in discussing the weight to be given to inferences and presumptions, said:

> "The res ipsa loquitur doctrine raises 'an inference of negligence, not a presumption.' (Anderson v. I. M. Jameson Corp. (1936), 7 Cal.2d 60, 66, 59 P.2d 962.) However, just as either an inference or a presumption may outweigh positive evidence adduced against it by the opposing party, so may either outweigh the other; i. e., it is for the trier of fact to determine under the circumstances of each case whether to give greater weight to an inference than to a disputable presumption which conflicts therewith, or vice versa. * * * Thus, it may be stated as a legal concept that it was for the jury, in the light of all the circumstances of the case in evidence before them, to determine whether greater weight should be given to the res ipsa loquitur inference or to the presumptions of innocence and due care which conflicted with such inference. More accurately what that legal concept means—and exactly what its application in the instant case means—is this: That under appropriate circumstances, such as appear in this case, both the res ipsa loquitur inference and the disputable presumptions of innocence and due care are elements tending towards proof to be considered by the trier of facts; and that it is the function of the trier of facts to determine in the light of all the evidence in the case, including the opposing inferences and presumptions, whether the proof preponderates in favor of one party and against another, or is evenly balanced, and thereupon to resolve the issues in accordance with the rules relating to the burden of proof."

[2] In the instant case it was the function of the jury to determine, in the light of all the evidence in the case, including the opposing inferences and presumptions whether the proof preponderated in favor of one party and against the other or was evenly balanced, and to resolve the issues in accordance to the rules relating to the burden of proof. Plaintiff contends that the evidence is consistent with its theory that the driver of the truck was either asleep or negligently inattentive. However, evidence was introduced showing the activities of the driver and his helper during several hours prior to the accident and the jury could infer therefrom that the driver was not asleep at the time of the accident. The record is silent as to what caused the truck to cross to the west side of the highway and strike the bridge, and we cannot hold that the verdict of the jury was unsupported by the evidence under the circumstances shown.

[3, 4] Appellant contends that the court erred in admitting testimony as to the past experience of Sidney Charles Thomas as a truck driver. In this connection, Bernard Loubet, one of the partners of defendant company, testified that Thomas and Gomez were working for him in 1950; that Thomas had been an employee about four months and Gomez for ten years; that he had known Thomas practically all his life and that Thomas worked for his (Thomas') father as a truck driver; that Gomez had about 15 to 18 years experience as a truck driver. A witness, Cummins, testified that he had known Thomas for many years and that Thomas had worked for his (Thomas') father hauling hay for three or four years. It does not appear that the admission of the testimony that Thomas had worked for his father hauling hay for three or four years amounted to prejudicial error. In Towle v. Pacific Improvement Co., 98 Cal. 342, 33 P. 207, 208, cited by plaintiff, the judgment in favor of the defendant was reversed because of error in admitting evidence that defendant's employee "was a good, first-class driver, careful in handling horses, and that during the four years he had been in the employ of defendant he had never been guilty of any mismanagement or carelessness in the conduct or care of the team." While the rule is in actions of this kind that the competency or incompetency of the truck driver or his reputation for care is not the subject of inquiry, there was no testimony in the instant case as to whether Thomas was a first-class driver or that he had at other times been careful or careless in the handling of trucks.

[5, 6] Appellant further contends that it was denied its right to impeach and rebut respondent's witness Loubet when on cross-examination he volunteered the information that the deceased driver had a chauffeur's license at the time of the accident. This statement of the witness was stricken out by the court and the jury was instructed to treat it as if they had never heard it. Furthermore, the negligence of the driver is to be determined by the facts existing at the time of the accident and it was immaterial whether he had a license to operate the truck when no causal relationship between the accident and the failure to have such a license existed. Strandt v. Cannon, 29 Cal.App.2d 509, 518, 85 P.2d 160.

The judgment is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 10, 1957.

Defendant was charged with the crime of petty theft with a prior conviction of felony. Judgment of conviction in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Allen T. Lynch, J., and the defendant appeals. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that record did not indicate that prior conviction which the trial court ordered stricken was the same prior conviction charged in the information in connection with petty theft thereby reducing the offense therein charged to a misdemeanor.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1202(3)

In prosecution for petty theft with a prior conviction of a felony of issuing checks without sufficient funds, record did not indicate that prior conviction which the trial court ordered stricken was the same prior conviction charged in the information in connection with petty theft, thereby reducing the offense therein charged to a misdemeanor. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 667, 3024.

2. Criminal Law ⇐641

In prosecution for petty theft, record did not indicate that public defender failed to subpoena certain witnesses when requested so to do by the defendant.

John E. O'Malley, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, defendant was accused in Count I of the crime of petty theft with a prior conviction of a felony, to wit, issuing checks without sufficient funds, Penal Code, Sec. 667. The information charged the unlawful taking by defendant of the sum of $12 from Mr. and Mrs. Emerson Young, and that prior to the commission of the offenses therein set forth, defendant was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County of the crime of issuing check without sufficient funds. That judgment thereon was pronounced May 29, 1931, pursuant to which defendant served a term of imprisonment in Folsom State Prison. The information also contained five additional counts charging burglary (Count II); petty theft with a prior conviction of felony (Count III); burglary (Count IV); petty theft with a prior conviction of felony (Count V); and burglary (Count VI). It was also charged that before the commission of the foregoing offenses, defendant was convicted in the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles of the crime of forgery, a felony. That judgment thereon was pronounced against defendant on February 1, 1923, pursuant to which he served a term of imprisonment in the State Prison.

Defendant pleaded not guilty as to the offenses charged in all six counts of the information and denied the alleged prior convictions.

Following trial before the court sitting without a jury, defendant was found guilty of the offense charged in Count I, and not guilty on Counts II, III, IV, V, and VI. On motion of the district attorney the prior conviction of the crime of forgery upon which judgment was pronounced on February 1, 1923, was ordered stricken. From the judgment of conviction on Count I, defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Since the only ground urged for a reversal of the judgment presents a question of law it becomes unnecessary to set forth the factual background surrounding this prosecution.

When appellant received the formal and usual notice that the record on appeal had been lodged in this court and advising him of the time within which he should file his opening brief, he wrote to this court requesting that a document which he denominated "Petition Submitted in My Appeal" be considered "as my charges and the basis of my appeal". In said communication he also requested that this court appoint counsel to represent him on appeal, stating that he was without funds or property with which to employ an attorney. Pursuant to such request this court appointed a member of the Bar to represent appellant. Appointed counsel, after an examination of the record, advised this court that he "could find no meritorious ground upon which to present a brief on appeal".

We have therefore, painstakingly examined the record on appeal and find ourselves in accord with the conclusion reached by appointed counsel that appellant's contentions made in the foregoing "Petition" cannot be sustained.

[1] As a first ground for reversal of the judgment appellant contends that the prior conviction which the trial court ordered stricken was the same prior conviction charged in Count I of the information in connection with the charge of petty theft, thereby reducing the offense therein charged to a misdemeanor (petty theft), and that the court therefore, erroneously adjudged appellant guilty of petty theft with a prior felony conviction, a felony.

Recourse to the record however does not sustain appellant in his contention, because it reveals that the prior conviction of a felony charged in Count I was conviction of issuing checks without sufficient funds in 1931. Documentary evidence of this conviction of a prior felony was introduced by the plaintiff. (People's Exhibit No. 1.) The prior conviction which was stricken was the conviction of the crime of forgery, a felony, on or about the 1st day of February, 1923, and was a different and separate prior from the one alleged as part of the substantive crime in Count I. Hence, it appears from the record and exhibits that the prior conviction which the court ordered stricken was the prior that was alleged under the provisions of Penal Code, Section 3024—to increase the time of appellant's imprisonment, and was a separate and distinct prior from that which was alleged as part of the substantive crime in Count I. Such prior would not increase the time of imprisonment where the charge was petty theft with a prior conviction, which was evidently what the district attorney had in mind when he moved to dismiss the prior conviction of forgery, judgment on which was rendered February 1, 1923. See In re Boatwright, 216 Cal. 677, 682, 683, 15 P.2d 755.

[2] Finally, appellant contends that his counsel, the Public Defender, failed to subpoena certain witnesses when requested so to do by appellant. We find nothing in the record to support this contention, and our examination of the record on appeal reveals that appellant's counsel handled his defense both ably and energetically.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

In the Matter of the ESTATE of Luella J. SANDERS, etc., Deceased.

Patricia J. RADICE, Petitioner and Appellant,

v.

Emory V. SANDERS, as Administrator W.W.A., Respondent.

Civ. 5275.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 7, 1957.

Petition seeking the removal of an administrator of the estate of deceased on the ground that the marriage of the administrator and the deceased was void because of a prior existing marriage in that an Oklahoma divorce decree did not terminate the marriage relation between the administrator and another until six months after entry of the decree and that the administrator married the deceased within such period. From an adverse order of the Superior Court, Riverside County, Hilton H. McCabe, J., the petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Coughlin, J. pro tem., held that marriage of the administrator and the deceased was not void.

Order affirmed.

1. Divorce ⇐380

Effect of Oklahoma decree of divorce in California was governed by laws of that State. 12 O.S.1951 §§ 1280, 1282.

2. Divorce ⇐382

In action for removal of an administrator of estate of deceased on ground that marriage of administrator and deceased was void because of a prior existing marriage in that an Oklahoma divorce decree did not terminate marriage relation between administrator and another until six months after decree was entered and that administrator's marriage to deceased within such period was void under Oklahoma law, marriage between administrator and former wife was dissolved upon rendition of divorce decree and hence administrator's marriage to deceased was not void. 12 O.S.1951 §§ 1280, 1282.

3. Marriage ⇐3

Ordinarily the law of the place of the marriage controls the question of its validity.

A statute which prohibits remarriage of divorced persons within a specified time after the entry of a decree which terminates the marriage relation has no extra territorial effect.

5. Divorce ⇐382

In action to remove an administrator on ground that marriage of administrator and deceased was void because of a prior existing marriage and that an Oklahoma divorce decree did not terminate marriage relation between administrator and another until six months after decree was entered and that administrator's marriage with deceased within six months was void, marriage of administrator with deceased in Arizona was valid in California in view that Oklahoma statute prohibiting remarriage of divorced persons within a specified time had no extraterritorial effect. 12 O.S.1951 §§ 1280, 1282.

Wallace P. Rouse, Indio, for respondent.

COUGHLIN, Justice, pro tem.

This is an appeal from an order dismissing a petition seeking the removal of Emory V. Sanders, as administrator with the will annexed of the Estate of Luella J. Sanders, Deceased. Letters of administration had been issued to Emory as the surviving spouse of decedent. Luella died testate, leaving a will executed prior to her marriage which made no provision for Emory, and named an executor who predeceased her. The petition for removal alleged that the marriage of Emory and Luella was void, because of a prior existing marriage.

At the hearing of the petition in question it was established that Emory had been married to Clara I. Sanders; that he was divorced; "that the divorce was entered in Portland, Oklahoma, on the 24th day of April, 1951"; that he was a resident of California "in the month of April, 1951" and resided therein continuously thereafter; and that he and Luella were married in Yuma, Arizona on August 18, 1951, and lived together as husband and wife until her death on March 31, 1955.

Appellant contends that the Oklahoma divorce did not terminate the marriage relation between Emory and Clara until six months after the decree was entered, and as he married Luella within six months after this divorce the later marriage was void. This contention is based on certain provisions of the Oklahoma statutes which, among other things, declare that it shall be unlawful for either party to a divorce to marry another person within six months after the decree is entered, and require that such a decree recite that it does not become absolute and take effect until the expiration of six months from the time it is rendered.

[1] The effect of the Oklahoma decree of divorce is governed by the laws of that state. Means v. Means, 40 Cal.App.2d 469, 473, 104 P.2d 1066; In re Estate of Winder, 98 Cal.App.2d 78, 87, 219 P.2d 18.

In the case of Plummer v. Davis, 169 Okl. 374, 36 P.2d 938, 940, the Supreme Court of Oklahoma held that the marriage of a divorced person within six months after the rendition of a decree of divorce, the marriage and divorce both occurring in that state, was voidable and not void. This decision, of necessity, was based upon the conclusion that the marriage which was the subject of the divorce action had been terminated by the decree therein, otherwise the subsequent marriage within the prohibited period would have been void as a plural marriage. Whitney v. Whitney, 192 Okl. 174, 134 P.2d 357. In its opinion the court places particular emphasis upon the decision in the case of Conn v. Conn, 2 Kan.App. 419, 42 P. 1006, which interpreted the effect of a Kansas statute substantially identical with the Oklahoma statute wherein it was said: "'* * * our statute simply declares that it shall be unlawful for either party to marry within six months after the decree is entered. It does not in terms pronounce them incapable of entering into the marriage relation within that period, nor does it declare void a marriage solemnized in violation of the prohibition of the statute.'" With respect to the requirement that the decree of divorce should recite certain restrictions upon its effectiveness, the Oklahoma court said: "In Brown v. Capps, 164 Okl. 91, 22 P.2d 1008, this court held in section 2 of the syllabus 'Section 676, O.S.1931 (512, C.O.S.1921 [12 O.S.1951 § 1282]), which provides that "every decree of divorce shall recite the day and date when the judgment was rendered in the cause, and that the decree does not become absolute and take effect until the expiration of six months from said date," must be considered to apply only to that portion of section 674, O.S.1931 [12 O.S.1951 § 1280], which relates to appeals and remarrying within six months following the date upon which the divorce is granted.'"

In two prior Oklahoma decisions the sole issue for determination was the effect of the decree of divorce upon the existing marriage. No subsequent marriage was involved. In each instance the court held that the granting of a decree of divorce dissolved the marriage. In re Smith, 2 Okl. 153, 37 P. 1099; Yeats v. State, 30 Okl.Cr. 320, 236 P. 62.

A third prior decision, Harvey v. State, 31 Okl.Cr. 299, 238 P. 862, 863, 51 A.L.R. 321, considers the effect of the Oklahoma divorce laws and states: "Under this statute the decree of divorce is sufficient to dissolve the marriage tie at the time it is rendered, but there is an inhibition in the nature of a penalty on a marriage by the parties with any third person within 6 months from the date of the decree."

In two other prior decisions, the Oklahoma court considered the effect of the statutes of that state on the marriage of a person divorced in that state, which occurred within six months after the rendition of the divorce decree. Niece v. Territory, 9 Okl. 535, 60 P. 300; Atkeson v. Sovereign Camp, W.O.W., 90 Okl. 154, 216 P. 467, 32 A.L.R. 1108. At the time the divorces in these cases were granted, the statutes provided that any divorced person marrying within the six months' period "shall be deemed guilty of bigamy, and such marriage shall be absolutely void." (Italics ours.) This provision was stricken from the statutes in 1925. In Niece v. Territory, supra, the appellant had been charged with bigamy; the remarriage occurred in the state of Oklahoma; and the court held that under "the provisions of section 4551 of the Statutes of 1893, it is unlawful for either party to a divorce suit to marry any other person within six months from the date of the decree of divorcement, and every person marrying contrary to the provisions of this section is guilty of bigamy." In Atkeson v. Sovereign Camp, W.O.W., supra [90 Okl. 154, 216 P. 470], the plaintiff sued for insurance benefits as the wife of a deceased member of the defendant association; she and her husband, who was divorced in Oklahoma where both of them were domiciled, were married in Texas within six months after rendition of the divorce decree; and the court held that "the attempted marriage of Lee B. Atkeson to Mattie Atkeson, while the former was under the restrictions imposed by the laws of this state, by making a temporary visit to the state of Texas, was void, and that the said Mattie Atkeson can derive no rights nor base any claim thereon in the courts of this state." (Italics ours.) In referring to these two decisions the court in Yeats v. State, 30 Okl.Cr. 320, 236 P. 62, 64, makes this pertinent observation: "In a few cases the courts say, or by loose language intimate, that the marriage relation between the parties does not actually terminate until the end of that period [the six month period]. This discrepancy also appears in some of the Oklahoma decisions." The opinion in Yeats v. State, supra, recognizes the distinction between cases involving an application of the Oklahoma divorce laws to a second marriage, and those considering the effect of an Oklahoma divorce decree on the marital status of the parties named therein, and says: "It must, of course, be conceded that the defendant could not consummate a legal second marriage in this state within the 6-month period, but many of our sister states have held that one might do so in another state where the marriage and divorce laws of the latter contain no such prohibition. They so hold upon the theory that in effect within this state the marital relation is dissolved the moment the decree of divorce is rendered, and that the prohibition against remarriage is in the nature of a penalty which a sister state having a different policy will not enforce, so that within such a sister state a second marriage may be consummated within the 6-month period, valid in that state." It is noteworthy that in 1925 the Oklahoma statutes were amended to specifically provide that a marriage outside of the state during the prohibited period was unlawful and "deemed" bigamous. There would have been no need for the amendment if a decree of divorce had not dissolved the marriage forthwith as a subsequent marriage in any state, during the existence of the prior undissolved marriage, would have been unlawful and bigamous.

The courts of other states, in construing the Oklahoma statutes or others similar thereto, have held that a marriage which is the subject of a divorce action under those statutes, terminates upon the rendition of the decree of divorce, even though it is unlawful for either party to the action to marry any other person within six months. Green v. McDowell, 210 Mo.App. 517, 242 S.W. 168; Bauer v. Abrahams, 73 Colo. 509, 216 P. 259; Durland v. Durland, 67 Kan. 734, 74 P. 274, 276, 63 L.R.A. 959; In re Troemper's Estate, 160 Kan. 464, 163 P.2d 379, 382.

[2] It is our opinion that the marriage between Emory V. Sanders and Clara I. Sanders was dissolved upon the rendition of the divorce decree by the Oklahoma court on April 24, 1951.

[3, 4] The only remaining question for decision is whether the Arizona marriage of Emory and Luella was valid in California. "Ordinarily, the law of the place of marriage controls the question of its validity." Colbert v. Colbert, 28 Cal.2d 276, 280, 169 P.2d 633, 635. The courts of Arizona have followed the rule holding that statutes which prohibit the remarriage of divorced persons within a specified time after the entry of a decree which terminates the marriage relation have no extraterritorial effect. Horton v. Horton, 22 Ariz. 490, 198 P. 1105. This, also, is the law in California. In re Estate of Wood, 137 Cal. 129, 69 P. 900; People v. Woodley, 22 Cal.App. 674, 681, 136 P. 312. Under these rules the marriage of Emory and Clara was valid.

[5] In her reply brief appellant states that she "is leaning heavily upon the case of Means v. Means, 40 Cal.App.2d 469 [104 P.2d 1066]" which considered the effect of a decree of divorce obtained in Wisconsin. The ground for appellant's reliance on the cited case is the similarity between certain provisions of the Wisconsin divorce statutes and those of the Oklahoma statutes. The courts of Wisconsin have held that under the statutes of that state a divorce decree is not effective until the expiration of one year from the granting of such decree. However, the laws of Oklahoma and not the laws of Wisconsin govern the decision in the instant case.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

v.

Mary MARIN, a/k/a Mary Garcia, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 1129.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 16, 1957.

Defendant, originally charged with presenting false claims to County Welfare Department, pleaded guilty to violation of statute making it misdemeanor to obtain money under false pretenses. The Superior Court of San Bernardino County, Archie D. Mitchell, J., rendered judgment placing defendant on probation on condition that she serve 60 days and make restitution in the sum of $544, or "in such amount as Probation Officer determines", and she appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that record showed that trial court intended that such specified sum be maximum to be restored and that if defendant could convince Probation Officer that a lesser amount was due, sum might be reduced, and that under such circumstances, it was proper.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐982

Trial court granting defendant's application for probation was authorized fully to consider probation officer's report reviewing facts and history of case and recommending action taken. West's Ann. Pen.Code, §§ 1203, 1203.1.

2. Criminal Law ⇐982

In proceeding wherein defendant was charged with presenting false claims to county welfare department and pleaded guilty under statute making it misdemeanor to obtain money under false pretenses, evidence before trial court on defendant's application for probation warranted imposing order of restitution of $544 or in such amount as probation officer would determine. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 72, 532a, 1203, 1203.1.

3. Criminal Law ⇐982

In proceeding wherein defendant originally charged with presenting false claims to county welfare department pleaded guilty to violation of statute making it a misdemeanor to obtain money under false pretenses and was granted probation upon serving 60 days and restoring the sum of $544, or "in such amount as the Probation Officer determines", record showed intention of trial court that such amount would be maximum to be restored and that if defendant could convince probation officer that a lesser amount was due, the sum might be reduced and, under such circumstances, order was proper. West's Ann. Pen.Code, §§ 72, 532a, 1203, 1203.1.

4. Criminal Law ⇐982

Trial court, during time of probation, upon proper showing, is authorized to modify original probation order. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1203, 1203.1.

Carl T. Rimbaugh, San Bernardino, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Defendant was charged with the offense of presenting false claims to the County Welfare Department, Penal Code Sec. 72, a felony. She entered a plea of not guilty and subsequently withdrew this plea and entered a plea of guilty of violating section 532a of the Penal Code, a misdemeanor and a claimed included offense. The court granted defendant's application for probation on condition that she serve 60 days in the county jail and make restitution or reimbursement to the county in the sum of $544, or "in such amount as the Probation Officer determines". She served the 60 days.

The grounds of appeal are that the order for reimbursement as to the amount is not definite and certain; that the ascertainment of the amount is improperly delegated to the probation officer, and accordingly unauthorized; that the requirement of reimbursement is contrary to law and that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding in the amount determined.

[1] The court was authorized to and did fully consider the probation officer's report reviewing the facts and history of the case and recommending the action taken by the court. Sec. 1203, Penal Code; People v. Giles, 70 Cal.App.2d Supp. 872, 161 P.2d 623.

[2-4] Counsel for defendant, in his brief, attempts to review the evidence which he contends would show that all of the sum of $544 was not illegally collected by virtue of certain alleged claims in reference to defendant's marital status and the number of occupants in the house at the time, and has lodged the record of the testimony taken at the preliminary examination with this court in proof of this claim. He moved to allow its consideration in evidence on this appeal. We have examined it and found no evidence that would assist us in determining the legal issue here presented. Accordingly, the motion should be denied. Suffice it to say, the evidence before the trial judge warranted imposing the order of restitution in the amount indicated. Penal Code Sec. 1203.1; People v. Labarbera, 89 Cal.App.2d 639, 643, 201 P.2d 584. It was the purpose and intent of the trial judge, as gleaned from the record, that this amount would be the maximum, and if defendant could convince the probation officer that a lesser amount was due, this sum might be reduced accordingly. Under these circumstances, no prejudicial error resulted. People v. Lippner, 219 Cal. 395, 26 P.2d 457. The trial court, during the time of probation, upon proper showing, is authorized to modify its original order. People v. McClean, 130 Cal.App.2d 439, 279 P.2d 87. It appears that defendant was afforded a fair hearing on her application for probation, and defendant's contentions were there fully set forth in respect to the recommended order of restitution. Furthermore, it may be well questioned whether the notice of appeal was filed within the time prescribed by law.

Motion to receive transcript of preliminary examination in evidence denied. Judgment affirmed.

v.

Edward M. MILLEN, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 1096.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 14, 1957.

Defendant was convicted of burglary and from a judgment of the Superior Court of San Diego County, Edgar B. Hervey, J., pro tem., defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that direct and circumstantial evidence as to identification was sufficient to support the conviction.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐741(2)

In criminal prosecution, question of identification is one of fact, and fact that a witness may to some extent qualify his testimony as to identification is a matter going to weight of that testimony and one to be considered by trier of fact.

2. Burglary ⇐41(6)

Direct and circumstantial evidence as to identification was sufficient to support conviction of burglary.

Eugene V. McPherson, Joseph A. Armstrong, Gladys Towles Root, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., Raymond M. Momboisse, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

On May 25, 1956, an information was filed charging the defendant with the crime of burglary alleged to have been committed on or about March 20, 1955. The defendant pleaded not guilty, waived a jury trial, and was found guilty by the trial judge. He has appealed from the judgment sentencing him to prison.

Early in the evening of Saturday, March 19, 1955, a Miss Bittner left her apartment accompanied by a Mr. Ehle. They returned to the apartment shortly after midnight. As they entered the living room they saw a man's head peering through the doorway between the kitchen and the living room. The man fled and Mr. Ehle followed him outdoors to the rear. When he could not see the man outside he returned, picked up a pocket knife, and went out to the front. He then saw a black or dark MG automobile with a white canvas top parked in the street, the engine of which was running. He approached the car in the hope the occupant might have seen the intruder leave. When he was three feet from the car it suddenly was driven away with such speed that it was burning rubber. Mr. Ehle slashed the canvas top of the car as it passed him, and then threw the knife at the rear of the car. He did not hear the knife hit the street, and after a thorough search the knife could not be found. It was then discovered that Miss Bittner's purse had been taken from the apartment. The purse was returned to her the next day by a small boy who said he found it in an alley. Two or three days later, Mr. Ehle saw a black MG automobile with a white canvas top, which belonged to the defendant, and reported it to the officers. An officer examined this car and found a hole about six inches square cut in the canvas top, at the same spot where Mr. Ehle had slashed the top of the fleeing MG. There was also a ⅜-inch slit in the cover of the tire on the rear of the car. This slit went through into the tire itself, and was on the top portion of the tire facing outward. The defendant was questioned by the officers but left the San Diego area before the investigation was completed.

Appellant's only contention is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain a conviction. It is argued that there was a lack of positive identification of the appellant as the man seen in Miss Bittner's apartment, and that the other circumstantial evidence is insufficient to show that the appellant is the person who committed this burglary.

Mr. Ehle, on the stand, positively identified the appellant as the person whose head he saw sticking through the doorway. When appellant's counsel asked him whether he had not on March 23, when he had seen the appellant at his sister's home, stated to the officers that he was "very sure" that it was the man, he replied that he believed that he had said something like that. When he was asked if he had not at that time told the officers that he thought it was the man but could not say positively, he said he did not remember saying that. Miss Bittner on the stand pointed to the appellant and testified that she believed he was the man whom she had seen with his head sticking through the door. She admitted that on March 23, when she had seen the appellant at his sister's home, she had stated to the officers that she thought this was the man but could not say positively because she did not want to convict an innocent man. She also testified that she stated at that time that she was very sure that this was the man.

[1, 2] The question of identification was one of fact, and the fact that a witness may to some extent qualify his testimony as to identification is a matter going to the weight of that testimony and one to be considered by the trier of fact. People v. Waller, 14 Cal.2d 693, 96 P.2d 344; People v. Robarge, 111 Cal.App.2d 87, 244 P.2d 407. Not only was the direct testimony as to identification sufficient to support the judgment, but there were other circumstances which furnish strong corroboration. The appellant had a black MG car with a white canvas top, with a hole cut in the top at the exact place where Mr. Ehle had slashed the top of the car which was in the street with the engine running. His car also had a slit in the spare tire and cover at the rear of the car, where Mr. Ehle had thrown the knife. The occupant of the car drove rapidly away when Mr. Ehle approached, and it is significant that he did not make any complaint or report to the authorities when Mr. Ehle slashed the top of his car. The appellant testified that while driving his car on the afternoon of Saturday, March 19, he found the top of his car burning; that he put the fire out and went to a service station; and that he cut the burned place out because it was decided that the top would look better that way. However, he had told the officers on March 24 that he had noticed the top of his car burning while he was driving on Sunday, March 20; that on Monday he went to the service station and showed them the burned spot; and that they decided that the car would look better if the burned place was cut out. A service station man, testifying for the appellant, testified that the appellant came into the station on or about March 19, with a "burnt" place in his top; that they cut out the burned place; that they usually washed his car on Saturday, and he did not work on Sunday; that he washed the car on the day it was brought in with a burn in it; and that "I wouldn't swear to the date, no." While the matter was being investigated the officers had a talk with the appellant on March 24, 1955, and made an appointment with him for the next day. However, the appellant left San Diego on March 25 without keeping this appointment and was not seen again until he was located by the officers, apparently about a year later. In deciding the case the trial judge pointed out that the defendant's story on the stand as to how he got a burned place in the top of his car was unbelievable, and stated that he was convinced that in several other parts of his testimony the appellant had not told the truth. The appellant was also impeached by his admission on the stand that he had previously been convicted of attempted burglary. The evidence is amply sufficient to support the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Charles LEDERMAN and Benjamin Lederman, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21746.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 10, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 5, 1957.

Action for declaratory relief, an accounting, and other relief based upon an alleged agreement whereby the parties formed a partnership or joint venture for the purpose of purchasing, exploiting and reselling certain real property. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., tried to the court granting a motion of defendant for nonsuit, the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that the evidence established the existence of a joint adventure and that the granting of a nonsuit was error.

Judgment reversed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐927(3)

Where defendants' motion for nonsuit was granted, evidence and reasonable inferences therefrom must be construed in the light most favorable to plaintiff on appeal.

2. Joint Adventures ⇐1.1

A "joint venture" is an undertaking by two or more persons jointly to carry out a single business enterprise for profit.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Joint Venture".

3. Joint Adventures ⇐1.2

In a joint adventure, there must be a community of interest in the enterprise, a sharing of profits and losses, and joint participation in the conduct of the business.

4. Joint Adventures ⇐1.5

The existence of a joint venture depends upon the intention of the parties.

5. Joint Adventures ⇐1.4

A joint adventure may be created by an express agreement or its existence may be inferred from their acts and conduct.

6. Joint Adventures ⇐1.15

Evidence was sufficient to support a finding that a joint venture for purpose of acquiring, exploiting and selling a building was created by agreement of the parties.

7. Trial ⇐165

In ruling on a motion for nonsuit, trial court must assume the truth of the plaintiff's testimony.

8. Joint Adventures ⇐1.10

Where parties agreed to acquire, exploit and sell a building, fact that agreement was indefinite with respect to improvements necessary to place the property in satisfactory condition for occupancy would not defeat the creation of a joint adventure agreement.

9. Joint Adventures ⇐1.10

The law requires little formality in the creation of a joint venture and the agreement is not invalid because it may be indefinite with respect to its details.

10. Joint Adventures ⇐4(1)

If there was an agreement for a joint venture, parties assumed the status of fiduciaries and neither one would have a right while the agreement existed to acquire the subject property to the exclusion of others.

11. Frauds, Statute of ⇐56(9)

If testimony of plaintiff was sufficient to establish the creation of a joint venture for the acquisition and disposal of a building, the agreement, although oral, would be valid and such an undertaking would not be within the purview of the Statute of Frauds. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1091.

12. Trial ⇐165, 384

Rule that in ruling on a motion for nonsuit, the trial court must draw those inferences favorable to plaintiff even though opposing inferences could reasonably have been drawn, applies whether the trial is to the court or a jury, and the court in such ruling may not consider the credibility of plaintiff's witnesses or weigh the evidence, but must assume the truth of the testimony.

13. Trial ⇐139(1)

A jury is the exclusive judge of the facts and the plaintiff has a right to have the jury pass upon the factual issues and to a favorable verdict if it would have adequate support in the evidence.

14. Trial ⇐384

In ruling on a motion for nonsuit in nonjury case, the trial judge must defer his decision though the evidence of the defendant will probably serve no purpose other than to bury a cause long since dead.

15. Trial ⇐165

In ruling on a motion for nonsuit, the trial court draws those inferences which it deems reasonable and rejects those it deems unreasonable.

16. Appeal and Error ⇐996

If reviewing court is in disagreement with respect to reasonableness of inferences the trial court has rejected on a motion for nonsuit and which leads to a different decision, reversal of judgment is required even if the reviewing court is of the view that the inferences drawn by the trial court are the more reasonable.

17. Trial ⇐384

The rule requiring a trial judge in a nonjury case in ruling on a motion for nonsuit to assume facts which may be contrary of what he believes them to be is accepted in California as a concomitant of the same rule in jury cases.

18. Joint Adventures ⇐5(3)

In action for an accounting under a joint adventure agreement to acquire and exploit and sell a building, tried to the court, granting of defendant's motion for nonsuit was error.

Albert E. Marks, Beverly Hills, for appellant.

Alfred S. Gainsley, Nathan April, C. Bernard Kaufman, Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of nonsuit in an action for declaratory relief, an accounting, and other equitable relief, based upon an alleged oral agreement whereby plaintiff and defendants formed a partnership or joint venture for the purpose of purchasing, exploiting and reselling certain real property.

The complaint alleges that plaintiff and defendants entered into an oral agreement in September 1954 whereby they formed a joint venture for the purpose of acquiring title to a building at 11th and Santee Streets in Los Angeles; that each of the parties agreed to pay one-third of the purchase price for said building and that each should own an undivided one-third interest in the joint venture and its assets. It also alleges that during October 1954, without plaintiff's consent and contrary to said agreement, defendants purchased said building and acquired title thereto as tenants in common; that defendants paid $155,000 for the building, with a down payment of one-third of the purchase price, and a deed of trust for the balance. It further alleges that on October 22, 1954, plaintiff tendered to defendants the sum of $30,000 to cover one-third of the down payment and other incidental expenses in connection with the purchase of the building; plaintiff agreed to assume one-third of the obligation due under the trust deed; such tender and agreement were refused by defendants; and that defendants deny that plaintiff has any interest in the joint venture or in the building. Plaintiff alleges on information and belief that defendants have leased a portion of the building for occupancy and are collecting rentals, but that they refuse to account to him for said rentals. He also alleges that he has performed all of the conditions of said oral agreement, save as he has been prevented by defendants, and that he is ready, willing and able to perform those conditions whose performance has been prevented by them. He further alleges that an actual controversy exists with respect to the rights of plaintiff and defendants under their oral agreement. The prayer is for a declaratory judgment that plaintiff and defendants entered into the joint venture and that the building is the property of the joint venture; that title to the building be conveyed to the joint venture; that plaintiff be ordered to pay to defendants one-third of the down payment and to assume one-third of the balance of the trust deed obligation; that defendants be required to account for all rentals and income received from the building, and that a receiver be appointed to take possession of the building and collect the rentals.

The answer admits that defendants purchased the building and hold title thereto as tenants in common. It denies all the other allegations of the complaint. It was pleaded, as a separate defense, that the alleged oral agreement was for the purchase and sale of an interest in real property and that there was no agreement or memorandum of an agreement subscribed by either defendant.

Trial was to the court. At the commencement of the trial defendants made a motion to exclude evidence on the grounds that the agreement was barred by the Statute of Frauds and that the complaint did not state a cause of action. Their motion was denied.

Plaintiff was the only witness. The following is the substance of his testimony. Defendants Charles and Benjamin Lederman are brothers and plaintiff had had previous business dealings with them. Around the 1st of September, 1954, plaintiff saw a sign in front of a vacant building at 11th and Santee Streets in Los Angeles indicating that the building was for sale. After obtaining information about the building from a real estate broker, he met defendants at their office on September 12th or 13th. The conversation which took place at that time is the basis of the alleged oral understanding between the parties. Without first disclosing the identity of the property, plaintiff told defendants that he had information about an unoccupied building which could be renovated, leased and eventually resold at a considerable profit. He told them it would be an excellent investment both for income and capital gain purposes and offered to take defendants in on a fifty-fifty basis. Defendants said that they preferred to go into the venture on a one-third basis. This was agreeable to plaintiff, who then divulged the location of the building and stated that it could be purchased for $175,000 or less. Benjamin Lederman said that the building had been offered to defendants during the previous year for over $300,000 and plaintiff then explained to them that the difference in price was due to the fact that the building was now completely untenanted. Defendants told him to buy the property at the best price for the three of them and each agreed to pay one-third of the purchase price. Plaintiff told defendants that the building was badly run down and would require the expenditure of a good deal of money before it would be suitable for leasing. He said it would be necessary to remodel, paint and decorate it; the elevator would have to be renovated and a new store front would have to be put in. Defendants each agreed to pay one-third of the cost of repairs and one-third of the operating expenses when requested to do so by plaintiff. Defendants told plaintiff to handle the repairs and the leasing of the renovated building himself. Plaintiff learned several weeks later that defendants had purchased the building for their own benefit. He saw defendants in their office on October 8th. Charles Lederman told him that he and his brother had bought the building so as to put it in the estate of the Ledermans. Plaintiff protested to defendants that they had violated their agreement. They did not deny this. Defendants told him that they paid only $155,000 for the building, with a down payment of only thirty percent, and that those terms were better than the terms which plaintiff had said he could obtain. On October 22nd plaintiff tendered defendants a check for $30,000, representing one-third of the down payment on the building, and his estimate of one-third of the cost of repairs and one-third of the operating expenses until the building was completely leased and operating at a profit. Plaintiff told defendants that he would assume one-third of the remaining trust deed balance. The tender and agreement were refused. Charles Lederman told plaintiff that he had no claim whatsoever against defendants, but Benjamin told him that they would discuss the matter at a later time and that plaintiff would hear from them. When plaintiff heard nothing further from defendants he sent them a letter containing a formal demand.

Defendants' motion for a nonsuit was granted. The court ruled that, apart from the question of the Statute of Frauds, no joint venture had been created by the parties, that their September conversation amounted to no more than preliminary negotiations with a view to a later, more detailed agreement, and that the complaint did not state a cause of action upon any theory.

[1] The sole question presented on the appeal is whether the court erred in granting a nonsuit upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to warrant a finding that the parties entered into a joint venture. Interpreting the evidence and the reasonable inferences therefrom in the light most favorable to plaintiff, we are persuaded that the court erred in granting defendants' motion.

[2–5] A joint venture is an undertaking by two or more persons jointly to carry out a single business enterprise for profit. Nelson v. Abraham, 29 Cal.2d 745, 749, 177 P.2d 931. There must be a community of interest in the enterprise; a sharing of profits and losses; and joint participation in the conduct of the business. (28 Cal.Jur.2d 478–480.) The existence of a joint venture depends upon the intention of the parties, Universal Sales Corp. v. Cal. etc. Mfg. Co., 20 Cal.2d 751, 764–765, 128 P.2d 665; it may be created by an express agreement or its existence may be inferred from their acts and conduct. Martter v. Byers, 75 Cal App.2d 375, 171 P.2d 101; Nelson v. Abraham, supra, 29 Cal.2d 745, 177 P.2d 931; 28 Cal.Jur.2d 484–486. As there was no evidence in the instant case of any acts or conduct from which the court could infer the existence of a joint venture, we must look exclusively to the oral agreement.

[6] The trial court expressed the conclusion that the oral understanding between the parties was no more than an agreement to enter into a joint venture at some future date on terms which would be mutually satisfactory to plaintiff and defendants. We are of the opinion that plaintiff's testimony, if believed, would support a finding that a joint venture for the purpose of acquiring, exploiting and selling the building was created by the September agreement. The parties agreed to purchase, renovate, lease and eventually resell the building in the expectation of substantial profit. Each was to have a one-third interest in the property and to share equally in the rentals and in the proceeds of a resale. Each was to contribute one-third of the purchase price and to share equally the expenses of renovation and operation. It is true that there were matters upon which they reached no agreement. Nothing was said respecting the terms of purchase or the cost of repairs. But plaintiff stated the building could be obtained for $175,000 and the parties knew that extensive repairs would be necessary to put the building in tenantable condition. Plaintiff testified that defendants authorized him to take care of the repairs and the leasing but this was merely collateral to the purchase of the property. If the parties understood they had reached no definite agreement for management of the property it would not necessarily follow that they did not reach an agreement to acquire it.

[7] In ruling upon the motion for nonsuit it was the duty of the court to assume the truth of the plaintiff's testimony that defendants accepted plaintiff's proposal without qualification or the proposal of any different or additional terms or conditions of the purchase. Since the intentions of the parties would determine whether they entered into a joint venture it was necessary that the court draw inferences from their statements as related by plaintiff.

The court concluded that the parties merely discussed the advisability of a purchase, and intended to give the matter further consideration. Our question is not whether this was a reasonable inference for the court to draw. As to that we express no opinion. The inquiry is whether it was the only reasonable one. Plaintiff contends that the major objective was the purchase of the property, that the price of $175,000 was satisfactory to all parties, and that since no other terms of payment were discussed it was understood that the purchase price would be paid in cash unless better terms could be obtained. He contends it was understood that considerable sums would have to be spent to place the property in suitable condition for occupancy but that it was not the intention to defer the purchase until specific plans for renovation and improvements had been agreed upon. He points out that the agreement to purchase the property was unconditional and that he was to proceed to arrange for its purchase without any further meeting of the parties, and he argues that there was no understanding that there would be some further meeting or discussion with respect to the extent and cost of the improvements before the property was acquired.

[8, 9] It is true that the agreement to which plaintiff testified was indefinite with respect to the improvements that would be found desirable in order to place the property in satisfactory condition for occupancy. This, however, was a matter as to which agreement was not required before the property was purchased. It was something that might have required a considerable amount of study and the consideration of the needs of prospective tenants. If these were matters as to which the parties did not disagree the fact that they did not agree or attempt to agree on a definite plan of improvement would not render incomplete the agreement to engage in a joint venture. The law requires little formality in the creation of a joint venture and the agreement is not invalid because it may be indefinite with respect to its details. Andrews v. Bush, 109 Cal.App. 511, 293 P. 152; Replogle v. Ray, 48 Cal.App.2d 291, 119 P.2d 980; San Francisco Iron & Metal Co. v. American Milling, etc., Co., 115 Cal. App. 238, 1 P.2d 1008; 48 C.J.S., Joint Adventures, § 3, p. 818; 138 A.L.R. 968, 981.

[10] If there was an agreement for a joint venture the parties assumed the status of fiduciaries and neither one would have had a right, while the joint venture existed, to acquire the subject property to the exclusion of the others.

If the court could reasonably have inferred that the parties agreed to acquire the property for $175,000 and that there was no understanding that the purchase would be conditional upon some future agreement as to terms, or the extent of desired improvements, it was the court's duty in ruling upon the motion for nonsuit to draw those inferences even though opposing inferences could reasonably have been drawn. That is the rule applicable to nonsuits.

[12–14] The rule is the same whether the trial is to the court or a jury. Goldstone v. Merchants' etc. Co., 123 Cal. 625, 56 P. 776; Archibald Estate v. Matteson, 5

Cal.App. 441, 450, 90 P. 723; Freese v. Hibernia Sav. etc. Soc., 139 Cal. 392, 73 P. 172. The court may not consider the credibility of plaintiff's witnesses or weigh the evidence. It must assume the truth of the testimony. It must draw all reasonable inferences from the evidence that are favorable to the plaintiff and reject those that are unfavorable. The wisdom of the rule in jury cases is obvious. The jury is the exclusive judge of the facts. A plaintiff has a right to have the jury pass upon the factual issues and to a favorable verdict if it would have adequate support in the evidence. It is not so clear that it is a wise rule in nonjury cases. It could well be argued that there is little purpose in requiring a trial judge to listen to a long, drawn-out defense when he is convinced the plaintiff has failed to prove a case. In theory, however, his mind must remain a blank with respect to the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the evidence and the inferences until the case is submitted. This, of course, is pure fiction. He is not brought to consciousness of his convictions immediately upon submission of the case. But under the rule he must defer his decision although the evidence of the defendant will probably serve no purpose other than to bury a cause long since dead. If there is a reason for the rule which deprives the judge of the power to grant a nonsuit when he is convinced that the evidence of plaintiff is so unsatisfactory and unreliable as to make it his duty to render a judgment for defendant, other than the fact that it is the prevailing rule, 89 C.J.S., Trial, § 595, p. 396, it has escaped our attention. It is not necessarily the better rule.[1]

[15, 16] In the present case, as in many others, opposing inferences from the facts in evidence are possible. In ruling on a motion for nonsuit the trial court draws those inferences which it deems reasonable and rejects those it deems unreasonable. If the reviewing court is in disagreement with respect to the reasonableness of the inferences the trial court has rejected, and which would lead to a different decision, there is no alternative to a reversal of the judgment. And this is true even if the reviewing court is of the view that the inferences drawn by the trial court are the more reasonable.

Our purpose in discussing the nonsuit rule in nonjury cases is to further emphasize the limitations it places upon the powers of trial courts. It forbids the court to grant a nonsuit even though the plaintiff and his witnesses, although testifying to sufficient facts, are deemed unworthy of belief or their testimony unreasonable and

1. "When the trial is before a jury, the court cannot weigh the testimony upon a motion for a nonsuit, for the reason that it cannot weigh it at any time; but, when the trial is without a jury, the court must eventually weigh the testimony for the purpose of determining where the preponderance is, and there is no reason why it should not so weigh it at the earliest possible time, when the rights of the plaintiff will not be cut off by its so doing; and when the plaintiff has introduced all of his proof, and rested, no right of his will be cut off if the court then determines what has been proven. It cannot be presumed that plaintiff's case will be strengthened by the evidence put in by the defendant. If, when plaintiff had submitted his evidence, the defendant had rested without putting in any proof, it is clear that the court would have had to determine the questions of fact made by the pleadings upon a preponderance of the testimony. Hence, under the rule contended for by the appellant, the court might be put in the anomalous position of denying the motion for a nonsuit, and immediately thereafter, upon the refusal of the defendant to put in any proof, deciding the case in his favor. No good purpose could be subserved by refusing to a trial court the right to determine the law in the light of the evidence upon a motion for a nonsuit, the same as upon final submission. It was the right of the court, upon the motion for nonsuit, to decide as to the preponderance of the evidence; and it having decided that such preponderance was with the defendant, and there having been testimony to support such finding, the judgment rendered thereon must be affirmed." Lambuth v. Stetson & Post Mill Co., 14 Wash. 187, 44 P. 148, 149.

unreliable. It overlooks the fact that the trial judge is the judge of the facts as well as the law and suspends his power to decide questions of fact until final submission of the case. It often requires reviewing courts to reverse and remand causes for retrial when it is apparent that the judgment of nonsuit was rendered for the sole reason that the trial court deemed the evidence of the plaintiff insufficient to entitle him to any relief, and when there is no logical reason to anticipate that a retrial will result in a different judgment.

The case we are considering is of that class. The trial court, after considering the testimony of plaintiff, drew certain inferences as to the intentions of the parties. The question is whether the court could reasonably have drawn contrary inferences, or in other words, if defendants had submitted their case upon the evidence of plaintiff would a finding that the parties entered into a joint venture have had substantial support in the evidence. In answering that question a reviewing court would have to give full credit to the testimony of plaintiff and deduce therefrom the inferences most favorable to him.

[17, 18] The rule which requires the trial judge in a nonjury case, in ruling on a motion for nonsuit, to assume facts which may be to the contrary of what he believes them to be has been accepted in California without question as a concomitant of the same rule in jury cases. Statutory law requires it in the latter cases for the reason that the jury, and not the court, judges the facts. As applied to nonjury cases it is a court made rule but is nevertheless, for the present, at least, binding upon both trial and reviewing courts. And although we find no weakness in the logic of the Supreme Court of Washington which we have quoted, and again call attention to the rigors of the California rule, there is no alternative to application of the latter rule in the present case, and in all like cases.

The judgment is reversed.

C. H. STEVENS, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Vincent A. MARCO, Marco Industries Company, et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21559.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Dec. 31, 1956.

Hearing Denied Feb. 27, 1957.

Alleged inventor's action against individual to whom he had assigned rights on invention for patenting, manufacturing and commercial exploitation and another, for breach of contract and for alleged fraud in inducing him to release of rights and to execute accord upon allegedly false representation of conflicting existing patents. From a judgment of nonsuit rendered by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Harold C. Shepherd, J., the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that evidence on issue of whether individual defendant had been guilty of fraud was for jury.

Judgment reversed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐927(3)

In considering propriety of nonsuit, reviewing court must resolve every evidentiary conflict in plaintiff's favor, accepting as true all evidence adduced, direct or indirect, supportive of plaintiff's case and indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from such evidence for plaintiff's benefit.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐927(3)

In considering propriety of nonsuit, reviewing court assumes as established all the evidence, and every proper intendment therefrom, favorable to plaintiff's causes of action.

3. Fraud ⇐64(3)

In alleged inventor's action against assignee of alleged invention, for alleged breach of assignment and royalty contract, and for alleged fraud, in breach of fiduciary duty in obtaining plaintiff's release of rights upon allegedly inducing belief that his alleged invention was in conflict with existing patents, evidence on issue of whether such defendant had made fraudulent representations to plaintiff was for jury.

4. Fraud ⇐7

"Confidential and fiduciary relations" are, in law, synonymous and exist whenever trust and confidence is reposed by one in the integrity and fidelity of another.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Confidential Relations" and "Fiduciary Relations".

5. Fraud ⇐7

When parties are so circumstanced or associated in business that one party must rely on good faith and integrity of other, fiduciary character of relationship may exist despite absence of blood relationship.

6. Fraud ⇐7

Where inventor entrusts his idea or device to another under arrangement whereby the other party agrees to develop, patent and commercially exploit the idea in return for royalties to be paid inventor, a confidential or fiduciary relationship arises between the parties making such other owe inventor duty of utmost good faith and fair dealing as one occupying status akin to that of a trustee.

7. Fraud ⇐64(5)

In alleged inventor's action, against assignee of alleged invention, for alleged breach of contract under which invention was patented by assignee, manufactured and exploited, and for alleged fraud in allegedly inducing inventor to release rights upon representation of conflict with existing patents, evidence on issue of whether parties had entered into a fiduciary relationship or arrangement similar to joint venture was for jury.

8. Fraud ⇐7

Where inventor and assignee entered into agreement for patent, exploitation and manufacture of invention, parties could have entered into fiduciary relationship regardless of whether it was expressly one of joint venture.

9. Joint Adventures ⇐4(1)

Fact that persons engaged in joint venture may quarrel or be at odds over business in which they are associated, or may even be involved in litigation with one another does not as a matter of law relieve them of fiduciary duties.

10. Patents ⇐183

One who has entered into fiduciary relationship with inventor under agreement to patent, manufacture and exploit the invention may not by fraudulently rescinding the agreement and obtaining inventor's release of rights abrogate the fiduciary relationship.

11. Patents ⇐183

Where one, under assignment agreement with inventor agrees to patent, manufacture and commercially exploit the invention, and has superior if not exclusive knowledge of facts relating to the matter, he is under fiduciary duty to disclose them in their entirety to inventor and failure so to disclose may amount to fraud. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1710, subd. 3.

12. Fraud ⇐17

Where relation of trust and confidence exists demanding that information communicated respecting subject of dealings between parties be full and complete, any concealment or misrepresentation will amount to fraud to entitle party injured thereby to an action. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1710, subd. 3.

13. Fraud ⇐21

Even when contracting parties are adverse to each other, either has right to rely on express statement made by other of an existing fact, the truth of which is known to the other and unknown to him. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1710, subd. 3.

14. Fraud ⇐22(1)

Where one is justified in relying, and does in fact rely, upon false representations his right of action is not destroyed merely because opportunities for examination or means of knowledge were open to him, where no legal duty devolved upon him to employ such means of knowledge. West's Ann.Civ.Code, 1710, subd. 3.

15. Patents ⇐183

Where confidential relationship existed between inventor and assignee, under agreement for patenting, manufacturing and commercial exploitation of device and inventor had never seen contents of patent applications, he was entitled to rely upon assignee's representations regarding a conflict with other patents. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1710, subd. 3.

16. Fraud ⇐17

One who learns that his statements, even if he thought them to be true when made, have become false due to change in circumstances has duty, before his statements are acted upon, to disclose new conditions to party relying on his original representations.

17. Limitation of Actions ⇐195(5)

Under statute providing that cause for fraud does not accrue until discovery by plaintiff of facts constituting fraud, one claiming that statute has been tolled because of his ignorance of fraud must show when fraud was discovered, circumstances of discovery, what discovery was and why it was not discovered sooner, and fact that investigation would have revealed falsity of misrepresentation will not alone bar recovery. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 337, subd. 1, 338, subd. 4.

18. Limitation of Actions ⇐100(11)

Limitation for fraud commences to run only after one has notice of circumstances sufficient to make reasonably prudent person suspicious of fraud on inquiry, and when no duty is imposed by law to make inquiry and where, under circumstances, prudent person would not be put on inquiry, mere fact that a means of knowledge is open to him and he has not availed himself of it does not commence the running of limitation. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 338, subd. 4.

19. Limitation of Actions ⇐199(2)

In alleged inventor's action against assignee of invention for alleged fraud in allegedly inducing him to release rights upon representation that invention conflicted with existing patents, evidence on issue of whether his delay of seven years after executing release in finding out that patents had been issued to assignee was reasonable so that limitation did not commence to run against him prior thereto was for jury. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 338, subd. 4.

20. Accord and Satisfaction ⇐20
Release ⇐23

If assignee of rights on invention obtained accord and release of rights from inventor through fraudulent misrepresentations, such accord and release would not bar inventor's cause against assignee based on contractual claims.

21. Accord and Satisfaction ⇐26(1)
Release ⇐55

Where inventor and assignee of rights entered into confidential and fiduciary relationship, if assignee obtained an unconscionable advantage by execution of accord and release, a presumption would arise that they were obtained by fraud, placing burden upon an assignee, in action against him by inventor, of overcoming such presumption. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2235.

22. Accord and Satisfaction ⇐21
Release ⇐23

A rescission in pais of an accord and release, if they were fraudulently induced, would restore parties to their rights and obligations under contract before they were executed. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1691.

23. Limitation of Actions ⇐199(2)

In alleged inventor's action against assignee of invention for fraud in allegedly inducing him to release rights upon representation that invention conflicted with existing patents, evidence on issue of whether assignee engaged in constructive fraud so as to stop running of limitation on contract count was for jury.

24. Election of Remedies ⇐7(1)

In alleged inventor's action against assignee of invention for alleged breach of assignment contract and fraud in allegedly inducing him to release rights and sign accord upon representation that invention conflicted with existing patents, his dismissal of his cause of action for rescission of accord and release did not amount to an affirmance of those instruments and did not confine his action to damages for alleged fraud.

25. Patents ⇐183

Where individual assignee of inventor's rights on invention which he was to patent, market and commercially exploit transferred such rights to corporation which he subsequently formed and of which he was president and sole shareholder, corporation was chargeable with full notice of inventor's royalty interest, under agreement with individual assignee and took transfer of such individual assignee's rights and interests in invention subject to all claims and equities which inventor could assert against individual assignee.

FOX, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of nonsuit in an action in which he sought damages for breach of contract, fraud, money had and received and goods sold and delivered.

[1, 2] Under familiar rules of appellate procedure in considering the propriety of a nonsuit, we must resolve every evidentiary conflict in plaintiff's favor, accept as true all evidence adduced, direct or indirect, supportive of plaintiff's case and indulge in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from such evidence for plaintiff's benefit. Aguirre v. City of Los Angeles, 46 Cal.2d 841, 844, 299 P.2d 862; Singer v. Marx, 144 Cal.App.2d 637, 301 P.2d 440. In our statement of the record, the court assumes as established all evidence, and every proper intendment therefrom, favorable to plaintiff's causes of action.

In 1942, plaintiff was employed by Consolidated-Vultee Aircraft in San Diego, California, as an electrical engineer. He had never finished high school and was self-educated in his profession. In the middle of 1942, plaintiff's work was devoted to the design of the electrical systems installed in military aircraft. While so engaged, the idea occurred to him that various lights used in aircraft to indicate whether or not particular aeronautical equipment was functioning might give a false impression because of a burned out bulb. He conceived a device, which would be part of the indicator light assembly, by which the pilot could test the bulb and quickly determine whether it was defective.

Plaintiff had no experience with patents or patent applications but he was interested in having this device patented and commercially exploited. Plaintiff made a sketch of such a device and, through a friend named Wilford, was introduced to defendant Marco. He was told Marco had the facilities to develop and market the device. Marco was an attorney and an officer, stockholder and sales manager of the Searl Aero Industries, a corporation capable of manufacturing the indicator-light device in quantity. Marco told plaintiff that if Searl were given the sales and production rights he would obtain the necessary patent protection at no cost to plaintiff.

On July 15, 1942, the parties executed a written contract under which Marco agreed to proceed diligently with the engineering development of the light and to secure at his own expense and in his own name the necessary patent protection. Plaintiff agreed to assign to Marco all right, title and interest in the light as well as the exclusive right to patent, manufacture and sell the light in exchange for three percent interest in any patent, or, at plaintiff's election, in return for payment of 3% of the net sales price of all lights sold. Upon signing of this agreement, plaintiff assigned his interest in the light to Marco.

On February 13, 1943, the contract was modified in certain respects. The new contract recited (1) that patent applications had been filed in Marco's name; (2) that Marco would assign a 3% interest in the patent to plaintiff upon its issuance; (3) that Searl had been given an exclusive contract to manufacture the light and was authorized to pay plaintiff 3% of the net sales price. Plaintiff expressly warranted in the contract that Consolidated had no property rights in the light and agreed that if others claimed rights in the patent or an infringement, payment to him might be suspended until settlement of the dispute. On February 18, 1943, Marco filed an application for a patent on what was termed a "tell-tale and testing light."

In March, 1943, a question arose as to whether Consolidated had some interest in the light because of an invention agreement which plaintiff had previously signed with Consolidated. Marco went to San Diego to discuss the matter with an official of Consolidated and subsequently engaged in negotiations with Consolidated regarding the matter. On April 24, 1943, Consolidated sent Marco a waiver of "all right in and to the indicator light invented by C. H. Stevens."

Thereafter, Searl proceeded with the development of the light. Plaintiff actively assisted in the process of preparing a prototype and checked the reactions of pilots to the light in test flights. In June, 1943, Searl commenced production of the light. Certain companies, including one called Dial Light, were given sales licenses. In August, 1943, plaintiff received his first royalty check, and subsequent payments were remitted to him monthly.

On October 12, 1943, Marco filed a second application for a patent for what he described as a "signal light." In his statement accompanying the application, Marco described the invention as "of a generally similar nature to that constituting * * my copending application * * * upon which the present device constitutes an improvement." Marco never showed plaintiff either of the patent applications filed in his name. For convenience, these applications will be subsequently denominated Marco 1 and Marco 2, respectively.

In 1944, plaintiff informed Marco that he would like a new contract to be drawn. Marco acquiesced. Plaintiff employed an experienced patent attorney named Curtis to prepare the agreement. It was signed on March 9, 1944 So far as material, it recited that Marco was the inventor of the indicator light devices which were the subject of the two patent applications, that he owned an interest in, and controlled the business of Searl, a licensee of the invention, and that plaintiff had contributed valuable engineering services in their development which entitled him to compensation. It was therefore agreed that Marco would use his best business judgment and diligence in developing and selling the device and would pay plaintiff, on the fifteenth of each month, 3% of 95% of the gross selling price of the lights, including devices embodying this invention or improvements. The improvements would include all inventions by Marco or Searl during the life of the agreement, which was stated to be for the terms of the patents, if granted, or, if disallowed, for ten years thereafter. Plaintiff agreed to assign to Marco any improvements he might make on the light. Marco agreed to keep books of account showing sales which would be accessible to plaintiff.

After the execution of this agreement, an engineer named Fred Aves, who was employed by Searl, perfected a device known as a "light shutter and dimmer," a unit which could be attached to and used in combination with the signal lights on which Marco had made patent application. The device was assigned to Marco. On June 7, 1944, Aves applied for a patent on this shutter. Plaintiff testified he had no knowledge either of the Aves patent application or its ultimate issuance until 1953.

With the passage of time, the volume of sales increased beyond Searl's capacity to meet the demand. Thereupon Marco licensed Dial Light Co. to manufacture and sell the light in the territory east of the Mississippi River and limited Searl's area of operations to the western part of the United States. Plaintiff was advised of this arrangement. Although he continued to receive royalties from Searl, plaintiff failed to obtain royalties from the Dial Light operation. He complained of this in a series of letters to Marco in the spring of 1945.

Plaintiff did a great deal of work in propagating acceptance and sale of the light. At Marco's request, plaintiff was successful in obtaining approval of the light by the Air Force, enabling it to be used on military planes and increasing its sales potential. Marco supplied plaintiff with an entertainment expense account, sample lights, and advertising material, and plaintiff went on sales tours for the purpose of soliciting orders for the light. He made one complete sweep of the aircraft industry on both the east and west coast pushing the sales of the indicator light.

On June 13, 1945, Marco wrote a letter to Stevens regarding the Dial royalties. The concluding part of this letter reads, in part as follows: "Another matter of great importance is that our patent attorneys have reported that conflicting patents exist between our panel light patents and a patent obtained and filed on January 25, 1938, and granted on March 5, 1940, Number 2192345. This patent has been assigned to one of the large light companies in 1940, who retained the property rights of the same. It might be that you have some views on this matter as no doubt this conflict will end in litigation very soon."

It will be recalled that prior to the time this letter was written Marco had filed three patent applications, two in his own name and the third in the name of Aves, although he was assignee thereof. Marco was represented by patent attorneys in Washington, D. C., one of whom was named Crammond. As the claims made for the various devices were processed through the Patent Offices, the patent examiners cited to Marco's attorneys various earlier patents relating to the subject matter of the applications either as examples of prior art or as possibly constituting a block with respect to approval of all the claims advanced. In addition, the Patent Office indicated that there was a misjoinder in Marco 1 and Marco 2 of unrelated inventions and required a separation between the claims relating to a pilot lamp system and those relating to the shutter. Various amendments to the claims were made by Marco's attorneys in their efforts to meet objections of the Patent Office and its rejection of particular claims.

With respect to the patent situation and the existence of the conflict referred to in Marco's letter of June 13, 1945, the record shows the patent alluded to in that letter was one issued to a certain Foute.[1] Sometime in June, 1945, Marco received from his patent attorney Crammond, a copy of a patent examiner's report on the Aves application. That report cited six patents as bearing on the Aves application, including the Foute patent. Marco testified he telephoned Crammond and discussed a possible conflict with the Foute patent. He testified that Crammond's view was that a conflict was "something that could be important, and that thing, that importance would not be determined until after the patent had been completely processed. * * *" Thereafter, Marco procured a copy of the Foute patent and discussed it with various persons, including Aves. Aves took little stock in the possibility that the Foute patent would be a block. In a letter written to the Commissioner of Patents on July 18, 1945, about five weeks after

1. The Foute patent had been assigned to the Drake Mfg. Co., manufacturers of panel lights. Marco testified he believed when he wrote to Stevens on June 13, that the Drake Company would protect its rights and that there would be litigation because of the Foute "conflict." At no time did Drake advise Marco of any infringement on the Foute patent nor did they ever initiate litigation of this nature.

Marco wrote Stevens of the Foute conflict, Crammond stated this view: "The Foute patent * * * does not appear to be particularly related to the devices of the claims. It relates merely to the method of mounting a base or socket on a tube."

We return to the sequence of events following plaintiff's receipt of the letter of June 13, 1945. Plaintiff did not reply to this letter. He testified that as a result of this letter a serious question arose in his mind as to whether the light was actually his invention rather than one which had been the subject of a prior patent. He feared also that a large light company would bring legal action against him. However, when he received a royalty check from Searl in July, he began to feel the situation was not as serious as he had imagined. Therefore, through his attorney Curtis, he wrote Marco on July 18, 1945, requesting an accounting of the Dial Company royalties, which he had not received.

As matters developed, however, despite the fact that Searl continued to manufacture and sell lights, plaintiff failed to receive royalties from Searl either in August or September. Instead, in the latter part of September, Marco served him with a written notice of rescission dated August 31, 1945. After first reciting the contractual arrangements between the parties, the document, signed by Marco, states:

"Whereas, notice has been given to the undersigned, Vincent Anthony Marco, of an existing conflicting patent obtained and filed on January 25, 1938, granted March 5, 1940, Patent No. 2,192,345, embodying the basic claims and principles of the Indicator Light, the sole rights to which were assigned by you to the undersigned, and upon which you, C. H. Stevens, made warranty that no other person or Company had a property right in and to said device:

"Now, therefore, you, C. H. Stevens, are hereby notified that the undersigned, Vincent Anthony Marco, hereby renounces, repudiates and terminates any and all agreements heretofore entered into by and between you and the undersigned, and particularly the agreements of July 15, 1942, February 13, 1943, March 1, 1943, and March 9, 1944; that the undersigned hereby abandons any position as assignee, licensee, or patentee under any of the agreements aforementioned; that the undersigned renounces any and all protection, if any, of any assignments or licenses given by you to the undersigned; that the undersigned hereby refuses to make any further payments as royalties or payments on patent interests or interest in net sales as included in said agreements aforesaid.

"You are further notified that the undersigned, Vincent Anthony Marco, gives you this notice for the reason that it now appears that you had no authority to assign to the undersigned any right, title or interest in and to the Indicator Light covered by the agreements by you mentioned; that you had no right to license the exclusive manufacture and sale thereof; that the warranties expressly stated and made by you in the agreement of February 13, 1943, and impliedly stated in all other agreements entered into by and between you and the undersigned have been breached; that the assignments and licenses heretofore made by you to the undersigned are invalid and void, and that the consideration for any and all agreements made between you and the undersigned concerning the exclusive manufacture and sale of the said Indicator Light has failed.

"You are further notified that the undersigned no longer recognizes the binding force of any agreement between you and the undersigned concerning the manufacture and sale of said Indicator Light, and will hereafter conduct himself in hostility to and in defiance of all agreements heretofore entered into between you and the undersigned, and that the undersigned declares that he is freed and discharged from any liability or obligation of making any further payments hereafter as royalty, patent interest, or interest in net sales under any of the agreements aforementioned."

Plaintiff testified this letter induced in him the belief that he had sold Marco "a bill of goods," that his idea infringed a prior patent, that no patent would therefore be obtainable since his idea was not original. Believing he would be sued, plaintiff recorded a declaration of homestead.

On October 11, 1945, plaintiff and his attorney Curtis met in San Diego with Marco and his lawyer for a conference on the matter of the Dial royalties. Marco informed plaintiff that the Army and Navy had stopped payment of the Dial royalties and that he would be paid when the funds were released. The discussion then turned to the patent conflict. Marco had a copy of the Foute patent and stated "that he was unable to perform under the contract, he couldn't make them [the lights] if there was an infringing patent." Marco offered to let Curtis examine the patent but the latter refused, stating that the meeting was called solely to discuss the Dial royalties, and that Marco would have to perform regardless of a patent conflict. The interview became stormy and Curtis advised plaintiff to sue Marco. Plaintiff testified he did not accept Curtis' statement that he had a cause of action against Marco because he did not believe Marco could perform under the contract. He also relied on Marco's statement that he would be paid the Dial royalties upon their release.

After the meeting of October 11, 1945, the parties had no further contact until June 26, 1946. Plaintiff had been apprised that the impounded Dial royalties were released and on that day he came to Marco's office to collect his share. He was accompanied by his employer, Ralph Wilford. At this meeting plaintiff was paid the sum of $2,764.99 by Marco. Thereupon, plaintiff executed an accord and satisfaction. At the same time plaintiff signed a printed form entitled "Release of All Demands" the effect of which was to release and discharge Marco from every character of obligation due plaintiff. Plaintiff offered evidence of what was said at this meeting for the purpose of showing fraudulent misrepresentations made by Marco at the time these instruments were executed. This evidence was excluded on the ground that plaintiff's complaint did not plead the making of, or his reliance on, any fraudulent representations subsequent to August 31, 1945.

Plaintiff testified that at the time he signed the release and accord and satisfaction and thereafter until 1953, he reposed trust in Marco and entertained the belief that there was an existing patent in conflict with his idea for an indicator light, that he would probably be sued by the large company that owned the conflicting patent and that by signing the release he would be free from any litigation as a result of having sold Marco "a no good idea." Plaintiff testified that Marco had represented at the meeting of October 11, 1945, that if there was an infringement he could no longer manufacture lights and when that meeting broke up plaintiff stated he felt Marco could no longer perform under the agreement.

Marco had continued during this time to prosecute all three patent applications, which were finally granted in 1947. Warren Jessup, a patent attorney, testifying as an expert, examined the official file wrapper containing all action taken with respect to the above applications. He stated that with respect to Marco 1, the file showed that by February 14, 1946, the patent examiner indicated he would allow some of the claims. Indication of allowance of claims by the patent examiner in Marco 2 appeared as early as February 20, 1946. Marco 1 was passed for issue of a patent on October 30, 1946. Marco 2 was passed for issue on June 16, 1947, while the Aves' application was passed for issue on December 6, 1946. However, at Marco's request, issuance of the patents was deferred until July 29, 1947, at which date all three patents were simultaneously issued.

In Jessup's opinion, the Foute patent was not in conflict with either of the Marco applications, nor with the Aves application. Jessup testified that the contents of a patent application are secret and not a matter of public record. After it has issued the patent is available to the public.

Marco testified that although he believed there was a conflict between the Foute patent and the Aves application on June 13, 1945, that was not his belief one year later, when plaintiff signed the release, because that matter had been resolved in the meantime. He also testified that he never believed there was a conflict between Marco 1 or Marco 2 and the Foute patent as to the individual elements, exclusive of the head, set forth in those applications. By the time plaintiff signed the release Marco knew there was no longer any danger of infringement litigation.

In 1947, defendant Marco Industries Co. was formed by Marco, who was then its president and sole stockholder. In December of that year, a license agreement between Marco and the corporation was executed, by which Marco assigned the three patents to the corporation and gave it the right to manufacture and sell the indicator light west of the Mississippi. Marco's royalty was originally 10% of the sales, but subsequently a new agreement was made by which Marco transferred the patents to the company for the sum of $300,000, payable in installments until 1963. At the time this action was tried, the gross sales of the lights amounted to over $4,000,000.

By the end of 1945, plaintiff had dissociated himself from the aircraft industry From October, 1945, to 1948, he worked in a wholesale appliance business in San Diego. After a short interlude as a salesman, plaintiff became special agent for an insurance company in San Diego and continued in that occupation until he filed his complaint. From the time he signed the accord and release, plaintiff had no further contact with Marco until about 1953. During the intervening years he testified he had no information that any patents were granted or that Marco, Searl, Dial or any other defendant was manufacturing the indicator lights nor did he have knowledge of circumstances that would rouse his curiosity. He made no inquiries during this period about the Foute patent.

In February, 1953, plaintiff attended a public display of aircraft equipment in San Diego. In examining the folders and catalogues at the exhibit, he read about indicator lights being produced by the Marco Industries Company under three patent numbers. The accompanying statement asserted: "Over 3,000,000 lights manufactured." That was the first time plaintiff became aware that patents had been granted. Two weeks later, he obtained copies of the three patents mentioned in the folder and the Foute patent. He then engaged patent attorneys to compare the patents. He was advised that they didn't see any conflict between the patents. On August 25, 1953, plaintiff served upon defendants a notice of rescission of the release and the accord. This action was filed on October 2, 1953.

The original action was framed in six counts. At the outset of the trial plaintiff elected not to proceed on count one (to enforce a rescission of the accord and the release) and count three (for declaratory relief).

Count two was an action at law for damages for breach of the agreements between plaintiff and Marco.

Count four was an action for damages based on fraud in inducing plaintiff to believe the lights could no longer be manufactured or sold, thereby inducing him to execute the release and accord. The misrepresentations alleged were (1) the portion of Marco's letter of June 13, 1945, previously quoted, and (2) the notice of August 31, 1945, in which Marco wrote plaintiff: "That there was an existing, conflicting patent obtained and filed on January 25, 1938, granted March 5, 1940, Patent No. 2,192,345 (hereinafter referred to [as] Foute Patent) embodying the basic claims and principles of said indicator light embodying a bulb-testing device, and that as a consequence thereof the said Vincent A. Marco renounced, repudiated and terminated any and all agreements."

Counts five and six were for money had and received and for goods sold and delivered, respectively.

To this pleading defendants responded with an answer which, in addition to denials, interposed the affirmative defense of limitations, Code Civ.Proc., secs. 338(4) and 337(1), laches, compromise, accord and satisfaction and release.

At the close of plaintiff's case, judgment was entered in favor of Mrs. Marco with plaintiff's acquiescence. Marco moved for a nonsuit based on (1) insufficiency of the evidence; (2) the bar of the statute of limitations, 338(4); (3) plaintiff's knowledge of the facts allegedly constituting false representations; (4) lack of a confidential relationship; (5) plaintiff's inexcusable failure to investigate the facts presented to him; (6) no evidence of concealed fraud or fiduciary relationship. (Laches was withdrawn.) A motion for nonsuit in behalf of Marco Industries was also made on all above grounds, including lack of privity of contract.

Both motions were granted without limitation as to the ground.

[3] Defendant's argument in support of the order of nonsuit is essentially structured on the following propositions: (1) that the release and the accord conclusively barred any cause of action on the contract; (2) that plaintiff failed as a matter of law to establish actionable fraud; and (3) that any relief, based on the alleged fraud, was barred by the statute of limitations. As these contentions are developed in the briefs with commendable vigor and exhaustive reference to the authorities, it is manifest that defendants honor more in the breach than in the observance the principles binding on an appellate court in reviewing a nonsuit. It is axiomatic that those principles require us to give plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled and to consider every inference which can reasonably be drawn tending to sustain plaintiff's case. It is from this perspective that we have stated the controlling facts and it is with this orientation that they must be evaluated. Measured by this standard, it is not to be doubted that there was substantial evidence favorable to plaintiff on the issue of fraud and misrepresentation, and that it was error to grant a nonsuit.

[4–6] One of the fundamental fallacies underlying defendant's position is the assumption that there was no confidential relationship between plaintiff and Marco, so that the presumptions and special rules of law which govern when that relationship exists are not here applicable. The facts and the law utterly belie this. "Confidential and fiduciary relations are, in law, synonymous, and may be said to exist whenever trust and confidence is reposed by one person in the integrity and fidelity of another." In re Estate of Cover, 188 Cal. 133, 143, 204 P. 583, 588. When the parties are so circumstanced or associated in a business transaction that one party must rely on the good faith and integrity of the other, the fiduciary character of the relationship may exist despite the absence of a blood relationship. Cox v. Schnerr, 172 Cal. 371, 378, 156 P. 509; Bank of America v. Sanchez, 3 Cal.App.2d 238, 243, 38 P.2d 787; Adams v. Talbott, 61 Cal.App.2d 315, 320, 142 P.2d 775. Plaintiff testified he trusted Marco implicitly and had confidence in his promises and representations. The record shows that plaintiff was the inventor of a novel device, as to which he had an inchoate privilege to apply for a patent. Golden State & Miners' Iron Works v. Angell, 89 Cal. 643, 27 P. 65; Hendrie v. Sayles, 98 U.S. 546, 25 L.Ed. 176; 35 U.S. C.A. § 33.* With the enconomic exploitation of his invention in mind, he disclosed this secret to Marco, who promised that if plaintiff transferred his interest therein to him, he would proceed to prosecute an application for a patent, manufacture and sell the device, and pay plaintiff a royalty on gross sales. It was further agreed in the contract of March 9, 1944, that plaintiff's royalties were to extend also to the sale of devices which embodied any improvements Marco might make or acquire, while plaintiff agreed to assign to Marco any improvements he might make. Where an inventor entrusts his secret idea or device to another under an arrangement whereby the other party agrees to develop, patent and commercially exploit the idea in return for royalties to be paid the inventor, there arises a confidential or fiduciary relationship between the parties. See Hollywood M. P. Equipment Co. v. Furer, 16 Cal.2d 184, 188–189, 105 P.2d 299; Schaake v. Eagle Automatic Can Co., 135 Cal. 472, 485, 63 P. 1025, 67 P. 759; O'Hara v. Harman, 14 App.Div. 167, 43 N.Y.S. 556, 558; Reynolds v. Saco-Lowell Shops, D.C., 54 F. Supp. 109, 114. Indeed, it would be difficult to postulate a relationship more confidential than one in which a secret is imparted to a person professing to have the ability and facilities to develop, patent, and exploit it upon his promise to give the inventor a return in the form of royalties. In the instant case, the salutary character of such a rule is manifest. Plaintiff transferred to Marco a new and valuable idea and Marco assumed full responsibility for securing a patent. Since the processing of a patent application is secret, plaintiff could learn only what Marco cared to divulge about the progress of the Marco applications, as well as other applications on improvements, and he had of necessity, because of Marco's superior position in this respect, to repose a special confidence in Marco's integrity. In addition, since Marco was in charge of the marketing of the device, plaintiff had also to rely on his business judgment with respect to production, and on his fidelity with respect to keeping and furnishing honest accountings of sales. Here, too, Marco occupied a superior position. There was present, therefore, all the classic elements of a confidential relation, and Marco owed to plaintiff the fiduciary obligations of utmost good faith and fair dealing of one occupying a status akin to that of a trustee. As stated in Cox v. Schnerr, supra, 172 Cal. 371, 378, 156 P. 509, 513, "And this rule [of fiduciary obligation] does not apply merely to those who bear a formal relation of trust to those with whom they deal—not only to attorneys, physicians, trustees, clergymen, kinsmen, and others who by the very force of their occupations or relationship are presumed to be in the class of persons bound to act with the utmost good faith. It applies in every case 'where there has been a confidence reposed which invests the person trusted with an advantage in treating with the person so confiding.'" (Italics added.) Of like effect is Bradley Co. v. Bradley, 37 Cal.App. 263, 267, 173 P. 1011. The instant case is patently within the scope of such rule.

[7] Furthermore, the jury might also have found, as a matter of fact, that the parties were allied in an enterprise similar to that of joint venturers for mutual gain. The royalty agreements between the parties are not, as defendants contend, merely "a contract of assignment and sale." The last agreement of the parties, executed on April 9, 1944, plainly indicates that Marco was to exploit and develop the use of the patents for their joint profit and that any subsequent improvements made by either would accrue to their mutual benefit. At Marco's request, plaintiff traveled all over the country and engaged in extensive publicity, sales and demonstrational work in behalf of the light. Bearing these factors in mind, the case of Universal Sales Corp. v. California Press Mfg. Co., 20 Cal.2d 751, 128 P.2d 665, 673, while not in all respects similar, is most didactic. In that case, defendant developed a particular machine which was still in an experimental stage. Defendant sold this machine to plaintiff, who was under no obligation to pay if the machine did not function adequately. The contract also provided that in consideration of the purchase of the machine and demonstration of its advantages by plaintiff, defendant agreed to pay plaintiff 20% of the gross selling price it received from further sales of the machine. Plaintiff agreed to foster the sale of the manufactured machine. Defendant also agreed to endeavor to patent the machine and agreed that plaintiff would have a 20% interest in such patent—and in any improvements thereon that might be thereafter made by either party. Plaintiff was to bear 20% of the cost of prosecuting the patents. Thereafter, plaintiff assisted in creating a market for this machine. In construing the contract to ascertain the relationship of the parties, the trial court found, among other things, that the contract was a mutual agreement of the parties to work together and pool their inventive ideas in an endeavor to perfect the machine. The Supreme Court commented as follows on this question: "In other words, the defendant, having the facilities for the manufacture of machinery, desired the benefit to be derived in experimentation with the press incident to continuous milling operations and the plaintiff undertook to contribute to the venture practical demonstration of the mechanism under the direction of experienced employees, and to do advertising and promotion work for the purpose of creating a market for an efficient pellet-producing machine. This cooperation promotive of the common enterprise and involving the combination of the skill and efforts of both the plaintiff and the defendant suggests that the parties intended to establish a contractual relationship between themselves akin to that of joint adventurers. Further indication of this purpose is the royalty clause of the agreement referable to the plaintiff's share of the gross proceeds of sales of presses based upon the original model, whether such sales be negotiated by the plaintiff or the defendant, and the clause relating to the respective interests of the parties in any patent of the machine and 'any improvements thereon that may be thereafter made by either party.' While in a technical joint venture there is usually a sharing of profits and losses in the prosecution of the common enterprise [citation], the mode of participating in the fruits of the undertaking may be left to the agreement of the parties. [Citation.] Whether the parties to a particular contract have thereby created, as between themselves, the strict relation of joint adventurers or some other relation involving cooperative effort, depends upon their actual intention, which is determined in accordance with the ordinary rules governing the interpretation and construction of contracts."

[8] In the instant case, since plaintiff and Marco agreed that each would provide the other with the benefits of any improvements, since plaintiff's royalties were based not only on his original idea but on sales of the device embodying improvements made by either party, since plaintiff participated actively and energetically in the venture by sales and promotional work and contributed generously of his time and his contacts to further the acceptance of the light in civilian and military aircraft circles, there was substantial evidence on which the jury might find a cooperative undertaking of the parties founded on a fiduciary relationship. In Pacific Atlantic Wine, Inc., v. Duccini, 111 Cal.App.2d 957, 964, 245 P.2d 622, 626, it is stated: "It is clear that the main purpose of the April, 1935, contract between the plaintiff and the defendants was to provide for the development of the glass spray apparatus to the point of its effective use and operation and then to exploit it commercially by manufacturing and selling it or licensing others to manufacture and sell it. That constituted the parties joint adventurers." It is not necessary to precisely define the relationship thus created as one of joint venture in order to hold it to have created a fiduciary relationship. This is clearly pointed out in Nelson v. Abraham, 29 Cal. 2d 745, at page 750, 177 P.2d 931, at page 934, where the court stated: "It is, however, unnecessary to place a precise legal designation on the relationship between the parties. The present controversy is between the parties to a contract by which the plaintiff admittedly became entitled to a one-third share of the net profits from operation without acquiring an interest in the business. The oral agreement and the conduct of the parties thereunder, considering the nature of the undertaking and the surrounding circumstances, define their respective rights, liabilities and duties one to the other without the necessity for designating their relationship by a particular label." At page 751 of 29 Cal.2d, at page 934 of 177 P.2d, the court further remarks: "The one who is entrusted with the rights of another is charged with the duty of guarding those rights with the utmost good faith."

[9-10] Further discussion would only be a belaboring of the obvious fact that there was a substantial evidentiary basis for finding that the relationship between plaintiff and Marco was a confidential and fiduciary one. As stated in Sime v. Malouf, 95 Cal.App.2d 82, 95, 212 P.2d 946, 953, 213 P. 2d 788, "Defendants quite understandingly endeavor to escape the responsibilities of fiduciaries rather than to justify their conduct." Marco cannot, in this case, be held to a less exacting standard than that of a fiduciary. Nor can he take advantage of his fraud, the existence of which will be subsequently developed, to disclaim the continuation of a fiduciary relationship following his assumption of a hostile attitude towards plaintiff. "The fact that persons engaged in a joint venture may quarrel or be at odds over the business in which they are associated, or may even be involved in litigation with one another, does not as a matter of law relieve them of their fiduciary duties [citations]. * * * The successful consummation of a fraud would be a relatively simple matter if the mere negation of the agreement, or the provocation of strained relations, were sufficient to exempt one joint adventurer from his duty of highest good faith to his associates." Sime v. Malouf, 95 Cal.App.2d at pages 97, 98, 212 P.2d at page 955, supra. Here, Marco was at all times the custodian of plaintiff's secret invention; he continued to prosecute the patent applications; and at all times he continued to manufacture, sell and profit from the device plaintiff had conceived. It was his bounden duty, therefore, to act with the integrity and probity of a fiduciary during such time in relation to plaintiff.

Against this background we turn now to a consideration of the evidence bearing on the question of Marco's fraud, overreaching and abuse of confidence in the transactions between the parties.

[11, 12] In his letters to plaintiff, Marco represented that it had been reported to him that a "conflicting patent exists between our panel light patent" and the Foute patent and that this conflicting patent embodied "the basic claims and principles of said indicator light embodying a bulb testing device." However, as the record shows, the Foute patent was not cited in connection with Marco 1 or Marco 2, which embodied plaintiff's basic idea, but solely in connection with the Aves application, of which plaintiff testified he had no knowledge. Marco had seen the patent examiner's report citing Foute in connection only with the Aves application. The record is barren of any evidence suggestive of a conflict between Foute and Marco 1 or 2, the only applications of which plaintiff was aware, and according to which design many of the lights were being manufactured. Knowing his information related only to the Aves application, Marco failed to disclose this fact to plaintiff. His statements to plaintiff that Foute conflicted with "our panel lights" and that it conflicted with plaintiff's idea of an indicator light embodying a bulb testing device were clearly false representations. In Gillespie v. Ormsby, 126 Cal.App.2d 513, 527, 272 P.2d 949, 958, this court stated that "in dealing with the question of false representations, * * one who speaks is not only obligated to tell the truth but he is equally bound not to suppress or conseal any facts within his knowledge which materially qualify those stated [citations]." Having suppressed the fact that the only possible conflict was between Foute and Aves, Marco created the impression that plaintiff's idea was not patentable, and that further manufacture of the lights in the face of such conflict would be an infringement. Having superior, if not exclusive, knowledge of all the facts, Marco was bound to disclose them in their entirety so that plaintiff would fully and accurately understand the actual state of affairs. Where a relation of trust and confidence exists demanding that information communicated respecting the subject of dealings between parties be full and complete any concealment or misrepresentation will amount to fraud sufficient to entitle the party injured thereby to an action. Kruse v. Miller, 143 Cal.App.2d 656, 300 P.2d 855; Sime v. Malouf, supra, 95 Cal. App.2d 82, 101, 212 P.2d 946, 213 P.2d 788; Vance v. Supreme Lodge of the F. B., 15 Cal.App. 178, 182–183, 114 P. 995. Section 1710(3) of the Civil Code is a statutory expression of this principle.

Marco argues that since the Aves shutter was an "improvement" it was a part of the indicator light within the meaning of the contract between the parties. We need not concern ourselves with whether or not this is technically correct under the law of patents. What is here crucial is the fact that Marco deliberately created the impression, by suppressing the fact that it was only in relation to Aves' so-called improvement that the Foute patent was cited, that plaintiff's basic idea for an indicator light was not patentable. This especially appears from the letter of August 31, 1945, referring to a conflict between Foute and plaintiff's idea of a device embodying a bulb testing device. From the record the jury could find that Marco never honestly entertained the belief that Foute conflicted with plaintiff's basic idea, a finding that would be buttressed by the fact that he never interrupted his manufacture of the light embodying plaintiff's invention.

[13, 14] Because of the confidential relationship between them and since plaintiff had never seen the contents of Marco's patent applications (which were exempt from public scrutiny) plaintiff was entitled to rely on Marco's tendentious representations regarding a conflict. "Even when contracting parties are adverse to each other, either has the right to rely upon an express statement made by the other of an existing fact, of which the truth is known to the other, and unknown to him." Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 638, 642, 76 P. 486, 488. Furthermore, where one is justified in relying, and does in fact rely, upon false representations, his right of action is not destroyed merely because opportunities for examination or means of knowledge were open to him where no legal duty devolved upon him to employ such means of knowledge. Teague v. Hall, 171 Cal. 668, 671, 154 P. 851; Blackman v. Howes, 82 Cal. App.2d 275, 279, 185 P.2d 1019, 174 A.L.R. 1004. It is noteworthy that Jessup testified that as an expert in patent law he could not tell whether the Foute patent conflicted with Marco's patent applications without having before him copies of both the patent and the applications. In 1945 and 1946, plaintiff never was shown the latter and they were unavailable to him from official sources since their contents were secret.

[15, 16] But the record contains other substantial and impressive evidence of fraud in the form of Marco's deliberate concealment of extremely significant facts which reached him subsequent to his repudiation of the contract and which eliminated any doubt that plaintiff's device was patentable. As early as February, 1946, the patent examiner indicated that he would allow some of the claims made with respect to Marco 1 and 2. A legitimate inference is that Marco was so informed by his patent attorney within a reasonable time. Marco himself testified that before plaintiff executed the accord and the release he was was possessed of knowledge that none of the patent applications conflicted with Foute and that there would be no litigation. Having with great alacrity purported to repudiate his contractual obligations towards plaintiff because of an alleged patent conflict and the threat of an infringement action, elementary business ethics, no less than a strict code of behavior exacted of a fiduciary, required Marco to disclose to plaintiff these changed circumstances, this altered state of his knowledge, prior to the execution of the accord and the release. " 'Deceit may be negative as well as affirmative; it may consist in suppression of that which it is one's duty to declare, as well as in the declaration of that which is false.' " Gillespie v. Ormsby, 126 Cal.App.2d 513, 527, 272 P.2d 949, 958. In his work on Torts (2d ed.), Dean Prosser states: "One who has made a statement and subsequently acquires new information which makes it untrue or misleading must disclose such information to anyone whom he knows to be still acting on the basis of the original statement." (P. 534.) Section 551(2) of the Restatement of Torts reads: "One party to a business transaction is under a duty to exercise reasonable care to disclose to the other before the transaction is consummated * * * (b) any subsequently acquired information which he recognizes as making untrue or misleading a previous representation which when made was true or believed to be true." Comment (f) relating to clause 2(b), supra, states: "One who having made a representation which when made was true or believed to be so remains silent after he has learned that it is untrue and that the person to whom it is made is relying upon it in a transaction with him is morally and legally in the same position as if he knew that his statement was false when made." It is the prevailing law that one who learns that his statements, even if thought to be true when made, have become false through a change in circumstances, has the duty, before his statements are acted upon, to disclose the new conditions to the party relying on his original representations. Childress v. Nordman, 238 N.C. 708, 78 S.E.2d 757, 761; Chilson v. Houston, 9 N.D. 498, 84 N.W. 354; Porter v. Beattie, 88 Wis. 22, 59 N.W. 499; McGinn v. McGinn, 50 R.I. 236, 146 A. 636, 638. Had Marco furnished the information to plaintiff that the Foute patent was not a conflicting one and that the threat of legal action had disappeared, it would have rectified the impression which his earlier statements had created. There is no record that Marco ever gave this information to plaintiff and a jury would be entitled to infer plaintiff signed the accord and release in ignorance of the truth, which Marco studiously concealed from him. Why else would plaintiff discharge Marco from the valuable rights owed him under the contract, but for the fact that Marco failed to undo the misapprehension engendered by his representations, and by his silence and concealment perpetuated in plaintiff the delusion that his invention infringed on an earlier patent and that litigation was the anticipated result.

[17] In light of the facts and the controlling law, plaintiff established a prima facie case of actionable fraud. Marco contends, however, that such an action is barred by the statute of limitations. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 338(4). He relies on the fact that plaintiff made his alleged discovery of the fraud some seven years after he signed the accord and the release by "getting a copy of the Foute patent and examining it." He contends plaintiff "could and should have done exactly the same thing seven years before." However, Marco ignores the fact that seven years later plaintiff, having learned of the issuance of the patents, was able for the first time to compare the Foute patent with the Marco and Aves patents, whose contents he had never previously seen, and as a result of such comparison he was able to discover the fraud. Section 338(4) provides that a clause of action for relief on the ground of fraud is not to be deemed to have accrued until the discovery by plaintiff of the facts constituting the fraud. To come within the purview of this section, one who claims that the statute has been tolled because of his ignorance of the fraud must show when the fraud was discovered, the circumstances of the discovery, what the discovery was and why it was not discovered sooner. Hobart v. Hobart Est. Co., 26 Cal.2d 412, 437–438, 159 P.2d 958; Tognazzini v. Tognazzini, 125 Cal.App.2d 679, 687, 271 P.2d 77; Mortimer v. Loynes, 74 Cal.App.2d 160, 171, 168 P.2d 481. The fact that an investigation would have revealed the falsity of the misrepresentations will not alone bar recovery. Hobart v. Hobart, supra; Schaefer v. Berinstein, 140 Cal.App.2d 278, 294, 295 P.2d 113, 124.

[18] The applicable law has been well expressed recently in the Schaefer case, supra (hearing denied): "The statute commences to run only after one has notice of circumstances sufficient to make a reasonably prudent person suspicious of fraud, thus putting him on inquiry. 'Where no duty is imposed by law upon a person to make inquiry, and where, under the circumstances, "a prudent man" would not be put upon inquiry, the mere fact that means of knowledge are open to a plaintiff, and he has not availed himself of them, does not debar him from relief when thereafter he shall make actual discovery. The circumstances must be such that the inquiry becomes a duty, and the failure to make it a negligent omission.' Tarke v. Bingham, 123 Cal. 163, 166, 55 P. 759, 760.

"In many cases it has been said that means of knowledge are equivalent to knowledge. This is true only where there is a duty to inquire, as where plaintiff is aware of facts which would make a reasonably prudent person suspicious. Lady Washington C. Co. v. Wood, 113 Cal. 482, 45 P. 809. Where there is a duty to investigate, the plaintiff may be charged with knowledge of the facts which would have been disclosed by an investigation; but where there is no prior duty to investigate, the statute does not run until he has notice or knowledge of facts sufficient to put a reasonable man on inquiry. 'In the absence of a duty to make inquiry, as pointed out above, the statute does not run merely because the means of discovery were available, and plaintiff is not compelled to disprove that such means existed. He need only establish facts sufficient to show that he made an actual discovery of hitherto unknown information within three years before the filing of the action. * * * The requirement that plaintiff show what information he received or what suspicious facts came to his notice is imposed in order that the court may determine whether or not the discovery was made within the time alleged, that is, whether plaintiff actually learned something he did not know before.' Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co., 26 Cal.2d 412, 442, 159 P.2d 958, 974. * * *

"In cases involving confidential relationships, the rule requiring allegations stating the circumstances which are relied upon by the plaintiff as excusing prior discovery of the fraud is relaxed. Bainbridge v. Stoner, 16 Cal.2d 423, 430, 106 P.2d 423. In Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co., 26 Cal.2d 412, 159 P.2d 958, 973, the court points out that it is recognized that in cases involving a fiduciary relationship 'facts which would ordinarily require investigation may not excite suspicion, and that the same degree of diligence is not required.' [Citations.]"

[19] From the evidence, we cannot hold as a matter of law that any of the circumstances known to plaintiff should have put a reasonably prudent person on inquiry. This is usually a question of fact. Neet v. Holmes, 25 Cal.2d 447, 467, 154 P.2d 854; Schaefer v. Berinstein, supra, 140 Cal.App. 2d at page 294, 295 P.2d 113; Dabney v. Philleo, 38 Cal.2d 60, 66, 237 P.2d 648. The record shows that Marco's fraudulent concealment induced plaintiff to execute a release at a time when he believed Marco's statements, had faith in his integrity, and did not have the full means of investigation open to him. Having executed such release, plaintiff dissociated himself entirely from the aircraft industry, entered a new line of business, had no further contact with Marco, and, presumably because of his confidence in Marco, made no further inquiry as to the facts. The facts are not such as to make imperative a duty of continuous investigation or inquiry as the only reasonable course to be taken consistent with the exercise of ordinary prudence and judgment. Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Blade, 139 Cal.App.2d 580, 589–591, 294 P.2d 140; Dabney v. Philleo, supra. It was a question for the jury to determine whether plaintiff's delay was reasonable and excusable. It is not a question we can decide as a matter of law on these facts. The case of Sibert v. Shaver, 111 Cal.App.2d 833, 245 P.2d 514, involving the assignment of patent rights between parties standing in a confidential relationship is deserving of reference in this context.

[20–22] In the light of the various aspects of the case to which we have alluded, it is also clear that the accord and the release do not constitute a bar to appellant's cause of action at law upon his contractual claims. In view of the confidential relationship, and the fact that Marco obtained an unconscionable advantage by their execution, a rebuttable presumption arises that they were obtained by fraud, Civ.Code, sec. 2235; Roeder v. Roeder, 118 Cal.App. 2d 572, 580, 258 P.2d 581; Chung v. Johnston, 128 Cal.App.2d 157, 164, 274 P.2d 922, and the burden was upon Marco of overcoming such presumption of fraud which arises by operation of law. Roeder v. Roeder, supra; Chung v. Johnston, supra; Highland Park Inv. Co. v. List, 27 Cal.App. 761, 763, 151 P. 162. Furthermore, the evidence shows that after discovering the fraud, plaintiff proceeded to rescind the accord and release. Civ.Code, sec. 1691. Such a rescission in pais annulled those documents and restored the parties to their rights and obligations under the contract. Bowman v. Victor, 83 Cal.App.2d 693, 699, 189 P.2d 876; Loaiza v. Superior Court, 85 Cal. 11, 31, 24 P. 707, 9 L.R.A. 376.

[23] Although urged below, no contention is made on appeal that these contractual rights (counts 2 and 5) are barred by limitations. In the light of evidence of Marco's concealed fraud, such a defense cannot prevail as a matter of law. Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Blade, 139 Cal.App.2d 580, 294 P.2d 140.

[24] There is no merit to Marco's contention that plaintiff's dismissal of his cause of action for rescission of the record and release amounted to an affirmance of those instruments and confined him to his action for damages for the fraud inducing their election. In Mackenzie v. Voelker, 123 Cal.App.2d 538, 266 P.2d 867, plaintiff brought an action containing two counts based on fraud. The first was for rescission and was dismissed at plaintiff's request. At page 541 of 123 Cal.App.2d, at page 869 of 266 P.2d the court states "that if the complaint is considered as asking for two alternative remedies, plaintiff could not be held to have been committed to an affirmance or disaffirmance of the contract by so pleading. It was held in Tanforan v. Tanforan, 173 Cal. 270, 273, 159 P. 709, that it is proper practice to ask for inconsistent remedies and when all the evidence is in, it is then for the court to say to which remedy plaintiff is entitled." In accord is Karapetian v. Carolan, 83 Cal.App.2d 344, 188 P.2d 809, 1 A.L.R.2d 1075.

[25] The final question presented relates to the propriety of the nonsuit in favor of Marco Industries Company That corporation was organized in 1947, with Marco as its president and sole stockholder. The record is silent as to any change of Marco's position in either capacity and the inference is justified that there was no such change at all times here material. In about 1948, Marco and defendant Marco Industries Company entered an agreement under which Marco assigned the patents to the company and granted it a license to manufacture the lights west of the Mississippi for a royalty of 10 per cent of the sales. In 1953, a new agreement was executed under which Marco granted, assigned and sold "all of his right, title and interest" in the patents to the company for the sum of $300,000 payable in installments. In view of Marco's position as president of the company, it is clear that the corporation is chargeable with full notice of plaintiff's royalty interest in the patents, Western Oil & Refining Co. v. Venago Oil Corp., 218 Cal. 733, 738, 24 P.2d 971, 88 A.L.R. 1271; Bogart v. George K. Porter Co., 193 Cal. 197, 210, 223 P. 959, 31 A.L.R. 1045; Blue Diamond Plaster Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 188 Cal. 403, 408, 205 P. 678; Eagle Indem. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 92 Cal.App.2d 222, 225, 206 P.2d 877, and that it took the transfer of Marco's right, title and interest in the patents subject to all claims and equities plaintiff could assert against the transferor. Western Oil & Refining Co. v. Venago Oil Corp., supra, 218 Cal. at pages 737–738, 24 P.2d 971; Dougherty v. California Kettleman etc., 9 Cal.2d 58, 81, 69 P.2d 155; Childs Real Estate Co. v. Shelburne Realty Co., 23 Cal. 2d 263, 267, 143 P.2d 697. Under the principles of the cases last cited, plaintiff was entitled to enforce his royalty rights in the patents against defendant company as a transferee with notice. The nonsuit in its favor was consequently erroneous.

We deem it advisable to reiterate, in order to avoid any unfortunate misunderstanding, that the observations we have made concerning Marco's fraud are based upon the evidence adduced by plaintiff alone and derive from the requirement that we must accord such evidence every beneficial intendment in support of plaintiff's case. It has not been our purpose, of course, to determine questions of the credibility of witnesses or any of the ultimate issues of fact.

The judgment of nonsuit in favor of defendants Vincent A. Marco and Marco Industries Company is reversed.

R. J. HISEY, Tempe E. Hisey and Karl W. Felser, Defendants.

George W. Swift and Sherman S. Stewart, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 5503.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 4, 1957.

Action by lessee for rescission, fraud and damages brought against real estate salesmen who had negotiated lease, the lessors and another. The Superior Court, San Bernardino County, Martin J. Coughlin, J., entered judgment for lessees and salesmen appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that where lessees relied on the representations of the salesmen to the effect that there was only one trust deed on property and that trust deed was payable at rate of $250 per month which included both principal and interest but the facts were that there was another trust deed on the property and first trust deed was payable at $250 per month plus interest, finding that the salesmen were negligent in the discharge of their duties as agents for lessees was supported by substantial evidence, even though salesmen's failure to recommend title search might not constitute negligence.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐1010(1)

Finding supported by substantial evidence cannot be disturbed on appeal.

2. Brokers ⇐38(4)

J. H. Petry, San Bernardino, for respondents.

MUSSELL, Justice.

The complaint in this action is for rescission, fraud and damages. At the conclusion of the trial, plaintiffs moved to amend the complaint to conform to the evidence and to show an additional cause of action based on negligence of the defendants. This motion was granted and the court rendered judgment in favor of plaintiffs and awarded damages to them occasioned by the negligence of defendants George Swift and Sherman Stewart. They appeal from the judgment and contend (1) That the evidence does not support the findings and conclusions of law; and (2) That the findings, conclusions of law and judgment are contrary to the law.

On December 28, 1952, plaintiffs called at the real estate office of the Swift Realty Company in Fontana, in San Bernardino county. They desire to purchase a chicken ranch in that area and discussed the matter with defendant Sherman Stewart, who was a salesman employed by defendant George Swift, a real estate broker who owned and operated the Swift Realty Company. Stewart examined a listing of a ranch, signed by R. J. Hisey and his wife. This listing, by its terms, expired December 24, 1952. It described the ranch and further provided that the buyer was to assume an existing trust deed balance of approximately $19,000, payable $250 or more monthly, with 6% interest included. Plaintiff Wilson asked Stewart if there was any other encumbrance on the property except this trust deed and Stewart told him and his wife that there was none. Plaintiffs and Stewart then went to see the ranch and talked with Mr. and Mrs. Hisey. However, it does not appear that anything was said about the terms of the proposed purchase. Plaintiffs returned to the Swift Realty Company office on the ensuing two or three Sundays. On one of these visits, a Mr. Feiser, who was in the office and who had sold the ranch to the Hiseys, was asked if he thought the Hiseys would consider a trade and he replied that in his opinion Mr. Hisey would not trade. Stewart suggested to plaintiffs that they lease the property and also procure an option to buy it. He told them that the Hiseys would lease it for $200 per month, $2,400 a year. On January 18, 1953, plaintiffs came to the office of the Swift company and told Stewart they had decided to lease the Hisey ranch and offered to pay $2,400 for a year's lease, $2,000 down and the balance of $400 in August. Stewart told plaintiffs that Mr. Swift would draw up the papers and that he could handle it very well for them. Mr. Swift was introduced to plaintiffs by Stewart, who then explained the terms of the proposed transaction. Swift and Stewart made written notes and, after discussing some of the terms of the agreement with Feiser, Swift typed out the lease and option involved in this action.

The lease, dated and executed on January 18, 1953, was for the term of one year ending February 4, 1954, for a total rental of $2,400, $2,000 to be paid in cash and the further sum on or before August 5, 1953. It provided further, as follows:

> "There is an existing Deed of Trust on above property, of an approximate balance at present of $19,000 payable $250.00 or more monthly with 6% interest included. It is agreed by and between Lessor and Lessee that in the event of pending or threatened foreclosure on said Deed of Trust by Trustee, Lessor will immediately thereupon sell, transfer, convey and assign all his right, title and interest in and to said property to Lessee; and Lessee agrees to pay to Lessor, the sum of $100.00 cash at the time of such conveyancing and to assume the then existing balance on said Deed of Trust."

On the same date the Hiseys executed a real estate option, expiring February 4, 1954, providing therein that plaintiffs could purchase the property at a price not exceeding $24,000. The option further provided, inter alia, for the assumption by the lessors of the then existing balance on the trust deed, on which the balance was approximately $19,000, payable $250, or more, monthly, with 6% interest included. The consideration recited in the option was the sum of $1. Plaintiffs gave a check to Swift for $500 and he, after deducting $72 for the services of his company, delivered a check to the Hiseys for the balance of the deposit, and the following week plaintiffs paid the Hiseys the further sum of $1,500.

Wilson left his employment as service engineer and moved onto the ranch on February 1, 1953, and purchased approximately 2,000 chickens to raise thereon. Within a week or ten days thereafter, Wilson received information that there was a second trust deed on the property and that the first trust deed called for the payment of $250 monthly, plus interest.

In March, 1953, the Wilsons served notice of rescission of the lease and option on the Hiseys and on April 7, 1953, they moved from the ranch.

Wilson testified that on February 16, 1953, he received a letter from Mr. Hisey, mailed from Texas, in which Hisey stated that he could not make the payments on the property and that his only recourse was to let Wilson take it over as agreed in the lease. Wilson further testified that if he had known there was a second trust deed against the Hisey property, and if he had known that the payment on the first trust deed required the payment of $250, plus interest at 6% on about $19,000, he would not have entered into the transaction. In this connection Mrs. Wilson testified that if she had known the true facts concerning the first and second deeds of trust, she would not have entered into the agreement.

Appellants' answer to the original complaint affirmatively alleges that George Swift and Sherman Stewart acted as agents for the joint parties in the transaction which resulted in the execution and delivery of the lease and option. In appellants' answer to the amendment to the complaint it is admitted that George Swift and Sherman Stewart prepared a written lease for plaintiffs at the request of and for them. It is further admitted therein that there was a first deed of trust and a second deed of trust on the Hisey ranch, and further that the first deed of trust did provide for monthly payments of $250 per month, together with interest at 6% per annum.

The trial court found, among other facts:

"III. That is is true that at the time said lease and option were executed there existed two notes secured respectively by first and second deeds of trust against the real property described in said lease and option and that the note secured by the first deed of trust provided for monthly payments of $250.00 on principal, plus payment of interest at 6% per annum; that the note secured by the second deed of trust was still unpaid; that the defendants George Swift and Sherman Stewart did represent to the plaintiff that at that time there was only one note secured by one deed of trust against said property and that said note provided for payments of $250.00 per month, which payments included interest."

"V. That it is not true that defendants George Swift, Sherman Stewart or Karl W. Feiser, or any of them, knew that the representation that there was only one note secured by only one deed of trust and that the payment provided by said note was $250.00 per month which included interest was a false representation.

"VI. That it is true that in reliance upon the said representations by defendants George Swift and Sherman Stewart plaintiffs did enter into said lease and option; did pay lessors $2,000.00; did terminate their employments; did move onto the premises at an expense of $135.00; and did purchase certain chickens."

"VIII. That it is true that negotiations were carried on by and between plaintiffs Wilson and defendants R. J. Hisey and Tempe E. Hisey in which defendants George Swift and Sherman Stewart acted as agents for said plaintiffs Wilson; that said negotiations were conducted by said defendants Swift and Stewart on behalf of plaintiffs and said defendants Swift and Stewart did in said negotiations act as agents for plaintiffs Wilson; that said negotiations resulted in the execution and delivery of the lease and option hereinbefore mentioned; and that defendants Swift and Stewart prepared and wrote said lease and option.

"IX. That it is true that defendants Swift and Stewart did not have information, belief or knowledge concerning the true facts of the encumbrances against the property involved and did not have information, knowledge or belief of the true facts concerning the two notes secured by the deeds of trust or the terms of said notes."

"XI. That it is true that defendants Swift and Stewart failed to exercise the amount of care and diligence required of them as agents of the plaintiffs in negotiating, preparing and writing said lease and option.

"XII. That is is true that defendants accepted as true the statements of defendants Hisey concerning said property and the encumbrances thereon and the note secured by said encumbrances, and made no other effort or investigation to determine the true facts.

"XIII. That it is true that the defendants Swift and Stewart did not suggest or advise that a title search be made on said property and did not advise that an escrow be opened for the consummation of the transaction involving the lease and option.

"XIV. That it is true that plaintiffs did not know there was more than one note and deed of trust against the property and did not know the true terms of said note; and it is true that plaintiffs would not have entered into the lease and option had they known there was more than one note and deed of trust or if they had known the true terms of the two notes and deeds of trust; and it is true that they were not able to comply with the provisions of said notes."

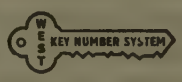
"XVII. That it is true that plaintiffs Wilson relied upon representations and statements made to them that there was only one deed of trust against the property they leased and upon which they took an option and upon the representation that said deed of trust was to secure one note payable at the rate of $250.00 per month including both principal and interest; that it is true these representations were false.

"XVIII. That it is true that defendants Swift and Stewart, on behalf of plaintiffs Wilson, negotiated a lease and option on the property involved and that defendants Swift and Stewart suggested the manner in which the transaction should be handled and completed and suggested the machinery by which the transaction could be effected, and that as a result of these suggestions no escrow was opened and no title search was made.

"XIX. That it is true that defendants Swift and Stewart prepared and wrote the lease and option and at no time did they or either of them check to ascertain the true status of the title of the property in question or the nature or extent of of the obligations which were encumbrances against the property other than to accept as true the statements of the owners of the property with respect thereto.

"XX. That it is true that defendants Swift and Stewart were negligent in the discharge of their duties as agents of plaintiffs Wilson."

[1] These findings are supported by substantial evidence and therefore cannot be here disturbed. Berniker v. Berniker, 30 Cal.2d 439, 444, 182 P.2d 557.



[2, 3] Appellants argue that this appeal presents the basic question whether, as a matter of law, there is negligence by one who prepares a written lease upon real property for one year and a written option thereon for one year, for which option the stated consideration is $1, to fail to recommend that a title search be made upon the real property. However, the evidence shows that plaintiffs relied upon the representations of the defendants, who were their agents, that there was only one trust deed against the property which they leased and upon which they took an option to purchase, and that the trust deed in question was payable at the rate of $250 per month, which payment included both principal and interest. These representations were false. Swift and Stewart negotiated the lease and option on the property; they suggested the manner in which the transaction should be culminated; and prepared the lease and option agreements. While the failure to recommend a title search on the property might not constitute negligence, Stewart made the positive statement to the plaintiffs that there was no other encumbrance on the property except the first trust deed and that the payments thereon included the interest, without seeking to ascertain the true facts. The question whether the defendants were negligent was one of fact for the trial court and its finding that the defendants were negligent in the discharge of their duties as agents for plaintiffs is supported by substantial evidence. Defendants, as agents for plaintiffs, were required to exercise reasonable skill and ordinary diligence and not to act negligently. They were required to exercise the particular skill to be reasonably expected of them and to have special knowledge with respect to the agency assumed. 2 Cal.Jur.2d, Agency, Sec. 113.

Appellants, in support of their position, rely heavily upon Graham v. Ellmore, 135 Cal.App. 129, 26 P.2d 696. However, that action was for damages for fraud and the question of the liability of an agent for negligence was not there discussed. The agent therein had been told by the owners of the property that there was only one encumbrance on it and there was an implied finding that the salesman had reasonable grounds for believing the statement to be true. In the instant case, the salesman had no information on the subject and made the statement relied upon without ascertaining what the facts were with respect to the second trust deed on the property, and, as is said in Graham v. Ellmore, supra, 135 Cal.App. at pages 132–133, 26 P.2d at page 697: "Whether such statement was warranted by his information, and whether he had reasonable grounds for believing the same to be true, depend upon all the circumstances of the particular case, and are questions, primarily, for the trial court."

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Louise VITALE, Individually and as guardian of the person of Ralph Vitale, an incompetent person, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 17173.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 18, 1957.

Proceeding to annul marriage on the ground of husband's unsoundness of mind at the time of the marriage, by husband's guardian ad litem against wife. The Superior Court, County of Santa Clara, Leonard R. Avilla, J., entered judgment annulling marriage, and wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that the finding of jury that husband was of unsound mind at the time of marriage was reasonable and supported by substantial evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Marriage ⇐7

The degree of mental capacity at the precise time when marriage is celebrated controls as to validity or invalidity of marriage, and if a marriage is contracted during a lucid interval marriage is valid.

2. Marriage ⇐60(7)

In action to annul marriage on ground of husband's unsoundness of mind at the time of marriage, finding of the jury that husband was of unsound mind at the time of marriage was supported by substantial evidence.

3. Marriage ⇐60(7)

While it is a party's mental condition on the day party was married which controls as to the validity or invalidity of marriage, the condition of unsoundness of mind may be determined from party's condition prior and subsequent to the day of marriage.

4. Evidence ⇐571(2)

Where doctors' opinions were based on examination of a husband within a few days of marriage and opinions were based on an actual observation of the husband, doctors' opinions that husband was of unsound mind at the time of marriage were sufficient to support finding of mental illness at time of marriage.

H. W. Glensor, San Francisco, Donald J. Kennedy, Palo Alto, for appellant.

Alfred J. Harwood, San Francisco, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

On the ground of plaintiff's unsoundness of mind at the time of the marriage plaintiff was granted a judgment annulling it. Defendant appeals, claiming insufficiency of the evidence to support the finding that plaintiff was of unsound mind on the day of the marriage and that on the contrary, the evidence conclusively proves him to have been of sound mind on that day.

Evidence.

[1] Defendant correctly states that the degree of mental capacity at the precise time when the marriage is celebrated controls as to its validity or invalidity, and that if a marriage is contracted during a lucid interval the marriage is valid. See 38 C.J. p. 1288; 55 C.J.S., Marriage, § 12, p. 825.

Plaintiff is a 56 year old plumber of Italian parentage. Defendant is a 38 year old employee of a telephone company. They met in the late summer of 1952 and started going out together. By Christmas plaintiff began proposing marriage. Defendant, because of ill health, refused. In May, 1954, defendant finally accepted and on May 24th they were married in Reno. They returned to plaintiff's home in Palo Alto and lived together there until June 6th. On that day plaintiff went to a hospital. Defendant learned that he was there as a mental patient, and upon a doctor's advice, she signed a petition charging him with being mentally unsound. He was transferred to Agnew State Hospital, and after a hearing committed there, where he is still confined.

Plaintiff's son Frank testified that when plaintiff returned November 2, 1953, from a trip to Europe his father had changed. Frank then related many instances in which his father talked incoherently, had hallucinations, believed that some organization was after him, and that television programs, cards in a drug store and other matters evidenced plots against him. In Frank's opinion his father was of unsound mind. Asked by defendant as to whether in his opinion plaintiff was of unsound mind at all times between November 2, 1953, and the date of the trial, including May 24th, the day of the marriage, Frank replied affirmatively.

Mrs. Tharp, a real estate agent who knew plaintiff well for over ten years, testified that after returning from Europe plaintiff acted "very odd," was upset, heard noises, had been "framed" by a woman who was after his money and from whom he was trying to get away (which was untrue), pointed to a dog on a postcard and claimed it was a woman. In her opinion plaintiff was very unsound and confused.

One Beccelli knew plaintiff for about seven years. After plaintiff's return from Europe, plaintiff stated that people were following him. Plaintiff unjustly accused the witness of putting white powder in his coffee. In August, at Agnew when the witness stated that he had heard plaintiff had been married, plaintiff stated he knew nothing about it. In the witness' opinion plaintiff after his return from Europe "was off his mind."

Plaintiff called three expert witnesses. Defendant called none. Dr. Quirmbach, Clinical Director of Agnew State Hospital who saw plaintiff for the first time at Agnew about June 8th (about fifteen days after the marriage), testified that plaintiff then had a paranoid psychosis, which could also be described as schizophrenia; that on June 8th he was not competent to understand the obligations of the marriage relation, nor to undertake any act of importance, and that his psychosis continued from November, 1953. When asked his opinion concerning plaintiff's competency on May 24th to comprehend the duties and responsibilities of marriage he stated that plaintiff could not do so, basing his reasoning on the fact that plaintiff "was markedly psychotic and delusioned, and a delusional mental illness such as this colors a man's or person's whole actions and activity and thinking. So that whatever he does is in some way touched by it when an illness becomes as marked as this, and so that he isn't really competent to make decisions as a rational person, rather is influenced by the false ideas that he has," and further that plaintiff entered into the marriage "as a kind of a device to ward off the troubles that were conflicting him at the time and bothering him," and that his "delusional ideas so affected his relationship with the woman that he did not understand what he was entering into."

Dr. Wilbur (apparently a medical practitioner) who knew plaintiff since some time in the 1930's, saw plaintiff at his office on May 22nd (two days before the marriage), and testified that the day before plaintiff called him from Los Angeles and said he had a cut on his elbow which he had received in Los Angeles and which he wanted the witness to fix. When asked how he got the cut plaintiff said the witness knew all about it, as the witness was there when it happened. (This was not true.) Plaintiff admitted that he had voluntarily cut himself. The cut was 1¾ inches long directly over an artery. The witness sent plaintiff to Dr. Johnston. Plaintiff had put needles in each of his own toes and told Dr. Wilbur that he was sure that when the doctor had repaired plaintiff's bunions the preceding February, the doctor had put radio receiving sets in each of his toes, so that the cops could keep track of plaintiff. Dr. Wilbur further testified that plaintiff was of unsound mind on May 22nd, and was unable to understand the nature and responsibilities of marriage and even simpler relationships than that.

Dr. Johnston, the psychiatrist to whom Dr. Wilbur referred plaintiff, saw him on May 26th (two days after the marriage). Plaintiff told him that on the boat returning from Europe he first noticed that people were trying to communicate with him over television and through the receiving sets which Dr. Wilbur had put in his toes. Plaintiff told him about other delusional activities on the boat. Plaintiff's ability to do abstract thinking was greatly impaired. His condition was "paranoid schizophrenic reaction of a severe type." He did not have sufficient mental capacity to understand the duties and responsibilities of marriage. While plaintiff indicated that he had previously been married and divorced he did not tell the witness of his marriage two days before. Asked on cross-examination if the witness knew that at the time of the wedding and for a couple of weeks thereafter plaintiff had given no intimation of mental disturbance, the witness would change his opinion, he replied that he would not.

Mrs. Carey, a witness for defendant, testified that before he went to Europe plaintiff stated that he would like to marry defendant, and on his return stated that he liked her as much as ever.

Mr. Cavitt, an insurance broker, tax consultant and accountant, knew plaintiff since 1948, and prepared his income tax returns for 1952 and 1953 from data given by plaintiff. The witness listed plumbing labor performed by plaintiff for others from October 26th to December 20, 1953, and collections made by plaintiff for the years 1953 and early 1954. The witness testified that up to as late as February, 1954, plaintiff clearly and concisely discussed his business affairs and showed no lack of understanding them. About two weeks before plaintiff's marriage plaintiff told the witness he expected to get married and he thought he had a girl who would accept him. There was nothing abnormal about the discussion. Four or five days after the marriage plaintiff came in to report a fire in his automobile. He stated that he thought it was started by a cigarette which had blown through the back window. The morning plaintiff went to Agnew he gave the witness separate bills for the damage to his car and seemed to understand the matter. He was always lucid and clear in his understanding of business matters. In the witness' opinion plaintiff had a proper understanding of marriage.

Mr. Walker, a business man, met plaintiff shortly after the marriage. His conversation was rational and normal. A fire started in a cushion and plaintiff helped put it out, acting calmly and rationally.

One Page knew plaintiff and saw him frequently after his return from Europe. He acted normally and did not mention receivers in his feet.

Defendant testified to her acquaintanceship with plaintiff, his courtship and the circumstances of the marriage and to the lack of any abnormality in his actions at any time. The Reno taxi driver who was a witness to the wedding, and who drove them from the Reno airport to Minden where the marriage took place and then back to Reno, noticed nothing unusual in plaintiff's manner, conversation or answers to the justice of the peace, nor did he appear nervous or upset. The justice of the peace who performed the ceremony and his wife, the other witness to it, saw nothing unusual in plaintiff's actions.

[2, 3] While defendant's evidence created a conflict with that of plaintiff's witnesses which would have supported a finding that plaintiff at the time of the marriage was of sound mind, it does not compel such a finding. The finding of the jury that he was then of unsound mind is a reasonable one and supported by substantial evidence. Defendant seems to contend that because no witness for plaintiff testified to seeing plaintiff on the exact day of the wedding, and witnesses for defendant did, there is no evidence of unsoundness of mind on that day. While it is plaintiff's mental condition on that day that is in issue, that condition may be determined from his condition prior and subsequent to the day. See In re Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 703, 235 P. 45. The situation here is somewhat similar to that in Williams v. Williams, 1923, 63 Cal.App. 482, 218 P. 783, where the court upheld a judgment annulling a marriage even though no witnesses for the successful plaintiff saw him on the day of the marriage. The language of the court is particularly applicable here, 63 Cal.App. at page 486, 218 P. at page 784: "The plaintiff called four doctors who qualified as experts and testified in substance that their examination indicated that the patient was suffering from dementia praecox, that his condition was such that their opinion was that at the time of his marriage it would have been impossible for him to have appreciated the solemnity of the marriage vows, as his judgment would have been too impaired for him to understand the nature, obligations, and responsibilities of marriage. We do not deem it necessary to go further into the testimony of the experts. Suffice to say that their conclusion, uncontradicted by any medical expert, was that Williams must have been insane at the time of his marriage. This testimony is in harmony with the conclusions already given in the testimony of the plaintiff's lay witnesses." (Emphasis added.)

[4] As said in Dunphy v. Dunphy, 161 Cal. 380, 385, 119 P. 512, 514, 38 L.R.A., N.S., 818, the law permits intimate acquaintances to give their opinions as to the mental sanity of a person and therefore, some weight "may be attributed to the opinion, over and above that which would follow, as matter of necessary inference, from the reasons assigned." As to the opinion of the three medical witnesses, "Expert witnesses may give their opinions concerning the mental condition of a person. They are not restricted to the mere declaration of an opinion that the person is or is not of sound mind, but may state the nature and extent of the deficiencies, if any, which they believe to exist." In re Estate of Schulmeyer, 171 Cal. 340, 346, 153 P. 233, 236. Defendant characterized the opinions of the medical men as mere "abstract opinions" and hence not sufficient to support the finding of mental illness. They are not such. They are opinions based upon an examination of the subject, within a few days of the marriage. One doctor saw plaintiff two days before the marriage, the second saw him two days after, and the third fifteen days after. They were not giving their opinions based upon hypothetical questions,[1] but from an actual observation of plaintiff himself.

Defendant quotes from the Dunphy case, "The mental defect or derangement must be one having a direct bearing upon the particular act which is brought in question," 161 Cal. at page 383, 119 P. at page 513, and then contends that plaintiff's delusions and hallucinations did not have a direct bearing upon the act of getting married. However, the delusions and hallucinations were merely parts of the mental defect or derangement. It was his whole mental condition, those matters included, which caused plaintiff to have the inability to comprehend the act of marriage.

The judgment is affirmed.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment of conviction of one count of grand theft in violation of section 487, subd. 1, Penal Code.

The information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County alleged that the defendant "on or about the 15th day of April, 1955, at and in the County of Los Angeles, State of California, did willfully, unlawfully and feloniously take Twelve Hundred Dollars ($1,200), in money, * * the personal property of Carol Louise Heide." (Emphasis added.) The defendant was further alleged to have been previously convicted of the crime of forgery, a felony, in 1940. The defendant entered a plea of not guilty, and denied the prior conviction as alleged. Trial by jury was waived, and the court adjudged the defendant guilty and found the prior conviction not true and sentenced him to the state prison.

[1] The defendant has appealed from the judgment and sentence. No appeal lies from the sentence, and therefore the attempted appeal therefrom will be dismissed. People v. Douglas, 141 Cal.App. 2d 33, 34, 296 P.2d 1.

A substantial resume of the facts is as follows: Carol Louise Heide, age twenty-three, first made the acquaintance of the appellant at the Camera Club in Anchorage, Alaska, in 1953. She was married at the time, as was the appellant. The two families became friendly and Mrs. Heide went to work coloring photographs for the appellant, in his studio and photographic supply shop. A domestic rift came into being between Mr. and Mrs. Heide and she secured a divorce from her husband on or about February 15, 1955. Prior to the securing of the divorce Mrs. Heide made reservations to leave Alaska by airplane and go to Seattle, Washington. She said that about two weeks before leaving Anchorage, Alaska, she withdrew $2,500 in cash, in fifty and twenty-dollar bills, and kept it in a box in a suitcase in her apartment. She also stated that she discussed leaving Alaska with the appellant, that he drove her to the airport, but shortly before she was to leave she became ill and he changed the tickets to a later flight—that when she came out of the restroom he told her that his mother was sick in San Francisco, and that he was going out on the same flight with her. The plane was scheduled to land in Seattle, Washington, however, due to bad weather, the plane landed at Portland, Oregon. Upon arriving in Portland, Oregon, at the airport she said she looked in her purse and found that the envelope containing the $2,500 was missing and that the appellant told her he had the money, and that if she "played along with him" she stood a chance of getting it back. Her testimony was that she had the money in an envelope when she got on the airplane at Anchorage, Alaska, and that she "didn't notice the money was missing" on the plane. She said further, "No, I went to sleep on the plane. It was a night flight. And I didn't notice until after I got off. But I had the money when I got on, and I know I had it part of the time, because in opening my purse to get a cigarette I could see the envelope was still there."

She then stated that she did not know who had taken her money until the defendant told her that he had it. She stated that she was very glad about landing in Portland because her family resided there, but she claimed that the appellant threatened her and that he would make a lot of trouble for her if she said anything. It is not clear how he could have made a lot of trouble for her, nor is it clear why she could not have secured a policeman then and there and had the appellant arrested, nor is it clear why she did not contact her folks, who apparently lived in Portland, Oregon. Nothing whatsoever appears in the record to indicate that she even called any of her family on the telephone, let alone visit with them, but to the contrary, her testimony was, "* * * we purchased tickets to Sacramento, bus tickets, and then went on to Reno."

Some place along the course of events, and it is not made certain in the record, just where it first occurred, Mrs. Heide and the appellant started to live together as husband and wife, going under the names of Marie St. Clair and Paul St. Clair. Mrs. Heide and the appellant apparently went by bus from Portland, Oregon, to Sacramento, California, and stayed in a hotel in the latter city. They then went by bus to Reno, where they resided in an apartment as husband and wife, using the assumed names.

In Reno, Nevada, she applied for and secured a social security card and secured employment as a shill in a gambling establishment in Reno, under her assumed name. She was required to secure a permit through the police department of Reno, Nevada, before she could work in a gambling hall. This necessitated the taking of her fingerprints and the giving of other information, all of which was done at the police station, and at no time did she make any complaint to anyone in the police department about anything. From time to time she gambled while they were in Reno.

Further, while in Reno, Nevada, the defendant bought an automobile and put the title in the name of Paul and/or Marie St. Clair. Although she was there at the time of the purchase, Mrs. Heide did not make any claim to the automobile dealer who sold the car to them that the money being used to purchase the automobile was hers, nor did she object to the purchase of the car. After buying the automobile they drove it to Las Vegas, Nevada, and thence to Burbank, California, where they lived together as husband and wife from about March 1, 1955, to April 15, 1955. She secured employment under her assumed name with an investment company with offices in the Statler Hotel Building, and later went to work for a bus line company. The defendant secured employment with Kierulff Electronics. She did not contact any police officers in Los Angeles or Burbank during the period of time she was living with the defendant as husband and wife in Los Angeles county. On or about April 15, 1955, the defendant left the apartment where they were living and some time thereafter, namely in January, 1956, Mrs. Heide met the defendant on the street in downtown Los Angeles, and at that time she told him that she had a warrant out for his arrest "but if you will give me back part of the money anyway, make restitution, I'll drop the charge." She stated that after quite a walk together he jumped on the flatbed of a passing truck and went away on it.

She further stated that in their entire relationship there was no talk of love or marriage.

The defendant denied any taking of the money from Mrs. Heide and denied that he ever told her that he had taken any money from her, and stated that he never even saw any money in her purse or otherwise.

Further, the defendant stated that he had about $2,300 of his own money with him, which represented an accumulation of savings over a period of about seven years. He also stated that in Portland Mrs. Heide went to a hotel and he went to two bus stations and made arrangements for reservations and tickets; that she stayed at the hotel because "she wanted to do some * * * personal business." From there they went by bus to Sacramento, California, and from there to Reno, thence to Las Vegas, and then to Burbank.

Section 487, subd. 1 of the Penal Code reads as follows:

> "Grand theft is theft committed in any of the following cases:
>
> "1. When the money, labor or real or personal property taken is of a value exceeding two hundred dollars ($200); provided, that when domestic fowls, avocados, citrus or deciduous fruits, nuts and artichokes are taken of a value exceeding fifty dollars ($50); provided, further, that when the money, labor, real or personal property is taken by a servant, agent or employee from his principal or employer and aggregates two hundred dollars ($200) or more in any 12 consecutive month period, then the same shall constitute grand theft." (Emphasis added.)

Section 497 of the Penal Code, enacted in 1872, and amended in 1905 by adding the references to embezzlement, reads as follows:

> "Every person who, in another state or country steals or embezzles the property of another, or receives such property knowing it to have been stolen or embezzled, and brings the same into this state, may be convicted and punished in the same manner as if such larceny, or embezzlement, or receiving, had been committed in this State." (Emphasis added.)

[2] In our opinion, the charge which should have been filed against the defendant was one for a violation of section 497 of the Penal Code and not one under section 487, subd. 1.

Referring first to the cases cited by the attorney general: In People v. Staples, 91 Cal. 23, 27 P. 523, decided in 1891, the opinion recites in the first paragraph thereof that the defendant was convicted of the crime of grand larceny, and later on, 91

Cal. at page 27, 27 P. at page 524, it is said:

"The information charges in plain, direct, and unequivocal terms that the defendant did, in the territory of Arizona, unlawfully, willfully, and feloniously take, steal, and carry away from the possession of one Margaret McGregor a watch and chain, of the value of $75, then and there being the personal property of said Margaret McGregor; and that, after having so unlawfully taken and stolen said watch and chain, he did bring the same into the county of Los Angeles. This states the exact offense defined in section 497 of the Penal Code, the jurisdiction of which is, by section 789, conferred upon any county of the state, into or through which the stolen property has been brought."

The facts of this case briefly were that the defendant was a porter on a through sleeping car. Mrs. McGregor was a passenger on the train travelling from Chicago to this state. A watch and chain were stolen from her berth just about the time the train crossed the Colorado River from Arizona into San Bernardino county. The evidence left it somewhat doubtful upon which side of the boundary the theft occurred and the defendant asked the court to instruct the jury to acquit him unless the jury were satisfied that the larceny was committed in Arizona. The request was refused.

The court said in 91 Cal. at page 27, 27 P. at page 524: "When goods are stolen in one jurisdiction and carried into another, in legal contemplation the crime of larceny is committed in both jurisdictions, and may be punished in either. Our statute on that point (Pen.Code, §§ 497, 786, 789) merely re-enacts the law as it was before. People v. Mellon, 40 Cal. [648] 654; State v. Brown, 8 Nev. [208] 212. Or, perhaps, it is more correct to say that our statute has adopted one of the two views upon which the courts of other states have divided in deciding upon the common-law rule."

It must be clear, therefore, that the facts as set forth in the information actually fitted the offense as is described in section 497, or, just as the court said "[t]his states the exact offense defined in section 497" and not an offense under section 487, and yet the verdict returned was, "We, the jury * * * find the defendant guilty of grand larceny and recommend him for mercy." The record seems to disclose that the case was started at 10:00 a. m., December 2, 1890, a jury was selected, the evidence submitted, the jury instructed at 2:35 p. m., and they returned with a verdict at 4:50 p. m. On December 9, 1890, the defendant was sentenced to San Quentin prison.

The court further said the the only question worthy of consideration in the Staples case was whether it was essential to prove that the original larceny was committed in Arizona, as alleged in the information. In holding that the variance was unimportant in the particular case, the opinion sets forth, 91 Cal. at page 28, 27 P. at page 524: "We do not think it was. Whether the original larceny was committed in Arizona or across the line in San Bernardino, the taking of the stolen property into Los Angeles county was equally criminal; and not only was it equally criminal, it was the same offense, punishable in the same manner, to the same extent, in the same jurisdiction, under the same law. The precise spot at which the criminal act was initiated was a mere circumstance of the offense, properly enough stated in the information, but not essential to be proven as stated. If the information had charged a larceny in Los Angeles county, proof of an original taking in San Bernardino or in Arizona would have been admissible. The only real question is whether evidence of a larcency on the west bank of a river is such a substantial variance from the charge that it was committed on the east bank as to be inadmissible. Under the circumstances of this case, where the theft occurred on a moving train in the act of crossing the river, we do not think the variance was material."

In People v. Black, 122 Cal. 73, 54 P. 385, decided in 1898, the defendant was charged with a violation of section 497 of the Penal Code, in that he stole certain jewelry in the Dominion of Canada, and thereafter brought the articles to San Francisco. The defendant contended that the court in San Francisco had no jurisdiction to try him under the provisions of section 789 of the Penal Code. The court held that there was jurisdiction and affirmed the conviction.

The court went on to say in 122 Cal. at page 75, 54 P. at page 386:

> "Under the great weight of authority, if the defendant had been charged with the crime of grand larceny committed in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, it would seem the evidence introduced at this trial showing the commission of the larceny in the Dominion of Canada, and the felonious bringing of the stolen property into the jurisdiction of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, would support an indictment in said city and county charging larceny. See Bishop's New Criminal Law, sec. 136, et seq. But in the present case the form of the indictment does not justify the consideration of that somewhat interesting question." (Emphasis added.)

Obviously, the statement just quoted was not necessary to a disposition of the case because, as heretofore pointed out, the defendant was charged with violating the provisions of section 497 of the Penal Code, the proper section under the circumstances, and not section 487.

With reference to the comment, as above quoted, as to "the great weight of authority", there is some considerable doubt. The author who is cited as authority for the statement made, namely Bishop on Criminal Law, states as follows, 9th Ed., section 141, page 96:

> "§ 141. The Authorities—have not always proceeded on the principles thus stated. In an old English case, where the goods seized piratically on the ocean were carried by the thief into a county of England, the court refused to take cognizance of the larceny, and committed the offender to answer to the admiralty; because, 'the original act, namely, the taking of them, was not any offence whereof the common law taketh knowledge; and, by consequence, the bringing of them into a county could not make the same felony punishable by our law.' The doctrine has been since applied, in England, to goods stolen both in other parts of the king's dominions and in foreign countries. This doctrine has been followed by the courts of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Tennessee, Indiana, Louisiana, Nebraska, and Georgia. It has been discarded in Connecticut, Vermont, Maine, Mississippi, Iowa, Kentucky, Nevada, Illinois, Oregon, Maryland, and South Carolina. In Massachusetts, the court held defendants liable where the original larceny was in another of the United States; but reached a contrary conclusion where it was in one of the British provinces, a distinction which the Maine tribunal refused to recognize, deeming it without foundation. So, in Ohio, a conviction was sustained where the original taking had been in another State of the Union, but reversed where it had been in Canada. The rule which holds the offender guilty in the State to which he brings the stolen property has likewise been prescribed, by statute, in New York since the before mentioned adjudication was made; also in Alabama, Missouri, Kansas, Michigan, and some other States." In other words, where the situation was as it might well have been in the present case, that is, the theft taking place in Alaska, Canada, or on the high seas, the authorities stand eleven to eleven and there appears to be no great weight one way or the other.

In People v. Barnes, 57 Cal.App. 515, 207 P. 695, decided in 1922, the defendant stole an automobile in Tijuana, Lower California, Mexico, and brought the same into the county of San Diego. He was charged with and convicted of the offense of violating section 497 of the Penal Code. The court properly held, under the provisions of section 789, that the court in San Diego had jurisdiction.

In People v. McGowan, 1932, 127 Cal. App. 39, 14 P.2d 1036, the defendant was charged with and convicted of two counts of burglary in Del Norte county. The information charged, in the first count, that the defendant did on a certain date in Curry county, Oregon, unlawfully enter a building with intent to commit a theft, and did then and there transport into the county of Del Norte, California, the property stolen by means of burglary. The substance of the second count, for our purposes here, was the same as the first. The defendant appealed on the ground that the burglary was a completed offense in Oregon, and that the courts of California have no jurisdiction over the offense. True it is the court did say in 57 Cal.App. at page 42, 14 P.2d at page 1037:

> "It is unnecessary to cite authorities to the effect that the courts of this state have no jurisdiction over completed offenses committed in other states. It is only when the offense committed is a continuing offense, or one which reaches across boundary lines, that jurisdiction is given. Thus, if the one who commits the offense of burglary also commits larceny by stealing property, brings that stolen property across the boundary line, the offense of larceny is continued from the adjoining state into this state, and the superior court of any county into which the stolen property is brought may take jurisdiction of the offense committed in such county, to wit, the offense of larceny, not the offense of burglary."

It is extremely difficult to see how that language was necessary to the decision which the court made. The court, later on in the opinion sets forth subdivision 2 of section 27 of the Penal Code, and sections 497 and 789 of the same code. The court then held that there was no jurisdiction to try the defendant for the offense as charged and which was committed wholly in Oregon, and reversed the judgment.

It appears to us that the better reasoning dictates that the defendant should have been charged with a violation of section 497 in the case before us, and further that a conviction under section 487 is unwarranted and improper under the circumstances of this case.

In People v. Mills B. Sing, 1919, 42 Cal. App. 385, 183 P. 865, the defendant was convicted of grand larceny in Los Angeles county. The defendant went to Orange county and made arrangements to purchase certain potatoes. He hauled the potatoes to Los Angeles county and did not pay the owners for the same. The defendant claimed that the court in Los Angeles county had no jurisdiction, that the offense was begun, ended and consummated in Orange county.

The court held, in effect, that there was a larceny in Orange county, and further, that there was a new larceny in Los Angeles county, saying in 42 Cal.App. at pages 392–393, 183 P. at page 868: "If, after one has done what completes the theft, he continues traveling away with the goods, still intending to appropriate them to his own use, each step is a new trespass and a fresh larceny. So that the possession of goods stolen by the thief is a larceny in each county into which he carries them. The legal possession still remaining in the true owner, every moment's continuation of the trespass and felony amounts, in legal contemplation, to a new caption and asportation. 1 Bishop's New Criminal Procedure, sec. 59; 17 R.C.L., pp. 45, 46; People v. Staples, 91 Cal. [23] 27, 27 P. 523. In legal contemplation, the crime of larceny is committed in both counties, and the thief may be prosecuted and punished in either."

It is at once apparent that the Sing case is not comparable to the case at hand, and whatever the law may be as to the county-to-county situation in the same state, that is not determinative of the state-to-state or foreign country-to-state or high seas-to-state situation, which we have before us.

There is not one word of testimony which we can find as to where the taking occurred. That is, there is no testimony so far as we can determine as to whether the money was taken in or over the Territory of Alaska; British Columbia, Canada; the high seas; the state of Washington, or the state of Oregon.

In Stanley v. State, 1873, 24 Ohio 166, 15 Am.Rep. 604, the defendant was charged with and convicted of the crime of grand larceny and sentenced to the penitentiary. The indictment charged that the defendant, late of Cuyahoga county, Ohio, at the county aforesaid did with force and arms, then and there unlawfully steal and carry away certain silverware, of the property of George Harris. The facts, briefly, were that the goods described in the indictment belonged to Harris, they were stolen from Harris at the city of London, in the Dominion of Canada, that the goods were afterward found in the possession of the defendant in the county of Cuyahoga, Ohio. The court stated the question was —if property be stolen at a place beyond the jurisdiction of the state and of the United States and afterward brought into the state by the thief, can he be lawfully convicted of larceny in the state where he is found? Among other things the court said in deciding the case in 24 Ohio 169, 15 Am.Rep. at pages 606–607:

"We are unwilling to sanction the doctrine or to adopt the practice, whereby a crime committed in a foreign country, and in violation of the laws of that country only, may, by construction and a mere fiction, be treated as an offense committed within this State and in violation of the laws thereof. In this case the goods were stolen in Canada. They were there taken from the custody of the owner into the custody of the thief. The change of possession was complete. The goods were afterward carried by the thief from the Dominion of Canada to the State of Ohio. During the transit his possession was continuous and uninterrupted. Now, the theory upon which this conviction is sought to be sustained is, that the legal possession of the goods remained all the while in the owner. If this theory be true, it is true as a fiction of the law only. The fact was otherwise. A further theory in support of the conviction is, that as soon as the goods arrived within the State of Ohio, the thief again took them from the possession of the owner into his own possession. This theory is not supported by the facts, nor is there any presumption of law to sustain it.

"That the right of possession, as well as the right of property, remained all the time in the owner is true as matter of law. And it is also true, as a matter of fiction, that the possession of the thief, although exclusive as it must have been in order to make him a thief, is regarded as the possession of the owner, for some purposes. Thus, stolen goods, while in the possession of the thief, may be again stolen by another thief; and the latter may be charged with taking and carrying away the goods of the owner. And for the purpose of sustaining such charge, the possession of the first thief will be regarded as the possession of the true owner. This fiction, however, in no way changes the nature of the facts which constitute the crime of larceny.

"What we deny is, that a mere change of place by the thief, while he continues in the uninterrupted and exclusive possession of the stolen property, constitutes a new 'taking' of the property, either as matter of fact or of law."

The court further said in 24 Ohio 170, 15 Am.Rep. at page 608:

"We fully recognize the common-law practice, that when property is stolen in one county, and the thief is afterward found in another county with the stolen property in his possession, he may be indicted and convicted in either county, but not in both. This practice obtained, notwithstanding the general rule that every prosecution for a criminal cause must be in the county where the crime was committed. The reason for the above exception to the general rule is not certainly known, nor is it important in this case that it should be known, as it relates to the matter of venue only, and does not affect the substance of the offense. We are entirely satisfied, however, that the right to prosecute the thief in any county, wherein he was found in possession of the stolen property, was not asserted by the crown, because of the fact that a new and distinct larceny of the goods was committed whenever and wherever the thief might pass from one county into another. His exemption from more than one conviction and punishment makes this proposition clear enough. The common law provided that no person should be twice vexed for the same cause. It was through the operation of this principle that the thief, who stole property in one county and was afterward found with the fruits of his crime in another, could not be tried and convicted in each county. He was guilty of one offense only, and that offense was complete in the county where the property was first 'taken' by the thief, and removed from the place in which the owner had it in possession.

"When goods piratically seized upon the high seas were afterward carried by the thief into a county of England, the common-law judges refused to take cognizance of the larceny, 'because the original act—namely, the taking of them—was not any offense whereof the common law taketh knowledge; and by consequence, the bringing them into a county could not make the same a felony punishable by our law.'"

The court continued in 24 Ohio 172, 15 Am.Rep. at pages 610–611:

"After reviewing the cases, we think the weight of authority is against the conviction and judgment below. And in the light of principle, we have no hesitancy in holding that the court below had no jurisdiction over the offense committed by the prisoner.

"The judgment below is wrong, unless every act of the defendant, which was necessary to complete the offense was committed within the State of Ohio and in violation of the laws thereof. This proposition is not disputed. It is conceded by the prosecution that the taking, as well as the removal of the goods animo furandi, must have occurred within the limits of Ohio. It is also conceded that the first taking, as well as the first removal of the goods alleged in this case to have been stolen, was at a place beyond the limits of the State, and within the jurisdiction of a foreign and independent sovereignty. Now, the doctrine of all the cases is that the original 'taking' and the original asportation of the goods by the prisoner must have been under such circumstances as constituted a larceny. If the possession of the goods by the defendant before they were brought into this State was a lawful possession, there would be no pretense that the conviction was proper. The same, if his possession was merely tortious. The theory of the law, upon which the propriety of the conviction is claimed, is based on the assumption that the property was stolen in Canada by the the prisoner.

"By what rule shall it be determined whether the acts of the prisoner, whereby he acquired the possession of the goods in Canada, constituted the crime of larceny? By the laws of this State? Certainly not. The criminal laws of this State have no extra-territorial operation. If the acts of the prisoner, whereby he came in possession of the property described in the indictment, were not inhibited by the laws of Canada, it is perfectly clear that he was not guilty of larceny there. It matters not that they were such as would have constituted larceny if the transaction had taken place in this State.

"Shall the question whether or not the 'taking' of the property by the prisoner was a crime in Canada be determined by the laws of that country? If this be granted, then an act, which was an essential element in the combination of the facts of which Stanley was found guilty, was in violation of the laws of Canada, but not of this State; and it was because the laws of Canada were violated that the prisoner was convicted. If the laws of that country had been different, though the conduct of the prisoner had been the same, he could not have been convicted. I can see no way to escape this conclusion, and if it be correct, it follows that the acts of the prisoner in a foreign country, as well as his acts in this State, were essential elements in his offense; therefore, no complete offense was committed in this State against the laws thereof.

"I have no doubt the legislature might make it a crime for a thief to bring into this State property stolen by him in a foreign country. And in order to convict of such crime, it would be necessary to prove the existence of foreign laws against larceny. The existence of such foreign laws would be an ingredient in the statutory offense. But that offense would not be larceny at common law, for the reason that larceny at common law contains no such element. It consists in taking and carrying away the goods of another person in violation of the rules of the common law, without reference to any other law or the laws of any other country."

It may be noted here that what the court in Ohio suggested is precisely what the legislature of California did in 1872 when it adopted section 497 of the Penal Code.

The judgment in the Stanley case was reversed.

In People v. Loughridge, 1867, 1 Neb. 11, the defendant was tried upon an indictment charging that in the county of Douglas, Nebraska, he did steal a pocketbook and other property to the amount of about $500. The evidence showed that the property in question was taken from one Hanson at St. Johns, in the state of Iowa, and found in the possession of the defendant in Douglas county, Nebraska, a few days subsequently. The judge, in effect, told the jury that if they found that the defendant feloniously took the property in the state of Iowa and escaped to Nebraska and was found in possession of the property in Nebraska, they might find him guilty under the indictment.

The judgment was reversed and in the opinion the court said, among other things, the following at pages 12–13:

"No case sustaining an indictment under such circumstances asserts the rights of courts of one State to entertain jurisdiction of cases where crimes were committed in other States; but they all proceed upon the assumption that the possession in the thief amounts to a larceny in every county into which he carries the goods, because the legal possession remains in the true owner, and therefore every moment's continuance of the felony amounts to a new caption and asportation. There is considerable subtlety in this principle, and it was, no doubt, suggested for the convenience of trying felons in the county where they might be taken with the goods, and to avoid their escaping punishment by fleeing from one State or locality into another.

"No legislator in defining larceny, and affixing a penalty to the offence, ever contemplated such an interpretation. To allow this interpretation to hold in the case of different counties of the same State may with safety be permitted. Here the accused may have compulsory process for his witnesses, and a conviction in one county will be a bar to that in another. To extend its application to States, is to attach to the crime of larceny, penalties uncertain in their character, possibly greatly incommensurate with the offence committed, and such as do not attend any other crime. Conviction in one State is no bar to a conviction in another. For larceny committed in the State of Missouri, the thief bringing the goods here by way of Iowa, may be first tried here, under this doctrine, and sentenced for ten years; the same in Iowa, and lastly convicted and sentenced in Missouri. So from the fear that the thief might escape justice altogether, we find a warrant to inflict upon him a triple penalty. I should prefer the ultimate escape of now and then a culprit, than assume jurisdiction upon a theory which to me seems based on a fiction rather than on a clear and positive principle of law. The Constitution of the United States has provided for cases where offenders fly from the State where the offence is committed. Wherever he is found he may be secured, and sent to that State for trial from which he has fled, on demand of the executive thereof. Under this provision escape out of a State, while it may involve some inconvenience, need not defeat justice. If the legislature of this State like that of some of the States, chooses to make the possession of stolen goods an offence, it would be proper for it to do so. I am of the opinion, therefore, that the judgment of the court below, should be reversed and the prisoner discharged.

"Judgment reversed."

Apropos of what the court in Nebraska said in reference to adopting proper legislation on the subject matter, surely no legislator in California, since 1872, contemplated that a district attorney would charge a defendant with grand larceny under the theory of a "continuing trespass", under the circumstances as presented in this case, in the face of section 497 of the Penal Code, which was obviously adopted for the purpose of providing for the very situation with which we are confronted in the instant case.

At one time in California it was grand larceny to steal or take the property of another of the value of $50 or more, and was punishable by death in the discretion of the jury. Stats. 1851, Ch. 95. It was at that time petit larceny to steal the property of another under the value of $50, and was punishable by "any number of lashes not exceeding fifty upon the bare back".

There is nothing, so far as we are aware, to establish that the judgment of conviction here would be recognized in Nevada, Oregon, Washington, Canada or Alaska. True it is that we have statute 793 of the Penal Code which, in effect, would preclude a prosecution here if the defendant had been prosecuted in another state or country. However, assuming that the other states mentioned do not have such a law, would anyone contend that the defendant should be prosecuted in California, and serve a term in the penitentiary, as the defendant in this case is presently doing, then have him transported to Nevada and be prosecuted there and serve another term in the Nevada penitentiary for the offense of grand theft and the same in Oregon and Washington, and then to Canada, serve a term there and perhaps be lashed as is provided for in Canada, and then to Alaska for still another term, and if Alaska had the same law we had in 1851, put the defendant to death? Yet that is the ultimate of the sum and substance of the argument of the attorney general.

In Morrissey v. People, 1863, 11 Mich. 327, the plaintiff in error was convicted of larceny on an information charging the larceny to have been committed in Detroit, Michigan. On the trial it appeared that the articles mentioned in the information were taken from a store that was broken into at Windsor, on the opposite side of the Detroit River in Canada, and were brought over the river into Detroit.

The statute is substantially in these words: "Every person who shall feloniously steal the property of another, in any other State or country, and shall bring the same into this State, may be convicted and punished in the same manner as if such larceny had been committed in this State; and in every such case such larceny may be charged to have been committed in any town or city into or through which such stolen property shall have been brought." Comp.Laws Mich. 1857, § 5797.

Morrissey objected to the evidence upon two grounds: (1) that the information did not charge the larceny to have been committed in Canada, and (2) that the act was unconstitutional.

The court held that the judgment should be reversed and the prisoner discharged. Campbell, J., in his opinion, said, among other things at pages 336–341:

"But a construction which involves such unjust consequences to defendants ought not to be adopted under any circumstances if *o*ny other can be safely applied.

* * * * * *

"* * * Although it is loosely said that the continued possession amounts to a new caption and asportation, yet the decisions show that this is not accurately true, for if it were the cases just referred to are incorrect. The real ground of the decisions is that the taking and subsequent felonious possession form one continuous act, which derives its character from the original taking, but which may be punished by the authority offended by such taking in any place within the realm where the offense has been kept up. No one has ever supposed, and certainly no case has ever decided, that a possession of stolen goods in different counties amounted to a succession of separate punishable larcenies. The decisions recognize, in all the continuing possession, but one single offense committed within the jurisdiction. It is in the power of every country to select the place of trial and punishment at its option, and the ordinary rules of locality have nothing to do with the question whether a State can punish offenses not committed within its jurisdiction.

"There are some American cases which assume that larceny in one State, followed by possession in another, is punishable in the latter at common law. So far as they purport to rest on English decisions there is no foundation for them, and they do not in general lay down any other source of authority except local usage.

* * * * * *

"A defendant who is called upon to respond to an information charging a local common law offense in Michigan, can not be said to be apprised of the charge that the offense was in fact committed in Canada, or that any inquiry is to be made into Canadian transactions. Nor is it possible for him, under an information of this form, to avail himself of the statutory defenses. The statute expressly provides that an acquittal or conviction of the same offense in Canada may be pleaded specially in bar. If the defendants had to this information charging an offense in Wayne county pleaded an acquittal in Canada, there is no process by which it could be shown that the offenses are identical. Until the trial is actually commenced the prisoners can not, and the court can not, determine whether the offenses are the same. The Canada indictment would not, neither would the Canada proofs, necessarily or probably trace the goods to Detroit; and the court could not assume that the defendants were not pursued for doing what the accusation fairly implies to have been done in Michigan. The record here, instead of agreeing with the Canadian proofs and records, varies entirely from them.

"The most serious difficulties in the way of a fair trial—apart from the question of territorial jurisdiction—are not lessened by the other interpretation. Whatever view may be taken of the real meaning of the statute, it becomes necessary, upon the trial, to investigate transactions in Canada, and to determine their character under the laws of Canada. It is not within the power of the State of Michigan to compel the attendance of witnesses for the defense from another country. And, where a transaction occurs abroad, it is not only a fair but an inevitable presumption, that most of the witnesses are abroad. Where the main fact to be determined is a criminal act, committed beyond the State, the defendant is likely to be at the mercy of the prosecution. He can not produce either eye-witnesses of the transaction, or impeaching witnesses, unless they choose to present themselves. When the Constitution assures a defendant 'compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor,' it can not contemplate a trial for foreign crimes, where it is not presumable that such witnesses can be compelled to appear. It is also necessary to prove foreign laws as facts; and the foreign common law must be proved by living witnesses. Even if we could, in a criminal case, make any presumption concerning a foreign law, that presumption may be overthrown. And although it may be true that stealing is a crime punished by all nations, it is not the same thing in all nations. Some codes make no distinction between larceny and embezzlement."

In the case of Commonwealth v. Uprichard, 1855, 3 Gray, Mass., 434, 63 Am. Dec. 762, the "indictment charges that the two defendants, at Boston, on the twenty-seventh of July, 1854, the gold pieces and other coins, the property of George D. Twinning, in his possession then and there being, feloniously did steal take, and carry away." 3 Gray, Mass., 434, 63 Am.Dec. at page 762. By the facts of the case, it appeared that "Uprichard and Carey were soldiers in the service of the queen of England, at Sidney, in the province of Nova Scotia; that the coins alleged to be stolen were partly the property of George D. Twinning, a deputy commissary at the military station in Sidney, and partly the property of the queen, in the care and control of said commissary; that the property was taken from the military chest without right, said chest being in the possession of said Twinning; that the defendants deserted about the same time, with certain of said coins in their possession, and were found in this state, each having a part of the stolen property in his possession.

"Upon the evidence offered, the counsel for the defendants asked the court to rule that the indictment could not be supported by the evidence: 1. Because the law in force at Sidney was not proved; 2. Because said property, if stolen at all, was stolen at Sidney, out of the state of Massachusetts, and out of the United States; and the bringing of said stolen property into, and the possession of it in, Boston would not constitute the crime of larceny * * *." 3 Gray, Mass., at page 435, 63 Am.Dec. at page 763.

The trial court instructed the jury that if the property was stolen by the defendant at Sidney, in Nova Scotia, one of the colonies and possessions of the Queen of Great Britain, and the property so stolen and continuing in the possession of the defendant was brought by him into Massachusetts and into Boston, the indictment charging him with stealing them, being in possession of the owner, in this county, was legally sustained and that the defendant could be convicted and punished for this offense by the laws of Massachusetts.

The court said in determining the case, among other things, the following in 3 Gray, Mass., at page 436, 63 Am.Dec. at pages 764–768:

"If the offense is committed anywhere within the realm of England, in whatever county, the same law is violated, the same punishment is due, the rules of evidence and of law governing every step of the proceedings are the same, and it is a mere question where the trial shall be had. But the trial, wherever had, is exactly the same, and the results are the same. A conviction or acquittal in any one county is a bar to any indictment in every other; so that the question as to the place of trial is comparatively immaterial. But even in England, a crime, being an offense against the laws of England, committed on the high seas, and not within the body of any county, cannot be tried in any county, but only in the courts of admiralty jurisdiction; and a fortiori, an offense committed in a foreign country by persons not there amenable to the laws of England could not, upon principle, be tried and punished in England; and the rule that when goods are feloniously taken and brought into a county, it may be charged and tried as an offense in that county, did not anciently extend to goods stolen in any place not within the common-law jurisdiction: * * This was within the principle that in whatever part of the same government the offense was first committed, the same law was violated, the same rule and measure of punishment attached, and with the same consequences, in whatever part of the territory of the same government the trial was had. * * *

"* * * In some of the states it is held that, according to the English rule in respect to counties, the carrying of stolen goods by the thief into another state from the one in which they were stolen is a new caption and a new asportation in the state into which they are thus carried. In other states a different rule is held.

* * * * * *

"It seems to have been considered that although the several states are, in their administration of criminal law, regarded as sovereign and independent, yet, as they were originally English colonies, and acknowledged their subjection to the common law of England, and claimed its privileges, and all equally derived their principles of criminal jurisprudence mainly from that source, and as they had been, both before and since the revolution, closely united for many purposes, there was an analogy more or less strict between the relations of these states to each other and those of counties under the same government; and therefore that the same rule might be safely adopted.

* * * * * *

"It has then been argued that the same rule ought to apply to foreign governments as to the several states of the Union, because in their respective jurisdictions, and in the laws which regulate their internal police, these are as much foreign to each other as each state is to foreign governments. * * * Laws to punish crimes are essentially local, and limited to the boundaries of the state prescribing them. Indeed, this case, and the cases cited, proceed on the ground that the goods were actually stolen in this state. The commission of the crime in Nova Scotia was not a violation of our law, and did not subject the offender to any punishment prescribed by our law. This indictment proceeds on that ground, and alleges the crime of larceny to have been committed in violation of the laws of this commonwealth, and within the body of this county. It is only by assuming that bringing stolen goods from a foreign country into this state makes the act larceny here that this allegation can be sustained; but this involves the necessity of going to the law in force in Nova Scotia to ascertain whether the act done there was felonious, and consequently whether the goods were stolen, so that it is by the combined operation of the force of both laws that it is made felony here. Were it any other offense than that of larceny, which gives an ambulatory character to the offense by the movable character and the guilty possession of the goods stolen, there could be no doubt of the law, and no plausible pretense that our law had been violated, or the party amenable to penalties created by it. Hence the necessity, in the constitution of the United States establishing the Union, for a fundamental clause providing for the mutual surrender of fugitives from justice, and also for treaties of extradition providing for the mutual surrender by our government of persons charged with crimes in another.

"* * * Here the question is one of principle, whether the defendants have violated our law. It is said that they commit a new theft by the possession of stolen goods in our jurisdiction. But what are stolen goods? Are we to look to our own law, or to the law of Nova Scotia, to determine what is a felonious taking, what is the animus furandi, and the like? If we look to the law of Nova Scotia, and that law is different from ours in defining and prescribing theft, then we may be called on to punish as a crime that which would be innocent here. If we look to our own law, then a taking and carrying away of goods in Nova Scotia, under circumstances which would not be criminal there, might be punishable here. Foreigners coming within our jurisdiction with goods, and complying with customary regulations, commit no offense, and commit none in removing them from place to place in the same or different counties. If they can be indicted and punished here on the ground that such goods were stolen goods when they were brought in, it is but another mode of charging that the goods were obtained by a violation of the criminal laws of another country, and our courts must necessarily take jurisdiction of the violations of the criminal laws of foreign independent governments, and punish acts as criminal here solely because they are in violation of the laws of such government, and which, but for such violation, would not be punishable here. It seems difficult to distinguish this from judicially enforcing and carrying into effect the penal laws of another government, instead of limiting our criminal jurisprudence to the execution of our own."

In New York state there is a statute comparable to our section 497 of the Penal Code, namely section 1301, New York Penal Law, McKinney's Consol. Laws, c. 40. Before the adoption of section 1301 in New York the courts there held that a person could not be charged and convicted of an offense of theft where the original taking occurred outside of the state of New York. In People v. Berger, 142 Misc. 178, 254 N.Y.S. 136, the defendant was a dealer in coupons and he unlawfully obtained premiums of a certain manufacturing company in New Jersey. He redeemed the coupons for personal property and took such property from New Jersey into New York and attempted to sell such property there. The court affirmed the conviction of the defendant who was charged with a violation of section 1301 of the Penal Law, and in deciding the case said in 254 N.Y.S., at page 145:

"* * * we must keep in mind that the substantive crime is the act of stealing in New Jersey. Over this we have no jurisdiction, but when the one who is a party to that offense brings the proceeds of the larceny into this state, he may be prosecuted in our courts for a violation of section 1301 under our Penal Law." (Emphasis added.)

[3, 4] To affirm the judgment of conviction in this case it is necessary to adopt the theory of the legal fiction of a continuing trespass in grand theft cases. Even if such a theory were adopted the proof submitted in this case is, in our opinion, wholly insufficient to sustain the judgment, and in any event, we are of the opinion that the legislature, by adopting section 497 of the Penal Code, said in effect that, "We will have none of the legal fiction in California in matters of this sort, but we will adopt a statute which will spell out the crime and provide for the punishment of the very evil in question." We prefer to believe that the members of the legislature in 1872, knew of the variance of the rules in the various states and in England and elsewhere in respect to the problem of prosecutions in this state for thefts committed in other states or countries, and the property so stolen being brought into California, and they wisely adopted section 497 to cover the particular problem. The real offense here is not in taking the property, wherever that took place, but to the contrary, the real offense is in bringing it into California, and that is what the defendant should have been charged with, if anything.

The attempted appeal from the sentence is dismissed and the judgment is reversed.

WHITE, P. J., concurs.

DORAN, Justice.

I dissent.

It is argued on appeal, in effect, that appellant should have been charged with the violation of Section 497 of the Penal Code instead of 487. It is also argued that, in the circumstances, the court is without jurisdiction because the offense was committed outside the state of California.

I am in accord with respondent's contentions that, "The appellant committed a 'continuing trespass' which is expressly recognized under California case law and statutes.

"People v. Staples, 91 Cal. [23] 27, [27 P. 523]; People v. Black, 122 Cal. 73, 75, [54 P. 385]; People v. Barnes, 57 Cal.App. 515, 517–518 [207 P. 695]; People v. [Mills B.] Sing, 42 Cal.App. 385, 393 [183 P. 865]; People v. McGowan, 127 Cal.App. 39, 42 [14 P.2d 1036]; Penal Code, Section 497.

"Penal Code Section 27(2) further provides:

"'The following persons are liable to punishment under the laws of this state:

"'2. All who commit any offense without this state which, if committed within this state, would be larceny, robbery, or embezzlement under the laws of this state, and bring the property stolen or embezzled, or any part of it, or are found with it, * *.'

"In People v. Staples, supra (91 Cal. 23), at page 27 [27 P. 523], it is said:

"'* * * When goods are stolen in one jurisdiction and carried into another, in legal contemplation the crime of larceny is committed in both jurisdictions, and may be punished in either. * * *'

"The court in People v. [Mills B.] Sing, supra (42 Cal.App. 385), at pages 392–393 [183 P. 865], stated:

"'* * * If, after one has done what completes the theft, he continues traveling away with the goods, still intending to appropriate them to his own use, each step is a new trespass and a fresh larceny. * *'

"People v. McGowan, supra (127 Cal. App. 39), at page 42 [14 P.2d 1036], is equally explicit:

"'It is unnecessary to cite authorities to the effect that the courts of this state have no jurisdiction over completed offenses committed in other states. It is only when the offense committed is a continuing offense, or one which reaches across boundary lines that jurisdiction is given. Thus, if the one who commits the offense of burglary also commits larceny by stealing property and then brings that stolen property across the boundary line, the offense of larceny is continued from the adjoining state into this state, and the superior court of any county into which the stolen property is brought may take jurisdiction of the offense committed in such county, to wit, the offense of larceny, * * *.' (Emphasis added.)

"Thus, the doctrine of 'continuing trespass,' as handed down from the common law, is well engrained in the case law of this state."

Appellant's argument is highly technical, but lacks support in the record and the law.

I would affirm the judgment.

Rose NATHANSON, as Administratrix of the Estate of Joseph Nathanson, deceased, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

May MURPHY and Barbara Baglietto, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 17053.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 9, 1957.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 8, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 5, 1957.

Action for fraud. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, T. L. Harris, J., entered an order directing that order denying motion for new trial be corrected nunc pro tunc so as to provide for amendment of judgment by eliminating therefrom provision for interest prior to date of judgment, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that the evidence supported implied finding that at time of hearing of motion for new trial, trial judge had and expressed intent to change the allowance of interest, and that hence failure to provide in order denying a new trial for such amendment of judgment was a clerical error which trial court had power to correct, at any time, nunc pro tunc.

Order affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐1199

An order which has been finally reversed cannot thereafter be modified.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐1199

Reversal of order, entered four days after denial of motion for new trial, modifying judgment by eliminating provision for interest prior to date of judgment did not deprive trial court of jurisdiction to thereafter direct that order modifying judgment by eliminating provision for interest prior to date of judgment be entered nunc pro tunc as of date motion for new trial was denied, since order entered nunc pro tunc was a new order made for new reasons and upon new grounds, and not the same order as the one previously reversed.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐1097(1), 1195(1)

Where court, in deciding appeal, states in its opinion a principle or rule of law, necessary to the decision, such principle or rule becomes the "law of the case", and must be adhered to throughout subsequent progress of case, both in lower court and upon subsequent appeal.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Law of the Case".

4. Appeal and Error ⇐1195(3)

Where order modifying judgment by eliminating provision for interest prior to date of judgment was reversed on ground that record contained nothing to justify modification of judgment four days after denial of motion for new trial, "law of the case" did not preclude trial court from thereafter directing entry of order nunc pro tunc as of date of denial of motion for new trial so as to correct clerical error by eliminating provision for interest prior to date of judgment.

5. Fraud ⇐64(1)

Under code provision for recovery of interest from date of vesting of right to recover damages certain, read with code provision vesting in jury discretion to award interest in action for breach of obligation not arising from contract, whether in action for fraud interest should be allowed from date of fraud was left to the discretion of the trier of fact to be exercised in consideration of the circumstances of the case. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 3287, 3288.

6. Judgment ⇐306, 321

A court has inherent power to correct a clerical error after entry of judgment, and there is no time limitation on the exercise of such power.

7. Appeal and Error ⇐1024(5)

Conflicting averments in affidavits, filed in support of and opposition to motion for correction nunc pro tunc of order denying motion for new trial, as to whether trial judge at hearing on such motion for new trial had expressed intent to allow interest only from date of judgment and had directed that judgment be amended accordingly presented a question for trial court.

8. New Trial ⇐163(1)

On motion to correct nunc pro tunc order denying motion for new trial by providing therein for amendment of judgment so as to eliminate provision for interest prior to judgment, evidence supported implied finding that at hearing of motion for new trial, trial judge had expressed intent to modify judgment by eliminating such provision for interest.

9. New Trial ⇐163(1)

Failure to provide in order denying a new trial for amendment of judgment so as to eliminate therefrom provision for interest prior to judgment, in accordance with intent expressed by trial judge at hearing of motion for new trial, was a "clerical" and not a "judicial error", which trial court had power to correct, at any time, nunc pro tunc.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Clerical Error" and "Judicial Error".

10. Judgment ⇐306

A provision of, or omission from, order or judgment as made or rendered, due to inadvertence or mistake of court, may be treated as a "clerical" as distinguished from a "judicial error".

Morgan V. Spicer, H. R. Whiting, San Francisco, for appellant.

William Klein, Toland McGettigan, San Francisco, for respondents.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

On March 3, 1953, the trial court granted plaintiff a judgment for $5,000 against defendants in a fraud action, together with interest at 7 per cent from June 11, 1947, the date the court found plaintiff had parted with the money as a result of the alleged fraud. On September 30, 1955, the trial court entered its order granting defendants' motion to modify nunc pro tunc as of March 27, 1953, the findings of fact, conclusions and judgment in that action by providing that interest should run only from March 3, 1953, the date of the judgment. Appellant appeals.

The basic facts are not substantially in dispute and can be summarized as follows:

June 11, 1947: Plaintiff paid over to defendants $5,000 as a result of what the court found to be false representations by defendants. Plaintiff, thereafter, filed an action against defendants for fraud and deceit.

March 3, 1953: The trial court filed its judgment granting plaintiff the sum of $5,000 with interest at 7 per cent from June 11, 1947.

March 27, 1953: Defendants' motion for a new trial, that had been argued and submitted the preceding day, was denied. One of the basic disputes involved on this appeal is whether, at the time of arguing the motion for a new trial, the judge expressed an intent to modify the judgment so as to allow interest only from March 3, 1953.

March 31, 1953: An order modifying the findings, conclusions and judgment by eliminating interest prior to March 3, 1953, was filed. No explanation for the making of these modifying orders was given by the trial judge.

Defendants appealed from the judgment, while the plaintiff appealed from the modifying order of March 31, 1953.

April 19, 1955: This court affirmed the judgment and reversed the modifying order of March 31, 1953. Nathanson v. Murphy, 132 Cal.App.2d 363, 282 P.2d 174. In due course, after denial of a petition for hearing, the remittitur issued.

August 5, 1955: The defendants served a notice of motion for an order directing that the order of March 31, 1953, modifying the findings, conclusions and judgment in reference to interest be entered nunc pro tunc as of March 27, 1953.

September 30, 1955: A minute order was entered directing "that motion of defendants to enter orders nunc pro tunc and amended judgment as specified in notice of motion be granted."

[1, 2] On the present appeal, the first contention of appellant is that the trial court had no jurisdiction to enter the challenged order, because the order appealed from is the "same" as the order previously reversed. The contention is that "the orders after reversal had no further existence and could not thereafter be entered nunc pro tunc." App.Op.Br. p. 7; citing such cases as Cowdery v. London & San Francisco Bank, 139 Cal. 298, 73 P. 196; Wickersham v. Crittenden, 103 Cal. 582, 37 P. 513; Mulford v. Estudillo, 32 Cal. 131, and Gillespie v. Andrews, 78 Cal.App. 595, 248 P. 715. Those cases stand for the proposition that once an order is finally reversed, that order cannot thereafter be modified. That is not this case. While the order of September 30, 1955, happens to be similar to the order of March 31, 1953, the September, 1955, order was not the "same" order as that of March, 1953. It was a new order, made for new reasons and upon new grounds.

Appellant also argues, for much the same reasons, that the September, 1955, order was invalidly entered nunc pro tunc because it is the law of the case that the order of March 31, 1953, was not entered to correct a clerical error, and so the order of September, 1955, since it is the "same" order, cannot be so entered. This argument is unsound for the same reasons that the first argument is unsound. The September, 1955, order is new and different from that of March, 1953.

It might be well to point out just what was decided in the prior appeal in reference to the March, 1953, order. In Nathanson v. Murphy, 132 Cal.App.2d 363, at page 373, 282 P.2d 174, at page 181, it is stated: "The orders were not made pursuant to the provisions of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure; to correct clerical errors or misprision in the record; or on motion for new trial pursuant to the provisions of sections 663 or 663a, Code of Civil Procedure. Section 3288, Civil Code, provides that in an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract and in every case of oppression, fraud or malice, interest may be given in the discretion of the jury. There being no jury in this case, this means the trial court, to whose discretion is left the determination of whether interest will be awarded. * * * The court exercised its discretion and awarded interest. '* * * the rule is well settled that a judgment or order once regularly entered can be modified or vacated by the court which entered it only in the manner prescribed by statute * * *.'"

[3, 4] The doctrine of the law of the case is that where on appeal the court, "in deciding the appeal, states in its opinion a principle or rule of law, necessary to the decision, that principle or rule becomes the law of the case, and must be adhered to throughout its subsequent progress, both in the lower court and upon subsequent appeal." Tally v. Ganahl, 151 Cal. 418, 421, 90 P. 1049, 1050. In our former opinion, so far as the point here involved is concerned, we did not state "a principle or rule of law" within the meaning of the rule under discussion. We simply held, and so stated, that there was nothing in the record to justify the court in modifying the judgment on March 31, 1953, four days after denying the motion for a new trial. This was the fact, and this was the theory upon which the case was argued and decided. But now we are presented not with the order of March 31, 1953, for which no basis appears, but with the order of September 30, 1955, for which the court gave a reason, namely, to correct a clerical error made on March 27, 1953, at the time when the new trial was denied. Thus, the doctrine of law of the case has no application.

Appellant's counsel next urges that his client was entitled to interest as a matter of right from the date his client parted with her money under section 3287 of the Civil Code. In our former opinion we held that, when sections 3287 and 3288 of the Civil Code are read together, whether interest should be allowed from the date of the deceit or from the date of judgment was a matter to be determined by the trial court in its discretion. The argument, made on the previous appeal, that appellant was entitled to interest from the date of the fraud as a matter of right was rejected. This is so because we reversed the orders of March 31, 1953, not because the court was bound to allow interest from the date of the fraud, but because the orders modifying the interest charge were entered without authority.

This ruling on the prior appeal that in a fraud case the trial court possesses discretion as to whether or not interest shall be allowed from the date of the fraud or only from the date of judgment was clearly correct. The two pertinent Civil Code sections read as follows:

Section 3287: "Every person who is entitled to recover damages certain, or capable of being made certain by calculation, and the right to recover which is vested in him upon a particular day, is entitled also to recover interest thereon from that day, except during such time as the debtor is prevented by law, or by the act of the creditor, from paying the debt."

Section 3288: "In an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, and in every case of oppression, fraud, or malice, interest may be given, in the discretion of the jury."

[5] Although section 3287 seems to provide that in every case involving "certain" damages interest should be allowed, when that section is read with section 3288 it is clear that in cases "not arising from contract" discretion as to interest is conferred on the trial court. The contrary implication found in Goodspeed v. Great Western Power Co., 33 Cal.App.2d 245, 271, 91 P.2d 623, 92 P.2d 410, is based upon the fact that the court in that case considered only section 3287 and failed to consider section 3288. When these sections are read together the proper rule is that the defrauded party may ask for damages from the date of the fraud, but "[w]hether such interest is to be awarded is left to the discretion of the trier of fact to be exercised in consideration of the circumstances of the case." Pavlovich v. Neidhardt, 128 Cal.App.2d 559, 562, 275 P.2d 836, 839[1]; see also Anderson v. Anderson, 129 Cal.App.2d 403, 276 P.2d 862; Leonard v. Huston, 122 Cal.App.2d 541, 265 P.2d 566; McCowen v. Pew, 18 Cal.App. 482, 123 P. 354.

We now come to the basic question involved on this appeal—was the trial court justified in making nunc pro tunc the modifying order of September 30, 1955?

[6] A court has the inherent power to correct a clerical error after entry of judgment, and there is no time limitation in the exercise of this power. In re Estate of Goldberg, 10 Cal.2d 709, 76 P.2d 508. This is not disputed. The question is, was an error committed when the trial court denied

1. In that case interest was not allowed from the date of the fraud, and this was approved by the appellate court.

the motion for a new trial, and was that error "clerical" or "judicial"? What does the record show in this regard?

The affidavit of respondents' counsel avers that at the argument on the motion for a new trial on March 26, 1953, the attention of the trial judge was called to the fact that the judgment allowed interest from June 11, 1947, the date of the fraud, and that the trial judge, in open court, declared "that it had not been his intention at any time to allow interest from the date the transaction involved took place * * * but intended that interest be allowed from the date of judgment, and directed and ordered that the findings and conclusions of law be modified and the judgment amended accordingly; that said order directing such modification and amendment was inadvertently omitted from the minutes of court on said day."

[7] Counsel for appellant filed an affidavit averring that the question of interest was not mentioned at the argument on March 26, 1953, and was first mentioned when the court made the abortive orders of March 31, 1953. This conflict was, of course, for the trial court.

The trial judge had no doubts that he had intended to modify the original judgment by deleting the provision for interest, but was somewhat uncertain as to whether he had expressed that feeling at the hearing on March 26, 1953, or first expressed it at the hearing on March 31, 1953. However, he did state in reference to the March 26, 1953, hearing: "I do recall this, that I had in my mind to allow interest only from the date of judgment."

The court reporter who was present at the hearing of the motion for a new trial on March 26, 1953, but did not take down the proceedings, testified that it was his best recollection that at the hearing of March 26, 1953, the trial judge expressed the thought "that the fraud was not of such a nature that would justify * * * [him] in dating the interest back to the time of the transaction. Therefore you would * * * correct the finding so that it would read interest from the date of the judgment"; that he was not positive about it and such statement may have been made on March 31, 1953, but his memory was "that on the proceedings on the motion for a new trial you made that statement." After reviewing the matter in his mind the reporter testified that "I believe you said it on the motion for new trial." The trial judge then stated that because the case was not a clear-cut one of fraud, he "never had in mind allowing interest from the date of the transaction because I thought that would be a penalty that ought to be assessed only with a definite case of fraud." After counsel for appellant stated that he believed the trial judge first expressed such thoughts at the hearing on March 31, 1953, the trial judge stated: "My recollection is uncertain, but I don't know just how to put it; I believe * * * it was on the motion for a new trial."

[8, 9] It is apparent from this testimony that the implied finding of the trial court that on March 26, 1953, at the hearing of the motion for a new trial, the trial judge not only had the intent to change the allowance of interest but expressed such intent, is supported by ample evidence. The failure to make such change was therefore a "clerical" mistake, and one that the court had the power to rectify, nunc pro tunc.

[10] In 3 Witkin on California Procedure, page 1894, the test between a clerical and judicial mistake is defined as follows: "The test is simply whether the challenged judgment was made or entered inadvertently (clerical error) or advertently (judicial error)." In Morgan v. State Board of Equalization, 89 Cal.App.2d 674, 682, 201 P.2d 859, 864, this court stated: "From these cases, it appears that the rules to be followed in determining whether an error is clerical or judicial so that the court may have the power to correct it by amendment, are as follows: (1) No serious problem is involved where the correction is to include a matter inadvertently omitted, such as the grounds for granting a new trial, or where the error is plainly clerical. (2) The serious problem arises where the amendment is substantially different from the original order or substantially changes the rights of the parties. In such cases, if the court is purporting to correct a clerical error, it should say so, or there should be something in the record to show it. (3) Where there is conflicting evidence as to whether the error was clerical, the reviewing court will probably accept the conclusion of the trial court. [Citing Bastajian v. Brown, 19 Cal.2d 209, 120 P.2d 9.] If the record shows clearly that there was no clerical error, the recital by the trial court will not be conclusive."

The Bastajian case, cited above, illustrates how broad the powers of the trial judge are in correcting clerical errors. In that case the trial judge ordered judgment for the defendants, but, because of the illness of defendants' attorney, no findings were submitted. About a year later plaintiff's counsel prepared findings supporting the judgment but making favorable mention of the losing party. Defendants' counsel objected by letter to the findings, but they were nevertheless signed. Later they were corrected "nunc pro tunc." It was held on appeal that the "trial court's finding upon conflicting evidence that a clerical error exists, and the nature thereof, is conclusive upon this court." 19 Cal.2d at page 215, 120 P.2d at page 12. The Supreme Court placed great emphasis on the trial judge's statement that the signed findings did not conform to his true but unexpressed intent, stating that such statement "cannot be wholly disregarded nor lightly brushed aside. It was a declaration of a fact that was concealed in the mind of the judge, and no one was in a better position than he to state his true intent." 19 Cal.2d at page 214, 120 P.2d at page 12.

The Bastajian case, in holding that the mere declaration of the trial judge that the final judgment did not properly state his intent is alone sufficient, states an extreme rule. It is difficult to reconcile it in that respect with In re Estate of Burnett, 11 Cal.2d 259, 79 P.2d 89, and Stevens v. Superior Court, 7 Cal.2d 110, 59 P.2d 988, in both of which the trial judge declared that he had made a clerical error, but this was held not to be conclusive. But in the instant case we are not dependent solely upon the statement of the trial judge that it was his intent not to allow interest. The judge's statement and the testimony of the reporter, reasonably interpreted, are to the effect that the judge not only had such intent, but expressed it at the hearing on March 26, 1953. In addition, there are the positive averments in the affidavit of counsel for respondent to the effect that the judge so ruled on March 26, 1953. Thus, the order of March 27, 1953, did not correctly state what the judge had expressed as his intent. This was a clerical and not a judicial error. Therefore, the court had the power, at any time, to correct it, nunc pro tunc.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

BRUSH INDUSTRIAL LUMBER COMPANY, a corporation, and John A. Brush, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21905.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 17, 1957.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 14, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 13, 1957.

Action for damages for conversion of certain lumber and to vacate judgment in favor of defendants in an action involving the same parties and the same facts. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Leon T. David, J., sustained defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's third amended complaint, and from ensuing judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that complaint alleging that in prior action his then counsel refused to follow his suggestion to introduce certain available evidence that court denied motion to dismiss his then counsel and that his then counsel carelessly allowed clerk's transcript on appeal to include exhibits that were not in evidence did not allege facts showing extrinsic fraud or mistake.

Affirmed.

1. Judgment ⇐443(1)

The final judgment of a court having jurisdiction over person and subject matter can be attacked in equity after the time for appeal or other direct attack has expired only if the alleged fraud or mistake is extrinsic rather than intrinsic.

2. Judgment ⇐443(1)

Fraud or mistake is extrinsic, within rule that a final judgment can be attacked in equity after time for appeal or a direct attack has expired if alleged fraud or mistake is extrinsic rather than intrinsic, when it deprives unsuccessful party of an opportunity to present his case to the court.

3. Judgment ⇐433, 443(3)

If an unsuccessful party to an action has been kept in ignorance thereof or has been prevented from fully participating therein, there has been no true adversary proceeding and the judgment is open to attack at any time.

4. Judgment ⇐460(4)

Where complaint, seeking to recover damages for conversion of lumber and to vacate judgment in prior action between same parties involving same facts, alleged that at prior trial his then attorney refused to follow his suggestions to introduce available evidence, that court denied motion to dismiss his then counsel, and that his then counsel carelessly allowed clerk's transcript on appeal to include exhibits that were not in evidence, did not allege facts showing extrinsic fraud or mistake and did not entitle him to have prior judgment vacated.

5. Evidence ⇐43(2)

Court could take judicial notice of matters contained in record on prior appeal to court in action between same parties involving same facts.

Thomas Eistrat, appearing in pro. per.

Wendell W. Schooling, Kenneth M. Liskum, Huntington Park, for respondents.

FOX, Justice.

Plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for the conversion of certain lumber and to vacate a judgment in favor of defendants in an action between the same parties involving the same facts. The prior judgment was affirmed by this court in Eistrat v. Brush Industrial Lumber Co., 124 Cal.App.2d 42,[1] 268 P.2d 181.

Defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's third amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend. Plaintiff appeals from the ensuing judgment of dismissal.

In the instant matter, as in the prior case, plaintiff is seeking damages for the conversion of lumber that he claims belonged to him. He is, of course, met at the outset with the principle of res judicata. In order, however, to avoid its application, plaintiff asserts that the prior judgment was the result of extrinsic fraud or mistake.[2] In support of his contention he points to certain allegations in his third amended complaint: that at the trial he requested his attorney to (1) offer available evidence that defendants had not paid anyone for most of plaintiff's lumber; (2)

1. Reference is made to this opinion for the factual and procedural background of this litigation.

2. He relies on Westphal v. Westphal, 20 Cal.2d 393, 126 P.2d 105; Chung Gee v. Quan Wing, 103 Cal.App.2d 19, 229 P.2d 50; and Bacon v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 477, 89 P. 317.

offer in evidence the depositions of R. P. Kratz, vice president of defendant corporation, which showed defendants' defense to be sham and frivolous; (3) offer evidence that a judgment for defendants would be an unjust enrichment of them and a gross miscarriage of justice; (4) offer in evidence written opinion of United States District Court in a bankruptcy proceeding involving one of the vendees of the lumber, see Eistrat v. Brush Industrial Lumber Co., supra, 124 Cal.App.2d at pages 43, 44 and 45, 268 P.2d at pages 182 and 183, to the effect that all lumber taken and carried away from plaintiff's land to defendants was the property of plaintiff and his wife;[3] and that counsel refused to follow these suggestions. Plaintiff also alleged he made a motion in the trial court to dismiss his counsel so that he might handle the case himself. His motion, however, was denied. Plaintiff further alleges that counsel carelessly allowed the Clerk's Transcript on appeal to include exhibits that were not in evidence.

[1–4] In Westphal v. Westphal, 20 Cal. 2d 393, at page 397, 126 P.2d 105, at page 106, the court stated, that "The final judgment of a court having jurisdiction over persons and subject matter can be attacked in equity after the time for appeal or other direct attack has expired only if the alleged fraud or mistake is extrinsic rather than intrinsic. [Citations.] Fraud or mistake is extrinsic when it deprives the unsuccessful party of an opportunity to present his case to the court. [Citations.] If an unsuccessful party to an action has been kept in ignorance thereof [citations] or has been prevented from fully participating therein [citation], there has been no true adversary proceeding, and the judgment is open to attack at any time."[4] Measured by these principles, it is clear that plaintiff has not alleged facts entitling him to have the prior judgment vacated. There is no showing of extrinsic fraud or mistake within the definition of those terms by our courts. Westphal v. Westphal, supra; United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U.S. 61, 65, 25 L.Ed 93; In re Griffith's Estate, 84 Cal. 107, 112–113, 23 P. 528, 24 P. 381; Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 133–135, 25 P. 970, 27 P. 537, 13 L.R.A. 336.

[5] Plaintiff had full opportunity to present his case upon the prior trial, he fully participated therein by counsel, and it was truly an adversary proceeding.[5]

Plaintiff's complaint against his counsel does not warrant vacating the judgment. In Greenwood v. Greenwood, 112 Cal.App. 691, at page 696, 297 P. 589, at page 591, the court stated:

"Equity will not grant relief against a judgment at law, where such judgment was obtained in consequence of the neglect, inattention, mistake, or incompetency of the attorney, unless caused by the opposite party." There is no charge here to bring this case within the stated exception.

The judgment is affirmed

Opha Frances HARVEY, Dr. Georgiana Raymond, Nina Ronilla Graves, Otis Robert Smith, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

Padie Lou SMITH and Thomas J. Fletcher, as Executor of the Last Will and Testament of Otis C. Smith, Deceased, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 5541.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 17, 1957.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 15, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 13, 1957.

Quiet title action by testatrix' children against second wife of testatrix' husband and executor of husband's will to quiet title to land, which was devised by testatrix. The Superior Court, Riverside County, Francis M. Estudillo, Judge Assigned, rendered judgment that children take nothing and that the property be quieted in heirs and devisees of husband and in executor under husband's last will and testament, and children appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that, where will provided that testatrix' husband was to have life estate in certain realty and be entitled to use the realty and keep all the revenue therefrom but not be entitled to dispose of it without written consent of testatrix' children, and will further gave husband the residue of the estate, and decree of distribution provided that there be distributed to husband a life estate, including all income, to the property involved and all other property of the estate whether described or not, husband received both a life estate and the entire remainder interest and, therefore, was vested with title in fee.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Executors and Administrators ⇐315(6)

In general and in absence of extrinsic fraud or anything akin thereto, the decree of distribution, which has become final, remains the unalterable measure of rights of all persons who may be interested in the estate even though the decree is inaccurate from standpoint of provisions of will.

2. Executors and Administrators ⇐315(5)

If language of decree of distribution is uncertain, vague, or ambiguous, it is subject to judicial explanation or interpretation, and, in such circumstances, the will itself may be used to establish the true meaning and intent of the decree.

3. Executors and Administrators ⇐315(6)

Decree of distribution, which became final and remained undisturbed, and which directed the distribution in plain and unambiguous terms, operated as an interpretation of the will and bound the parties.

4. Wills ⇐617

Where will gave testatrix' husband a life estate in named property and further provided that he should be entitled to use the property and receive revenue therefrom but should not be entitled to dispose of it without written consent of testatrix' children, the prohibition on disposition without children's consent did not divest husband of his life estate or create any future vested interest in the children but only curtailed husband's right to dispose of it.

5. Wills ⇐435, 440

Court's function is to construe a will, not to make one, and to ascertain testator's intention as expressed and, if lawful, give it effect.

6. Executors and Administrators ⇐315(5) Wills ⇐597(2)

Where will provided that testatrix' husband was to have life estate in certain realty and be entitled to use the realty and keep all the revenue therefrom but not be entitled to dispose of it without written consent of testatrix' children, and will further gave husband the residue of the estate, and the decree of distribution provided that there be distributed to husband a life estate, including all income, to the property involved and all other property of the estate whether described or not, husband received both a life estate and the entire remainder interest and, therefore, was vested with title in fee.

William J. Clark, Sr., Los Angeles, and William J. Clark, Jr., Yucaipa, for appellants.

Lacey & Cox, Hemet, for respondent Padie Lou Smith.

Best, Best & Krieger, Riverside, for respondent Thomas J. Fletcher.

MUSSELL, Justice.

This is a quiet title action brought by plaintiffs and appellants, the children by a former marriage of Otis C. Smith, deceased, against Padie Lou Smith, the widow of the decedent, and Thomas J. Fletcher, the executor of his will. Defendants in their answers alleged that the estate of Otis C. Smith and his heirs and devisees are the owners in fee simple of the property involved. The trial court rendered judgment that plaintiffs take nothing by their complaint and that the title to the property be quieted in the heirs and devisees of Otis C. Smith and Thomas J. Fletcher, as executor under his last will and testament.

The facts are set forth in an agreed statement on appeal. Alice E. Smith died October 8, 1941, and at the time of her death owned the property here involved. She left surviving her Otis C. Smith, her husband, and four children, the plaintiffs and appellants in the present action.

It was stipulated that all parties hereto obtained all their right, title and interest in and to the subject property under the will of Alice E. Smith and by reason of the decree of distribution of her estate, Riverside Probate No. 8979. It was further stipulated that "Otis C. Smith died July 25, 1955; his estate is being probated in Riverside county, No. 16710. Defendant Thomas J. Fletcher is the duly qualified and acting executor thereof. The executor included the subject property in the inventory of the estate."

The last will and testament of Alice E. Smith, executed September 4, 1941, contained, in part, the following provisions:

"Third: I give and bequeath to my beloved husband, Otis Smith a life estate in Lots 1 and 2 Block 40 Whittier Subdivision and Lot 1 and the East 13.5 feet of Lot 2 Whittier Subdivision of Block 151, Hemet, Riverside County, California. Said Otis Smith shall be entitled to use and manage said property and to receive and keep for his own use all the rent and revenue therefrom, but he shall not be entitled to sell, mortgage or dispose of the same without the written consent of our children, to wit, Opha Francis Harvey, Dr. Georgiana Raymond, Nina Ronilia Graves, and Otis Robert Smith.

"Fourth: I give and bequeath to my husband, Otis Smith all the residue of my estate, both personal real and mixed property wheresoever the same may be situated."

The order settling final account and decree of distribution in the matter of the estate of Alice E. Smith, No. 8979, dated June 8, 1942, provided, in part, that there be distributed to Otis Smith a life estate, including all income, in and to the property here involved, and "all other property of said estate whether described herein or not."

Appellants contend that under the terms of the last will and testament of Alice E. Smith, deceased, and decree of distribution in the probate of her estate, Otis C. Smith received a life estate and no more in the property involved. This contention is without merit.

[1, 2] In re Estate of Goldberg, 10 Cal. 2d 709, 713, 76 P.2d 508, 510, the rule is stated:

"In general, and in the absence of some existing and affecting condition such as extrinsic fraud, or anything akin thereto, the rule would appear to be well established that even though from a standpoint of following the specific provisions of the will, a decree of distribution of the estate is inaccurate and incorrect, nevertheless after the decree has become final, for all time thereafter, it remains the unalterable measure of the rights of all persons who may be interested in the estate. Matter of Trescony, 119 Cal. 568, 51 P. 951; Lankton v. Superior Court, 5 Cal.2d 694, 696, 55 P.2d 1170; Goad v.

Montgomery, 119 Cal. 552, 51 P. 681, 63 Am.St.Rep. 145; Moor v. Vawter, 84 Cal.App. 678, 258 P. 622; and authorities therein respectively cited. However, should the language of such a decree appear to be 'uncertain, vague or ambiguous,' it is subject to judicial explanation or interpretation, and in such circumstances, the will itself may be used to establish the true meaning and intent of the decree. Fraser v. Carmen-Ryles, 8 Cal.2d 143, 64 P.2d 397; In re Ewer, 177 Cal. 660, 171 P. 683; Horton v. Winbigler, 175 Cal. 149, 165 P. 423."

In Mitchell v. Bagot, 48 Cal.App.2d 281, 285–286, 119 P.2d 758, it was held that there is no rule of law that will permit a court setting in equity to declare a decree of distribution void because it does not conform to the provisions of the will; that the will is well settled that once the decree of distribution becomes final it becomes the measure of the rights of the beneficiary and is immune from collateral attack even though in contravention of the terms of the will; and that the will cannot be used to impeach though it may be used to interpret the decree.

In Bacon v. Kessel, 31 Cal.App.2d 245, 250, 87 P.2d 857, 861, the court, in discussing the effect of a decree of distribution, said:

"The decree of distribution from which no appeal was taken is a final judgment, and the certified copy thereof was properly admitted. Code Civ. Proc. sec. 1905. That decree is determinative of the facts presented or which might have been presented therein, and is conclusive upon the parties or their privies as to those facts when incidentally put in issue between them in relation to a different matter, in the same or any other court." (Citations.)

[3] In the instant case there is no allegation in the pleadings or statement in the stipulation of facts of extrinsic fraud, mistake, clerical error or jurisdictional defect regarding the decree of distribution in the estate of Alice E. Smith, deceased. That decree became final on August 7, 1942, and remains undisturbed. It was stipulated that all parties hereto obtained all their right, title and interest in and to the property involved under the will of Alice E. Smith and by reason of said decree of distribution. The decree of distribution is not ambiguous. It gives a life estate to Otis C. Smith and the reversionary interest to him under the omnibus clause of the decree by giving to him "all other property of said estate whether described herein or not." Where, as here, a decree of distribution directs distribution in plain and unambiguous terms it operates as an interpretation of the will and binds the parties. In re Estate of Tynan, 129 Cal.App.2d 364, 366, 276 P.2d 809.

[4, 5] Plaintiffs contend that in her will Alice E. Smith designated them as the holders of the reversionary interest in her estate by vesting them with the power of termination. We do not agree with this contention. The function of the court is to construe a will, not to make one; to ascertain the testator's intention as expressed and, if lawful, give it effect. In re Estate of Lefranc, 38 Cal.2d 289, 296, 239 P.2d 617. The provisions in paragraph three of the will prohibiting Otis Smith from selling, mortgaging or disposing of his life estate without the consent of the children did not operate to divest Otis Smith of his life estate. They only curtailed his right to dispose of it and did not create any future vested interest in plaintiffs in the property involved. Under the fourth paragraph of the will the residue of the estate, after a specific bequest to decedent's sister and the life estate to Otis Smith, also bequeathed to Otis Smith "all the residue of my estate, both personal real and mixed property wheresoever the same may be situated." It follows that if the will was used by the trial court in interpreting the decree the provisions thereof are not inconsistent with those of the decree and the trial court correctly determined the extent of the interest of Otis Smith in the property involved as well as the extent of the interest of the plaintiffs therein.

[6] Plaintiffs argue that the trial court erred in finding that the remainder interest in the property involved was not specifically distributed by the decree of distribution and then concluding that the decree gave to Otis Smith "both a life estate and the entire remainder interest in the subject property and vested in him title to the subject property in fee." However, the trial court could and did conclude that this reversionary interest passed to Otis C. Smith and he was vested with title to the property in fee under the terms of the omnibus clause of the decree and under paragraph four of the will.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

William Duncan WOODWORTH, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. A. 3546.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.

Dec. 17, 1956.

Defendant was prosecuted on the charge of being a "vag-lewd". Judgment of conviction in the Municipal Court for the Los Angeles Judicial District and from an order denying a new trial, Harold C. Shepherd, J., the defendant appealed. The Superior Court, Appellate Department, Bishop, P. J., held that the failure to give a cautionary instruction was prejudicial error.

Judgment and order denying a new trial reversed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐768(1), 1173(2)

In prosecution for being a "vag-lewd" where except for character witnesses, no other witness was called, not even the partner of the police officer who was in attendance at the trial, error in failing to give a cautionary instruction was prejudicial error.

2. Criminal Law ⇐768(1)

A prosecution on a charge of being a "vag-lewd", was essentially a sex case in which a cautionary instruction should have been given.

Thomas Higgins, Jr., C. V. Eberhard, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Roger Arnebergh, City Atty., Donald M. Redwine, Asst. City Atty., Philip E. Grey, Deputy City Atty., Los Angeles, for respondent.

BISHOP, Presiding Judge.

[1] The testimony of the police officer, as to the approach and conduct of the defendant upon the one occasion when the two met, was sufficient to support the jury's verdict finding him (the defendant) guilty on the charge of being a "vag-lewd", for the approach and subsequent conduct was that of a homosexual. While admitting the meeting with the police officer, the defendant, as a witness, denied the acts and conversation which the officer had related and upon which depended all proof of his character as a lewd person. Except for the character witnesses—among whom appeared the elementary administrator of the school where the defendant was a teacher, and a man who had served with him in the Navy (in whose reserved service the defendant is a Lieutenant-Commander)—there was no other witness called, not even the partner of the police officer, who was in attendance at the trial. Every circumstance held in People v. McGhee, 1954, 123 Cal.App.2d 542, 544, 266

P.2d 874, 876, to require the giving of a cautionary instruction, was present. The cautionary instruction was among those written in a series of "mandatory instructions" that were before the trial court. It was stricken. In this evenly balanced case, the error in not giving it was prejudicial.

The rule requiring that the cautionary instruction be given arose in rape cases, but it is by no means confined to them. The McGhee case, supra, was one where the charge was pimping. In it a review is made of a number of cases, including several not involving rape, where it had been held that the cautionary instruction should be given. Nor as the respondent contends, is the rule limited to cases where the prosecuting witnesses are minors. In People v. Willis, 1954, 129 Cal.App.2d 330, 276 P.2d 853, the prosecuting witnesses were two sailors, whose age evidently was considered of no importance in applying the principle of interest to us, for it was not mentioned. Under the facts of that case the conclusion was reached that the error that had been committed, in failing to give the cautionary instruction, was without prejudice, but the parenthetical comment of the court is, nevertheless, worth repeating, 129 Cal.App.2d 337, 276 P.2d 857: "(The instruction ought, however, to be given in cases of this kind instead of taking the chance that its omission might be prejudicial. The work of reviewing courts would be considerably lessened if trial courts would perform their duty in this respect.)"

[2] It is also argued that this is not a sex case, within the meaning of the rule, because the question to be answered is not, was the defendant guilty of some act involving sex? but, was he possessed of a lewd character? The weakness of this argument is that it overlooks the fact that the answer to the question as to the defendant's character is almost entirely dependent in such a case as this upon the answer to be given as to the acts by which that character is revealed. Those acts were sex acts, and this is essentially a sex case, in which a cautionary instruction should have been, but was not, given.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

West's Ann. Bus. & Prof.Code, § 19400 et seq.; West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 19572(c, f, s).

James H. Phillips, Sacramento, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Howard S. Goldin, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

The California Horse Racing Board took punitive action against petitioner and appellant, Alfred B. Fiske, dismissing him from his civil service position as secretary of said board. The amended notice of punitive action stated the causes for appellant's dismissal as:

(1) His inefficiency;

(2) His insubordination; and

(3) Failure of good behavior or acts during duty hours which are incompatible with or inimical to the public service within the meaning of Government Code Section 19572, subdivisions (c), (f) and (s).

Appellant filed with the State Personnel Board an answer and request for hearing on the dismissal, and following a hearing the Personnel Board rendered its findings of fact and decision sustaining the punitive action taken by the Racing Board. Thereafter appellant filed in the Superior Court a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the State Personnel Board to annul its decision sustaining his dismissal and to reinstate petitioner to his former civil service position. The Superior Court sustained the action of the Personnel Board upholding the dismissal of petitioner, and petitioner has appealed from the judgment denying said writ.

Appellant attacks all of the findings of fact of the Personnel Board, contending that said findings of fact constitute an abuse of discretion in that there is no substantial evidence to support any of them.

[1] Preliminarily, certain well settled rules should be stated. The State Personnel Board is a constitutional agency, and as such its decisions, after hearing, will be sustained on review by the Superior Court when there is substantial evidence in the light of the whole record to sustain such decision. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1094.5 (c); Boren v. State Personnel Board, 37 Cal.2d 634, 637–638, 234 P.2d 981; Genser v. State Personnel Board, 112 Cal.App.2d 77, 80, 245 P.2d 1090; Nelson v. Department of Corrections, 110 Cal.App.2d 331, 336, 242 P.2d 906.

[2, 3] On appeal, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence to support the trial court. Moran v. Board of Medical Examiners, 32 Cal.2d 301, 308–309, 196 P.2d 20; Genser v. State Personnel Board, 112 Cal.App.2d 77, 81, 245 P.2d 1090. As stated in Genser v. State Personnel Board, supra, 112 Cal. App.2d 77, 87, 245 P.2d 1090, in reviewing the evidence before the Personnel Board all conflicts must be resolved in favor of the findings of the board and all legitimate and reasonable inferences indulged in to uphold their decision.

[4] The first finding attacked by appellant is as follows:

"That on or about December 11, 1952, Alfred B. Fiske did attend and was present at a regularly scheduled Executive Session meeting of the California Horse Racing Board; that each and all of the then Commissioners of the California Horse Racing Board, namely, Dwight Murphy, John H. Sattler and Fred W. Pabst, were present at said Executive Session meeting; that in the course of said Executive Session meeting Alfred B. Fiske openly and orally stated in substance as follows:

"'* * * I have no respect for a certain member of this Board. Change that "certain" to John H. Sattler, here, who is prejudiced in mind and in thought, and in my personal opinion, (emphasize "personal") does not belong on this Board, or to represent any honorable organization entrusted with the will and the welfare of the people of the State.'

"That at said time and place, said John H. Sattler did in substance state that he (Sattler) did not intend to reply to any alcoholic who would make such remarks.

"That immediately thereafter, at said time and place, said Alfred B. Fiske did continue to talk, and did say about said John H. Sattler, as follows:

"'The man is incompetent; he relies on third-rate information from prejudiced sources; he is a detriment to racing; and in my opinion, I can prove by organizations identified with the track that he's been nothing but a trouble maker, a disturber and a malcontent ever since he's been on this Board.'"

Appellant did not deny that the foregoing occurred at the board meeting but endeavored to show provocation by claiming that Mr. Sattler had on prior occasions made remarks highly detrimental to appellant, but Mr. Sattler denied having made any such statements.

There can be no question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding that the said actions and conduct of appellant constituted "failure of good behavior and acts during the duty hours which are incompatible and inimical to the public service within the meaning of Government Code Section 19572, subdivision (s)."

Also attacked by appellant is the finding:

"That Alfred B. Fiske prepared, or caused to be prepared, the 1953–54 budget for the California Horse Racing Board, which budget was submitted to the Department of Finance on about October 24, 1952, and in which budget Alfred B. Fiske inserted, or caused to be inserted, a request for the addition of three new positions as Race Track Investigators to the Board's then existent staff of four Race Track Investigators. Said Budget also provided for the continuance of three positions classified as 'Photographer-Identifier' for 1953–54.

"On or about December 11, 1952, the California Horse Racing Board met and unanimously decided to abandon and discontinue the service of identification of horses and the position for classification of the Photographer-Identifier not later than the close of the 1952–53 fiscal year.

"Also, on or about December 11, 1952, during an Executive Session meeting of the California Horse Racing Board, at which time Alfred B. Fiske was present in his official capacity as Secretary thereof, Chairman Dwight Murphy of said Board announced substantially as follows: That the Board wished to have of record that Chief Investigator Ford was to have under his jurisdiction, in addition to himself, not more than four investigators; and that additional investigators, if any, were to be dispensed with as of June 30, 1953, or sooner. That on or about January 22, 1953, during an Executive Session of the California Horse Racing Board, at which time Alfred B. Fiske was present in his official capacity as Secretary thereof, said Board duly adopted a resolution providing for continued operation of said Board's staff of four investigators under the supervision and direction of the Board's Chief Investigator, to-wit: Mr. Ford."

Said finding then goes on to state that on February 2, 1953, appellant as secretary of the Racing Board made a voluntary appearance before an Assembly committee and without authority from the Racing Board, and contrary to the express policy of the Board to continue its staff of investigators, suggested and advocated the elimination of investigators. Said finding states further:

"Thereafter, on or about March 19, 1953, at a hearing on the revised budget of the California Horse Racing Board before the Sub-Committee of the Senate Committee on Finance, while Alfred B. Fiske was present, Dwight Murphy, in his official capacity as Chairman of the California Horse Racing Board, did testify before such Senate Sub-Committee substantially as follows:

"That the California Horse Racing Board desired to eliminate the horse identification service; that such horse identification was an obligation which should be borne by the licensed racing associations; that the cost of horse identification service was an unnecessary State expense and was not required by the Racing Act [Business and Professions Code, § 19400 et seq.]. That the Board did not need three additional Race Track Investigators; that the California Horse Racing Board believed that the retention of its present staff of Race Track Investigators was absolutely necessary.

"That immediately after Chairman Murphy testified, Alfred B. Fiske did testify before said Senate Sub-Committee in substance as follows:

"That no Race Track Investigators at all were needed by the California Horse Racing Board; and that the Rules of Racing had been changed to require racing associations to police their tracks.

"That such statement as to the Rules of Racing having been changed to require the racing associations to police their tracks was false and misleading when made and was known by Mr. Fiske to have been false and misleading when made; that in truth and in fact the Rules of Racing ever since 1943 to date hereof have required licensed racing associations to properly police their grounds."

Said finding then states other instances when appellant testified before the legislative committee in opposition to the established policy of the Racing Board.

There is ample evidence to support the above finding and the further finding that said acts and conduct of appellant "constituted and do constitute inefficiency, insubordination and failure of good behavior and acts which are incompatible with and inimical to the public service within the meaning of Government Code Section 19572, subdivisions (c), (f) and (s)."

There were a number of other findings made by the Personnel Board and by the court detailing other acts and conduct of appellant in not only failing to observe and carry out the policies adopted by the board but openly opposing said policies. There is ample evidence in the record to support said findings.

[5] The final finding attacked by appellant states:

"That during the horse race meeting conducted at Del Mar Race Track in 1952, from on or about July 22, 1952, through September 6, 1952, both dates inclusive, and at the 1952–53 horse race meeting at Santa Anita Race Track, from on or about December 26, 1952 through March 7, 1953, both dates inclusive, and at each of said meetings, Alfred B. Fiske frequently and repeatedly did drink and consume intoxicating liquor during the duty hours.

"That the State Personnel Board found, and this Court now finds that the actions and conduct of Alfred B. Fiske hereinabove found to be true constituted and do constitute failure of good behavior and acts during the duty hours which are incompatible with and inimical to the public service within the meaning of Government Code Section 19572, subdivision (s)."

This finding is supported by the testimony of Raymond Gill, a bartender, who testified that at both of these race meetings appellant visited the bar two or three times per week and that during both of these race meetings, appellant would visit the bar once, twice, three times per day and on each visit he would take from two to four drinks of Scotch and perhaps more, depending on how long appellant stayed there. This drinking took place during the afternoon while the races actually were being conducted. This evidence was corroborated by other testimony.

By rule of the State Personnel Board, Title 4, Section 172 of the California Administrative Code, it is provided:

"All * * * employees in the State civil service * * * shall possess the general qualifications of * * sobriety, * * *"

In the case of American Cigar Co. v. Fabacher, 156 La. 182, 100 So. 299, 300, the word "sober" was held to mean moderate in, or abstinent from, the use of intoxicating liquor, and it was said that "The synonyms for 'sober' are abstemious, abstinent, temperate, unintoxicated."

Also, in Title 4, Section 1463, Rules of the California Horse Racing Board, it is provided:

"Drinking of intoxicating liquor, by any racing official, or track employee, licensed by the board, while on duty, is prohibited. Any person violating this rule shall be summarily relieved of his duties by the stewards and a full report made to the board, which may, in its discretion, revoke the license of such person * * *"

It would not appear unreasonable to hold the Secretary of the Racing Board, while on duty, to the same standard of conduct required of racing officials or track employees licensed by the Board. Here, there is not involved just an isolated drink but a course of conduct during duty hours, and appellant is not charged with drunkenness on duty, but with frequently and repeatedly drinking during duty hours.

Appellant's defense that he possessed the power to place himself off duty, do his drinking, and then return to duty would seem to be without merit. How could the public, which comes in contact with the Secretary, know in which capacity he was doing his drinking, as a civil servant on or off duty? It would appear that the acts in this finding would also constitute failure of good behavior.

The California Horse Racing Board has jurisdiction and supervision over horse racing in California and appoints a secretary whose duties are to "keep a full and true record of all proceedings of the board, preserve at the general office all books, documents and papers of the board, prepare for service such notices and other papers as may be required of him by the board, and perform such other duties as the board may prescribe."

It is apparent from the record that appellant misconceived the scope of his authority as secretary of the board and that he, in effect, attempted to place himself above the authority of the Racing Board. It is impossible to conceive how any board can function properly and fulfill the duties assigned to it by law if its secretary can be permitted to pursue the course of conduct that the record shows that appellant pursued. Such conduct cannot be justified by either reason or authority and fully supports the conclusion that the conduct of appellant "constituted inefficiency, insubordination, and failure of good behavior and acts during duty hours which are incompatible with and inimical to the public service."

No other points raised require discussion.

In view of the foregoing we conclude that the respondent State Personnel Board did not act arbitrarily, unreasonably or excessively, and did not commit any abuse of discretion in its decision; that said board's decision is supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record before said board; that said board did not exceed its jurisdiction; said board proceeded in the manner required by law, and that said board's decision is supported by the findings, and the findings are supported by the evidence; that throughout the entire proceedings the petitioner was afforded a full and fair hearing.

The judgment is affirmed.

Judge William B. McKesson and Judge William B. Neeley, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 22026.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 11, 1957.

Action by a minor and her parents against two superior court judges for her alleged false imprisonment in Juvenile Hall during proceeding to declare her a ward of juvenile court and pursuant to district attorney's request for her detention as a material witness for the People in prosecution of her grandfather for violation of Pen.Code, § 288. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Leon T. David, J., dismissing the action, plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that plaintiffs' amended complaint was demurrable as merely claiming procedural irregularities in that petition for minor's detention as juvenile court ward and citation of her parents to appear at pre-detention hearing were not timely filed and that grounds on which district attorney sought her detention did not warrant it.

Judgment affirmed.

Great care must be taken not to restrict absolution of judge performing or purporting to perform his official functions from civil liability for damages, as for false imprisonment, and care should be taken in limiting such immunity to situations in which judge has jurisdiction.

The test of judicial officer's immunity from civil suit for damages because of his judicial acts is not whether he committed an error of judgment, but whether act complained of was within general scope of his judicial powers and done in honest belief that he was legally warranted in doing it.

In action against two superior court judges for false imprisonment of minor in Juvenile Hall during proceedings to declare her a juvenile court ward and pursuant to district attorney's request for her detention as material witness for People in prosecution of her grandfather for violation of Pen.Code, § 288, plaintiffs' amended complaint was demurrable as merely claiming certain procedural irregularities in that petition for minor's detention as court's ward and citation of her parents to appear at predetention hearing were not timely filed and that grounds on which district attorney sought her detention did not warrant it, as judges acted within scope of general subject matter over which they were given power. Randolph Weltner, C. A. Weltner, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Wm. E. Lamoreaux, Asst. County Counsel, Isaac Pacht, Los Angeles, for respondents.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment of dismissal made and entered in favor of the respondents and against the plaintiffs.

The plaintiff Sharon Singer, a minor, and her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert L. Singer, filed an action for false imprisonment against respondents Judge William B. McKesson and Judge William B. Neeley, judges of the superior court of the State of California in and for the County of Los Angeles. The trial court ordered a dismissal of the action after having sustained the demurrer of the respondents to the amended complaint.

Substantially, the allegations of the amended complaint are as follows: That Judge William B. McKesson and Judge William B. Neeley are sued in their official capacities as judges of the superior court. As to Judge William B. McKesson, it is alleged that on June 29, 1955, after a petition was filed to have Sharon Singer declared a ward of the juvenile court, Judge McKesson, without any hearing, ordered Sharon detained in Juvenile Hall and that on June 30, 1955, he conducted a pre-detention hearing in regard to Sharon, but that no citation with reference to the hearing was served upon Sharon's parents; that at the pre-detention hearing Judge McKesson ordered the continued detention of Sharon in Juvenile Hall, and on July 1, 1955, ordered her transferred to a boarding home where she was kept until she was returned to Juvenile Hall on July 6, 1955, on the further order of Judge McKesson. It is not alleged that Sharon's parents were not present at the hearing held on June 30, 1955.

It is then alleged that the petition to declare Sharon a ward of the juvenile court was finally terminated by Judge McKesson in favor of Sharon.

It is further alleged, on information and belief, that after the defendant David Bogen, Superintendent of Juvenile Hall, had been served with an order issued by the District Court of Appeal, District Two, Division Three, to release Sharon, he conferred with Judge McKesson, who instructed the defendant Bogen to disregard the order and that one hour expired before Sharon was released.

As to Judge William B. Neeley, it is alleged that on June 24, 1955, he signed an order to detain Sharon in Juvenile Hall, pursuant to a written request of the district attorney, a copy of which was attached to the complaint, and is as follows:

"In the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles, State of California, Sitting in Separate Session in the Exercise of Jurisdiction as Juvenile Court

"In the Matter of S/ Sharon Singer A person under the age of twenty-one years	Petition No. 183 213 Request for Order Detaining Material Witness

"In the Matter of the above mentioned minor person, it is respectfully submitted as follows:

"That a petition has been filed in the Juvenile Court of the County of Los Angeles; that said above mentioned person is residing within said county, and is a person alleged to come within the provisions of the 'Juvenile Court Law,' of the State of California; that said person is of the age of 8 years, and should be detained, as a material witness for the People of the State of California pending the trial of People of the State of California vs. S/David Eli Singer Dist. Atty's No. 211 526, on a charge of 288 of the Penal Code.

"In the interests of justice because of pending charge against said adult and for the welfare and protection of said minor person it is necessary that said witness be not interviewed or allowed any visitors except on consent of the District Attorney or under conditions prescribed by the court which will insure that the minor witness will not be improperly influenced or intimidated. The reasons for requesting that said witness be so held are as follows: Defendant is grandfather of victim and parents do not wish to have him prosecuted. Case came to attention of police through neighbors who had observed defendant's actions.

"The District Attorney hereby agrees to notify the Probation Department when said minor is no longer needed as a material witness in the above entitled action.

"Wherefore, your petitioner respectfully requests that said minor be detained in Juvenile Hall or other suitable place until no longer needed as a witness in the above entitled action.

"Dated this 24 day of June, 1955
"District Attorney
"By Florence E. Linn
"S/ Deputy District Attorney

"For the welfare and protection of said minor, and in the interest of justice, it is hereby ordered that said minor be detained in Juvenile Hall as a material witness for the People of the State of California for the reasons above set forth, without visitation as above requested, except with the approval of the District Attorney or by order of this court.

"Dated: This 24 day of June, 1955
"William B. Neely
"S/ Judge of the Juvenile Court"

The judge signed the order to detain the child as is set forth on the Exhibit above. The complaint then alleges that at the time of the order no petition had been filed and none was filed until June 29, 1955.

It is at once apparent that the two judges involved were acting in their official capacities as judges of the juvenile court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles.

The appellants contend that the judges of the juvenile court had no jurisdiction to incarcerate or detain the minor for use as a witness and that the judges, acting without jurisdiction, are now subject to an action for false imprisonment.

The appellants rely heavily upon the case of De Courcey v. Cox, 94 Cal. 665, 30 P. 95, which was an action for false imprisonment. The judgment in that case went in favor of the defendant on the pleadings, the plaintiff appealed, and the judgment was reversed. The complaint set forth that upon a complaint made before the defendant, a justice of the peace, charging plaintiff with refusing to return the sum of $20, alleged to have been overpaid the plaintiff by mistake by the El Cajon Vineyard Company, the defendant issued a warrant of arrest, upon which the plaintiff was arrested and brought before the defendant and required to and did plead to the charge, and after trial the defendant rendered judgment that the plaintiff restore the amount of $20 or be committed to jail for twenty days; that pursuant to the judgment, the defendant issued a commitment and placed it in the hands of an officer who executed it by imprisoning the plaintiff in the county jail for three days. The court stated, 94 Cal. at page 668, 30 P. at page 95: "Defendant proceeded upon the charge as he might have done had it constituted a crime, which it clearly did not."

In Platz v. Marion, 35 Cal.App. 241, 169 P. 697, it was held that a justice of the peace was not liable for damages for false imprisonment in issuing a warrant for and causing the arrest of an attorney at law upon a complaint filed with him which attempted to charge, but was wholly insufficient to charge the attorney with the crime of common barratry, in the absence of any claim that the justice was actuated by malice or corrupt motives, his action being based upon an erroneous determination as to the sufficiency of the complaint. The De Courcey case is well analyzed in the Platz case, the court stating, 35 Cal.App. at page 251, 169 P. at page 701:

"* * * The Supreme Court held that the complaint stated a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant (the justice of the peace) for damages for false imprisonment. But readily it will be observed that absolutely no public offense whatever under the law was stated in the so-called complaint filed with the justice against the plaintiff. The justice had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the complaint, so far as a criminal charge was concerned. The complaint merely alleged that the plaintiff, by a mistake, had been overpaid, and there was no pretense, so far as the complaint disclosed, that he obtained or even retained the amount overpaid through any criminal act on his part. If the so-called complaint disclosed anything at all, it was merely a civil action for money had and received, and obviously the proceeding taken by the justice under the complaint was wholly and entirely coram non judice. It was not a case which called for the arrest of the person of the plaintiff. It was, as before suggested, in no sense a criminal case or a proceeding in which the plaintiff was accused of committing a public offense. The facts pleaded by the plaintiff in his action against the justice of the peace might therefore be held sufficient to raise the implication that malice characterized the acts of the justice of the peace in issuing the warrant for the arrest of and in committing the plaintiff to imprisonment."

The court in the Platz case went on further to say, 35 Cal.App. at pages 248–249, 169 P. at page 700: "The early case of Grove v. Van Duyn, 44 N.J.L. 654, 42 Am. Rep. 648, holds to this view. In that case, which, in its general aspect, resembles the case at bar, a justice of the peace had authorized the arrest of the plaintiff and held him to bail for unlawfully carrying away bundles of cornstalks, 'under a statute which came no nearer to specifying such an offense than carrying away a stack of corn.' It was held that the justice was not civilly liable. So much is said in the opinion in that case that is instructive and enlightening upon the question involved in the case before us that we feel justified in quoting therefrom in extenso. The court said:

" 'Most of the general principles of law pertaining to that branch of this controversy which relates to the alleged liability of the defendant in this suit, who was a justice of the peace, are so completely settled as not to be open to discussion. The doctrine that an action will not lie against a judge for wrongful commitment, or for an erroneous judgment, or for any other act, made or done by him in his judicial capacity, is as thoroughly established as are any other of the primary maxims of the law. Such an exemption is absolutely essential to the very existence, in any valuable form, of the judicial office itself, for a judge could not be either respected or independent if his motives for his official actions or his conclusions, no matter how erroneous, could be put in question at the instance of every malignant or disappointed suitor. Hence we find this judicial immunity has been conferred by the laws of every civilized people. That it exists in this state in its fullest extent has been repeatedly declared by our own courts. Such was pronounced by the Supreme Court to be the admitted principle in the cases of Little v. Moore, 4 N.J.L. 74, 75, * * *; Taylor v. Doremus, 16 N.J.L. 473, 476; Mangold v. Thorpe, 33 N.J.L. 134, 137; and by this court in Loftus v. Fraz, 43 N.J.L. 667. To this extent there is no uncertainty or difficulty whatever in the subject.

" 'But the embarrassment arises where an attempt is made to express, with perfect definiteness, when it is that acts done by a judge, and which purport to be judicial acts, are such within the meaning of the rule to which reference has just been made. It is said everywhere in the text-books and decisions that the officer, in order to entitle himself to claim the immunity that belongs to judicial conduct, must restrict his action within the bounds of his jurisdiction, and jurisdiction has been defined to be "the authority of the law to act officially in the particular matter in hand": Cooley on Torts, 417. But these maxims, although true in a general way, are not sufficiently broad to embrace the principle of immunity that appertains to a court or judge exercising a general authority. Their defect is that they leave out of the account all those cases in which the officer, in the discharge of his public duty, is bound to decide whether or not a particular case, under the circumstances as presented to him, is within his jurisdiction, and he falls into error in arriving at his conclusion. In such instances the judge, in point of fact and law, has no jurisdiction, according to the definition just given, over "the particular matter in hand," and yet, in my opinion plainly he is not responsible for the results that wait upon his mistake. And it is upon this precise point that we find confusion in the decisions.

" 'There are certainly cases which hold that, if a magistrate, in the regular discharge of his functions, causes an arrest to be made under his warrant on a complaint which does not contain the charge of a crime cognizable by him, he is answerable in an action for the injury that has ensued. But I think these cases are deflections from the correct rule, (in that) they make no allowance for matters of doubt and difficulty. If the facts presented for the decision of the justice are of uncertain signification with respect to their legal effect, and he decides one way, and exercises a cognizance over the case, if the superior court in which the question arises in a suit against the justice differs with him on this close legal question, is he open by reason of his error to an attack by action? If the officer's exemption from liability is to depend on the question whether he had jurisdiction over the particular case, it is clear that such officer is often triable under such conditions, because the higher court, in deciding a doubtful point of law, may have declared that some element was wanting in the complaint which was essential to bring the case within the judicial competency of the magistrate.'"

A petition to have the Platz case heard in the Supreme Court was denied.

In the case of Perry v. Meikle, 102 Cal. App.2d 602, 228 P.2d 17, the plaintiff brought an action against several defendants, among them being a superior court judge. The general charge of the complaint was that the plaintiff had been falsely imprisoned under a contempt order made by the judge. A demurrer was sustained without leave to amend and the appeal taken. The court, in determining the case said, among other things, this, 102 Cal.App. 2d at pages 605–606, 228 P.2d at page 19:

"Notwithstanding the apparent effort of plaintiff to keep from alleging that defendant Twain Michelsen was a judge of the superior court and was acting as such in the proceeding complained of, it is clear from the complaint and the exhibits that Judge Michelsen was acting as superior judge in a matter over which he had jurisdiction, that the proceeding was regular in all respects, and that there would be no basis for any action against him, even if he were not entitled to immunity from civil liability under the well-established and sound rule of public policy so well expressed by Justice Brewer of the U. S. Supreme Court, sitting as a circuit justice, in Cooke v. Bangs, C.C., 31 F. 640, 642, as follows: 'With respect to all judicial officers,—justices of the peace, as well as judges of the higher courts,—the settled law of the supreme court of the United States, and I think the plain intimation of the supreme court of this state, is that, where they act within their jurisdiction, they are not amenable to any civil action for damages. No matter what their motives may be, they cannot be inquired into.'

"And in Turpen v. Booth, 56 Cal. 65, 69 [38 Am.Rep. 48], our Supreme Court quoted with approval the following language of Justice Field in Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. 335, 20 L.Ed. 646: '[J]udges of courts of record of superior or general jurisdiction are not liable to civil actions for their judicial acts, even when such acts are in excess of their jurisdiction, and are alleged to have been done maliciously and corruptly. * * *'" (Emphasis added.)

In Pearson v. Reed, 6 Cal.App.2d 277, 44 P.2d 592, the defendant Johnson was the city prosecutor of Los Angeles. The plaintiffs were arrested and charged with petty theft, imprisoned for a short time, released on their recognizance, tried and found not guilty. The plaintiffs thereafter brought an action for malicious prosecution and false arrest against Johnson and others. On the appeal the verdict for the plaintiffs was reversed. The court said in its decision, 6 Cal.App.2d at pages 280–282, 44 P. 2d at page 594:

"Principles of public policy declared and expounded by courts which have given the subject exhaustive consideration lead irresistibly to the conclusion that no such liability exists. No policy has been declared and maintained more firmly than the one which preserves the independence and freedom of action of judicial and quasi-judicial officers acting in official capacity. The exemption runs as to liability for damages resulting from official acts, although they be done without probable cause and with malice. There are but few cases in which the courts have been called upon to decide whether the immunity is extended to a prosecuting officer. The latter question has not been decided in California. In approaching a consideration of the question, it will be helpful to review briefly the principles underlying the rule.

"In Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. 335, 337, 80 U.S. 335, 337, 20 L.Ed. 646, 647, Justice Field used the following language: 'For it is a general principle of the highest importance to the proper administration of justice that a judicial officer, in exercising the authority vested in him, shall be free to act upon his own convictions, without apprehension of personal consequence to himself. Liability to answer to everyone who might feel himself aggrieved by the action of the judge, would be inconsistent with the possession of this freedom, and would destroy that independence without which no judiciary can be either respectable or useful. As observed by a distinguished English judge, it would establish the weakness of judicial authority in a degrading responsibility. (Taaffe v. Downes, 3 Moore, P.C. 41 n.) The principle, therefore, which exempts judges of courts of superior or general authority from liability in a civil action for acts done by them in the exercise of their judicial functions, obtains in all countries where there is any well-ordered system of jurisprudence. It has been the settled doctrine of the English courts for many centuries, and has never been denied, that we are aware, of in the courts of this country. * * * The allegation of malicious or corrupt motives could always be made, and if the motives could be inquired into judges would be subjected to the same vexatious litigation upon such allegations, whether the motives had or had not any real existence. Against the consequences of their erroneous or irregular action, from whatever motives proceeding, the law has provided for private parties numerous remedies, and to those remedies they must, in such cases, resort. But for malice or corruption in their action whilst exercising their judicial functions within the general scope of their jurisdiction, the judges of these courts can only be reached by public prosecution in the form of impeachment, or in such other form as may be specially prescribed.'

"In Cooley on Torts, (3d Ed.) vol. 2, p. 795, the author says: 'Whenever, therefore, the State confers judicial powers upon an individual, it confers them with full immunity from private suits. In effect the State says to the officer that these duties are confided to his judgment; that he is to exercise his judgment fully, freely and without favor and he may exercise it without fear; that the duties concern individuals but they concern more especially the welfare of the State and the peace and happiness of society; that if he shall fail in the faithful discharge of them, he shall be called to account as a criminal, but that in order that he may not be annoyed, disturbed, and impeded in the performance of these high functions, a dissatisfied individual shall not be suffered to call in question his official action in a suit for damages. This is what the State, speaking by the mouth of the common law, says to the judicial officer. The rule thus laid down applies to large classes of offices, embracing some, the powers attached to which are very extensive and others whose authority is exceedingly limited.'" A petition for a hearing in the Supreme Court in the Pearson case was denied.

[1] The superior court is a court of general jurisdiction, and the juvenile court is but a part thereof. True it is that there are special procedures and rules adopted for proceedings in the juvenile court. However, when a judge sits as a judge of the juvenile court, he is sitting as a judge of the superior court, exercising a part of the general jurisdiction conferred by the law in such cases, and is referred to as a judge of the juvenile court.

[2] Great care must be taken not to restrict the absolution from liability where the judge performs, or purports to perform his official functions, and care should be taken in limiting the immunity only to situations where the judge has jurisdiction, if jurisdiction is to have a restricted and limited meaning, for, as counsel for the respondents point out, "there is a danger of becoming ensnared in the conceptual labyrinth which surrounds the term jurisdiction".

[3] This court, in the case of Frazier v. Moffatt, 108 Cal.App.2d 379, 386, 239 P.2d 123, 127, speaking through Mr. Presiding Justice White, appropriately said: "From a review of the cases we are persuaded that the test of immunity from a civil suit for damages on the part of a judicial officer is not whether he committed an error of judgment in acting as he did, but the question of judicial immunity must be determined on the basis of whether the act in question was within the general scope of the officer's judicial powers and whether he acted in an honest belief that he was legally warranted in doing it."

The reasons for such a rule are obviously not to protect or throw a shield around a misbehaving judge, but rather to preserve and maintain an efficient and independent judiciary who will not have to be continuously worried and concerned over annoying suits for damages.

[4] It is apparent in the instant case that appellants merely claim certain procedural irregularities in connection with the detention of the minor child, in that a petition and citation were not timely filed, and that the grounds upon which the district attorney sought the detention did not warrant the same. Appellants, necessarily, must admit that respondents had the authority to entertain the proceedings for detention, and that, if the petition and citation had been timely filed, there would not be even a semblance of a valid claim. In other words, the judges in the instant case acted within the scope of the general subject matter over which they were given power, even though there might have been some procedural error.

[5] The appellant vigorously contends that the District Court of Appeal, in the case of In re Singer, 134 Cal.App.2d 547, 285 P.2d 955 (habeas corpus), has already determined that the judges in question acted beyond their jurisdiction and that such a ruling must necessarily prevail here.

In our opinion, the decision in the habeas corpus matter, In re Singer, supra, does not amount to a finding that the respondents were acting without jurisdiction in the sense that it would take them out of the immunity rules. One standard will be recognized for obtaining relief from imprisonment on habeas corpus, and another standard for obtaining damages from public officials in a civil suit.

In the case of Vallindras v. Massachusetts, etc., Ins. Co., 42 Cal.2d 149, 265 P.2d 907, the sheriff had imprisoned the plaintiff under a contempt order of the superior court. The plaintiff was thereafter discharged from imprisonment by a writ of habeas corpus issued by the Supreme Court. The civil action was brought by the plaintiff against the sheriff and his surety for false imprisonment. General demurrers were sustained without leave to amend, and the appeal was taken from the judgment. The Supreme Court in its opinion, in determining the case, said, among other things, the following, 42 Cal.2d at pages 151–152, 265 P.2d at page 909:

"The allegations that the order of commitment was 'void upon its face' and that the sheriff 'did unlawfully imprison plaintiff' are conclusions of law and add nothing to the substantive averments of the complaint. [Citing cases.]

"It is plaintiff's theory that our holding in the habeas corpus proceeding, In re Vallindras 1950, supra, 35 Cal.2d 594, 596, 220 P.2d 1, 2, that he was entitled to be released because 'regardless of the court's failure to file [with the clerk] these judgments [the orders adjudicating contempt] and other deficiencies in the procedure leading to the imprisonment of Vallindras, the order of April 10th does not meet the law's requirements', establishes as a matter of law that his arrest and detention were unlawful not only as being vulnerable to the attack on habeas corpus but also as establishing civil liability of the sheriff in this damage action. But this theory is not tenable.

"From time immemorial our law has recognized differences between criminal proceedings and civil proceedings. The fact that a man is held to be entitled to release on habeas corpus does not mean that his custodian must answer in damages for the previous detention. Generally speaking, the right to release from custody is determined by the rules of criminal law while the right to recover damages for false imprisonment depends on the rules of civil law. By the light of the civil law, therefore, we must examine the factual allegations of the complaint to ascertain whether the sheriff was justified in imprisoning plaintiff pursuant to the order of the superior court and prior to the ruling of this court."

In our opinion the demurrers in the instant case were properly sustained.

v.

W. H. HARGIS and First Doe, Individually and doing business as A. D. H. Company, Second Doe and Third Doe, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 16990.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 25, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 20, 1957.

Action for injuries sustained by plaintiff a dishwasher in a restaurant when he fell through an open trap door which had been left open by the employee of a plumbing concern, wherein a complaint in intervention was filed by the workmen's compensation carrier of the plaintiff's employer. From an adverse judgment in the Superior Court, County of Monterey, Stanley Lawson, J., the plaintiff appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held that the instructions were not prejudicially erroneous.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Negligence ⇐141(3)

In action for injuries sustained by dishwasher employed in a restaurant when he fell through an open trapdoor which had been left open by a plumber's employee, instruction was not erroneous as suggesting an absolute duty on plaintiff's part to avoid falling where it indicated that duty of ordinary care required reasonable and ordinary use of plaintiff's sight to avoid dangers in his path and that respondents might rely on plaintiff's thus conducting himself.

2. Negligence ⇐139(7)

In action for injuries sustained by dishwasher when he fell through an open trapdoor in a restaurant which had been left open by employee of a plumber, instruction which left it to the jury to determine whether because of conditions existing in the area of the trapdoor and known to the plumber or discoverable by him by reasonable care, he was bound to provide more effective notice of the opening than he did, was not erroneous.

3. Negligence ⇐141(4)

In action for injuries sustained by dishwasher in restaurant who fell through an open trapdoor which had been left open by an employee of a plumber, instruction respecting general human experience to see an object which a person is looking at was not erroneous on ground that there was a legitimate evidentiary dispute as to visibility of open trapdoor.

4. Trial ⇐240

In action for injuries sustained by dishwasher in restaurant who fell through an open trapdoor in the restaurant which had been left open by an employee of a plumber, instruction respecting human experience that one sees an object when he looks in the direction of the object clearly visible, was not erroneous on ground that it was argumentative and placed trial judge in position of an advocate, and that it ignored factor of ordinary care.

Garth V. Lacey, Salinas, for respondent.

KAUFMAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought by plaintiff to recover for personal injuries sustained when he fell through an open trap door in the floor of a restaurant where he was employed as dishwasher. Defendants and respondents were engaged in the plumbing business in King City, and had been called in by Mr. Keefer, the owner of Keefer's Restaurant and appellant's employer, to repair the plumbing. The trap door was opened by Glenn Monroe, one of the defendants and the agent and employee of W. H. Hargis, the other defendant.

A complaint in intervention was filed by the Industrial Indemnity Co., the workmen's compensation carrier of plaintiff's employer, charging defendants with negligence, and setting forth the payment to plaintiff by it of the sum of $9,628.47 in compensation.

The accident occurred on October 12, 1953. Glenn Monroe came to the restaurant in response to a call by Mr. Keefer, to try to find the source of an offensive odor which appellant had reported to Mr. Keefer. Monroe decided that it would be necessary to go to the basement to locate the source of the trouble. Monroe was familiar with the restaurant, having performed plumbing services there on prior occasions, and knew that the basement had to be reached by the stairs under the trap door in the restaurant floor. The trap door was situated in a small area which served both as a working space and as a passageway between the lunch room counter and rooms located toward the rear of the restaurant. The trap door, 44" by 30", was located between a sink on one side and an ice cream freezer and work table on the other side. There was a space of about 14 inches between the doorway to the lunch room and the trap door. At the other end of the trap door there was a space of about three feet to the end of a work table and about four feet to a refrigerator. The end of the work table and the refrigerator were but eighteen inches apart. In leaving the kitchen area it was necessary to make a turn of approximately forty-five degrees to pass between them into the area containing the trap door.

Respondent Monroe placed a chair at the end of the trap door nearest the lunch room, because he knew the opening would constitute a hazard, and he informed the two waitresses that he was opening the stairwell. He knew that there was a cook and dishwasher on duty, but placed no chair at the other end because persons approaching the door from that side had a greater area to traverse and they would be approaching the head of the basement stairs.

Appellant was not on duty when Monroe arrived at the restaurant, but came in about 10:00 a. m. to transact some business with his employer, and drew an advance on his next week's pay. Monroe was then working in the basement. As appellant started to leave the restaurant, he had his money in one hand and wallet in the other. He began to put the money in his wallet as he was walking. He entered the passageway leading to the area in which the trap door was located. He testified that he did not know that the plumber was on the premises. He stated that on prior occasions during the six years in which he had been employed in this restaurant he had seen the trap door open, but on such occasions chairs had been placed on both sides of the opening.

As he approached the space between the refrigerator and work table, he saw Mrs. Sherman, one of the waitresses, working at the sink, which was at the opposite end of this area, near the lunch room door. He could just see her head, or a little below her head. He looked at the floor just before entering the space between table and refrigerator, but at this point could not see the area near the trap door. He had to be careful not to hit the refrigerator in passing through because of the narrowness of the space. He was still looking at his wallet, and at the same time ahead at Mrs. Sherman and toward the outside. He had nearly finished putting his money away when he fell into the opening. The last thing he saw before the accident was Mrs. Sherman. He had not seen the chair at the other end of the opening.

Until the accident occurred, Mr. Keefer had not known that Monroe had gone into the basement. He was sure that he had instructed Monroe to place chairs on each side of the opening. On prior occasions he said that Monroe had done so. The trap door area was primarily the salad room, but was regularly used by employees as a passageway between the kitchen and lunch room. Mr. Keefer testified that the salad room was well lighted by two fluorescent lights directly over the sink. The basement was lighted with a 250 or 300 watt bulb.

The waitress, Mrs. Sherman, who was working at the sink near the opposite end of the area glanced up as she saw appellant near the refrigerator. She did not notice where he was looking, and did not notice him again until she heard the crash. His arm was bleeding, and Mr. Keefer came and rushed him to the hospital.

As a result of the accident, appellant's right arm was partially paralyzed, and his two fingers could not be straightened. He is right-handed and his grip has become too poor for employment as a dishwasher.

Appellant contends that the court committed reversible error in the giving of three instructions, the first of which given at defendant's request, is as follows:

"The plaintiff was at all times under the duty to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, and this means that he must make reasonable and ordinary use of his eyes to see that he does not stumble or slip or be otherwise caused to fall.

"You are further instructed that the defendant had the right to rely on the plaintiff's fulfilling this duty, and to expect that the plaintiff would use his senses of sight for his own protection."

[1] Appellant argues that this being a specific instruction, would limit the other general instructions given which purported to submit to the jury the question of respondent's negligence. Nickell v. Rosenfield, 82 Cal.App. 369, 377, 255 P. 760. He says that the aforesaid instruction cannot be justified as a proper charge relating to contributory negligence and that the first paragraph imposed upon plaintiff an absolute duty to see that he did not fall, citing Stickel v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co., 32 Cal. 2d 157, 167, 195 P.2d 416, 422, that since he did fall, the jury could conclude that there was no negligence on the part of respondents, hence they would never reach the issue of contributory negligence. We cannot agree with appellant that the language of this instruction suggests that there is an absolute duty on appellant's part to avoid falling. The instruction plainly indicates that the duty of ordinary care requires the reasonable and ordinary use of appellant's sight to avoid dangers that may be in his path, and that respondent might rely on appellant's thus conducting himself. In Stickel v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co., supra, the instruction given was that "It is the duty of the driver * * * to exercise ordinary care at all times to avoid placing himself or others in danger and to avoid a collision." The court stated that the instruction was susceptible to the construction that it imposed an absolute duty "to avoid a collision", since because of the structure of the sentence the qualifying words "to exercise ordinary care" might be understood to relate only to the duty "to avoid placing himself or others in danger" and not to the duty "to avoid a collision." In the present case the jury could reasonably get no other meaning from the language used but that appellant must use ordinary care for his own protection.

It is next urged that the court by instructing that an invitor has no duty to give an invitee notice of an obvious danger aggravated the error which appellant contends existed in the instruction previously discussed. We have heretofore determined, however, that the first instruction criticized was not prejudicially erroneous. The instruction attacked, given at respondents' request, reads as follows:

"Toward an invitee, he who extended the invitation, express or implied, is obliged to refrain from active negligence and to exercise ordinary care to keep the premises in a condition reasonably safe for the invitee in the reasonable pursuit of a purpose embraced within the invitation.

"But the responsibility of one having control of the premises is not absolute; it is not that of an insurer. If there is danger attending upon the entry, or upon the work which the invitee is to do on the premises, and if such danger arises from conditions not readily apparent to the senses, and if the owner (occupant) has actual knowledge of them, or if they are discoverable by him in the exercise of ordinary care, it is his duty to give reasonable warning of such danger to the invitee. The owner (occupant) is not bound to discover defects which reasonable inspection would not disclose, and he is entitled to assume that the invitee will perceive that which would be obvious to him upon the ordinary use of his own senses. In brief, there is no duty to give the invitee notice of an obvious danger.

"In the absence of appearances that caution him, or would caution a reasonably prudent person in like position, to the contrary, the invitee has a right to assume that the premises he was invited to enter are reasonably safe for the purposes for which the invitation was extended, and to act on that assumption.

"Each, the invitee and the invitor, so long as he is exercising ordinary care and no circumstance exists that either causes him or would cause a reasonable prudent person in his position to think differently, has a right to assume that the other is or will be possessed of normal faculties of sight and hearing and will exercise ordinary care, and has the right to rely on that assumption."

The above quoted instruction is the same as B.A.J.I. 213–C, which has been given and approved by the courts of this state. Seedborg v. Lakewood Gardens Civic Ass'n, 105 Cal.App.2d 449, 456, 233 P.2d 943.

[2] Appellant maintains that neither the fact that a dangerous condition obviously exists nor the fact that a particular condition is obviously dangerous eliminates any duty on the part of a defendant who was responsible for the condition, and it is for the jury to determine, as a question of fact, whether or not ordinary care required giving of some notice or warning to an invitee exposed to the condition. Appellant says that the danger here involved, an unguarded open trap door, is in one sense an obvious danger, but that it does not necessarily follow that the existence of such dangerous condition is obvious, since the trap door was located around the corner from appellant, in a dark colored floor, and the evidence was conflicting as to the adequacy of the lighting. Furthermore, appellant's attention was reasonably distracted by the necessity of passing through the narrow passageway, and by the presence of the waitress standing on the other side of the trap door. The instruction states that the invitor is bound to give warning of conditions not readily apparent to the senses and give reasonable warning of such danger to the invitee. Thus it was left to the jury to determine whether or not the open trap door was readily apparent to any person approaching the area from the passageway used by appellant. Under the instruction given the jury were in effect told that respondent Monroe was bound to consider whether or not the danger was readily apparent and obvious to any invitee who might approach from any of the possible entries, and not just the fact of whether or not the danger was obvious from respondent's viewpoint. It was clearly left to the jury under this instruction to determine whether because of the conditions existing in the area of the trap door, and known to respondent Monroe or discoverable by him in the exercise of reasonable care, he was bound to provide more effective notice than he had done by placing the one chair at the end of the trap door opposite the basement stairs. No case is cited by appellant where the instruction given here was criticized adversely or held to be error in this type of case.

[3] Finally, appellant claims that prejudicial error was committed in giving the following instruction:

"General human experience justifies the inference that when one looks in the direction of an object clearly visible, he sees it, and that when he listens, he hears that which is clearly audible. When there is evidence to the effect that one did look, but did not see that which was in plain sight, or that he listened, but did not hear that which he could have heard in the exercise of ordinary care, it follows that either there is an irreconcilable conflict in such evidence or the person was negligently inattentive."

Appellant maintains that the instruction should never be given when there is a legitimate evidentiary dispute as to the visibility to the person looking, of the object or condition involved in the action. While superficially, appellant says, the instruction may be only an unnecessary declaration of the obvious, on careful analysis it is shown to be filled with prejudicial errors. It assumes that the object is in plain sight, for while the jury is left free to believe or disbelieve the evidence that one did look, the clear visibility of the object is taken for granted. Furthermore, a person may look in the direction of an object which is clearly visible to others in a different position, but because of intervening objects or distracting circumstances he may not see it.

We do not believe that the average juror would make such a refined analysis of this instruction. The first sentence stating that general human experience shows that a person looking in the direction of an object clearly visible sees it, must certainly mean to most people that the object is in such position as to be clearly visible to him. For general human experience does not warrant the inference that if one looks in the direction of an object visible to others, but separated from him by intervening obstacles, he sees it. And the language in the following sentence "that which was in plain sight" can be sensibly interpreted only as meaning that which was in plain sight of the person looking.

[4] It is urged that the instruction concludes with only two possibilities, either that there is an irreconcilable conflict in such evidence or that the person was negligently inattentive, that it is argumentative and places the trial judge in the position of an advocate, and that it ignores the factor of ordinary care. Appellant quotes Tuttle v. Crawford, 8 Cal.2d 126, 131–132, 63 P.2d 1128, 1130, wherein the "to look is to see" doctrine is referred to as an argument, and noted that while it was applied in the cases of persons walking into moving trains and automobiles and into open elevator shafts, it could not be applied with equal force to a case where a person walked onto a discolored area of cement floor in a market, for cement was susceptible to stains and hence the discoloration held out no sign of danger. In the case now before the court, appellant did not walk into a discolored area, but into an open trap door leading to the basement stairs on premises where he had worked for six years. Furthermore, a chair stood just beyond the opening directly in the path which he was traversing. Although appellant says that there is no evidence that he looked, and the instruction is thus inapplicable to the evidence, he testified that after he passed the refrigerator, he wasn't looking at his wallet alone, "I was looking toward the outside, too." He stated that he wasn't looking at the floor, but he was looking ahead and at his wallet at the same time.

In Schwenger v. Gaither, 87 Cal.App.2d 913, 198 P.2d 108, 109, cited by appellant, this court upheld the trial court's refusal to give such an instruction. The court held that it was not error to refuse it, quoting the following from Cooper v. Smith, 209 Cal. 562, 289 P. 614, "The proposed instruction is a mere commonplace, within the knowledge of all the jurors, and is argumentative, rather than a statement of law." And in Callahan v. Theodore, 145 Cal.App.2d 336, 302 P.2d 333, where it was held not error to refuse a substantially similar instruction, the court referred to the instruction as a truism, and stated that it was argumentative and conducive to misunderstanding since the jury might view it as a suggestion of the court's impressions. And, see, Laursen v. Tidewater Assoc. Oil Co., 123 Cal.App.2d 813, 818, 268 P.2d 104. The instruction has been approved in La Branch v. Scott, 82 Cal.App.2d 1, 185 P.2d 823. In Bischell v. State, 68 Cal.App.2d 557, 563, 157 P.2d 41, 44, in which the Supreme Court denied a petition for hearing, the court answered some of the same objections to this instruction which appellant has made herein, but concluded that while the instruction is "not happily worded", it left the questions of fact for the jury to determine, hence there was no prejudicial error. And, see, Curland v. Los Angeles County Fair Ass'n, 118 Cal.App.2d 691, 258 P.2d 1063; Gilbert v. Pessin Grocery Co., 132 Cal. App.2d 212, 282 P.2d 148.

In view of the determination that no prejudicial error was committed in the giving of the instructions objected to by appellant, it is unnecessary to discuss respondents' contention that the instructions were more than favorable to appellant, basing their argument on the claim that appellant was in the position of a mere licensee, and, not an invitee, in relation to respondents. Respondents apparently did not believe that the evidence as a matter of law established that appellant was not an invitee, since they offered the instruction which was given on that subject.

No prejudicial error appearing in the record before us, the judgment must be affirmed.

Civ. 17125.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 16, 1957.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 15, 1957.

Hearing Granted March 13, 1957.

Suit to establish that children were equitable owners of certain life policies assigned by father to mother in property settlement agreement executed incident to divorce. The Superior Court, County of San Mateo, A. R. Cotton, J., rendered judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held, in part, that under property settlement agreement providing that husband thereby assigned to wife certain life policies, and that husband would execute appropriate instruments, as required, to provide that wife and another would act as joint trustees to administer proceeds for support of wife and minor children, agreement created effective trust, notwithstanding failure of husband to execute required instruments, and that husband violated trust when he substituted second wife as beneficiary.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Trusts ⇐37

Under property settlement agreement incident to divorce, providing that husband thereby assigned to wife certain life policies, and that husband would execute appropriate instruments, as required, to provide that wife and another would act as joint trustees to administer proceeds for support of wife and minor children, agreement created effective trust, notwithstanding failure of husband to execute required instruments, and husband violated trust when he substituted second wife as beneficiary.

2. Insurance ⇐213

Where in certain paragraph of property settlement agreement executed incident to divorce, husband made complete assignment to wife of certain life policies for benefit of wife and minor children, he thereby created in her and them vested interest subject only to divestment, under its terms, upon children reaching majority.

3. Insurance ⇐586

Where, while husband did not assign certain life policy to wife in property settlement agreement executed incident to divorce, husband did agree to maintain policy in full force for wife and children until children reached majority, and agreement was accepted by wife, agreement gave wife and children henceforth equitable interest in policy of which neither she nor they could be divested by mere act of husband in changing name of beneficiary.

4. Insurance ⇐586, 587

An insured may by contract waive right to change beneficiary and convert what is usually contingent interest of beneficiary into a vested equitable interest.

5. Insurance ⇐668(1)

Defendant, second wife of decedent, who had violated trust by making her beneficiary of life policy which he had assigned to first wife in latter's divorce, was not improperly denied nonsuit in suit after husband's death by children for proceeds of policy, where, because court found that she personally had no interest in trust property, no money judgment was rendered against her.

6. Trusts ⇐371(3)

Where complaint set forth agreement in haec verba and alleged change of beneficiary by husband in violation of assignment of life policy to first wife incident to divorce, and in prayer asked that policies and their proceeds be impressed with trust in favor of plaintiffs, complaint properly pleaded facts and trust theory, despite contentions that complaint merely pleaded violation of contract, rather than violation of trust.

7. Limitation of Actions ⇐46(5)

Cause of action based on violation by husband of property settlement agreement whereby he assigned life policies to wife, arose, within statute of limitations, when husband died without policies being left in effect, not when husband broke promise to enter into agreement appointing wife and another as joint trustees to administer proceeds of policies.

8. Trusts ⇐365(3)

In view of fact that cause of action, based on violation by husband of property settlement agreement whereby he had assigned life policies to wife, arose when husband died without policies being in effect, laches would not bar relief where action was filed within twelve days after husband's death.

9. Trusts ⇐61(3)

In suit to establish that children were equitable owners of certain life policies assigned by father to mother in property settlement agreement executed incident to divorce, evidence warranted finding that there had been no abandonment of agreement which created trust of policies.

Sullivan & West, San Mateo, James B. O'Grady, Redwood City, for respondents.

BRAY, Justice.

Defendants appeal from an adverse decision adjudging that plaintiffs were the equitable owners of certain life insurance policies and entitled to the proceeds thereof.

Questions Presented.

1. The effect of the property settlement agreement with regard to whether the insurance trusts were created or merely agreed to be created.

2. Statutes of limitation and laches.

3. Was there an abandonment?

Record.

Harold E. Cooper, deceased, and Vera Cooper Alves were formerly husband and wife, being married in 1933. They had two children, plaintiffs Harold E. Cooper Jr. and Carolyn J. Cooper. An interlocutory decree of divorce in favor of Vera was entered February 28, 1949, and a final decree, March 6, 1950. Both parties remarried, Vera to her present husband Alves, Harold to defendant Ida Cooper. Harold died September 17, 1954. During the marriage Harold had in force several life insurance policies. May 21, 1948, Harold and Vera entered into an agreement of separation and settlement of property rights (the agreement involved here). Concerning this agreement the interlocutory decree of divorce stated: "* * * said agreement has been fully consummated." No mention of the agreement appears in the final decree of divorce. After Harold remarried he, in disregard of the agreement, surrendered for cash the three Northwestern policies referred to in paragraph eighth of the agreement,[1] and changed the beneficiary of the Equitable life insurance policy (referred to in paragraph ninth of the agreement) to defendant Ida.[2]

Plaintiffs sued to recover from the Equitable the amount of its policy, joining defendants. That company deposited that amount, $12,000, in court. Plaintiffs also sought to recover from defendant Ida as

1. Paragraph eighth provided: "Eighth: The husband shall and does hereby release, transfer, sell, assign and set over to the wife, all right, title and interest in and to three certain life insurance policies written in the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in the total principal sum of $7,500, wherein the wife now appears as beneficiary and the husband as insured; the husband shall execute appropriate instrument as required by said insurance company and the American Trust Company, to provide that the wife and said American Trust Company shall act as joint trustees to administer the proceeds of said life insurance policies for the support and maintenance of the wife and said minor children, in the event of husband's death." It further provided that Harold shall pay all premiums on said policies as they became due and maintain the policies in force and not do anything to diminish the cash surrender value. "When the youngest of the said two minor children shall have reached majority, the wife's rights in and to said life insurance policies shall cease, and the husband shall have the right to designate a new beneficiary or cancel or otherwise dispose of said policies as he may desire."

2. Paragraph ninth provided: "Ninth: The husband agrees to pay all premiums and to keep and maintain in full force and effect until the younger of the two minor children shall have reached majority, group life insurance in the present approximate principal amount of $7,500 written in the Equitable Life Assurance Society, which the husband now carries as an employee of the American Trust Company and in which the wife is named as beneficiary. It is understood and agreed that such group insurance is mandatory so long as husband is employed by said American Trust Company, and that the principal amount and premiums vary from time to time depending on loss experience of the insuring company.

"The husband shall execute appropriate instrument to provide that the wife and said American Trust Company shall act as joint trustees, to administer the proceeds of said life insurance policy for the support and maintenance of the wife and said minor children, in the event of husband's death. When the younger of said two minor children shall have reached majority, the wife's rights in and to said policy shall cease, and the husband shall have the right to designate a new beneficiary or cancel or otherwise dispose of said policy as he may desire."

executrix of Harold's estate the value of the Northwestern policies which Harold had cashed. The court adjudged that the $12,000 be paid to plaintiffs, less $4,000 attorneys' fees, and that defendant executrix pay during the course of administration $7,500 (the surrendered value of the Northwestern policies) plus interest. Defendants' motion for new trial was denied.

Effect of the Agreement.

[1] Defendants' main contention is that the agreement was merely an agreement to enter into a trust agreement in the future and therefore the rule of such cases as Kerr Glass Mfg. Corp. v. Elizabeth Arden Sales Corp., 61 Cal.App.2d 55, 141 P.2d 938; Warson v. Talpey-Arnold Syndicate, 202 Cal. 656, 262 P. 716; and Clifford v. Utt, 62 Cal. App. 460, 216 P. 972, applies. We deem it unnecessary to discuss whether the rule of those and the other cases cited by defendants is as broad as defendants contend, namely, that no agreement to enter into an agreement is enforceable,[3] for the reason that this agreement in itself has all the elements of an effective trust. There is a present transfer of the Northwestern policies, and a definite placing of the proceeds to come from the Equitable policy into the trust. The terms of the trust are clearly set forth, namely, that in the event of Harold's death prior to the majority of the youngest child, the proceeds of all policies shall be used for the support and maintenance of Vera and the minor children; upon the attaining of majority by the youngest child by taining of majority by the youngest child any right of the wife in the trust will cease, and Harold has the right thereafter to terminate the trust by designating a new beneficiary or otherwise disposing of the policies. Harold agrees to keep the policies in full force and the trustees are designated. Nothing further was required. The agreement to sign a separate instrument appointing the named trustees added nothing to the declaration of the trust contained in the instrument. "The mere fact that the settlor contemplates the subsequent execution of a formal trust instrument does not necessarily negative the present creation of a trust, if its terms are sufficiently indicated." (Scott on Trusts, vol. 1, p. 164, § 26.) Moreover, Harold agreed that he alone would execute the instrument designating the already named trustees. This he failed to do. "An insured cannot defeat the equitable right of a beneficiary by failing to act. He could not, in equity, be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong in breaching the property settlement agreement, and his estate is in no better position." Waxman v. Citizens Nat. Trust & Sav. Bank, 123 Cal.App.2d 145, 149, 266 P.2d 48, 50. When Harold changed the beneficiary in one policy and cashed the others he violated the trust which by contract had been created.

[2] In paragraph eighth Harold made a complete assignment to his wife of the Northwestern policies for the benefit of herself and the children, thereby creating in her and them a vested interest subject only to a condition subsequent which never arose.

[3] As said in Waxman v. Citizens Nat. Trust & Sav. Bank, supra, 123 Cal.App.2d at page 148, 266 P.2d at page 50: "An insured by contract may waive the right to change a beneficiary and may convert what is usually the contingent interest of a beneficiary of a policy of life insurance into a vested equitable interest." While Harold did not assign the Equitable policy he did agree to maintain it in full force for the wife and children, again subject to the condition subsequent. This agreement, being accepted by the wife, gave her and the children thenceforth an equitable interest in the policy of which she and they could not be divested by the mere act of the insured in changing the name of the beneficiary. See Shoudy v. Shoudy, 55 Cal.App. 344, 345, 203 P. 433; Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Franck, 9 Cal.App.2d 528, 534, 50 P.2d 480; Chilwell v. Chilwell, 40 Cal.App.2d 550, 553, 105 P.2d 122.

3. The cases cited all involved contracts to make a contract, the essential terms of which were yet to be agreed.

[4] Cook v. Cook, 17 Cal.2d 639, 644, 111 P.2d 322 holding that where the insured reserves the right to change the beneficiary in an ordinary life insurance policy the beneficiary has no vested right therein prior to the insured's death as will prevent a change of beneficiary by the insured, has no application here. As hereinbefore pointed out, an insured may by contract waive the right to change the beneficiary and convert what is usually the contingent interest of a beneficiary into a vested equitable interest. Waxman v. Citizens Nat. Trust & Sav. Bank, supra, 123 Cal.App.2d at page 148, 266 P.2d at page 49. This Harold did here.

[5] Defendant Ida individually objects to the denial of her motion for nonsuit. She had filed with Equitable a claim for the proceeds of that policy. Plaintiffs' complaint alleged that Harold in violation of his agreement had made her the beneficiary of the policies and that the companies were going to pay her the proceeds. In her answer Ida claimed to be the owner of the $12,000 deposited in court by Equitable. The motion was properly denied as the court found and adjudged that she personally had no interest in the trust property. There is no money judgment against her.

[6] Defendants claim that the second amended complaint (the complaint upon which the case was tried) did not plead the violation of a trust, and merely pleaded a violation of a contract. It did, however, set forth the agreement in haec verba and alleged a change of beneficiary by Harold in violation thereof and in the prayer asked that the policies and their proceeds be impressed with a trust in favor of plaintiffs. Thus it pleaded the facts and the trust theory was definitely before the court.

2. Statutes of Limitation and Laches.

[7, 8] Neither apply. Defendants' contention that the time when the cause of action accrued was when Harold broke his promise to enter into an agreement appointing the trustee, is unfounded. In cases of this kind the cause of action accrues and the statute first commences to run when the decedent dies without the policies being left in effect. Waxman v. Citizens Nat. Trust & Sav. Bank, supra, 123 Cal.App.2d 145, 266 P.2d 48; Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Franck, 9 Cal.App.2d 528, 50 P.2d 480. For the same reason laches would not apply as the action was filed within 12 days after Harold's death.

3. Abandonment.

[9] After the execution of the agreement and before Vera obtained the interlocutory decree of divorce, some other trust agreement was shown to her and she apparently signed it. However, it was not signed by Harold. Thereafter the interlocutory decree was obtained. It provided support of $100 per month for the two chidren, whereas the agreement in question here provided for only $90 per month, which sum plaintiff Vera had been receiving prior to obtaining the decree. No action was taken thereafter by Vera to get Harold to execute the instrument mentioned in the trust agreement. From these circumstances plus the language in that decree that the "agreement has been fully consummated," defendants contend that the agreement was abandoned. The trial court found that there was no abandonment. The circumstances mentioned do not compel a finding that there was. Particularly is this so in view of a letter from Harold's attorney to Vera's attorney written January 4, 1949, suggesting that the latter immediately file a complaint for divorce on behalf of Vera and stating, "Since they have worked out their property settlement agreement, it would appear that the complaint need only provide for a divorce and custody of the children."

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

D. D. WATSON, State Real Estate Commissioner, Respondent.

No. 17272.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 15, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 13, 1957.

Proceeding upon petition for writ of mandate to set aside State Real Estate Commissioner's order revoking real estate and opportunity brokers' licenses issued to one of the two petitioners. The Superior Court, County of Contra Costa, Wakefield Taylor, J., entered judgment denying petition, and petitioners appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held that evidence, by which complaining witness sought to show that one petitioner had withheld $1,000 of purchase price of property sold by petitioner on behalf of complaining witness and had appropriated such sum to petitioner's own use, was sufficient to sustain judgment denying petition.

Judgment affirmed.

2. Mandamus ⇐187(9)

In proceeding on petition for writ of mandate to set aside State Real Estate Commissioner's order revoking real estate and opportunity broker's licenses, trial judge had to make decision as to weight of evidence, but the district Court of Appeal had only to inquire whether there was substantial evidence for the trial judge's decision. Upon appeal from Superior Court's denial of petition for writ of mandate to set aside State Real Estate Commissioner's order revoking real estate and opportunity broker's licenses issued to petitioner, the District Court of Appeal could not make a new determination as to which of the witnesses who gave conflicting testimony were most worthy of belief. KAUFMAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of Contra Costa County, denying appellants' petition for a writ of mandate to set aside the State Real Estate Commissioner's order revoking real estate and opportunity broker's licenses issued to appellant.

An accusation was filed with respondent Real Estate Commissioner on January 24, 1955, alleging that appellant, Frank Angel Blue, as a partner in the Doc Blue Realty, on or about December 14, 1954, received an offer for the purchase of a parcel of property together with $1,000, which sum he did not deliver to the seller and owner of the property, but commingled said sum with his own moneys and appropriated it to his own use. It was further alleged that appellant had seller's instructions prepared and delivered to the escrow holder which did not account for the down payment of $1,000, and informed the escrow holder, without the knowledge of the seller, that said sum had been paid outside the escrow, thereby causing the escrow to be closed, and an incorrect closing statement to be issued to the seller. On December 15, 1954, it was alleged, appellants obtained the signature of the seller to a deposit receipt for said sale, and did not deliver a copy thereof to the seller.

The accusation alleged that the conduct set forth above constituted violations of sections 10176(e) and (i), 10177(d), 10302 (d), (e) and (f) and 10142 of the Business and Professions Code of California, and Rules 2830, 2831 and 2832 of the Rules and Regulations of the Real Estate Commissioner, Title 10, California Administrative Code. After proper notice, hearing was held before a hearing officer. The Commissioner adopted the decision of the hearing officer, which found the allegations of the accusation to be true and recommended revocation of the licenses. After denial of a petition for reconsideration a petition for writ of mandate was filed. An alternative writ issued. The transcript of the proceedings and the exhibits offered and received in evidence at the administrative hearing were received in evidence. No further evidence was introduced. The trial court found that the decision of the Commissioner was "not harsh, arbitrary or unreasonable, and was justified and sustained by the weight of the evidence and is not contrary to law." The petition was therefore denied.

It is the contention of appellants on this appeal, that the Findings of Fact of the Superior Court are insufficient to support the judgment denying the writ of mandate, and that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings of the court and the decision rendered by the Commissioner.

The complaining witness was James M. Fritchman who described himself as a "marine engineer and divine healer." He had known appellant, Frank Angel Blue (also known as Doc Blue) for about three years prior to December 14, 1954, the date on which appellant called him to tell him he had a cash deal on his house for $9,000. He called at the office and learned that a $500 deposit had been made. However, he demanded a $1,000 deposit. He signed the deposit receipt in appellants' office. Subsequently the $500 was changed to $1,000. When he asked for a copy of the deposit receipt, he was told that he did not get one. A few days later appellant Blue called to ask him if he needed an advance. He went to appellants' office, signed a receipt and received $150, but did not get a copy. This was the first money which he had ever received from Blue. He received another advance of $250 before Christmas, 1954, and signed another receipt. His wife was not present at this time. On January 12, 1955, appellant came to his house, and they went to the bank where he received $5,016.74. Appellant had another check for Fritchman in the sum of $730 from another transaction. Blue produced a typewritten receipt which Fritchman signed. The receipt recited that complainant had received of Blue all moneys due him from the sale of his corner property. It stated further "I have also reimbursed Dr. Frank A. Blue the sum of $400.00 borrowed by me during the sale of said piece of property. Said loans were in the sum of $250.00 and $150.00". The next paragraph reading, "I make no further claims for money due me on this transaction, having received all monies due me", complainant said, was then not on the receipt. Later, on January 13, he added in handwriting, "This is $730 check from the title co. & $5.076.76 check." The check for $730, he said, was made out to appellant, who indorsed it. It was cashed, the $400 owing for the advances was deducted, and he received $330. When he asked appellant for a closing statement he was told that appellant had not received one.

Shortly thereafter, complainant realizing that he was $1,100 short on the deal, went to the title company, where he learned that according to their records that $1,000 had been paid outside the escrow. He demanded the $1,000 from Blue, who claimed that he had already given it to him in cash. Appellant then offered to sell a parcel of property for the witness without a commission. When appellant said he intended to do nothing about payment of the $1,000 complainant brought charges against him.

Fritchman also testified that he had added the handwritten sentence to the receipt because "I knew this other was a phoney deal, and I assumed that all this is the money from the escrow when I signed that."

On cross-examination Fritchman denied that he told Dermody, the deputy Real Estate Commissioner, that there had been no indication of down payment on the deposit receipt when it was presented to him. (Mr. Dermody had testified that complainant had stated to him that "there was nothing there at the time he signed.") He stated that if he had received the $1,000 he would not have accepted the advances of $400. After he realized that he was $1,100 short he went to the title company, then called on appellant who told him that he had put the $1,000 in complainant's pocket. He first saw the added typed sentence on the receipt when it was shown to him at the office of the Real Estate Commissioner.

Ted Lowen, manager of the title company, testified that the $1,000 showed on the buyer's instructions, and that the title company was advised by appellant that said sum had been deposited with the broker. The title company was informed by appellant's office that the $1,000 had been paid to the seller. Such notations were made on the buyer's instructions on January 10, 1955. Seller's instructions showed a commission of $900 paid to appellant, and $1,000 paid to seller. The person in the title company making up the closing statement had noted the shortage of $1,000, and was then informed by appellant that this had been paid to the seller outside of the escrow. A week after closing, complainant came to see the files. The witness called appellant, who said he had paid complainant, that complainant had accepted the check and had made no complaint. He had had several dealings with appellant whom he knew only through business. His reputation was good, and he would not question his word.

Appellant Blue, testifying in his own behalf stated that complainant was always secretive about his real estate transactions trying to keep the information from his wife. Appellant had made several sales of real property for him prior to this transaction. On the day following the $1,000 deposit by the buyers, complainant wanted an advance. Although the transaction was not closed, he said that he paid the $1,000 to him, and it was paid in cash at his request in the presence of complainant's wife and Mr. Anderson, a salesman in the office. No receipt was made out by appellant. Complainant had asked Blue not to let his wife see the transfer of the funds when he handed him ten one-hundred dollar bills.

On cross-examination Blue testified that the deposit receipt was changed to $1,000 when he presented it to the buyers before they signed it and gave him the check. When Fritchman called him, he had the buyer's check on his desk, but Fritchman said he wanted cash. He informed him that the proper procedure was to put the money in a trustee account, then draw a check. He went to the bank, cashed the check, and when he returned, Mrs. Fritchman was in the office. He handed the money to complainant while his wife was talking with some one else. He asked him to count it, but complainant grabbed it and put it in his pocket. It would have made it too obvious if he had made out a receipt. Appellant knew of Fritchman's reputation as a healer and his bad financial reputation but had no reason to distrust him. Although the salesman, Anderson, was in the office at the time, he didn't think it important to get him as a witness.

In answer to questions by the hearing officer, appellant said that he kept no records of the $1,000. He did mention it to his partner, but she made no record of it. Although he admitted that it would have been good business for him to have made a record of the receipt of this sum, he did not because of Fritchman's secretiveness. He had forgotten about Anderson's presence in the office at the time of the transactions and was surprised when Anderson reminded him that he was present. He remembered a notation about the $1,000 he had made for his file, but didn't mention it at the meeting in the Commissioner's office.

A continuance was granted so that appellant might subpoena other witnesses.

Complainant was again examined at the second hearing. He stated that no loans had been made to him by appellant Blue except those for $150 and $250, which his wife knew about. The only thing he didn't want her to know about was the foreclosure of their home. He did not tell appellant not to tell his wife about the loan. The only time his wife had been in the real estate office was the occasion when the seller's instructions were signed.

Appellant brought a notation which he had made concerning the $1,000 to the hearing. He said it had been in the Fritchman-Combra file immediately after he had given Fritchman the $1,000. A letter from his partner was introduced (Ex. D) showing that the usual office procedure was to issue a duplicate receipt when a deposit from a buyer was received, deposit the money in a trust account where it would be held until the deal was consummated. There was nothing in the records showing a receipt to the purchasers for the $1,000. Although his partner was absent from the office between December 8, 1954 and January 2, 1955, and although he did deposit money and give receipts for other accounts, he did not in this case because he expected her back momentarily.

The salesman, Anderson, testified that he knew about the deal. He saw Blue give Fritchman money in the office, but could not say if it was $1,000. Fritchman came into the office three times, once getting $150 and another time $250. He thought those loans were before the sale. His desk was in front of appellant's, but he was standing at the filing cabinet when the money was exchanged. He saw one hundred dollar bills, the top bill was $100, but he couldn't say whether the total was $200 or $1,000. He was four or five feet from them and Fritchman's back was toward him. He had not seen the $1,000 check. Appellant only discussed the matter of the $1,000 with Anderson after the complaint had been made. Anderson had seen receipts for the $150 and $250 loans, and said they were written on title company paper. One of them, Exhibit "B", was on cardboard with no title company heading. Anderson then thought he had better change his testimony, that these things were none of his business.

Inspector Stoffel of the Contra Costa Sheriff's Office called by complainant, testified that when he called on appellant he told him that when he advised Fritchman of the $1,000 deposit, Fritchman wanted it in cash. Appellant went to the bank, cashed the checks, and handed the money to Fritchman. At a later time appellant and Fritchman went to the bank when the checks for $5,076.76 and $730 were cashed. There Fritchman paid off the $400 owed on the loans. Testifying from his recollection and notes he had taken at the time, he stated that he had never heard that the $1,000 was paid to Fritchman by appellant in his office.

The trial court found that the allegations of Paragraphs I through XIII, and XV and and XVI of the petition were true. These allegations recited the steps that had been taken in the administrative proceedings, the preparation of the record, and such matters. The court found that Paragraph XIV was true (that petitioners have no plain, speedy and adequate remedy at law) except that the decision rendered by the respondent "is not harsh, arbitrary or unreasonable, and was justified and sustained by the weight of the evidence and is not contrary to law." Paragraphs XVII, XVIII, XX, XXI and XXII were found to be untrue. These Paragraphs alleged that the evidence was insufficient to sustain a conviction under certain sections of the Business and Professions Code and the Rules and Regulations of the State Real Estate Commissioner (the sections mentioned in the Accusation); that petitioners were denied due process in that respondent made his decision on evidence not presented at the hearing; that appellants will suffer irreparable injury; that respondent's act was arbitrary, capricious and an abuse of discretion; that there is no substantial evidence to support the findings of respondent Commissioner numbered V, VI, VII and which were quoted in Paragraph XX of the petition. Paragraph XIX was found to be untrue except that it is true that petitioners cannot carry on their business as real estate or business opportunity brokers without licenses.

It is to be noted that appellants offered no further evidence in the Superior Court in proof of the above allegations. There was no proof that the Commissioner had relied on evidence outside the record. Section 1094.5, Code of Civil Procedure provides that where it is contended "that the findings are not supported by the evidence, in cases in which the court is authorized by law to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence, abuse of discretion is established if the court determines that the findings are not supported by the weight of the evidence."

The case of Cooper v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 35 Cal.2d 242, 217 P.2d 630, 18 A.L.R.2d 593, a case involving the revocation of a license by the Board of Medical Examiners, is of interest because the findings in that case appear to have been drafted in a similar manner to those herein. The review by the trial court in that case required the court to exercise its independent judgment and determine whether the findings of the board were supported by the weight of the evidence. The opinion therein recites, 35 Cal.2d at page 244, 217 P.2d at page 632, that "The superior court, after a hearing but with no other evidence than the transcript and record of the proceedings before the board, found and concluded that the 'findings and order of respondent Board revoking petitioner's license as a drugless practitioner were * * * supported by the findings of respondent Board; that the findings of respondent Board were, and are, based upon and supported by the weight of the evidence,' and that the proceedings before the board were within its jurisdiction and were conducted 'without procedural or prejudicial error or abuse of discretion of any kind'". There is no attack in this case upon the form of the findings, and the court was able to conclude from them that the trial court had exercised its independent judgment and had in effect adopted the board's findings. The findings herein that the decision of the respondent is justified and sustained by the weight of the evidence certainly demonstrates that the trial court has exercised its independent judgment, and has itself weighed the evidence; otherwise, it could not have made this determination. In the cases of Davis v. State Board of Optometry, 35 Cal.App.2d 428, 433, 95 P.2d 959, and Beloin v. Blankenhorn, 97 Cal.App.2d 662, 664, 218 P.2d 552, cited by appellants, no findings whatever were made by the trial court.

[1] Appellants attack the findings that the allegations of Paragraphs XVII, XVIII, XX, XXI, and XXII are untrue as constituting negative pregnants and argue that such findings have been criticized as inadequate. In the case of Mardesich v. C. J. Hendry Company, 51 Cal. App.2d 567, 575, 125 P.2d 595, from which appellants quote, the finding that certain allegations were untrue left it uncertain whether or not the plaintiff might have been contributorily negligent for the court found an affirmative defense untrue which alleged that the accident was proximately caused by the negligence of plaintiff, which could mean that it was not proximately caused solely by plaintiff's negligence. The court there stated, however, that such finding would not be fatal to the judgment if there had been a finding on the ultimate fact negating the existence of negligence on the part of plaintiff which contributed as a proximate cause of his injury. In the instant case the court's findings that the allegations are untrue which state that the respondent Commissioner's findings set forth therein are not supported by substantial evidence, leave no uncertainty as to what the trial court found in regard to them, for if the allegations are untrue, then said findings are supported by substantial evidence. It has been held that the criticism that such a finding constitutes a negative pregnant is without merit, for that rule applies to "pleading, not to findings, which are to be construed so as to uphold the judgment if they are reasonably susceptible of such a construction." McAuliffe v. McAuliffe, 53 Cal.App. 352, 355, 199 P. 1071, 1072; and, see, Johndrow v. Thomas, 31 Cal.2d 202, 208–209, 187 P.2d 681; Stevens v. Stevens, 215 Cal. 702, 705, 12 P.2d 432; Tobola v. Wholey, 75 Cal. App.2d 351, 358, 170 P.2d 952.

[2] It has been held in Moran v. Board of Medical Examiners, 32 Cal.2d 301, 308, that when the appellate court reviews this type of decision by the Superior Court, the usual rule on appeal applies, that is, all conflicts are to be resolved in favor of respondent, and all legitimate inferences indulged in favor of the judgment. The only question to be decided is whether or not there is substantial evidence to support the decision of the trial court. Therefore, even though the trial judge in such a case must decide as to the weight of the evidence, this court only inquires whether there is substantial evidence for his decision.

[3, 4] The question here, was chiefly one of credibility. If the trial court believed the testimony of the complainant then it could conclude, as it did, that the weight of the evidence supported the decision. There is substantial evidence in the record to support such a belief. A reading of the testimony set forth above convinces us that the testimony of the complainant is not inherently incredible, and that there are serious inconsistencies in the testimony of appellant Blue and his witness Anderson. This court cannot make a new determination as to which witnesses were most worthy of belief. See, Whitcomb v. Emerson, 46 Cal.App.2d 263, 270, 115 P.2d 892.

In view of the foregoing, the judgment must be affirmed.

v.

Madeline Hunter PIETRO, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 21685.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 24, 1957.

Husband's suit to have divorce decree set aside. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Maurice C. Sparling, J., dismissing the case, the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that the plaintiff had alleged no such extrinsic fraud as would justify granting the relief sought.

Affirmed.

1. Evidence ⇐43(2)

Court in which suit was brought to set aside divorce decree was warranted in taking judicial notice of file in divorce suit.

2. Judgment ⇐443(1)

The fraud which will justify setting aside of final judgment by equity court must be of such character as to have prevented trial of issues presented to court for determination.

3. Judgment ⇐443(1)

Fraud which is collateral to and outside of court and such that party is, because thereof, effectively prevented from presenting his case or all of his defense, is "extrinsic fraud" against which equity will give relief by setting aside judgment.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Extrinsic Fraud".

4. Judgment ⇐443(1)

Some representation or concealment by one party which prevented other from having his day in court is necessary to constitute "extrinsic fraud" against which court will grant relief.

5. Judgment ⇐443(1)

Concealment by party of evidence which, if disclosed, would tend to overthrow his case, is not extrinsic fraud, and therefore is not ground for suit to set aside judgment.

6. Divorce ⇐165(3)

If, as alleged, wife's attorney had retained two written agreements proving husband's ownership of property husband could have enforced production of those documents by subpoena duces tecum directed to her counsel, or by an appropriate demand in open court, and such alleged retention of those agreements did not constitute such fraud as would entitle husband to have divorce decree set aside.

7. Divorce ⇐165(3)

Where issue as to whether wife held property in trust for husband had been litigated in divorce action adversely to husband, he could not successfully contend, as basis for having divorce decree set aside, that wife had fraudulently substituted deeds so that pre-divorce conveyance did not show that she held property in trust for husband.

8. Divorce ⇐165(3)

If husband believed that there was any impropriety in wife's being represented in divorce action by attorney who had previously handled legal matters for husband, he should have drawn matter to attention of divorce court, and he could not successfully urge such matter as basis for having divorce decree set aside.

9. Evidence ⇐52

An allegation of complaint out of harmony with fact of which court takes judicial notice must be disregarded.

10. Divorce ⇐184(12)

Any technical procedural error in considering divorce suit file, in holding insufficient husband's complaint to have divorce decree set aside, could not have been prejudicial, where that file demonstrated lack of merit in husband's case.

Pasquale N. Pietro appearing in pro. per.

Minsky & Garber, Los Angeles, for respondent.

FOX, Justice.

By his third amended complaint plaintiff seeks to set aside the divorce decree awarded to his wife and to compel her to convey to him certain real property (and to account for the income therefrom) involved in that suit. In his pleading plaintiff gave the title of the divorce action, the date on which it was filed (April 14, 1953), its file number in the Clerk's Office, the department of the Superior Court in which the case was tried, and the date the judgment was entered. He then alleged that he was denied recovery of the real property here in question in that action. His motion for a new trial was denied, as was his motion under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, to set aside the judgment on the ground of asserted fraud.

He appealed from the judgment in the divorce case but later abandoned his appeal.

In the instant action plaintiff alleged that the property was owned by him and that Madeline held it in trust for him.

As a basis for setting aside the former judgment, plaintiff alleged (1) that Madeline's attorney in the divorce case retained two written agreements which prevented him from proving the ownership of the property; (2) that her attorney had handled certain legal matters for plaintiff which disqualified him from acting as attorney for her in the divorce action; (3) that Madeline and her attorney had informed plaintiff that they would return the property in question to him if he did not contest the divorce suit, and that, relying on that representation, he did not contest the divorce suit; and (4) that when the property was conveyed to Madeline on December 10, 1952, by plaintiff's former wife, Madeline fraudulently substituted deeds so that the conveyance did not show that she held the property in trust for plaintiff.

[1] When this case came on for trial, the file in the divorce suit was presented to the judge. He examined it, as he was permitted to do in view of its specific identification, the references to the case in plaintiff's complaint, and the nature of the relief he sought. This was sufficient to warrant the court in taking judicial notice of it. In re Estate of Wilson, 116 Cal.App. 2d 523, 527, 253 P.2d 1011; Christiana v. Rose, 100 Cal.App.2d 46, 52, 222 P.2d 891; Hammell v. Britton, 19 Cal.2d 72, 73, 75, 119 P.2d 333. Plaintiff did not object to this procedure. Perusal of the file disclosed, in accordance with plaintiff's allegation, that the ownership of the property in controversy had been litigated in the divorce suit and decided adversely to plaintiff herein. The file also revealed that the divorce decree had not been by default but that there had been a four-day trial in which plaintiff herein had been represented by counsel and during which a number of witnesses had testified and various documents were received in evidence.

With the pleadings in this condition, counsel for defendant objected to the introduction of further evidence on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, i. e., facts that would justify setting aside the portion of the judgment in the divorce decree that denied him any interest in the real property in controversy. This objection was sustained and the case was dismissed. It is from the judgment of dismissal* that plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

Plaintiff's theory is that the judgment in the divorce case was induced by extrinsic fraud. Defendant insists that no extrinsic fraud is shown.

[2–4] As stated in Gale v. Witt, 31 Cal. 2d 362, 365, 188 P.2d 755, 757: "The fraud which will justify the setting aside of a final judgment by a court of equity must be of such character as prevents a trial of the issues presented to the court for determination. [Citations.] Where the fraud practiced is collateral to and outside of court so that a party is, because of such fraud or concealment, effectively deprived of presenting his case or all of his defense, it is extrinsic and equity will give relief." The court further pointed out, 31 Cal.2d on page 366, 188 P.2d on page 757, that "to constitute extrinsic fraud, there must have been some representation or concealment by the defendant which prevented the plaintiff from having his day in court * * *." To the same effect: Westphal v. Westphal, 20 Cal.2d 393, 397, 126 P.2d 105; United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U.S. 61, 65, 25 L.Ed. 93; In re Griffith's Estate, 84 Cal. 107, 112–113, 23 P. 528, 24 P. 381; Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 133–135, 25 P. 970, 27 P. 537, 13 L.R.A. 336.

Measured by these principles, it is clear that plaintiff's allegations do not show extrinsic fraud.

* Although two other persons are named as defendants, neither of them is involved in this appeal.

[5, 6] Plaintiff's first charge is that Madeline's attorney retained two written agreements which prevented him from proving his ownership of the property. Plaintiff could have forced the production of these documents by a subpoena duces tecum directed to her counsel, or by an appropriate demand in open court. Concealment by a party of evidence which, if disclosed, would tend to overthrow his case, is not extrinsic fraud and therefore is not ground for a suit to set aside a judgment. Hogan v. Hogan, 131 Cal.App. 2d 281, 283–284, 280 P.2d 64; In re Griffith's Estate, supra; Pico v. Cohn, supra; Burch v. Hibernia Bank, 146 Cal. App.2d 422, 304 P.2d 212.

[7] Plaintiff's allegation that when the property was conveyed to Madeline she substituted deeds and thereby received a deed showing title in her as grantee instead of a deed conveying it to her as trustee for plaintiff in accordance with their agreement, does not show extrinsic fraud. The deed in question was acknowledged on December 10, 1952, and recorded the next day. This was four months before Madeline filed her complaint for divorce. Furthermore, it appears from the divorce file that plaintiff herein filed a cross-complaint in the divorce action in which he alleged that Madeline held the property in trust for him. The court held against him on this question. It is thus apparent that the issue was litigated and decided in the prior action and that plaintiff's allegation does not amount to extrinsic fraud. Hanley v. Hanley, 114 Cal. 690, 693, 46 P. 736; Gale v. Witt, supra; Burch v. Hibernia Bank, supra.

[8] Plaintiff's allegation that Madeline's attorney had been employed by him in connection with the refinancing of the property and to recover for him and his former wife certain other property, and that he thus obtained information that Madeline held this property in trust for him, is not an allegation of fraud, extrinsic or otherwise. If plaintiff believed there was any impropriety in counsel's representing Madeline in the divorce action he should have drawn the matter to the attention of the trial court, for he was then in possession of all the facts. It does not appear that he made any such suggestion.

[9] Plaintiff alleged that Madeline and her attorney represented to him that they would return the property in question to him if he did not contest the divorce suit, otherwise they would force the property into foreclosure and it would be lost to him; that he relied on the representation; and that the fear of losing the property "caused him not to contest the divorce suit." Considered by itself, this allegation would be impressive but when supplemented by the file in the divorce suit, of which the court was entitled to take judicial notice, Weil v. Barthel, 45 Cal.2d 835, 837, 291 P.2d 30; Hammell v. Britton, supra; In re Estate of Wilson, supra; Christiana v. Rose, supra, it loses its significance. For it then becomes apparent that plaintiff did not rely on the alleged representation, but did, in fact, contest the divorce case throughout a four-day trial in which he was represented by counsel and during which many witnesses testified and numerous documents were received in evidence. An allegation of a complaint out of harmony with a fact of which a court takes judicial notice must be disregarded. Young v. Boy Scouts of America, 9 Cal.App.2d 760, 764, 51 P.2d 191; Bell v. Southern Pacific Co., 189 Cal. 421, 425, 208 P. 970; French v. Senate, 146 Cal. 604, 607–608, 80 P. 1031, 69 L.R.A. 556. Thus the allegation relied on fails to establish a foundation for setting aside the former judgment or any portion thereof.

[10] If, perchance, there was any technical procedural error in considering the file in ruling on defendant's objection to the further introduction of evidence it was obviously not prejudicial, for that file demonstrated the lack of merit in plaintiff's case.

Plaintiff suggests that the trial judge was biased in favor of defendant. There is no support whatever in the record for this suggestion.

Other arguments made by plaintiff are not of sufficient substantiality to require consideration.

Judgment affirmed.

In the Matter of the ESTATE of Mary Ethel CUNNINGHAM, Deceased.

Rhoda ATKINS, Petitioner and Appellant,

v.

Bezotra BARNETT, Contestant and Respondent.

Civ. No. 22013.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 25, 1957.

The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clyde C. Triplett, J., entered an order approving and confirming report of inheritance tax appraiser and fixing inheritance tax, and administratrix appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that administratrix was precluded from challenging order by reason of her failure to object to report in any fashion in probate court.

Affirmed.

1. Executors and Administrators ⇐75

Executor or administrator must defend estate from all unjust and illegal attacks made upon it which affect the interests of heirs, devisees, legatees or creditors.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐151(3)

Where claim may diminish estate to be finally distributed, or may make fund from which creditors are to be paid insufficient for that purpose, administrator or executor is interested, and, in event of adverse ruling, is an "aggrieved party" who may appeal.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐151(3)

Administratrix was party aggrieved and had right to appeal from order approving and confirming report of inheritance tax appraiser and fixing inheritance tax. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, § 14506.

4. Taxation ⇐900(5)

Administratrix was precluded, on appeal, from challenging order approving and confirming report of inheritance tax appraiser and fixing inheritance tax, where she had failed to object to report in any fashion in probate court. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, § 14671.

5. Appeal and Error ⇐169

Marshall Denton, Jr., Los Angeles, for appellant.

Schifferman & Schifferman, Arthur E. Schifferman, and Robert P. Schifferman, Los Angeles, for respondent.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal from an order approving and confirming the report of an inheritance tax appraiser and fixing the inheritance tax.

Mary Ethel Cunningham died testate on March 19, 1955. Appellant Rhoda Atkins, a sister of the deceased, is administratrix with-the-will-annexed. The deceased was a sister of respondent Bezotra Barnett. Eva E. George, another sister, predeceased Mary Ethel. Estella Cooper was a stranger to the deceased. Appellant's claim is that the order confirming the report of the inheritance tax appraiser and fixing the tax is predicated on an erroneous construction of the will of the deceased.

The material parts of the will read:

"Second. I give and bequeath to my sister, Eva E. George, all real estate in the City of Los Angeles, State of California; and in the County of Madera, State of California; and all other personal belongings.

"Third. If my sister, Eva E. George, precedes me in death, bequeath all of my real estate and personal belongings heretofore mentioned, to my sister Bezotra Barnett.

"Fourth. I also provide a shelter in my home for Estella Cooper, for the rest of her life, free of any charge whatsoever.

"Fifth. I have no children. If there are any bona fide relatives, I give and bequeath to them one ($1.00) dollar each.

"Lastly, I hereby nominate and appoint my sisters, Eva E. George and Bezotra Barnett of Los Angeles, State of California, to serve as my Executrices without bond, of this my Last Will and Testament, and I do hereby revoke all former Wills, bequests, or designations of beneficiaries whatsoever."

An inheritance tax appraiser filed a report in which he valued the property bequeathed and devised to Bezotra at $7,254.64 and computed the inheritance tax thereon at $262.73. Bezotra filed objections to the report. Rhoda, as administratrix with-the-will-annexed, filed a "Reply" to the objections. After a hearing the court made findings,[1] sustained the objections, and ordered the inheritance tax appraiser to prepare and file a new report and to apportion therein the inheritance tax liability in accordance with the findings. In the findings the court concluded that the interest devised to Estella Cooper by paragraph Fourth of the will constitutes an equitable charge or servitude on the realty and "nothing more"; and that paragraphs Second and Third constitute a residuary clause whereby the deceased gave to Bezotra all real and personal property not otherwise disposed of by the will.

1. "The Court draws the following conclusions as to the proper construction and interpretation of the Will of said decedent, and hence as to the proper apportionment of inheritance tax liability:

"(a) The interest created in favor of Estella Cooper by paragraph Fourth of the Will of the decedent is not one conferring the right of exclusive occupancy of the premises upon Estella Cooper, and does not constitute an estate for life in said property, contrary to the determination of the Inheritance Tax Appraiser to that effect; the interest created in favor of Estella Cooper by said paragraph constitutes an equitable charge or servitude upon said real property, and nothing more.

"(b) The language of paragraphs Second and Third of the Will of said decedent disposing of 'all other personal belongings' and real estate to the decedent's sister, objector herein, does not constitute a bequest of furniture, contrary to the determination of the Inheritance Tax Appraiser to that effect; said language constitutes a residuary clause in the Will of said decedent whereby the decedent intended to give to her sister, objector herein, all real and personal property owned by the decedent at her death, wheresoever located, not otherwise disposed of by the terms of said Will; accordingly, since said Will shows an intent on the part of said decedent to dispose of her entire estate, and to avoid intestacy, the determination by the Inheritance Tax Appraiser that decedent died intestate as to the cash comprising part of her estate, as well as the parcel of real property located in Riverside County, California, is erroneous; the determination of inheritance tax should be made by said Appraiser upon the basis that an equitable charge is imposed upon the parcel of real property located in Los Angeles County in favor of Estella Cooper, and that all of the rest, residue and remainder of the property comprising the estate of the decedent, whether real property, personal property, or mixed, and wheresoever located, should be taxed as being distributable to objector, Bezotra Barnett.

"(c) The language of paragraph Fifth of the Will of said decedent: 'If there are any bona fide relatives, I give and bequeath to them one ($1.00) dollar each.' was intended by the decedent to be a provision against contest of her Will, does not constitute a specific bequest or bequests, and should be ignored by the Inheritance Tax Appraiser in determining the tax liability."

Pursuant to the order the inheritance tax appraiser filed a new report in which he valued the interest bequeathed and devised to Bezotra at $18,523.45 and computed the tax thereon at $826.17. Thereafter the court made an order approving and confirming the new report as presented and fixing the tax. The order recites "no objections thereto [the new report] having been filed herein." Rhoda, as administratrix with-the-will-annexed and as "an heir and legatee," appeals from the latter order.

[1–3] The first question is whether Rhoda has a right to appeal. Respondent Bezotra says she has no such right since she is not aggrieved by the order either in her representative capacity or as an heir or legatee. We think the point is not tenable. The first report of the inheritance tax appraiser set the amount of the tax due and payable on all transfers, Rev. & Tax.Code, § 14506, as $389.77; the new report, as $865.66, a difference of $475.89.

It is the duty of Rhoda, as administratrix, to " 'defend the estate from all unjust and illegal attacks made upon it which affect the interests of heirs, devisees, legatees or creditors.' [Citations.] Consequently, if a claim 'may diminish the estate to be finally distributed, or may make the fund from which the creditors are to be paid insufficient for that purpose, the administrator is interested, and, in the event of an adverse ruling, is a party aggrieved.' [Citations.] 'To say that an administrator is not aggrieved and therefore has no right of appeal from a decree which he deems to be unjust, unwarranted, and detrimental to the estate which has been confided to his care, would be to deny him the performance of a plain duty devolving upon him through his appointment and his acceptance of the trust.' [Citation.] It has accordingly been held that an executor or administrator may appeal from a decree of partial distribution, because the assets of the estate may not be sufficient to discharge the claims of creditors [citations] or because the status of the assets may be so highly uncertain that such an order may be embarrassing to the proper administration of the estate. [Citation.] An executor or administrator may appeal from an order awarding a family allowance to the widow or children of the decedent, since he is an aggrieved party by virtue of his duty to protect the estate from depletion from an extravagant family allowance [citations]; and an executor may also appeal from an order setting aside a probate homestead for the use of the surviving wife of the decedent." In re Estate of Kessler, 32 Cal.2d 367, 369, 196 P.2d 559, 561. Applying this law it is patent that Rhoda, as administratrix, is a party aggrieved and has a right of appeal.

[4, 5] Respondent contends Rhoda waived her right to appeal by not filing objections to the new report. She did not waive her right to appeal. Rev. & Tax. Code, § 14671. The correct question is: Is she precluded on appeal from challenging the order by reason of her failure to file objections or object to the report in any fashion in the probate court?

On filing of the report of the inheritance tax appraiser the clerk must give notice of the filing by posting and by mailing a copy to the Controller and to each person chargeable with any tax who has appeared in the probate proceeding. Rev. & Tax.Code, § 14508.[2] At any time prior to the making of the order on the report any person interested may file a "written objection" to the report. Rev. & Tax.Code, § 14510. If an objection is filed the clerk must fix a time "for a hearing on the objection" and give notice of the hearing by posting and by mailing a copy of the objection and of the notice to "the Controller, executor, administrator, and the inheritance tax appraiser."

2. Section 14508: "On the day that the report is filed, or on the next succeeding judicial day, the clerk of the superior court shall give notice of the filing to all persons interested by causing a notice to be posted at the courthouse in the county where the court holds its sessions, and shall mail a copy of the notice to the Controller and to each person chargeable with any tax in the report who has appeared in the probate proceeding."

Rev. & Tax.Code, § 14511.[3] Section 14512 reads:

"For the purpose of the hearing the report of the inheritance tax appraiser is presumed to be correct, and at the hearing it is the duty of the objector to proceed in support of his objection."

On the completion of the hearing the court may make such order as it may deem appropriate. Rev. & Tax.Code, § 14513. Section 14509 reads:

"If no objection to the report is filed prior to the expiration of 10 days from and after the posting and mailing of the notice, the superior court, a judge of the court, or, if the court is located in a county or city and county having a population of 900,000 or more, a court commissioner appointed by the court may, without further notice, make an order confirming the report and fixing the tax in accordance therewith."

An order fixing the inheritance tax has the force and effect of a judgment in a civil action. Rev. & Tax.Code, § 14672.

It appears evident from a study of the statutes that they provide for an adversary proceeding. Notice of the filing of the report was given to appellant. If she had any objection to the report she had the privilege of filing a "written objection." It is only when a "written objection" is filed that the clerk must set the report for hearing, and the hearing is "on the objection." At the hearing the objector must proceed in support of his objection. If no objection is filed an order may be made confirming the report and fixing the tax. Failure to file a "written objection" is in effect a confession that the report is correct—a default. The explicit provision that if no objection to the report is filed the court may without further notice make an order confirming the report and fixing the tax in accordance therewith indicates an intent by the Legislature that an interested person must, to preserve a right to question the report, file a "written objection" thereto. Since appellant failed to file any objection to the report there was no issue of fact framed, and the court was empowered to make the order in accordance with section 14509.

It is fundamental that issues or questions not raised or presented to the trial court will not be considered in the reviewing court. See cases cited 5 West's Cal.Dig., Appeal and Error, ⚿169, p. 191. Not having filed an objection to the report in the probate court, Rhoda may not attack it on appeal.

3. Section 14511: "If an objection is filed, the clerk of the superior court shall fix a time, not less than 10 days after the filing, for a hearing on the objection, and shall give notice of the hearing by posting a notice of hearing at the courthouse in the county where the court holds its sessions, and by forthwith mailing a copy to [of] the objection and of the notice to the Controller, executor, administrator, and the inheritance tax appraiser."

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Oliver Gardner RUSHING, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5787.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 24, 1957.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 20, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 25, 1957.

Defendant was convicted on plea of guilty of violating section of the Vehicle Code making the driving or taking of a motor vehicle without the owner's consent a felony. Thereafter the defendant filed a petition for writ of error coram nobis.

The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Herbert V. Walker, J., entered an order denying the motion, and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that showing made was manifestly insufficient to justify vacating the judgment.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐997(6)

In order to present a meritorious application for vacation of judgment on petition for writ of error coram nobis, there must be a strong showing of the existence of some fact which was unknown to defendant at time of trial, and which could not have been ascertained by him in exercise of reasonable diligence, and fact must be one which, if it had been known, would have prevented rendition of the judgment.

2. Criminal Law ⇐997(15)

On motion for writ of error coram nobis by defendant, who had been convicted on plea of guilty for violation of section of the Vehicle Code making the driving or taking of a motor vehicle without the owner's consent a felony, showing made by defendant was insufficient to justify vacation of judgment of conviction. West's Ann. Vehicle Code, § 503.

3. Criminal Law ⇐997(2)

If Adult Authority, in fixing term of imprisonment, considered or would consider improperly that defendant had admitted two prior convictions, remedy of defendant was not a writ of error coram nobis but to have sentence fixed or refixed when he served his lawful term, and, if dissatisfied, to review the matter on habeas corpus at that time.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal from an order denying defendant's motion to vacate a judgment.

On April 27, 1956, an information was filed charging defendant in two counts with grand theft and a violation of section 503 of the Vehicle Code. The information alleged that prior to the commission of the offenses charged defendant had been convicted of two felonies and had served terms of imprisonment therefor. At defendant's arraignment the public defender was appointed his counsel. On May 4, 1956, his counsel being present, defendant pleaded guilty to the offense charged in Count II—violation of section 503 of the Vehicle Code—and admitted the prior convictions. A probation report was ordered.

On May 25, 1956, defendant being present with his counsel, probation was denied, the admission of the prior convictions was withdrawn, the prior convictions were denied, defendant waived a jury trial as to the prior convictions and no finding was made with respect to them, Count I was dismissed, and defendant was sentenced to state prison on Count II. No appeal was taken from the judgment.

On August 20, 1956, defendant filed with the clerk of the superior court a document titled "Motion to Vacate, Annull Quash and Set Aside Judgment, the Judgment is Void on the Face of the Judgment Roll." On August 28, 1956, an order was made denying the motion. Defendant appealed.

The grounds stated in the motion were: 1. The "judgment is void on the face of the judgment roll, and is repugnant to the 1st, 4th, 5th, 6th, 8th and 14th amendments of the United States Constitution." 2. The court was not authorized to punish defendant twice "for the same pretended offense," which defendant calls "double jeopardy." 3. "Numerous grounds but only one ground needs to be proved." 4. "The verdict is contrary to law; unwarranted, unfounded." 5. The judgment is "barred by the statutes of limitations for over (755) years since the signing of the Magna Charta."

[1, 2] The proceeding is in the nature of a petition for a writ of error coram nobis and is of limited scope. As we said in

People v. Suarez, 142 Cal.App.2d 719, 298 P.2d 895, 896:

"In order to present a meritorious application for vacation of a judgment there must be a strong showing of the existence of some fact which was unknown to the petitioner at the time of trial and which could not have been ascertained by him in the exercise of reasonable diligence and the fact must be one which, if it had been known, would have prevented the rendition of the judgment. (12 Cal.Jur.2d, Coram Nobis, p. 550.)"

The showing made in defendant's motion was manifestly insufficient. People v. Washington, 142 Cal.App.2d 720, 298 P.2d 879; People v. Lempia, 144 Cal.App.2d 393, 301 P.2d 40; People v. Mendez, 144 Cal.App.2d 500, 301 P.2d 295; People v. Larsen, 144 Cal.App.2d 504, 301 P.2d 298; People v. Gamboa, 144 Cal.App.2d 588, 301 P.2d 390; People v. Blair, 146 Cal.App.2d 299, 303 P.2d 597. In view of what is said in these recent cases elaboration is unnecessary. The action was not barred by the statute of limitations. There was no verdict in the case; defendant pleaded guilty. There was no "double jeopardy." Defendant pleaded guilty to, was convicted of, and was sentenced for one offense only—violation of section 503 of the Vehicle Code.

[3] As we understand him, defendant contends that the Adult Authority, in fixing the term of his imprisonment, has considered or will consider that he has admitted the two prior convictions charged. If defendant has a just complaint on that score his remedy is not a writ of error coram nobis. A somewhat similar contention was made in People v. Larsen, 144 Cal.App.2d 504, 301 P.2d 298. Mr. Justice Ashburn wrote, 144 Cal.App.2d at page 508, 301 P.2d at page 301:

"The punishment for first degree burglary is fixed at not less than five years with no maximum specified. Pen. Code § 461, subd. 1. Appellant's remedy is to have his sentence fixed or refixed when he has served the lawful term, whatever that may be, and if dissatisfied to review the matter on habeas corpus at that time. In re Seeley, 29 Cal.2d 294, at page 302, 176 P.2d 24, at page 29, says: 'The rule is settled in this state in accord with the weight of authority that "where a court has jurisdiction of the person and of the crime, the imposition of a sentence in excess of what the law permits does not render the legal or authorized portion of the sentence void, but leaves only such portion of the sentence as may be in excess open to question and attack. In other words, the sentence is legal in so far as it is within the provisions of law and the jurisdiction of the court over the person and offense, and only void as to the excess when such excess is separate and may be dealt with without disturbing the valid portion of the sentence."' 29 Cal.2d at page 303, 176 P.2d at page 30: 'No difficulty is likely to arise in ascertaining the lawful portion of the sentence which should have been imposed upon the petitioner. Section 461 of the Penal Code fixes the punishment for first degree burglary as imprisonment in the state prison for not less than five years. Since no maximum is there prescribed the petitioner has failed to show that he is entitled to his release at this time. The proper course to pursue is for the constituted authority to refix the sentence of the petitioner in accordance with the declaration of his rights as stated in this opinion.' This is but one of a consistent line of cases announcing and applying the same rule. In re Morck, 180 Cal. 384, 181 P. 657; In re Rosencrantz, 205 Cal. 534, 541, 271 P. 902; In re Seeley, supra, 29 Cal.2d 294, 302, 176 P.2d 24; In re Bramble, 31 Cal.2d 43, 53, 187 P.2d 411; In re Drake, 38 Cal.2d 195, 197–198, 238 P.2d 566; In re Spaulding, 8 Cal.App.2d 497, 498, 48 P.2d 133."

Defendant is not entitled to writ of error coram nobis.

v.

Anthony Thomas LANCELLOTTI, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 1097.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 21, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 22, 1957.

Prosecution for grand theft and receiving stolen property. The Superior Court, San Diego County, Edgar B. Hervey, J. pro tem., entered judgment of conviction and denied new trial, and defendant appealed from the order denying a new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that evidence sustained convictions.

Judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐369(5, 9)

In prosecution for grand theft and feloniously receiving stolen property, trial court properly refused proffered evidence that on an occasion approximately three years prior to the date of the theft for which defendant was being prosecuted defendant and another person were caught shoplifting in a store other than the store in which the theft for which he was being prosecuted occurred. West's Ann.Pen. Code, §§ 484, 487, 496.

2. Indictment and Information ⇐10.2(8, 11)

In prosecution for grand theft, and receiving stolen property, evidence presented to Magistrate was sufficient to allow district attorney to charge defendant not only with receiving stolen property, but in the alternative with grand theft of the same property. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 484, 487, 496.

3. Judgment ⇐648

Where defendant presented question of sufficiency of evidence to show probable cause for commission of crimes charged, to a Superior Court, on a motion to dismiss the information, and such question was fully considered and denied, and the question was again presented on a writ of prohibition to the District Court of Appeal and denied, such judgment became final and such question was not subject to review on the subsequent appeal from an order denying a new trial or from a judgment of conviction.

4. Larceny ⇐65

Receiving Stolen Goods ⇐8(3)

Evidence sustained convictions for grand theft and for receiving stolen property. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 484, 487, 496.

5. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

Larceny ⇐64(7)

While mere possession of stolen property and an opportunity to steal it is not alone sufficient to justify a conviction for theft, such opportunity, with coexisting inculpatory circumstances, such as guilty conduct, and giving false account of possession of stolen property soon thereafter, may be sufficient to sustain a conviction for theft, and although the additional connecting evidence may be slight, if it exists, decision of a jury finding a defendant guilty will not be disturbed on appeal. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 484, 487, 496.

6. Witnesses ⇐246(2)

In a criminal proceeding, if a judge desires to be further informed on certain points mentioned in the testimony it is entirely proper for him to ask proper questions for the purpose of developing all the facts in regard to them, and considerable latitude will be allowed the judge in such respect as long as a fair trial is indicated both to the accused and to the state.

7. Criminal Law ⇐633(1)

Courts are established to discover where lies the truth when issues are contested, and the final responsibility to see that justice is done rests with the trial judge.

8. Criminal Law ⇐1166½(12)

In prosecution for grand theft and receiving stolen property, where jury was specifically instructed that it was the sole and exclusive judge of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the evidence notwithstanding any belief entertained or comments made by the trial judge on the subject, no prejudicial error occurred through judge's cross-examination of defendant. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 484, 487, 496.

9. Criminal Law ⇐656(2)

A trial judge should not examine a defendant on trial for a crime in such a manner as to give the jury the impression that he thinks the accused is guilty of the charge and should be convicted, since such conduct would nullify defendant's right of trial by jury.

10. Criminal Law ⇐1166½(12)

In prosecution for grand theft, and receiving stolen property, comments of trial judge as to his belief of defendant's guilt, made on a motion for a new trial, although unfortunate, could not have affected the verdict of the jury in any manner, and were therefore not prejudicial. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 484, 487, 496.

11. Criminal Law ⇐1172(1)

In prosecution for grand theft and receiving stolen property, no prejudicial error resulted in giving an instruction on right of jury to find defendant guilty of petit theft, since petit theft is an included offense of grand theft. West's Ann.Pen. Code, §§ 484, 487, 496.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Defendant and appellant was originally charged in a criminal complaint with grand theft in violation of Penal Code, §§ 484 and 487, in that on March 16, 1956, he feloniously took personal property of Jordan Marsh Company, consisting of a pastel mink stole valued at $235. He was arraigned on the charge in the Municipal Court. Evidence was received and the committing magistrate held the defendant to answer on the charge of receiving stolen property as defined by section 496 of the Penal Code.

The information was filed in the Superior Court on May 9, 1956, charging defendant in count one with grand theft, as originally charged in the complaint. In count two he was charged with feloniously receiving the same property for which he was held to answer. In a third count it was charged that on March 16, 1956, he violated section 496 of the Penal Code by feloniously receiving stolen property, to wit, one dark grey plaid suit and one blue suit, the personal property of Walker Scott Corporation.

A motion was made before a judge other than this trial judge to dismiss the information and particularly count three, on the basis that there was no evidence before the committing magistrate to substantiate the charges. The motion was denied. Subsequently, a writ of prohibition under section 999a of the Penal Code alleging defendant was committed without reasonable or probable cause, was denied by this court on June 6, 1956, and this order became final. Just before the trial, counsel for defendant again raised the same question by a similar motion, and after considerable discussion, it was denied. On this appeal defendant again questions this ruling as well as the former ruling. After receipt of the prosecution's evidence defendant moved for an advised verdict or for dismissal of each count. The motion was denied.

A trial by jury resulted in a conviction on the first and third counts. Subsequently, the trial court dismissed the second count. Defendant was sentenced to state's prison, sentences to run concurrently.

On March 16, 1956, the Gardena police officers received a telephone call from one of their informers that two men, one resembling this defendant, were attempting to sell some clothing at a certain club in that city. They went there and saw defendant and his partner, Pastore. One Thompson, manager of the club, had purchased from defendant two suits of clothes and two pairs of slacks for $80 in cash. Defendant denied such a sale and he was searched. A set of car keys was found. Defendant stated he had no car since he left it at home and the keys were then returned to him. Shortly thereafter, the officers found these same keys, partially exposed but hidden in a sand-filled ash tray. Search was made on an adjoining lot and a Buick car was found. The keys fitted it. Defendant was taken to the car and several boxes of clothing, a hanger labeled "Dutch Smith" and a mink stole were found in the trunk. After questioning, defendant changed his story and said he had acquired these articles in a trade with another unknown peddler near Los Angeles. He later changed the place and indicated it was Long Beach. The trousers and slacks purchased by the manager were found in a club locker in a separate bundle. Defendant then admitted to the officers he had brought these articles into the club and had been in San Diego the week before, but later, when he was told of the thefts in San Diego that particular week he changed his story and claimed it was the week before that he was in San Diego.

The manager of the Jordan Marsh Company sufficiently identified the mink stole marked No. 515 as being one of two found missing from his store in La Jolla on March 16, 1956. He also identified two pairs of new uncuffed pants which bore the label "Macgregor" in them, a brand carried by his store, and also the tan slacks with the label "Kentkraft", which articles were exclusively handled by this store in that area. (The next closest store was Eugene, Oregon.) He testified that his store carried trousers of the description of those found in defendant's car; that they carried the label "Jordan Marsh" written on them and that at that time he could not tell whether these particular slacks and pants were stolen or were sold from his store, but it was unlikely that they were sold because it was an unusual thing to sell a pair of uncuffed pants.

Another witness, Smith, testified he was in business in La Jolla under the name of "Dutch Smith". He testified that a certain camel's hair jacket, size 40, found in defendant's car on a hanger labeled "Dutch Smith, La Jolla, California" was one which he had received in a shipment to his store on March 15, and which he found to be missing.

A buyer for Walker Scott Company testified that on March 19 he went to Gardena and identified certain items found there, including a new grey pin-striped suit with uncuffed pants, carrying the Walker Scott label on it; that at that time his store carried suits of that make, model, style and size; that it is a rare occasion when uncuffed pants like those are sold in that condition. Another blue suit was similarly identified. He testified he did not know of his own knowledge that these exact pants were stolen from his store but they carried the store's label and it would be an unusual occasion to sell uncuffed pants from his store.

[1] The prosecution offered testimony of a store detective from Bullock's indicating that on August 11, 1953, defendant and one other person were caught shoplifting and carrying a large paper bag and were removing a coat from that store. The court properly refused the proffered evidence. (8 Cal.Jur. p. 58, sec. 167.)

Defendant testified he was a peddler who purchased merchandise at wholesale and sold it at retail from his car; that although he was in San Diego one or two weeks before March 16th, he did not know where the Jordan Marsh, Walker Scott, or Dutch Smith stores were located, and that he had not been inside those stores; that he acquired all these articles described from an unknown peddler by trade in Gardena; that each told the other he had acquired the respective articles through a mistake in the order from the house with which they did business and did not want to take them back. The defendant said this was just sales talk, and if he could steal from his employer "so can I", because he had a license to steal because he had a peddler's license; and that he did not believe the "stuff" was stolen although he did see the Walker Scott store label on some of the articles.

On this appeal from the judgment of conviction he first contends that the trial court erred in denying his motion to dismiss counts one and three of the information because the evidence taken at the preliminary examination did not show reasonable or probable cause to justify the district attorney filing an information on the offenses charged; that since defendant was originally charged with grand theft of the mink stole and he was held to answer on the charge of receiving stolen property, the district attorney was unauthorized to again charge grand theft, and that the evidence taken at the preliminary examination did not support the charge of receiving stolen property set forth in the third count since the two suits alleged therein were not received in evidence at the preliminary examination but were returned to the district attorney for disposition after being marked only for identification, and that the several charges were not shown to be so connected in their commission as to be chargeable in separate counts in one information

[2, 3] We see no merit to this argument. The committing magistrate heard the testimony of the witnesses pertaining to the charge in the third count and they properly identified the exhibits which were marked for identification, although they were not received in evidence. That testimony was not stricken and remained in the transcript. The district attorney was authorized to include this offense in the information. Penal Code, § 739. The charge of grand theft was not expressly dismissed as was done in Parks v. Superior Court, 38 Cal.2d 609, 241 P.2d 521, upon which case defendant relies. The evidence was sufficient to allow the district attorney to not only charge defendant with receiving stolen property, but, in the alternative, to charge him with grand theft of the same property. People v. Bird, 212 Cal. 632, 300 P. 23; Bompensiero v. Superior Court, 44 Cal.2d 178, 183, 281 P.2d 250. Defendant was found in possession of all of the property charged in the information in the same place and it was adequately shown that all of the charges were sufficiently related or connected with the transaction which was the basis for the committing order and the charges alleged and would authorize their inclusion in one information. Penal Code, § 739; Parks v. Superior Court, supra; People v. Bird, 212 Cal. 632, 300 P. 23, and cases cited. Irrespective of this conclusion, defendant presented the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to show probable cause for the commission of the crimes charged to the Superior Court on a motion to dismiss the information. It was fully considered and denied. It was again presented on a writ of prohibition to this court under Section 999a of the Penal Code and denied. This judgment became final and the question should not again be made subject to review on an appeal from the order denying the new trial or from the judgment of conviction. People v. Dutton, 27 Cal.App. 2d 364, 80 P.2d 1003; 14 Cal.Jur. 78, sec.

60; 7 Cal.Jur. p. 968, sec. 107; 8 Cal.Jur. p. 492, sec. 508. The trial court had jurisdiction to try the defendant upon the charges set forth in the information. In re Basham, 24 Cal.App.2d 285, 286, 74 P.2d 781.

[4, 5] The next claim is that the evidence is insufficient to support defendant's convictions on counts one and three. It sufficiently shows that the mink stole in evidence was taken from the Jordan Marsh Company store without consent on the date charged. It is true there is no direct evidence that anyone saw this defendant take it. This is not a necessity. People v. Alexander, 92 Cal.App.2d 230, 234, 206 P. 2d 657. While mere possession of stolen property and an opportunity to steal it is not alone sufficient to justify a conviction for theft, such opportunity, with coexisting inculpatory circumstances such as guilty conduct and giving false account of possession of stolen property soon thereafter may be sufficient to sustain a conviction for theft. Although the additional connecting evidence may be slight, if it exists, the decision of the jury will not be disturbed on appeal. People v. Crotty, 70 Cal.App. 515, 518, 233 P. 395; People v. Cheaney, 111 Cal.App. 55, 59, 295 P. 84; People v. Holland, 82 Cal.App.2d 310, 312, 186 P.2d 58; People v. Howard, 58 Cal. App. 340, 343, 208 P. 1022; People v. Scott, 66 Cal.App. 200, 203, 225 P. 767; People v. Carroll, 79 Cal.App.2d 146, 148, 179 P.2d 75; People v. Kross, 112 Cal.App.2d 602, 609, 247 P.2d 44; People v. Viets, 79 Cal. App. 576, 589, 250 P. 588; People v. Smith, 43 Cal.App.2d 110, 115, 110 P.2d 472.

As to the third count, defendant was found in possession of the property there charged. It was sufficiently identified as coming from the Walker Scott store. When defendant was arrested he was with one who seemed to know about the possession of these articles and assisted, to some extent, in their disposition. The illegitimate source from which these suits were claimed to have been obtained, the inadequate price paid for the loot, and the unexplained or improbable explanation of defendant's possession of them, were facts to be considered by the jury. Under the conditions described, it may well be inferred that this store had been the owner of this property and it was taken from the store other than by legitimate sale and without the consent of the owner, by someone, and later received by defendant in San Diego County knowing it to have been stolen.

[6–8] It is next claimed that the trial judge was guilty of prejudicial misconduct during the trial in that he unduly cross-examined the defendant, and by such cross-examination indicated his belief that the defendant was not telling the truth. After defendant testified, the trial judge proceeded to cross-examine him in some detail respecting his direct testimony. At the conclusion of this cross-examination counsel for defendant made some ineffective objections to this procedure as follows:

> "If the court please, I, for the purpose of the record, wish to make an objection to the questions that the Court has just asked and his responses thereto. I presume it is going to be overruled of course."

The prosecution then completed the cross-examination of defendant. Without quoting the many pages of this cross-examination by the court, suffice it to say that it was quite apparent from the testimony of the defendant that he was evasive in his answers, inclined to quibble, his answers were ambiguous, nonresponsive, and it was quite apparent to the trial judge that he was not telling the whole truth. While the better practice would have been to allow full cross-examination of witnesses by respective counsel before cross-examination by the judge, it has been repeatedly held that if a judge desires to be further informed on certain points mentioned in the testimony it is entirely proper for him to ask proper questions for the purpose of developing all the facts in regard to them. Considerable latitude is allowed the judge in this respect as long as a fair trial is indicated both to the accused and to the People. Courts are established to discover where lies the truth when issues are contested, and the final responsibility to see that justice is done rests with the judge. No timely objections were interposed to the cross-examination. The jury was specifically instructed that it was the sole and exclusive judge of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the evidence notwithstanding any belief entertained or comments made by the trial judge on the subject. Under the circumstances no prejudicial error affirmatively appears. People v. Miller, 41 Cal.App.2d 252, 258, 106 P.2d 239; People v. Corrigan, Cal. App., 302 P.2d 371; People v. Golsh, 63 Cal.App. 609, 614, 219 P. 456; People v. Miller, 112 Cal.App. 535, 537, 297 P. 40; People v. Hill, 116 Cal.App.2d 212, 255 P.2d 54; People v. Howe, 1 Cal.App.2d 518, 36 P.2d 820.

[9] Counsel for defendant sets forth considerable reported argument between the trial judge and counsel on the hearing of defendant's motion for new trial. The trial judge, at that time, quite forcefully told counsel for defendant he did not believe the testimony of the defendant, and the jury had the right to the same thought. He proceeded to review the testimony and concluded that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the conviction on each count as charged. Criticism was made in reference to the trial judge's cross-examination of the defendant, as indicated. He replied that he was asking the questions for the purpose of exposing, to the jury, what he thought were lies of the defendant. Some unfortunate statements were made at that time by the judge indicating that he thought he had the right to tell the jury that he believed the defendant was guilty and that was what he was trying to do although he did not believe his conduct so indicated. A judge should not examine a defendant on trial for a crime in such a manner as to give the jury the impression that he thinks the accused is guilty of the charge and should be convicted. It is apparent that such conduct would nullify the right of trial by jury. People v. Butterfield, 40 Cal.App.2d 725, 734, 105 P.2d 628. As said by this court in People v. Huff, 134 Cal.App.2d 182, 285 P.2d 17, a judge should be careful not to throw the weight of his judicial position either for or against the defendant.

[10] The record of the testimony before the jurors does not affirmatively show that the trial court believed the defendant guilty, although the questions propounded well indicate that the defendant was falsifying his testimony and the trial judge, as well as the jurors, were justified in so believing. Under Article VI, § 19 of the Constitution the court may make such comment on the evidence and the testimony and credibility of any witness as in its opinion is necessary for the proper determination of the case, but it shall inform the jury in all cases that the jurors are the exclusive judges of all questions of fact submitted to them and of the credibility of the witnesses. In the instant case the jury was so instructed. The comments, unfortunately made on the motion for new trial, could not necessarily have been said to have affected the verdict of the jury in any manner. No prejudicial error appears. Art. VI, § 4½, of the Constitution.

[11] The remaining question involves an instruction given by the court involving the form of verdicts. According to the reporter's transcript, the court gave an instruction that if the jury entertained a reasonable doubt as to whether or not defendant was guilty of either the offense of grand theft or petit theft, it should find him guilty of grand theft. The reporter, by affidavit, corrected the transcript and said that in truth and fact the jury was not so instructed, that there was an error in transcription, and the instruction as given, read in the concluding words "not guilty of grand theft". Upon the record as thus corrected, under Rule 12a, Rules on Appeal, no error appears. The undisputed evidence shows the value of the mink stole exceeded the sum of $200. No prejudicial error resulted in giving an instruction which defendant contends was confusing to the jury but which does not appear so to us. It involved the right of the jury to find the defendant guilty of petit theft, an included offense.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Milford Jay PERKINS, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5751.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 24, 1957.

Defendant was charged with violation of Penal Code, § 288. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Allen T. Lynch, J., tried case without jury, and defendant was convicted of contributing to delinquency of minor, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that evidence was sufficient to support conviction for contributing to delinquency of minor.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐193½
Indictment and Information ⇐191

The offense of contributing to delinquency of a minor is necessarily included in violation of Penal Code, § 288, and conviction of contributing to delinquency of minor is an acquittal of crime of child molesting. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288.

2. Infants ⇐20

Evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction of contributing to delinquency of minor. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288; West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, §§ 700 (k), 702.

3. Infants ⇐20

To establish violation of section 288, there must be proof of a specific intent to arouse, appeal to, or gratify the lust or passions or sexual desires of defendant or of the child, but proof of such specific intent is not necessary to establish the commission of offense commonly called contributing to delinquency of minor. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288; West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, §§ 700(k), 702.

4. Criminal Law ⇐199

Defendant's acquittal of violation of section 288, is not bar to his conviction of contributing to delinquency of minor. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288; West's Ann. Welfare & Inst.Code, §§ 700(k), 702.

VALLÉE, Justice.

By information defendant was charged with a violation of section 288 of the Penal Code.[1] In a trial by the court without a jury he was convicted of contributing to

1. Section 288: "Any person who shall wilfully and lewdly commit any lewd or lascivious act including any of the acts constituting other crimes provided for in part one of this code upon or with the body, or any part or member thereof, of a the delinquency of a minor, a violation of section 702 of the Welfare and Institutions Code.[2] The cause was submitted on the transcript of the preliminary examination and evidence presented by defendant.

Janice, a 7-year-old girl, testified that on August 15, 1955, while she was in defendant's car, he put his hand under her dress; he put it on top of her panties and not under them; when he did so, he in effect told her that when girls grow up men have sexual intercourse with them; he also touched her leg on the lower part above the knee and touched her with his little finger on the place where she went to the bathroom; he also kissed her. Defendant admitted to a police officer that he had put his hand on Janice's leg and that he had kissed her once.

The only contention is that "In light of the acquittal of the defendant of the charge of child molesting, there is no evidence to sustain a conviction of the charge of contributing to the delinquency of a minor."

[1] The offense of contributing to the delinquency of a minor is necessarily included in the offense defined in section 288 of the Penal Code, and a conviction of contributing to the delinquency of a minor is an acquittal of a violation of section 288. People v. Greer, 30 Cal.2d 589, 598, 184 P.2d 512. In People v. Lopez, 46 Cal.App. 2d 857, 117 P.2d 10, cited with apparent approval in People v. Greer, supra, the defendant was charged with aiding and abetting her codefendant in the commission of statutory rape. The question as stated by the court was: "'Where a defendant is charged in one count with the violation of section 261 of the Penal Code, can such defendant be found guilty of contributing to the delinquency of a minor (Section 702, Welfare and Institutions Code, St.1937 P. 1033), a misdemeanor, where no such crime is charged or alleged in the information or complaint?'" The court held, 46 Cal. App.2d at page 858, 117 P.2d at page 11:

> "The minor prosecutrix testified that her clothing was removed against her will by appellant and that appellant then placed said minor on the bed and held her down while the act of intercourse was accomplished. * * *
> "There was sufficient evidence introduced to justify the trial court in finding appellant guilty as charged in the information. However, it is apparent that the trial judge discounted a great deal of the testimony and disbelieved some portions of it, but the evidence was sufficient to support his finding that appellant committed the offense of which he found her guilty.
>
> "The only question raised which is worthy of discussion is, whether the court was justified as a matter of law in rendering the judgment which it did. There is some slight conflict in the decisions as to the law on this subject, but it is the better rule to hold that, where the acts committed tended to show the commission of the acts charged and where such acts in themselves actually constituted the lesser offense, i. e., contributing to the delinquency of the minor, a conviction had of the lesser offense should be sustained. The judgment rendered child under the age of fourteen years, with the intent of arousing, appealing to, or gratifying the lust or passions or sexual desires of such person or of such child, shall be guilty of a felony and shall be imprisoned in the State prison for a term of from one year to life."

2. Welfare and Institutions Code, section 702: "Any person who commits any act or omits the performance of any duty, which act or omission causes or tends to cause or encourage any person under the age of 21 years to come within the provisions of any of the subdivisions of Section 700 or which act or omission contributes thereto, * * * is guilty of a misdemeanor * * *."

Welfare and Institutions Code, section 700: "The jurisdiction of the juvenile court extends to any person under the age of 21 years who comes within any of the following descriptions: * * *

"(k) Who is leading, or from any cause is in danger of leading, an idle, dissolute, lewd, or immoral life."

would prevent the retrial of appellant upon the original charge, for the reason that it amounted to an acquittal of the greater crime, to-wit: aiding and abetting in the commission of the crime of statutory rape, which is a felony, while the lesser offense, of which appellant was found guilty, is a misdemeanor."

In Rodriguez v. Superior Court, 27 Cal. 2d 500, 165 P.2d 1, the same contention was made as defendant makes here. The court answered, 27 Cal.2d at page 502, 165 P.2d at page 2:

"While it is true that acts constituting statutory rape or attempted rape may also constitute a violation of section 702, since those acts by their very nature would contribute to the delinquency of the minor, the converse is not true. The facts may fail to establish rape or attempted rape yet justify a conviction under section 702. Consequently, petitioner's acquittal under the first count of the information is not a bar to his prosecution and conviction under the second count.

"Petitioner also claims that not only is the occurrence underlying the rape charge identical with that relied upon to support the accusation under section 702, but that the proof in support of the two charges is the same. He says that he would be guilty of rape if the things the prosecutrix testified to actually occurred, but that if her story is untrue he is not guilty of any offense. Petitioner argues that his acquittal of rape and of the included offense of attempted rape establishes the falsity of her testimony, and that he cannot be retried upon evidence which was addressed to the charge of which he stands acquitted. There is no merit in this contention. The jury may reject a portion of the testimony of a witness and accept a part of it. The testimony accepted by the jury may support a conviction of one offense, while another charge contained in the same information may fail because the jury has rejected evidence necessary to establish an essential element of the crime."

In People v. Greer, supra, 30 Cal.2d 589, 184 P.2d 512, 517, the defendant was charged with statutory rape, Pen.Code, § 261, subd. 1, and lewd and lascivious conduct, Pen.Code, § 288, arising out of the same act. In a previous trial he was charged not only with these identical offenses but also with contributing to the delinquency of a minor, the same person on whom the rape and lewd and lascivious conduct were alleged to have been committed. Welf. & Inst.Code, § 702. In that trial he was found guilty of violating section 702, but the jury disagreed as to the counts of statutory rape and lewd and lascivious conduct. The court observed: "In the first trial, therefore, it was not necessary for the district attorney to charge a violation of section 702 to obtain a conviction of defendant for committing that offense. He could have charged statutory rape and lewd and lascivious conduct, and the jury, under proper instructions, could have returned a verdict of guilty of contributing to the delinquency of a minor," citing People v. Lopez, supra, 46 Cal.App. 2d 857, 117 P.2d 10.

[2, 3] In the case at bar there was sufficient evidence introduced to have warranted the trial judge in finding defendant guilty as charged in the information. To establish a violation of section 288 there must be proof of a specific intent to arouse, appeal to, or gratify the lust or passions or sexual desires of the defendant or of the child. People v. Jones, 42 Cal.2d 219, 223, 266 P.2d 38. Proof of such specific intent is not necessary to establish the commission of the offense commonly called contributing to the delinquency of a minor. It is apparent the trial judge discounted some parts of the testimony of Janice. He may have had a reasonable doubt that defendant had the specific intent required by section 288. The evidence was adequate to support his finding that defendant committed the offense of which he found him guilty.

[4] Defendant's acquittal of a violation of section 288 of the Penal Code is not a bar to his conviction of contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

[5] Defendant appealed from the judgment and the sentence imposed. The judgment in a criminal action is the sentence. People v. Tokich, 128 Cal.App.2d 515, 519, 275 P.2d 816. Also see People v. Clarke, 146 Cal.App.2d Supp. 904, 304 P.2d 271. Affirmance of the judgment carries with it affirmance of the sentence.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 9007.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 25, 1957.

Action to have a contract for the sale of timber cancelled and to quiet title to land and for damages for withholding possession. Judgment adverse to plaintiff in the Superior Court, Del Norte County, Samuel F. Finley, J., and the plaintiff appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Warne, J. pro tem., held that the failure of purchasers to make certain required payments under the contract did not justify termination of their rights under the contract.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Logs and Logging ⇐3(7)

An agreement relating to the sale and purchase of timber was not construable as requiring anything to be paid by the purchaser as rental for the use of the lands.

2. Logs and Logging ⇐3(7)

Where contract for the sale and purchase of standing timber expressly stated that contract was to continue over a number of years, time was not of the essence.

3. Logs and Logging ⇐3(13)

Where purchasers under contract for sale of standing timber were in default because of failure to make payments required under contract, purchasers were properly relieved of forfeiture of their rights under contract where vendors had received a substantial part of purchase price, it did not appear that breach was willful and purchasers offered to pay what was still due and owing as price of timber. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3275.

4. Logs and Logging ⇐3(15)

In action by vendors to have a contract for sale of timber cancelled and for damages, findings restricting payments to be made by the purchaser were supported by the contract which was in evidence.

WARNE, Justice pro tem.

James Wood, as administrator of the estate of Sid Wood, brought this action to have a contract for the sale of timber cancelled and set aside; to quiet title to certain land in Del Norte County and for damages for the withholding of the possession of the land.

Judgment was in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $4,098.75 plus interest in the amount of $840.67, and also ordered that a final determination of the amount of the actual price of the timber, according to the formula provided in the contract, abide the cutting of timber. It also decreed that the contract was valid and enforceable.

In 1948 Sid Wood and his wife, Valborg K. Wood, entered into a written agreement for the sale of timber on lands which they owned in Del Norte County to Ralph E. Yoder and Joe M. Reinarz, copartners doing business under the name of Del Norte Milling Company.

On June 12, 1950, Del Norte Milling Company, for a valuable consideration, assigned the contract to the defendants.

The contract provided that the timber was to be sold on a stumpage basis at the price of $3.25 per thousand board feet for all merchantable timber on said lands with the provision that if the lumber market conditions materially changed, then at 60 day periods the price was to be adjusted on a percentage basis of increase or decrease over or under present market conditions. The contract called for payments of $2,500 at six month intervals, with minimum payments of $5,000 per year until the logging operations started, when payments were to be made monthly on a stumpage basis, but in no event were the annual payments to be less than $5,000. No logging was ever done on the property. The annual payments of $5,000 were made to September 10, 1951, at which time the Woods had received $20,000. Defendants then stopped making further payments, because they were afraid that the payments made exceeded the value of the merchantable timber on the land. Under date of September 11, 1953, by letter, appellant gave the 30 day notice of default required by the contract. He contended that the defendants were under an obligation to make annual payments until the timber was removed. Defendants answered this letter, denied that they were in default, and offered to pay $4,098.75 which would be the maximum price due on the contract based on a certified cruise which reflected there was 7,415,000 board feet of timber on the property. Appellant rejected the offer and in November of 1953 commenced this action. At the commencement of the trial defendants tendered to appellant a certified check payable to him in the sum of $4,098.75. The offer was again rejected.

Appellant contends that the contract required defendants to continue making the minimum $5,000 annual payments until the timber was removed and that all the payments that were made prior thereto were payments for rent on the premises, under the minimum requirement of the contract. The agreement is entitled "Agreement to Purchase and Sell Timber." The agreement provides as follows:

> "And whereas the Second Parties are desirous of purchasing all the Merchantable timber on said lands, and parties of the First Part are desirous of selling all the merchantable timber on the above described 429.74 Acres, therefore it is mutually agreed as follows:—
>
> "First Parties agree to sell, and Second Parties agree to buy said merchantable timber on said lands on the following terms and conditions, to-wit:
>
> "Said timber is being sold on a stumpage basis at price of $3.25 per M. B. M. Ft. for all merchantable timber thereon. * * *"

[1] All of the agreement relates to the sale and purchase of timber. There is nothing in the agreement that in the least justifies an inference that anything was to be paid as rental for the use of the lands. The contract was obviously one for the sale and purchase of timber and nothing more.

[2, 3] While the defendants admit that they did not make any payments after

September of 1951 because of the uncertainty of the amount remaining due, that did not excuse their default. The timber cruise disclosed that they still owed $4,098.75. However, the court properly granted the defendants relief from their default under the provisions of section 3275 of the Civil Code. The Woods had received $20,000, which is a substantial part of the entire amount that they were entitled to under the contract. It cannot be said as a matter of law that the breach was willful in view of the uncertainty as to what remained due the sellers, nor has any gross negligence on the part of defendants been shown. Following the service on them of the notice of default, defendants offered to pay what was still due and owing as the price of the timber. This indicated their willingness to continue with the contract. They were able to make the payments. The contract expressly stated that the contract may continue over a number of years, so time was not the essence or an important factor to either party. To have decreed a forfeiture of the contract would have resulted in an unjust enrichment of the appellant. Appellant was allowed interest on the payment in default and has sustained no loss as a result of the default. As stated in Barkis v. Scott, 34 Cal.2d 116, 122, 208 P.2d 367, 371, "when the default has not been serious and the vendee is willing and able to continue with his performance of the contract, the vendor suffers no damage by allowing the vendee to do so. In this situation, if there has been substantial part performance * * * permitting the vendor to terminate the vendee's rights under the contract and keep the installments that have been paid can result only in the harshest sort of forfeitures. Accordingly, relief will be granted whether or not time has been made of the essence."

[4] Appellant also contends that findings number 7 and number 8 are not supported by the evidence. Finding 7 reads: "That while the timber may not be taken off 'for a number of years,' the payments shall not continue after an amount sufficient to reasonably cover the value of the timber has been paid," and finding 8 reads: "That the agreement is for the sale of timber and is not a lease or rental agreement, the only payment to be made by purchaser being for the timber sold." What this court had said in construing the contract fully answers these contentions. Further, the findings are supported by the contract which is in evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Walter BURGESS, Defendant and Appellant.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 23, 1957.

Defendant was convicted of issuing a check without sufficient funds in drawee bank. The Superior Court, Nevada County, James Snell, J., rendered judgment on the jury's verdict, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that evidence was sufficient to sustain verdict.

Judgment affirmed.

False Pretenses ⚖49(3)

Evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction of issuing a check without sufficient funds in drawee bank. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 476a.

Reynold J. Gualco, Sacramento, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by Doris H. Maier, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

The defendant, Walter Burgess, in propria persona, appeals from a judgment of conviction entered pursuant to the jury's verdict finding him guilty of the crime of issuing a check without sufficient funds in violation of section 476a of the Penal Code, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Upon defendant's request, Mr. Reynold J. Gualco was appointed by this court to represent him on appeal. Mr. Gualco has reported to the court that he has made a careful review of the record; that he has had a lengthy interview with defendant; and that he finds no grounds for reversal. In view of the situation presented, this court has made an independent study of the entire record, and we conclude, as did Mr. Gualco, that there is no merit in the appeal.

The record shows that defendant delivered a check in the sum of $105 dated October 14, 1954, to the payee and complaining witness Osborne in payment on the purchase price of a Mercury automobile. Defendant testified that when he issued the check he knew he had neither sufficient funds in, nor credit with the drawee bank for payment of said check, but that when he issued said check he believed he would be able to cover it. An employee of the bank testified that the check was received on October 18, 1954, by the drawee after it had been endorsed by the payee for collection, and that there were no funds in defendant's account to pay said check when it was made, nor were there any funds subsequent to that date. There was a substantial conflict in the evidence regarding the question of defendant's criminal knowledge and intent. Defendant's testimony that he told Osborne he did not think he had the check covered at the time but was expecting a check over the weekend which he intended to deposit Monday morning, and that the check would be covered at that time, was in conflict with Osborne's testimony that he had no such discussion with the defendant. The jury was not compelled to believe the defendant's testimony that he expected to receive $500 that weekend from an agreement he was negotiating for the rental of his tractor. Particularly is this true in view of defendant's further testimony that he expected to receive, at about that time, $900 from one Lloyd Monroe in payment for certain logging operations, which testimony was contradicted by Mrs. Virginia E. Monroe who testified that she was her husband's bookkeeper and that there was no money due to the defendant from them.

Our examination of the record has disclosed no error in the admission or exclusion of evidence. It further appears that the jury was fully and fairly instructed. Hence, under all of the circumstances, it necessarily follows that the verdict is amply sustained by the record and that the appeal is without merit.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

v.

Robert DAVIS, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 5529.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 17, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 13, 1957.

Action by owners and driver of truck for damages resulting from collision with defendant's automobile. The Superior Court of Orange County, John Shea, J., entered judgment on a verdict in favor of plaintiffs, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that improper statements by trial court to jury as to nature and actual existence of medical phenomenon known as retrograde amnesia were not sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal, in view of the evidence and other instructions.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐1046(5)
Trial ⇐29(2)

In action by owners and driver of truck for damages resulting from collision with defendant's automobile, statements by trial court to jury as to the nature and actual existence of medical phenomenon known as retrograde amnesia were improper but not sufficiently prejudicial to justify reversal of judgment for plaintiffs under circumstances.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐1064(1)

In action by owners and driver of truck for damages resulting from collision with defendant's automobile, instructing jury as to presumption of ordinary care to which each party was entitled at the outset of trial was not prejudicial to defendant, where truck driver testified that he remembered none of the material facts concerning collision and there was no evidence as to conduct of truck driver immediately prior to and at time of collision.

3. Trial ⇐241

In action by owners and driver of truck for damages resulting from collision with defendant's automobile, evidence that defendant, after making left turn at intersection and proceeding for some distance in center lane of four-lane through highway, attempted to cross curbside lane in front of truck to enter service station driveway justified giving instruction in language of statute that a vehicle may not be turned from a direct course or moved right or left unless and until such movement can be made with reasonable safety and then only after appropriate signal is given, and such instruction was not objectionable on ground that defendant did not make a full right-angle turn or that proper signal could not have been seen by truck driver. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 544(a, b).

4. Appeal and Error ⇐1064(1)

5. Trial ⇐241

In action by owners and driver of truck for damages resulting from collision with defendant's automobile, evidence that defendant, after making a left turn at intersection and proceeding for some distance in center lane of four-lane highway, attempted to cross outside lane in front of truck to enter service station driveway justified giving instruction in language of statute requiring that vehicle be driven as near as practical within a single lane and not moved from such lane until such movement can be made with safety. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 526 (a).

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action for damages resulting from a collision between the defendant's automobile and a truck owned by the plaintiffs and driven by the plaintiff Calvin Bowman. A jury returned a unanimous verdict awarding the plaintiffs $7,660, and the defendant has appealed from the judgment.

The accident occurred at 12:10 p. m. on November 5, 1952, a clear dry day, at the intersection of U. S. Highway 101 and Del Obispo Street, near Dana Point. U. S. Highway 101 in this area runs east and west, and is a 4-lane highway with a double white line in the center and a single line between the lanes on each side. As one approaches this intersection from the west, there is a considerable down-grade from the crest of a hill near Dana Point, but the road is level for 600 feet immediately west of the intersection. Del Obispo Street, a 2-lane street with a white line in the center, comes into the highway from the north, and there is a stop sign at the northwest corner of this intersection. What would normally be the extension of Del Obispo Street to the south of the highway appears to be a small road or a private driveway, with rounded curbs at the edge of the highway. On the southeast corner of this intersection there is a service station, and south of that a cafe. There is a driveway between the service station and the cafe.

On this occasion Calvin Bowman was driving east in this truck which, with its load, weighed 32,500 pounds. The defendant entered the highway from Del Obispo Street, crossed the center line, turned easterly, and then turned south to enter the driveway between the service station and the cafe. As he was entering this driveway the right front of the truck hit the right rear of his automobile and the truck rolled over and slid along its side. Bowman was rendered unconscious and remained unconscious until after he was taken from the scene nearly an hour later. An officer testified that the point of impact between the automobile and the truck was approximately 48 feet south of the southeast corner of this intersection; that the marks disclosed that the right rear wheel of the automobile was seven feet north of the south curb of the highway at the time of the impact; that the truck left 150 feet of skid marks in all; and that there were 30 to 35 feet of skid marks before the point of impact. There was evidence that there was no other traffic on this highway which could have had any effect in causing this accident.

The only eyewitness to the accident testified that he was traveling east in the outside lane of the highway directly behind this truck for about a mile before the accident happened; that he stayed about 50 yards behind it, and the truck was also in the outside lane; that they were both traveling at about 50 miles an hour; that he first saw the appellant's automobile when he was 600 to 900 feet from a crosswalk which is east of the point where the collision occurred; that when he first saw that car it was entering the outside lane of the west-bound lanes; that appellant's car crossed into the inside east-bound lane, turning in an easterly direction "and to all appearances he was trying to make a left turn and continued in the inside lane (going) east"; that the appellant's car then continued "right across in front of a truck, turned into the driveway next to the crosswalk"; that the truck had started to slow down when the appellant's automobile was crossing the center line of the highway; that the truck was then 50 feet from the automobile; that the truck was going less than 50 miles an hour at the moment of impact; that when the truck was about 50 feet from the automobile he saw the truck's brake lights go on, and knew that its brakes were being applied; that "When the car crossed in front of the truck, he put on his brakes and turned sharply to the left"; and that "The right front wheel of the truck hit the right rear of the Sedan, threw the truck into a heavy skid then, and the right front buckled under and went down and the truck rolled over."

Another witness called by the plaintiffs testified that he was traveling west on this highway; that he first saw this truck when he was about 1,500 feet east of the scene of the accident; that the truck was then from 100 to 150 feet west of a crosswalk to the east of the intersection; that the front of appellant's automobile was "up on the riser, coming off of 101;" that half or two-thirds of defendant's car extended out into the outside lane; that defendant's car was either stopped or moving very slowly; and that he did not see the actual occurrence of the accident.

The plaintiff Calvin Bowman testified that he did not remember the occurrence of the accident; that the last thing he remembered was coming over the crest of the hill about a mile and a half west of this intersection; that he was then traveling in an easterly direction in the outside lane closest to the curb; that he did not recall any traffic ahead of him at that point; that he did not recall approaching the intersection or seeing the defendant's automobile at any time; and that his next recollection after reaching the crest of the hill at Dana Point was hearing his wife's voice at the hospital.

The defendant testified that he made a complete stop before entering Highway 101; that he looked to his left and right, saw a clear highway and proceeded across; that he started to pull into the filling station; that he did not see the truck until after he felt an impact at the back of his automobile; and that at the moment of the impact the front bumper of his car "was up over the curb line, up over the apron."

Appellant's first contention is that the court was guilty of misconduct and prejudicial error in commenting to the jury on "retrograde amnesia" when there was no evidence of such amnesia. It is argued that in so commenting the court assumed the role of an expert medical witness and thus denied the appellant the right to cross-examine; that there was strong evidence of negligence on the part of Calvin Bowman since he was traveling 50 miles an hour with a total weight of 32,500 pounds, in violation of Section 515(a) of the Vehicle Code, and since he did not apply his brakes until he was about 50 feet from the point of impact although the eyewitness who was traveling behind him saw appellant's car when he was more than 600 feet away; and that since the issues of negligence and contributory negligence were extremely close questions of fact any expression of his own view on the part of the trial judge could not help but tend to influence the jury.

In his opening statement counsel for the respondents had stated that Mr. Bowman was rendered unconscious in this accident, and that as a result of this unconsciousness "he suffered a medical phenomenon termed 'retrograde amnesia.'" Several witnesses testified that Bowman was unconscious for a considerable time after the accident. Bowman himself testified that he could remember nothing which immediately preceded the accident, as above stated. While he was testifying with respect to the damage to the truck the court took a recess. Immediately thereafter the court said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, I have already indicated to counsel an observation I intend to make, and I will give Mr. Sawtelle the opportunity to make his objection for the record, but I feel that I should do it in view of the state of the record.

"It has to do with the subject of retrograde amnesia. I have had the experience of lay people who do not believe that such a medical phenomenon does exist, but I can assure you if a doctor were asked the question, he would say that that is a medical phenomenon that does actually exist.

"Amnesia is a state of forgetfulness of events during a period. The word 'retrograde' means that it goes back, precedes the event. It is not uncommon in cases of injury, particularly of concussion, that a person will be blacked out as to events that occurred prior to the time he incurred the injury. We have had cases where it has gone back as much as one or two days. Every event that transpired prior to that time is blacked out of that particular person's memory, so it is a medical fact it does exist.

"Now, in making this statement, I do not presume to say to you that this witness had that. That is a matter for your determination. I am not trying to express my idea to you as to my thinking as to his credibility. All I intend to do is point out the fact that there is such a fact and such a phenomenon as retrograde amnesia.

"Now, whether this witness had retrograde amnesia is entirely within your determination."

In his general instructions the court instructed the jury to disregard any statement or expression on his part which had seemed to indicate an opinion relating to the credibility of witnesses or what inferences should be drawn from the evidence, and not to be influenced by anything he had said or done that might suggest to it that he was inclined to favor the position of either party. The court also gave this instruction on the presumption of ordinary care:

"At the outset of this trial, each party was entitled to the presumptions of law that every person takes ordinary care of his own concerns and that he obeys the law. These presumptions are a form of prima facie evidence and will support findings in accordance therewith, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. (When there is other evidence that conflicts with such a presumption, it is the jury's duty to weigh that evidence against the presumption (and any evidence that may support the presumption), to determine which, if either preponderates.)"

[1] While we agree that the court's statement with respect to retrograde amnesia should not have been made, it cannot be held sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal. While there had been no evidence on "retrograde amnesia" there was undisputed evidence that the respondent Calvin Bowman was rendered unconscious and remained so for a considerable period. The evidence amply justified the jury in believing that Bowman was telling the truth when he testified that he remembered none of the material facts concerning the actual happening of the accident. The court's statement was largely a matter of quite common knowledge, and the court pointed out to the jury very clearly that he was not passing on the credibility of that witness, and repeatedly told the jury that whether or not this witness had suffered such amnesia was a matter for its determination. The evidence does not indicate that the issues of negligence and contributory negligence presented very close questions. When the element of proximate cause is taken into consideration the evidence of negligence on the part of Calvin Bowman was not strong. On the other hand, the evidence clearly indicates that the appellant crossed into the east-bound lanes of this main highway without proper regard to the approaching heavy truck, that he moved some distance in the inside of the east-bound lanes and that he then turned across the outside lane when he was only a short distance in front of the truck and at a point nearly 50 feet east of the intersection. Under the circumstances here appearing, it would be unreasonable to hold that this statement of the trial court could have had any effect on the jury's verdict.

[2] It is next contended that the court erred in giving the above instruction on the presumption of ordinary care. Reliance is placed on the case of Stout v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 127 Cal.App.2d 491, 274 P.2d 194, 197, where it is stated that it was erroneous to give an instruction in the language there used "when thereby the benefit of the presumption of due care is accorded to a party who, by his testimony or by evidence introduced in his behalf, has disclosed his acts and conduct immediately prior to and at the time of an accident." In that case the court also pointed out: "Whether the error in the giving of the instruction is or is not prejudicial turns upon the circumstances of the case, including the facts and the remainder of the instructions." While there was a little evidence here as to what the respondents' truck did immediately before the impact there was no testimony which fully disclosed the acts and conduct of the driver of the truck immediately prior to and at the time of the accident, and there was no evidence as to what the driver saw or could have seen at the critical time in question. There was no evidence as to whether he saw the appellant's automobile turn into his path as soon as he could or should have seen it, or whether he acted with reasonable promptness after observing what the other driver intended to do. There was no inconsistency between this instruction and any of the evidence received, and under the authorities it was not prejudicial error to give this instruction. Roselle v. Beach, 51 Cal.App. 2d 579, 125 P.2d 77; Russell v. Andersen, 101 Cal.App.2d 684, 226 P.2d 350; Stout v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 127 Cal.App.2d 491, 274 P.2d 194; Mar Shee v. Maryland Assurance Corp., 190 Cal. 1, 210 P. 269; Duehren v. Stewart, 39 Cal.App.2d 201, 102 P.2d 784. A further consideration is that the instruction as given applied only to the situation as it existed at the outset of the trial, and applied equally to each of the parties.

[3] Complaint is made of the giving of three other instructions. While it is conceded that these instructions correctly stated the law, it is argued that the giving of the same was not justified by the evidence. It is argued that it was error to instruct the jury in the language of Section 544(a) and (b) of the Vehicle Code, to the effect that a vehicle may not be turned from a direct course or moved right or left unless and until such movement can be made with reasonable safety, and then only after an appropriate signal is given. It is argued that the evidence shows that the appellant had no intention of turning to the left but intended only to proceed across the highway at an angle to his left for the purpose of turning into the service station, and that it would have been useless to have given such a signal as it could not have been seen by the driver of the truck. The evidence is uncontradicted that after entering the intersection he proceeded to his left for some distance over the inside easterly-bound lane, and then to his right across the outside lane directly in the path of the approaching truck. The fact that these were not full right-angle turns is not controlling, and no reason appears why a proper signal could not have been seen by the driver of the truck. The giving of this instruction was fully justified by the evidence.

[4] Error is assigned in the giving of an instruction in the language of Section 540(a) and (b) of the Vehicle Code as it existed in 1952, with respect to right and left turns at an intersection. The appellant testified to facts which would disclose a compliance with this section, and while the instruction would not appear to have been necessary no possible prejudice appears from the fact that it was given.

[5] Error is assigned in the giving of an instruction in the language of Section 526(a) of the Vehicle Code providing that a vehicle shall be driven as near as practical within a single lane and shall not be moved from such lane until such movement can be made with safety. It is argued that there was no evidence introduced bearing upon a change of lanes, and that this section of the code was not intended to regulate the movement of vehicles across an arterial highway or the making of turns. There was ample evidence that the appellant, after making his first turn into the highway, proceeded for some distance along the inner lane and then moved over and across the outer lane in order to enter the driveway leading to the service station.

After these instructions were given the court instructed the jury that a violation of these sections of the Vehicle Code constituted negligence per se; that the presumption of negligence arising from such a violation was not conclusive, and might be overcome by other evidence showing that such conduct was excusable or reasonable under the circumstances; and that such a violation of law is of no consequence unless it was a proximate cause of, or contributed in some degree as a proximate cause to, an injury found to have been suffered by the plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Douglas C. MILTON, M. P. Nation and C. J. Green, Defendants and Respondents.

No. 17105.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 14, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 13, 1957.

Chattel mortgagee brought action for possession of mortgaged personal property held by third party. From order of Superior Court, County of Monterey, Stanley Lawson, J., sustaining defendants' demurrer without leave to amend, the mortgagee appealed. The Supreme Court, Bray, J., held that chattel mortgage which does not include property's location or describe property in such a manner that it can be identified is void as to third parties.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Chattel Mortgages ⇐173(3)

In mortgagee's action to recover possession of mortgaged personal property where neither complaint nor copy of mortgage attached to complaint described location of mortgaged property or gave any basis for inquiry as to location, complaint did not state a cause of action.

2. Chattel Mortgages ⇐47

A chattel mortgage which does not include the property's location or describe the property in such manner that it can be identified is void as to third party.

3. Evidence ⇐460(12)

Extrinsic evidence is not admissible to identify the chattels mortgaged unless the mortgage or description of the property suggests inquiries or means of identification which would enable third persons to identify the property.

Husted, Pinney & Smith, W. M. Pinney, Jr., San Francisco, for appellant.

Mandl & Atteridge, Salinas, for respondent C. J. Green.

Theo H. Cominos, Salinas, for respondents Milton and Nation.

BRAY, Justice.

The principal question presented by this appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendants entered upon an order sustaining demurrer without leave to amend is—Is a chattel mortgage void as to third parties where it fails to describe the location of the personal property thereby sought to be mortgaged?

Second Amended Complaint.

It alleged that plaintiff is the owner of and mortgagee in a chattel mortgage executed by Daley and wife to secure the payment of a certain promissory note. The property mortgaged consists of certain personal property therein listed, such as 9 single beds, 13 double beds, etc. (Nowhere is the location of such property mentioned.) While plaintiff was entitled to immediate possession of the mortgaged property, defendants (who are not parties to the mortgage) seized the property, took it into their own possession and now withhold it from plaintiff. In the order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend the court stated that it was granted "Inasmuch as the location of the personal property cannot be determined from the chattel mortgage, nor by reasonable inquiry based thereon * * *"

Is the Mortgage Void?

[1] Preliminarily it can hardly be contended, in view of the fact that neither the mortgage itself (copy of which is attached to the complaint) nor the complaint either describe the location of the articles or give any basis for inquiry as to their location, that the complaint states a cause of action or that the court was not justified in sustaining the demurrer.

In Pace v. Threewit, 1939, at page 513, 88 P.2d 247, at page 249, 31 Cal.App.2d 509 in discussing the rules for determining the sufficiency of the description in a mortgage of this type, the court said: "It is pointed out in the rules above set forth that the description should be such that the property may be identified by it alone or that the description in itself should suggest inquiries or means of identification which, if pursued, will identify the property."

[2] The more serious question is whether the mortgage is void because of the omission of the property's location, or whether the property could be identified by extrinsic evidence under proper allegations in an amended complaint. If the latter, the court should have permitted the complaint to be amended to identify the property.* An examination of the mortgage supplies no hint as to the location of the property. In the Pace case it was held "There should be something more than merely the name of the mortgagor" 31 Cal. App.2d at page 514, 88 P.2d at page 249, for this purpose. Quoting from 10 Am. Jur. 752, section 55, the court said, 31 Cal. App.2d at page 510, 88 P.2d at page 248: "'To be sufficient against a third person, the description of the mortgaged property must be definite enough to enable him, aided by inquiries which the instrument itself suggests, to identify the property. * * *'" (Emphasis added.) In Pacific Nat. Agr. Credit Corp. v. Wilbur, 2 Cal.2d 576, 589, 42 P.2d 314, 320, the court quoted from 11 C.J. 457: "'As against third persons the description in the mortgage must point out the subject-matter so that such persons may identify the chattels covered, but it is not essential that the description be so specific that the property may be identified by it alone, if such description suggests inquiries or means of identification which, if pursued, will disclose the property covered. * * *'" (Emphasis added.) See also 14 C.J.S., Chattel Mortgages, § 57.

Applying the test as set forth in the emphasized language of the above cases to the situation in our case, we find the mortgage contains no suggestion of inquiries or means of identifying the property. The mortgage merely lists certain quantities of beds, bedding, furnishings and furniture. Location, of course, is not important in itself but merely as a means of identification. But, as said in 14 C.J.S., Chattel Mortgages, § 64, p. 671, "When neither the location, the ownership, nor the possession of the property is stated in the [chattel] mortgage, it is ordinarily fatal to the description; and in all cases the location of the property mortgaged must be stated, where the property cannot otherwise be sufficiently identified, or it is not otherwise sufficiently described * * *."

In In re Kessler, D.C.1950, 90 F.Supp. 1012, the mortgage described a cash register, soda fountain and other equipment, gave the mortgagor's occupation as "Kessler's Pharmacy," and the location of the mortgaged property as "Burbank, California." This was held as against creditors of the mortgagor to be insufficient description for identification. In our case, following the names of the mortgagors in the mortgage, appeared "by occupation motel operator." In In re Driscoll, D.C., 127 F.Supp. 81, 82, the mortgaged property was restaurant equipment with some of which was listed the serial number, model number, manufacturer's name, dimensions, color and material of which constructed; no location other than "'County of Los Angeles'" was stated. There the court after pointing out that the statutory form of the mortgage provided in section 2956, Civil Code, does not expressly require the location of the mortgaged chattels to be set forth, held that "since the property in question appears to be described in the chattel mortgage in sufficient detail so that on inquiry it could be found and identified, a statement of the address where located, however desirable from the standpoint of convenience, is not essential to validity of the mortgage." At pages 84–85. Differing from the facts in our case, the mortgage did describe the county in which the property was located, but more important, described the equipment in such manner that it could be identified, while in our case none of the chattels were described so that they could be identified. The phrase "9 snigle beds" does not describe them so that they could be distinguished from any 9 single beds anywhere.

* Plaintiff made no showing in the trial court, nor has he in his briefs here, of any circumstances which might be alleged (if the mortgage were not void on its face) to establish identity. Nor has he claimed that defendants actually knew what property was intended to be mortgaged.

[3] Plaintiff has cited and we have found no case where extrinsic evidence has been admitted to identify the chattels mortgaged unless there is something in the description or in the mortgage itself which suggests inquiries or means of identification. Apparently it is plaintiff's theory that without any specific clue to identification in the mortgage, he would be permitted to prove where, as a matter of fact, the property was located, the mortgagor lived, and the manner in which and from where defendants acquired the property. This theory violates the rules set forth in the above mentioned cases. As said in Pace v. Threewit, supra, 31 Cal.App.2d 509, 512, 88 P.2d 247, 248, quoting from Cobbey on Chattel Mortgages, section 170, it must be "'A description which will enable third persons to identify the property, aided by inquiries which the mortgage itself indicates and directs * * .'" (Emphasis added.) Again the court quoted from Ehrke v. Tucker, 99 Kan. 52, 160 P. 985, "' * * the suggestions which indicate the line of inquiry must be taken from the mortgage itself and not rest alone in the mind of the mortgagor or mortgagee.'"

Thus, it appears that it is impossible from the mere listing of the articles in the mortgage to determine their identity, and hence under the authorities, the mortgage is void as to third parties, and hence as to defendants. The court therefore properly sustained the demurrer without leave to amend.

Judgment affirmed.

Hearing Denied March 13, 1957.

A county's claim for the interest which accrued on deposit which had been made in interpleader proceeding was rejected by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County,

Harold W. Schweitzer, J., and the clerk, treasurer and auditor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that where money which had been paid into Superior Court in interpleader proceeding was deposited by clerk in county treasury and county treasurer commingled such funds with others deposited with him where such money earned substantial interest, such interest belonged to persons ultimately held to be owners of the principal amount and not to the county, as against contention that no one other than one of the public agencies specifically named in statute referring to county, city, municipality or other public or municipal corporation may recover the accretions to moneys deposited through the court with county treasurer.

Portion of judgment appealed from affirmed.

1. Depositaries ⇐9

The Superior Court is on a parity with other depositing "local agencies" within Depositary Act and hence Superior Court is in control of deposited funds and owner of any interest earned thereon which ownership is that of a trustee for person ultimately determined by the court to be entitled to receive the money from it, and such determination relates back to time of initial deposit of fund in court. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 53630, 53636, 53647.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Certain money which was paid into superior court in an interpleader proceeding was deposited by the clerk in the county treasury. While there it earned substantial interest. The question is whether that interest belongs to the persons ultimately held to be owners of the principal amount or to the county of Los Angeles. The county's claim having been rejected, its clerk, treasurer and auditor appeal. The deposit was made pursuant to § 573, Code of Civil Procedure, which says: "Whenever money is paid into or deposited in the court, the same must be delivered to the clerk * * * [who] must, unless otherwise directed by law, deposit such money with the county treasurer, to be held by him subject to the order of the court."

Appellants' claim is that the treasurer rightly commingled these funds with others deposited with him, they became county moneys, and no interest earned thereon may be recovered by any one except under statutory authority; that existing statutes are not broad enough to cover deposits made by individuals, being limited to "local agencies" as defined in § 53630 Government Code, i. e., county, city, municipality or other public or municipal corporation. As stated in Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern California v. Adams, 32 Cal.2d 620, at page 631, 197 P.2d 543, at page 549, appellants' "interpretation of the statute in issue results in a windfall to the county, substantially undeserved and unearned."

The ruling herein is governed by that case. Metropolitan Water District had made deposits in condemnation actions as security upon orders for immediate possession. The funds were turned over to the county treasurer, commingled, then deposited in various banks where they earned interest. In due course the moneys were drawn down and paid to the landowners. But the county refused to pay to the Water District the earnings which had accrued upon the funds while on deposit. A motion to compel such payment was made and granted. In rejecting the contention that a separate suit was necessary the court said, 32 Cal.2d at page 622, 197 P.2d at page 544: "We have concluded that moneys deposited with the court as in the nature of security or a cash bond in order to gain possession of the subject property in eminent domain proceedings are legally in the custody and within the control of such court and that any interest paid on such moneys by a bank in which they are deposited attaches in ownership to the owner of the moneys and, being in the custody of the court, is, like the principal sum, subject to the court's control. * * * We further conclude that in making the bank deposits, the county treasurer was representing the court and, acting as the court's ex-officio treasurer, was depositing moneys belonging to the water district."

It was further said, 32 Cal.2d at page 626, 197 P.2d at page 547: "All that the court can claim in the funds is the naked security title which it holds for the property owners. The court obtained possession, but it had no right to make use of the funds other than for the limited purpose for which they were deposited; all that it could do, in the absence of default by plaintiff, was hold the funds in safekeeping to be returned to the plaintiff water district when and if it (the district) met all its obligations regarding the land of defendant property owners." 32 Cal.2d at page 627, 197 P.2d at page 547: "To that moment [i. e., making of court order], at least, the moneys belong to plaintiff water district and the court acts solely as a trustee or bailee, holding the moneys as the property of the plaintiff water district, without any divestiture of the district's title, with power to 'make some order transmuting the money deposited from security into payment' if the plaintiff should default but bound to return the plaintiff's property if no default occurs. * * * For safekeeping the court is directed to place the money with the county treasurer 'to be held by him subject to the order of the court.' To the county treasurer the court gave only actual custody, bare possession; it had no power to give the treasurer or the county the beneficial title to the money and such money still belongs to the water district (and, in this case, as previously noted, the balance of principal has been repaid." 32 Cal.2d at page 628, 197 P.2d at page 548: "Respondents contend that in making the deposits in the banks the county treasurer was depositing money which was in the custody of the county, was acting directly as county treasurer, representing the county and its treasury, and, therefore, the interest on funds deposited belonged to the county. It is clear that the funds were not in the custody of the county as such, for the sums remain subject to the order of the court, and the county treasurer in handling the funds must look to the court for direction; the county treasurer is in effect the treasurer of the court, an ex-officio officer, and holds the money for the court, not for the county. The court, not the county board of supervisors, has control of the money."

The court then turned its attention to the question of statutory authority for payment of interest, particularly the Depositary Act (of 1933), which is now Government Code, §§ 53630–53681. It said, 32 Cal.2d at page 628, 197 P.2d at page 548: "In the absence of a statute which, in effect, accretes sums to amounts deposited, it is conceded by plaintiff water district that no claim would arise for return of other than the original deposit." Section 2 of the Depositary Act (now § 53647 Government Code) was quoted to the effect that interest earned on deposited funds shall be paid quarterly into the general fund "of the county, city and county, city, town, municipality or other public or municipal corporation represented by the officer making such deposit," and it was further said, 32 Cal.2d at page 629, 197 P.2d at page 549: "The solution of the above question, therefore, resolves itself into a determination of which 'public body' the county treasurer was representing in making the bank deposits under section 1 of the Depositary Act. The two possible contenders are the county and the court (in its representative capacity), who, unfortunately (in the sense that it gives rise to this dispute), have the same official authorized to act as the custodian of funds." A school district and a board of law library trustees having been held to fall within the statutory provisions, Pomona City School District v. Payne, 9 Cal.App.2d 510, 50 P.2d 822; Board of Law Library Trustees of Los Angeles County v. Lowery, 67 Cal.App.2d 480, 154 P.2d 719, the court further said, 32 Cal.2d at page 630, 197 P.2d at page 549: "The appellant water district contends that no sound distinction can be made between funds entrusted to the county treasurer by a school district or the trustees of a law library and funds entrusted to him by a court. This contention appears sound. Aside and separate from his duties as official treasurer for the county, the county treasurer, by legislative direction, is in effect ex-officio treasurer for public bodies without treasurers of their own, including the superior court. In other words, though these public bodies are in their purposes and functions dissimilar, yet their reasons for depositing their funds, or moneys coming into their custody, in the county treasurer's hands, are the same, namely, that none has a treasurer of its own, and for convenience and safekeeping the county treasurer has been designated the proper official to care for them. All are directed by statute to so deposit their funds: the court by Code of Civil Procedure, section 573, the school districts by Education Code, §§ 5002 and 7517, and the trustees of the library fund by Business and Professions Code, section 6320. It is to be noted that the applicable statute here (Code Civ.Proc., § 573) expressly directs that 'The treasurer must keep each fund distinct, and open an account for each.' We conclude that it is the superior court which in the view of the law holds the entire sum, the principal together with its accretions of interest, as custodian for the water district, and, inasmuch as the object of such retention has ended, the court must return to the water district the entire sum, or any balance thereof, which it may determine remains on hand."

[1] This opinion places the superior court on a parity with other depositing "local agencies" just as if it were included in the definition of that term in § 53630. The depositary act and the code, § 53647 both say that the moneys while in the custody of the county treasurer "shall be deemed to be in the treasury" § 53636, of the depositing agency, and that interest earned thereon "shall belong to and shall be paid quarterly into the general fund" of the depositing agency. The Metropolitan decision, supra, 32 Cal.2d 620, 197 P.2d 543, 545, establishes that, as a matter of general law and one of statutory construction, the superior court is in control of the deposited funds and the owner of any interest earned thereon. Of course its ownership is that of a trustee for the person ultimately determined by the court to be entitled to receive the money from it; such determination relates back to the time of the initial deposit of the fund in court.

[2] The Metropolitan ruling appears to be conclusive at bar and effectually disposes of the contention that no one other than one of the public agencies specifically named in § 53630, Government Code, may recover the accretions to moneys deposited through the court with the county treasurer.

The portion of the judgment under appeal is affirmed.

Ione CLARK and Reed W. Clark, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

Robert PAMPLIN, G and G Construction Company, a Corporation, et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 22061.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 18, 1957.

Action for damages arising out of automobile collision. From judgment for defendants entered in Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Robert H. Scott, J., plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that instruction relative to speed limits in a district was erroneous without proof that the district had been sign posted as required by statute, and that giving of instructions which created a conflict as to burden of proving or disproving negligence as to speed was reversible error.

Judgment reversed.

1. Automobiles ⇐246(58)

In action for damages sustained in automobile collision, instruction that automobile speed in excess of 15 miles per hour was unlawful at obstructed intersection was not erroneous where question as to whether intersection was obstructed was for jury and evidence warranted jury finding that plaintiff was exceeding 15 miles per hour. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 511.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐1066
Trial ⇐252(7)

In action for damages sustained in automobile collision at intersection wherein there was evidence that plaintiff was traveling more than 25 miles per hour, instruction that speed in excess of 25 miles per hour was unlawful in business or residential district was erroneous and prejudicial where there was no proof of the nature of the district and no showing that district had been sign posted as required by statute for speed limit to apply. West's Ann. Vehicle Code, §§ 468, 511.

3. Automobiles ⇐168(2)

Where district has not been sign posted as required by statute for speed limit of residence or business district to be in effect, the speed limit for highways becomes applicable. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 468, 511, and (c).

4. Appeal and Error ⇐216(1)

On appeal, no complaint can be made of trial court's failure to give an instruction where no request for the instruction was made.

5. Appeal and Error ⇐216(3)

In automobile collision case, where there was no proof that accident occurred in residence or business district although plaintiff did not request instruction that speed applicable to highway was in effect, plaintiff was not precluded from complaining of instruction that speed limit of residence or business district was in effect. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 468, 511, and (c).

6. Trial ⇐243, 296(3)

In automobile collision case, instruction that excess speed "is prima facie unlawful unless the defendant establishes by competent evidence that any said speed in excess of said limits did not constitute a violation of the basic rule" when given with instruction that excess speed "at a particular time and place shall not establish negligence as a matter of law" created a conflict which was not eliminated by added instruction that excess speed "is unlawful unless proved to be not in violation of the basic speed law." West's Ann. Vehicle Code, §§ 511, 513.

7. Automobiles ⇐246(20)

Instruction that excess speed "is prima facie unlawful unless the defendant establishes by competent evidence that any said speed in excess of said limits did not constitute a violation of the basic rule" should not be given in a civil case. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 511.

8. Trial ⇐296(3)

In automobile collision case, error in instruction as to burden of proving that excess speed was not negligence under statute was not cured by use of word "defendant" in instruction where jury would probably apply the instruction to issue of plaintiff's contributory negligence. West's Ann. Vehicle Code, § 511.

Wyman & Finell by Frank Rothman, Beverly Hills, for appellants.

Parker, Stanbury, Reese & McGee, Los Angeles, for respondents.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Plaintiffs Ione Clark and Reed W. Clark appeal from the judgment entered upon a verdict in favor of defendants in an action for damages for personal injuries to the wife and property damage to the husband. Immediately preceding the accident they were traveling north on Guadalupe Avenue in the city of Redondo Beach, and were nearing its intersection with Pearl Street, upon which defendant Pamplin was driving his employer's one and one-half ton Ford truck in a westerly direction. The vehicles collided within the intersection.

Appellants complain of error in the court's instructions to the jury. The controversy revolves around an instruction upon § 511, Vehicle Code, reading as follows: "You are instructed that Section 511 of the Vehicle Code of the State of California in effect at the time of the accident herein involved provided in part as follows:

" 'The speed of any vehicle upon a highway not in excess of the limits specified in this section or established as authorized in this code is lawful unless clearly proved to be in violation of the basic rule declared in Section 510 hereof.

" 'The speed of any vehicle upon a highway in excess of any of the limits specified in this section or established as authorized in this code is prima facie unlawful unless the defendant establishes by competent evidence that any said speed in excess of said limits did not constitute a violation of the basic rule declared in Section 510 hereof at the time, place and under the conditions then existing.

" 'The prima facie limits referred to above are as follows and the same shall be applicable unless changed as authorized in this code and, if so changed, then only when signs have been erected giving notice thereof, in which event the speed designated on the sign shall be the prima facie limit:

" '(a) Fifteen miles per hour:

" '(4) When traversing any intersection of highways if during the last 100 feet of his approach to such intersection the driver does not have a clear and unobstructed view of such intersection and of any traffic upon all of the highways, entering such intersection for a distance of 100 feet along such highways, except on a through highway or at a traffic-controlled intersection.

" '(b) Twenty-five miles per hour:

" '(1) In any business or residence district.' " The instruction was requested by defendants and was immediately followed by another defense request concerning § 513, Vehicle Code, viz.: "You are instructed that Section 513 of the Vehicle Code of the State of California in effect at the time of the accident herein involved provided as follows:

" 'In any civil action proof of speed in excess of any prima facie limit declared in Section 511 hereof at a particular time and place shall not establish negligence as a matter of law but in all such actions it shall be necessary to establish as a fact that the operation of a vehicle at such excess speed constituted negligence.' "

[1] One of the appellants' criticisms of the instruction on § 511 is that there was no evidence that the intersection was obstructed to the extent specified in (a) (4) of said section. An examination of the testimony and exhibits discloses that there was evidence tending to establish that at a distance of 100 feet south of the intersection a traveler could not see the highway for 100 feet to the east. The evidence on this subject is of an unsatisfactory nature, but it presented a question of fact for the jury. There was also evidence, mostly indirect but somewhat persuasive, that plaintiff Reed W. Clark was driving at a speed in excess of 15 miles when entering and traversing the intersection. He placed his speed at 15–20 miles when he was some 13–14 feet south of the south curb line. The car laid down 18 feet of skid marks which started when plaintiff was in the north half of Pearl Street; it collided with the truck when the latter was 18 feet from the east curb line and only 6 feet from the north curb; there was evidence that plaintiffs' Hudson automobile pushed the truck sideways for 3 feet. Moreover, defendant Pamplin's description of plaintiff's approach to the crossing would warrant the inference that he entered at a speed of more than 15 miles, although defendant did not undertake to state plaintiff's rate of speed. That phase of the instruction, considered alone, was not erroneous.

[2–5] The statement therein that the prima facie speed limit in a business or residence district is 25 miles per hour was erroneous, for there was no proof of the nature of the district (as defined in Vehicle Code §§ 89 and 90), and, more importantly, there was no showing of any sign posting pursuant to § 468, Vehicle Code. Such posting is indispensable to an instruction concerning the prima facie speed limit applicable to a business or residence district. In the absence of an affirmative showing of posting, an instruction based upon the existence of such a district is erroneous. Reynolds v. Filomeo, 38 Cal.2d 5, 10–13, 236 P.2d 801; Guerra v. Brooks, 38 Cal.2d 16, 19, 236 P.2d 807; Daniels v. City and County of San Francisco, 40 Cal.2d 614, 624, 255 P.2d 785. Where there has been no such posting the 55 mile prima facie limit of subdivision (c) of § 511 becomes applicable. There was indirect evidence that plaintiff was traveling more than 25 miles per hour shortly before reaching the intersection, and it was prejudicial to tell the jury to test his conduct by a 25 mile speed limit. True, he did not request the giving of subdivision (c) to the jury and therefore cannot complain of failure to include it in the instruction which was given. But he is not thereby precluded from complaining of his being limited to an inapplicable 25 mile maximum. Tabata v. Murane, 24 Cal.2d 221, 227–228, 148 P.2d 605. This was error of such substantiality as to require a reversal. See Guerra v. Brooks, supra, 38 Cal.2d 16, 20, 236 P.2d 807.

[6, 7] Another major contention of appellants is that the second paragraph of § 511, which places on the defendant the burden of proving that speed in excess of the prima facie limit was not negligent under § 510, is applicable only to a criminal case and when, as here, it is given in conjunction with § 513 an irreconcilable conflict is created which necessitates a reversal. It has been held repeatedly that the second paragraph of § 511 should not be included in an instruction given in a civil case, and that it is in irreconcilable conflict with the rule of § 513. Westberg v. Willde, 14 Cal.2d 360, 369, 94 P.2d 590; Burch v. Valley Motor Lines, Inc., 78 Cal. App.2d 834, 848, 179 P.2d 47; Akers v. Cowan, 26 Cal.App.2d 694, 696, 80 P.2d 143; Eslick v. Leach, 135 Cal.App.2d 455, 457, 288 P.2d 38; Deshotel v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 126 Cal.App.2d 303, 309, 272 P.2d 71. The error in the instruction was not cured by the giving of the instruction known as BAJI 144 A, for the reason, among others, that it contains this misleading language: "[A]nd if the speed of a vehicle upon a highway is in excess of the applicable prima facie limit, such speed is unlawful unless proved to be not in violation of the basic speed law."

[8] The question arises whether use of the word "defendant" in the second paragraph of § 511 cures the vice of the instruction when it is directed at the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence, as in this case. We think that the word "defendant" probably would be applied by any hearer to the plaintiff in that exact context and application; that even a layman, the juror, would do so. If this be true, the irreconcilable conflict with the rule of § 513 persists. To say the least, the instruction was confusing and prejudicial.

The judgment is reversed.

AGEE, Justice pro tem.

Defendant appeals from a judgment following a jury verdict in favor of plaintiff and plaintiff in intervention in a personal injury action. Plaintiff in intervention is the compensation insurance carrier for plaintiff's employer.

Plaintiff was employed as a cement finisher by the general contractor in the construction of a hospital building. Defendant was the subcontractor employed by the general contractor to do all of the plumbing and heating installation. The building was a four-story concrete building with a basement below. All of the concrete for the floors and walls had been poured prior to the accident.

Plaintiff arrived at work on August 13, 1952, at about 7:45 A.M. He went down the stairway to the east wing of the basement and placed his bucket and tools on one of the window sills. He then crossed over to the middle of the room where his boss was. The latter instructed him where to start work that morning. On the way back to get his tools and bucket, plaintiff stepped on a short piece of one-half inch pipe which was lying loose on the floor. It rolled when stepped on, causing plaintiff to fall and break his right leg. The pipe was admitted in evidence as Exhibit One and is hereafter referred to as such.

Defendant concedes that it had the duty to exercise ordinary care for the plaintiff's safety, Pauly v. King, 44 Cal.2d 649, 284 P.2d 487, and states that "the appeal is rested on the single contention that there is no substantial evidence on which to base an inference of defendant's responsibility for plaintiff's injuries." Defendant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support a finding that Exhibit One was left by its employees and that, assuming the contrary, it was not negligence to have done so.

[1–3] On this appeal we must, of course, resolve the conflicting evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff. No witness testified to having seen any of defendant's employees actually drop Exhibit One on the floor. However, the following rule is well settled: "Where direct and positive evidence of a fact is not available, proof may be made by means of indirect evidence, and the decision of the court may rest on reasonable inferences as well as on direct evidence." 18 Cal.Jur.2d 478. It is also well settled that "in order to support an inference based on circumstantial evidence it is not incumbent upon the plaintiff to exclude the possibility of every other reasonable inference from the proved facts." Spolter v. Four-Wheel Brake Serv. Co., 99 Cal.App.2d 690, 694, 222 P.2d 307, 310.

Exhibit One was identified by several witnesses as being of the same type and size of pipe as that used by defendant in the heating installation. No one other than defendant was doing such work. The area where plaintiff fell was the same as that where, on the day before, defendant's employees had been cutting pipe. The floor in this area had been littered on that day with debris and pieces of pipe.

[4] As against this, defendant produced its foreman, who testified that he did not recognize the trademark (a triangle) which was stamped on Exhibit One and that he had not seen any pipe so branded being used on the job. He admitted that he did not buy or inspect any of the pipe or personally install any of it. It would seem obvious that more satisfactory evidence could have been produced as to whether any pipe of the same brand as Exhibit One had been purchased for or used on the job. In any event, the testimony of this employee was not so clear, positive and uncontradicted that the jury was required to accept it. See Blank v. Coffin, 20 Cal.2d 457, 126 P.2d 868.

Defendant also states that Exhibit One might have come from the elevator installation. This work was done in another part of the basement at another time and there is no evidence whatever that pipe of the type in question was used in such installation.

On the day before the accident, before quitting time, defendant's employees cleaned up their work site in the basement and moved their equipment elsewhere. Plaintiff and several other witnesses testified that when they came to work the next morning the basement floor in this area appeared to have been swept and to be clean and free of any debris or pieces of pipe. Plaintiff only found out that this was not so when he stepped on Exhibit One and fell.

We conclude that the jury could reasonably have inferred that Exhibit One had been negligently left by defendant's employees.

[5] Defendant next argues that it cannot be held to be guilty of negligence unless the plaintiff is held to be guilty of contributory negligence because the omission of each was the failure to see the object in question on the floor. The fallacy of this argument is that while both parties were required to exercise the same degree of care, i. e., ordinary care, the amount of care which each was required to exercise would vary with their respective positions. Defendant undertook to clean up its work site in the basement when its work there was finished. It doing so, its employees' attention was specifically directed to the pieces of pipe and other debris on the floor. Under the circumstances, the leaving or overlooking of an object such as Exhibit One might reasonably be held to be a want of ordinary care. In effect it created a trap for those, such as plaintiff, who were still working in the basement. Plaintiff had seen the floor littered up on the day before his accident and when he saw it the next morning it appeared to have been cleaned up and all debris and pipe removed. Plaintiff could well have been lulled into believing that the floor was clear and unobstructed. There was no artificial lighting in the basement but natural lighting came in through the window openings. Plaintiff was walking toward such an opening at the time he fell and his attention was mainly occupied with getting his tools and starting to work. His failure to see Exhibit One was under entirely different circumstances than those confronting defendant's employees, who knew that pieces of pipe such as Exhibit One were on the floor and that it was their purpose and duty to remove them.

We conclude that the jury's implied finding that defendant was negligent did not require it to find that plaintiff was also negligent.

The judgment is affirmed.

In prosecution for bookmaking, testimony of officer that officer heard third person say to defendant that third person wanted "two to win on Jet Action in the eighth at Gulfstream," and defendant's reply, "Okay," clearly justified inference that third person was placing a bet on the race in question and that defendant was accepting such bet and not merely that third person was expressing a desire to place a bet. G. Vernon Brumbaugh, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOX, Justice.

Defendant was convicted of bookmaking, Pen.Code, sec. 337a, subd. 1. He appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

Officer Kenney of the Los Angeles Police Department entered a cafe on South San Pedro Street at approximately 2:00 p. m., on Saturday, March 17, 1956. He observed defendant approach several people and carry on a conversation with them, during which they examined a copy of the National Daily Reporter, commonly known as a scratch sheet. Following this, money changed hands between the parties. Defendant then approached a Mr. Fraser, with whom the officer had been talking about betting on horses. Fraser and defendant conversed briefly, during which time the former referred to the sports section of a local daily newspaper that contained information on racing at various tracks throughout the United States. Officer Kenney overheard Fraser tell defendant he wanted "two to win on Jet Action in the eighth at Gulfstream." Defendant replied, "Okay," and moved on to other persons in the bar. The National Daily Reporter for that date disclosed that a horse by the name of Jet Action was entered in the eighth race at Gulfstream Park. The officer did not see any money pass between defendant and Fraser. The officer arrested two other suspects for bookmaking. In the meantime, defendant left the cafe and was not arrested until three days later.

Fraser testified to a conversation with defendant on this occasion. He said to defendant, "I'd like to have a two-dollar bet on Jet Action in the eighth race at Gulfstream." He testified defendant "didn't say a word" and that he did not give defendant any money. He stated, however, that he had placed other verbal bets with defendant but had not given him any money on these bets; also, that he had never collected any money on such bets. He further testified that any money he won was used later to make bets on other races.

At the time of his arrest on March 20th, defendant stated he had been "making book" in that cafe and in various other small places around the area for the last year or so but that "he hadn't made any book since the previous week." When informed that his arrest was for bookmaking on the previous Saturday, defendant made no comment.

Defendant did not testify and did not present any evidence in his behalf.

Defendant's position is that "The evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgment." Defendant suggests that the conversation that Officer Kenney overheard between him and Fraser was "the mere expression of a desire" on the part of the latter to place a $2 bet on the horse in question. Also, defendant appears to question the officer's testimony that he overheard such a conversation between him and Fraser since the officer did not arrest him at that time.

[1] The interpretation of the evidence, the weight to which it is entitled, and the credibility of the witnesses are, of course, matters for the trial court.

[2] As pointed out by this court in People v. Burch, 118 Cal.App.2d 122, at page 124, 257 P.2d 44, at page 45, "There is no requirement that the bet be recorded." Hence, "the offense of bookmaking can take place without a writing."

[3, 4] The failure of Officer Kenney immediately to arrest defendant was due apparently to his departure while the officer was preparing to arrest two other suspects for bookmaking. The testimony of Officer Kenney that he heard Fraser say to defendant that he wanted "two to win on Jet Action in the eighth at Gulfstream," and defendant's reply, "Okay," clearly justifies an inference that Fraser was placing a bet on the race in question and that defendant was accepting such bet and not merely that Fraser was expressing a desire to place such a bet. The court obviously accepted the officer's testimony as true. This evidence, plus the other facts and circumstances and the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, amply support the conviction. People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Raymond Clifford HODGE, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 3244.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 15, 1957.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 14, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 13, 1957.

Proceeding for a writ of error coram nobis to set aside a judgment on petitioner's plea of guilty of murder. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Marin County, Jordan L. Martinelli, J., denying the writ petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J. pro tem., held that petitioner was not entitled to relief sought on grounds that district attorney induced plea by promises to recommend life imprisonment rather than to add penalty by district attorney threatened to seek death penalty if petitioner refused to plead court or that court-appointed counsel for petitioner held out fear of such penalty to him.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐997(11)

A petitioner for writ of error coram nobis must allege facts showing diligence in discovering and presenting facts on which he relies for writ.

2. Criminal Law ⇐997(11, 12)

Where petition for writ of error coram nobis to set aside judgment on petitioner's plea of guilty of murder alleged, as only excuse for his long delay in filing petition, that he formerly thought that habeas corpus was proper remedy, and alleged that after presenting three applications for such writ to state Supreme Court, petitioning for rehearings after denials of two of them, and petitioning United States Supreme Court for certiorari after one such denial, petitioner discovered that coram nobis was proper remedy, without alleging date or manner of such discovery, he did not meet burden of showing diligence to discover and present facts on which he relied for writ, but District Court of Appeal will review substance of petitioner's allegations.

3. Criminal Law ⇐997(4)

One pleading guilty of murder was not entitled to writ of error coram nobis to set aside judgment entered on plea on ground that it was induced by district attorney's promises to recommend life imprisonment, rather than death penalty, where such attorney did recommend and court imposed life sentence.

4. Criminal Law ⇐997(5)

One pleading guilty of first-degree murder was not entitled to writ of error coram nobis to set aside judgment imposing life sentence on plea on ground that district attorney threatened to seek death penalty if defendant refused to plead guilty, as filing of complaint and information charging such offense carried implied threat of death penalty.

5. Criminal Law ⇐997(5)

One petitioning for writ of error coram nobis to set aside judgment imposing life sentence on his plea of guilty of murder was not entitled to relief on ground that his court-appointed counsel held out fear of death penalty to petitioner, in absence of showing that such apprehension was unwarranted.

6. Criminal Law ⇐997(5)

One pleading guilty of murder was not entitled to writ of error coram nobis to set aside judgment entered on plea on ground that his attorneys failed to investigate case and prepare his defense, urged him to plead guilty and threatened to quit case if he refused to do so, where there was no showing that such advice was not sound, judges appointing attorneys believed them able, and there was no specification of any fact favorable to petitioner which they failed to investigate.

7. Criminal Law ⇐997(5)

One pleading guilty of murder was not entitled to writ of error coram nobis to set aside judgment entered on plea on ground that his attorneys failed to investigate case and prepare defense and urged him to plead guilty, where he made no complaint to municipal or superior court about his counsel, expressed in open court his acceptance of senior attorney's services, answered in affirmative trial court's questions as to whether petitioner had advice of counsel and was thoroughly aware of what guilty plea meant, personally joined in waiver of time for imposition of sentence, and answered in negative question whether he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced.

8. Criminal Law ⇐997(5)

An accused's claim of lack of effective aid of counsel cannot be asserted in coram nobis proceeding to set aside judgment on his plea of guilty.

9. Criminal Law ⇐997(4)

Allegations of petition for writ of error coram nobis to set aside judgment entered on petitioner's plea of guilty of murder that he was placed in state prison on his arrival in county of venue after his arrest in another state and placed in Isolation Row very close to Death Row and that he was at times in direct contact with condemned prisoners were insufficient to show duress contributing to his admission of guilt, in absence of showing of any treatment of petitioner different from that accorded persons believed to be more than normal security risks.

10. Criminal Law ⇐997(4)

One pleading guilty of murder was not entitled to writ of error coram nobis to set aside judgment on plea on ground of duress by placing him in Isolation Row near Death Row in state prison and subjecting him to direct contact with condemned prisoners on his arrival in county of venue after his arrest in another state, in absence of showing that statute authorizing sheriff to remove prisoner to state prison for safe-keeping when there is reasonable ground to believe that he may be forcibly removed from county jail and requiring prison warden to accept and detain such prisoner until his removal is ordered by superior court of county from which he was delivered was not fully complied with. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 4007.

11. Prisons ⇐13

The statute authorizing sheriff to remove prisoner to state prison for safe-keeping when there is reasonable ground to believe that he may be forcibly removed from county jail and requiring prison warden to accept and detain prisoner until his removal is ordered by superior court of county from which he was delivered does not require court order for such transfer of prisoner to state prison. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 4007.

12. Criminal Law ⇐241

Two orders, made by superior court of county of venue of prosecution for murder on day after accused was transferred to state prison, recognizing that he was detained at such prison, directing warden and sheriff to deliver him to municipal or superior court as required for steps in his trial, and specifically directing his return to prison after each such appearance, properly authorized his detention at such prison. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 4007.

13. Criminal Law ⇐997(3)

An accused's claims based on facts well known to him before pronouncement of judgment imposing life sentence on his plea of guilty of murder, but not brought to trial court's attention, are not proper bases for proceeding in coram nobis to set aside judgment.

14. Criminal Law ⇐997(15)

An affidavit of fellow prisoner of one sentenced to life imprisonment on his plea of guilty of murder that his accomplice had admitted falsity of his testimony at preliminary hearing was inadmissible as hearsay in coram nobis proceeding to set aside judgment on plea.

15. Criminal Law ⇐997(8)

Coram nobis is not proper proceeding to raise issue whether accomplice's testimony at preliminary hearing against one subsequently sentenced to life imprisonment on his plea of guilty of murder was false.

Raymond C. Hodge, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., Raymond M. Momboisse, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DRAPER, Justice pro tem.

Petitioner's application for writ of error coram nobis was denied by the trial court without hearing. Petitioner appeals. By his petition, appellant sought to withdraw his plea of guilty to the murder of Roy E. Kapphahn, and to set aside the judgment entered upon that plea.

[1, 2] Appellant's plea of guilty was entered and judgment pronounced November 2, 1953. No appeal was taken. His present application was not filed until March 12, 1956. It is well settled that a petitioner in a coram nobis proceeding must allege facts showing diligence in discovering and presenting the facts upon which he relies for the writ. People v. Shorts, 32 Cal.2d 502, 512, 197 P.2d 330; People v. Stonom, 139 Cal.App.2d 408, 293 P.2d 807. Here all the facts alleged by petitioner were known to him at the time of plea. His only allegation to excuse his delay is that he formerly thought that habeas corpus was the proper remedy. He presented three applications for that writ to the Supreme Court of California, petitioned for rehearing upon denial of two of them, and petitioned the United States Supreme Court for certiorari after one such denial. He alleges that he has discovered that coram nobis is his proper remedy, and now seeks it. He does not allege the date or manner of such discovery. It seems clear that he has not met the burden of showing diligence. However, the course usually followed by appellate courts in such cases, particularly where the appellant acts as his own attorney, suggests review of the substance of appellant's allegations.

[3] His principal complaint appears to be that the district attorney, by promises to recommend life imprisonment rather than the death penalty, induced the plea of guilty. But the district attorney did recommend the life sentence, and, more important to appellant, that is the sentence imposed by the court. He got precisely what he bargained for. It is a perversion of the rule of People v. Gilbert, 25 Cal.2d 422, 154 P.2d 657, to argue that the keeping of such a promise by the prosecutor vitiates the plea. Appellant's contention can-

[4, 5] Appellant also contends that the district attorney threatened to seek the death penalty if appellant refused to plead guilty. Of course, the filing of the complaint and information charging murder in the first degree carried with it the clearly implied threat of the death penalty. Assuming a direct threat by the prosecutor to seek the greater penalty, there is no proper ground for setting aside the plea. People v. Toledo, 111 Cal.App. 204, at page 208, 295 P. 353, at page 355, where the court expresses "serious doubt as to whether a statement by a district attorney that he contemplates doing his duty may ever be considered as duress." Appellant also asserts that his court-appointed counsel held out to him the fear of the death penalty. But there is nothing to show that their apprehension was in any way unwarranted.

[6] The petition also alleges that his attorneys failed to investigate the case and prepare his defense, urged him to plead guilty, and "threatened to quit the case" if he refused this advice. But there is nothing to indicate that their advice was not sound. Two attorneys were appointed to represent appellant both in the Municipal and the Superior Court. The appointing judges believed them able, and the Municipal Judge spoke of the broad experience of the senior counsel appointed. There is no specification of any fact, favorable to appellant, which they failed to investigate. Appellant's assertion that their threat "to quit the case" was duress inducing him to plead guilty comes strangely from him. He devotes much of his brief to attacking their sincerity and devotion to his cause. If he is sincere in these attacks, he should have welcomed their alleged offer to drop the case, which would have left him free to seek other counsel of the court.

[7, 8] In any case, appellant failed to make any complaint to either trial court about his counsel. The senior attorney was appointed August 18, 1953. On August 21, after being interviewed by this attorney, appellant expressed in open court his acceptance of his services. Junior counsel was appointed August 21. From that time through pronouncement of judgment November 2, appellant expressed to the court no dissatisfaction with either, although he appeared in court with both on several occasions. When counsel moved to withdraw the plea of not guilty and enter a guilty plea, the court asked appellant whether he had had the advice of counsel, and whether he was "thoroughly aware of what the request means and what the purpose of it is." Appellant answered "yes" to both questions. Appellant personally joined in the waiver of time for imposition of sentence, and upon arraignment for judgment personally answered "no" to the question whether he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him. His present complaints as to his representation are without merit. Further, "the claim of lack of effective aid of counsel cannot be asserted in a coram nobis proceeding." People v. Fritz, 140 Cal.App.2d 618, 622, 295 P.2d 449, 452.

[9] Appellant complains that he was placed in San Quentin Prison upon his arrival in Marin County after arrest in Oregon. He says he was placed in "Isolation Row" which, he asserts, is "in very close proximity to Death Row," and that he was, "at times, in direct contact with condemned prisoners." This, he asserts, was duress which contributed to his admission of his guilt. Of course, one can conceive of circumstances under which exhibition of the execution chamber, or exposure to or contact with those condemned to death, would constitute a most brutal form of duress. Such a situation is not shown by the application here. The allegations of the petition are, in this respect, vague and unconvincing. They show no treatment of appellant different from that accorded persons believed to be somewhat more than normal security risks.

[10] Under statutory provision, the sheriff may remove a prisoner to a California state prison "for safekeeping" whenever there is reasonable ground to believe that he "may be forcibly removed" from the county jail. This statute makes it the duty of the warden to "accept and detain such prisoner in his custody until his removal is ordered by the superior court of the county from which he was delivered." Pen.Code § 4007. The petition here makes no showing whatever that this code section was not fully complied with in the case at bar.

[11] The Attorney General, in a supplemental brief, has set forth a letter written by the sheriff to the warden at San Quentin, asking that appellant be detained there pursuant to the foregoing code section. This letter is not a part of the record before us. We refer to it only because appellant, in his reply to the supplemental brief, relies upon the letter to show a failure of compliance with Penal Code section 4007. He argues that the code section requires a court order for such transfer. In this he is mistaken, as is clear from the language of the section.

[12] In any event, there are before us two orders of the Superior Court, made the day after appellant's transfer to the prison, which recognize that he is detained at that prison, and which order the warden and the sheriff to deliver him to the Municipal or Superior Court as required for steps in his trial. Both orders specifically direct his return to the prison after each such appearance. Thus his detention at San Quentin was properly authorized.

[13] Most of the claims previously reviewed are based upon facts well known to appellant before judgment was pronounced, but not brought to the attention of the trial court, and thus not proper bases for a proceeding in coram nobis. People v. Adamson, 34 Cal.2d 320, 210 P.2d 13; People v. Fritz, supra, 140 Cal.App.2d 618, 295 P.2d 449.

[14, 15] Appellant also asserts that testimony of his accomplice at the preliminary hearing was false. He relies on the affidavit of a fellow prisoner that the accomplice has admitted such falsity. This affidavit is, of course, inadmissible hearsay. Still further, coram nobis is not the proper proceeding to raise such an issue. People v. Adamson, supra.

The petition showed no sound ground for relief. Judgment affirmed.

Margaret J. O'BRIEN, Defendant and Respondent.
Civ. 17236.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.
Jan. 23, 1957.

Action brought by broker's assignee to recover commission. The Superior Court, Santa Clara County, M. G. Del Mutolo, J., denied the relief sought, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that where broker employed by vendor to sell property was undisclosed partner of three prospective purchasers, and they, upon learning of broker's dual capacity, objected and dealt directly with vendor for less price, broker could not recover commission.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐544(2), 1010(1)

Where record consisted of clerk's and reporter's transcript, appellant's opening brief, and nothing more, court could assume burden of reviewing record for itself, and if, in so reviewing record, court found that there was sufficient competent evidence to support judgment and that procedural objections were insubstantial, it would be its duty to affirm the judgment. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 17(b).

2. Principal and Agent ⇐84

Unless both parties know of double agency at time of transaction, agent cannot recover commission from either.

3. Brokers ⇐65(4)

Where broker employed by vendor to sell property was undisclosed partner of three prospective purchasers, and they, upon learning of broker's dual capacity, objected and dealt directly with vendor for less price, broker could not recover commission.

David Freidenrich, Palo Alto, Herman D. Gill, San Francisco, for appellant.

No appearance for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

[1–3] This cause has been submitted for decision pursuant to notice given respondent under Rule 17(b) of the Rules on Appeal. The record consists of the Clerk's and the reporter's transcript, the appellant's opening brief—and nothing more. In such a case this court may assume the burden of reviewing the record for itself. If, in so reviewing the record, we find that there is sufficient competent evidence to support the judgment and that the procedural objections are insubstantial, it becomes our duty to affirm the judgment.

A brief statement of the facts will suffice. Plaintiff's assignor, a broker, entered into a written contract with defendant to sell her restaurant and saloon premises for the fixed price of $100,000. The contract stipulated that defendant would pay plaintiff's assignor a broker's commission, the sum of $10,000, the basis of this action. At the trial it was shown that the broker was an undisclosed partner of the three prospective purchasers. This relation, having been disclosed and admitted by plaintiff's assignor during the trial, the court found that plaintiff's assignor had failed to disclose to the purchasers, with whom he became a partner, that he had a separate agreement with the owner to be paid a commission of $10,000 on the sale which was made for $100,000. The result of this dual capacity was that the purchasers would be required unknowingly to pay to their partner an additional ten thousand dollars on the purchase price which would go to him as broker through the agency of a broker's commission. When the purchasers learned of this they objected and dealt directly with the seller for a lesser price.

Such a transaction has been condemned by all the authorities. The leading case in this state is Glenn v. Rice, 174 Cal. 269, 272, 162 P. 1020, 1021, affirmed in Gordon v. Beck, 196 Cal. 768, 773, 239 P. 309; See McConnell v. Cowan, 44 Cal.2d 805, 285 P.2d 261.

The settled rule of the cases is that unless both parties knew of the double agency at the time of the transaction, the agent cannot recover a commission from either. The rule is thus stated in Glenn v. Rice, 174 Cal. at page 272, 162 P. at page 1021—"The reason for the rule is that he thereby puts himself in a position where his duty to one conflicts with his duty to the other, where his own interests tempt him to be unfaithful to both principals, a position which is against sound public policy and good morals. His contract for compensation being thus tainted, the law will not permit him to enforce it against either party. It is no answer to this objection to say that he did, in the particular case, act fairly and honorably to both. The infirmity of his contract does not arise from his actual conduct in the given case, but from the policy of the law, which will not allow a man to gain anything from a relation so conducive to bad faith and double dealing. And the fact that the party whom he sues was aware of the double agency and of the payment, or agreement to pay, compensation by the other party, and consented thereto, does not entitle him to recover. He must show knowledge by both parties. One party might willingly consent, believing that the advantage would accrue to him, to the detriment of the other. The law will not tolerate such an arrangement, except with the knowledge and consent of both, and will enter into no inquiry to determine whether or not the particular negotiation was fairly conducted by the agent. It leaves him as it finds him, affording him no relief."

Though this issue was raised during the course of the trial, and the Glenn and McConnell cases were cited, no mention of the point is made in appellant's brief and no reference is made to the cited cases.

The questions raised by appellant in his brief do not meet this basic issue.

Judgment affirmed.

Hearing Denied March 13, 1957.

Action by property owner for damages allegedly resulting from the creation of a nuisance consisting of dumping fill on an unaccepted public street, resulting in an interference with drainage customarily afforded by said street and consequent flooding and damage to plaintiff's property. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Frank T. Deasy, J., entered judgment against employer of contractors who conducted filling operations, in favor of one of the contractors, upon a jury verdict for him, and directed a nonsuit as against other contractor, and employer of contractors and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Agee, J. pro tem., held, inter alia, that evidence presented a question for the jury as to whether contractor who dumped fill on street in question was liable to plaintiff for creation of a nuisance contrary to statute, notwithstanding fact that injury occurred after performance of his contract and acceptance of work by his employer.

Two judgments affirmed, and one judgment reversed, in accordance with opinion.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇐671(1)

Where property owner alleged a cause of action under statute proscribing unlawful obstruction of the use of a public street recovery did not depend upon establishing either an intent to harm or negligence. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3479.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇐845(6)

In action by property owner for damages sustained to his property from flooding after filling of a street obstructed the flow of water thereon and allegedly created a nuisance within meaning of statute proscribing unlawful obstruction of use of a public street, instruction that in order to recover property owner was required to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that defendant had created a nuisance, as defined by law, which proximately caused damage to property owner, was not improper even though it did not refer to fault or negligence. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 3479.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇐281(1)

"Expedient" as used in section of Public Works Code of City and County of San Francisco providing that application for permission to do any street work upon any unaccepted public street shall be made and Director of Public Works shall investigate such application and determine whether the work is expedient means suited to the circumstances.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Expedient".

4. Trial ⇐241, 296(2)

In action by property owner for damages sustained from flooding after filling of a street obstructed flow of water thereon and allegedly created a nuisance within meaning of statute proscribing unlawful obstruction of use of a public street, instruction on sections of code of City and County of San Francisco relating to street obstructions was properly given in view of defendant's admission of liability if he unlawfully obstructed free passage of the street and in view of court's further instruction that violation of law was of no consequence unless the violation was proximate cause of the injury.

5. Municipal Corporations ⇐845

In action by property owner for damages allegedly resulting from the creation of a nuisance consisting of dumping fill on an unaccepted public street, resulting in an interference with drainage customarily afforded by said street, where trial court instructed jury that property owner could not recover if he did not exercise reasonable care to avoid damage to himself, defendant was not entitled to reversal of judgment in favor of property owner on any theory of avoidable consequences.

6. Municipal Corporations ⇐845(5)

In action by property owner for damages allegedly resulting from the creation of a nuisance consisting of dumping fill on an unaccepted public street, resulting in an interference with drainage customarily afforded by said street, evidence presented a question for the jury as to whether contractor who dumped fill on street in question was liable to plaintiff for creation of a nuisance contrary to statute, notwithstanding fact that injury occurred after performance of his contract and acceptance of work by his employer.

7. Municipal Corporations ⇐844

In action by property owner against an employer of filling contractor, and against contractor, for damages sustained from flooding allegedly caused by creation of a nuisance in unlawfully filling a street, where property owner's case was based entirely upon unlawful filling of the street, he was not entitled to judgment against contractor who did filling only on employer's property, and not on street in question.

AGEE, Justice pro tem.

This is an action for damages resulting from the creation of a nuisance. The complaint alleges that the defendants, without procuring permission from the City and County of San Francisco, as required by city ordinances, dumped rock and dirt on Shafter Avenue, San Francisco, an unaccepted public street; that this interfered with the drainage customarily afforded by said street, with the result that plaintiff's premises were flooded and plaintiff was thereby damaged.

The parties are described as follows: Plaintiff manufactures sweeping compounds, waxes and other floor maintenance materials under the name of Flor-Ton Chemical Company, at 1131 Shafter Avenue, San Francisco; defendant Larkin owns all of the real property in the eleven hundred odd-numbered block on Shafter except the premises occupied by plaintiff and one O'Neill; defendants Devincenzi Bros. & Co. and A. D. Devincenzi (hereinafter referred to collectively as Devincenzi) placed rock and dirt fill on Larkin's property and on Shafter Avenue; defendants Clementina Company and Clementina Contractors Trucking Service Company (both referred to hereafter as Clementina) also placed fill material on Larkin's property.

Three appeals arose out of this action. A jury verdict of $10,000 was returned against Larkin and he has appealed from the judgment entered thereon. Devincenzi obtained a nonsuit at the completion of plaintiff's case and plaintiff has appealed from the judgment which followed. The jury returned a verdict in favor of Clementina and plaintiff has appealed from the judgment thereon.

A general description of the area follows. Shafter Avenue runs east and west. The eleven hundred block is bounded on the east by Griffith Street and on the west by Hawes Street, both running north and south. The next street south of and running parallel to Shafter is Thomas Avenue. The dimensions of this block are 400 feet (on Shafter and Thomas) by 200 feet (on Griffith and Hawes). Larkin owned the entire block with the exception of a parcel having a frontage on Shafter of 87½ feet and a depth of 100 feet. The building in which plaintiff conducted his business was on the westerly part of this parcel and had a frontage of 30 feet. One O'Neill conducted a general contracting business in a building on the easterly part of the same parcel. The distance from the easterly side of O'Neill's building to Griffith Street was 200 feet.

Plaintiff had been in possession of the premises occupied by him since 1946 or 1947. During the fall of 1951, Larkin directed Devincenzi and Clementina to dump fill on his property. Prior to this, surface water ran down Shafter Avenue from the west toward the east. There was a shallow ditch about one or two feet deep and about three or four feet wide running along the southerly side of Shafter Avenue, commencing at a point a few feet east of the O'Neill property and extending easterly to Griffith Street. This ditch helped to carry off the surface water. For the purpose of improving the access to the Larkin property, Devincenzi, with Larkin's knowledge and consent, also dumped fill on Shafter Avenue, thereby filling up the ditch and raising the grade of the street. As the result, when heavy rains fell on December 1, 1951, and thereafter, the surface waters backed up and flooded plaintiff's premises. The jury estimated his damages at $10,000.

Plaintiff's cause of action is founded upon the theory of a nuisance, which is defined in section 3479 of the Civil Code as "Anything which is * * * an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of * * * property, or unlawfully obstructs the free passage or use, in the customary manner of any * * * street, or highway * * *". Section 731 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "An action may be brought by any person whose property is injuriously affected, * * * as the same is defined in section thirty-four hundred and seventy-nine of the Civil Code, * * *".

The Larkin Appeal

[1, 2] Larkin's main contention is that the jury was instructed that he was absolutely liable, even though he was without fault. His brief discloses that, by "fault," he means intentional harm or negligence. Neither of these elements is involved in this case. Malice may be an issue in a nuisance case, Griffin v. Northridge, 67 Cal.App.2d 69, 75, 153 P.2d 800, "spite fence", and negligence very often is. 20 Cal.Jur. p. 268. In the instant case, however, the complaint alleges a cause of action under section 3479 of the Civil Code for the unlawful obstruction of the use of a public street and does not depend upon either an intent to harm or negligence. "According to the generally accepted meaning of the terms 'negligence' and 'nuisance,' proof of negligence is not essential to liability for the creation or maintenance of a nuisance." 20 Cal.Jur., p. 268. Furthermore, the jury was not instructed that Larkin was absolutely liable. It was specifically instructed that, in order to recover, plaintiff was required to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that Larkin had created a nuisance, as defined by law, which proximately caused damage to plaintiff. Nuisance was correctly defined in the language of section 3479 of the Civil Code.

Larkin himself proposed the following instruction: "The defendants are not responsible to plaintiff unless the filling of Shafter Avenue created an obstruction to the free use of Mr. Portman's property so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of his life and property, or unless it unlawfully obstructed the free passage or use of Shafter Avenue by Mr. Portman in the customary manner." This instruction states in substance the very principle which Larkin now criticizes. If it was error to so instruct the jury, and we do not believe that it was, it was error invited by Larkin. Nevis v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 43 Cal.2d 626, 629–630, 275 P.2d 761.

Larkin argues that the placing of fill upon his land was for a lawful purpose and was necessary for its beneficial use. He urges that the utility of his activity should be weighed and considered against the harm to plaintiff. A sufficient answer to this is that the plaintiff's cause of action is based upon the unlawful obstruction of Shafter Avenue and not upon the filing of Larkin's property.

[3] Plaintiff alleged in his complaint that the work upon Shafter Avenue was done without permission as required by section 405 of the Public Works Code of the City and County of San Francisco. Larkin admitted this in his answer. This section provides as follows: "Application for permission to do any street work in or upon any unaccepted public street in the City and County of San Francisco by private contract must be made in writing to the Director of Public Works, which application shall contain a comprehensive description of the work to be done. Said Director shall thereupon investigate such application, and if after investigation the Director determines that the public interest or convenience requires the doing of the proposed work and that the same is expedient and will not be productive of detriment to the public safety or convenience, he is hereby authorized to grant permission for the doing of the same as applied for or as modified by the direction of the City Engineer, subject to the conditions and provisions in this Article hereinafter prescribed and provided." "Expedient," as used in this section, means "suited to the circumstances." Webster's New World Dictionary. The obvious purpose of the investigation required is to safeguard against detriment to others which might result from the doing of the proposed work. If the investigation discloses that no such detriment will result the permission would then undoubtedly be granted. However, if the City Engineer directs a modification in order to avoid detriment to others, that also would undoubtedly be ordered. In the instant case, it would have been obvious to the City Engineer that the raising of the level of Shafter Avenue and the filling up of the ditch between the O'Neill property and Griffith Street would cause surface water to back up during the rainy season and flood plaintiff's property unless a culvert or some other method of draining was provided for. Thus, there is a definite causal relation between the failure to comply with section 405 and the damage sustained by plaintiff.

The trial court instructed the jury as to the general rule of liability for damage resulting from diversion of surface water from the land of one owner onto the adjoining property of another. Larkin contends that this general rule does not apply to city lots and in this he may be correct, generally speaking. See 1 Cal. Jur.2d 733. However, the jury was specifically instructed as follows: "The defendants are not responsible to Mr. Portman for any damages claimed by him in this proceeding unless the filling of Shafter Avenue resulted in or proximately caused the loss for which Mr. Portman now seeks damages, even though the defendants did not have the right to fill Shafter Avenue without a permit from the City authorities to do so. "It is thus clear that the jury could not have been misled into thinking that plaintiff could recover for the work done by Larkin on his own property.

[4] Larkin complains of the giving of instructions on sections 310 and 4103 of the Building Code of the City and County of San Francisco. Section 310 requires a permit to occupy any part of a street for building operations or any other purpose and section 4103 provides that material for work to be done under a permit shall not be placed on public property so as to interfere with the free flow of water in any street. This was not error. Larkin admitted in his answer and at the trial that he had no permit to dump fill in Shafter Avenue and, as already pointed out, Larkin himself acknowledged in his proposed instructions that he was liable if he "unlawfully obstructed the free passage or use of Shafter Avenue by Mr. Portman in the customary manner." The jury was also instructed as follows: "I instruct you that in this case in violation of law, if you find that the defendant did commit a violation, it is of no consequence unless the violation was a proximate cause of the injury found by you to have been suffered by the plaintiff."

[5] The last point made by Larkin is that the judgment should be set aside under the so-called rule of "avoidable consequences." He argues that plaintiff could have easily avoided the flooding by taking steps to prevent it. Just how this could have been done is not clear but Larkin suggests that, inasmuch as O'Neill (who was on higher ground) put in a pump and a drain at a cost of only $150, plaintiff could have done something of the sort. Without passing upon the propriety of instructing on contributory negligence, it is a sufficient answer to this contention to point out that the jury was instructed that the plaintiff could not recover if he did not exercise reasonable care to avoid the damage to himself. The jury by its verdict found, by necessary implication, that plaintiff did exercise such reasonable care and this finding is amply supported by the record. It is true that there is a distinction between contributory negligence and avoidable consequences. Contributory negligence usually refers to conduct at and before the time of injury and avoidable consequences to conduct after the injury. However, under the facts of this case the concept would be the same as a practical matter because the first flood was the one which did the damage.

Larkin has also called attention to a number of instructions which he contends are conflicting and which must have confused the jury. We do not agree. It is true that the charge was a long one and undoubtedly could have been streamlined. But in essence this is a very simple case. The jury was correctly instructed on the fundamental issues and what plaintiff was required to prove in order to recover. We do not feel impelled to discuss each and every instruction and compare it with the others in order to justify our conclusion that the jury was not misled or confused. The verdict against Larkin was eminently fair and, to say the least, was not a miscarriage of justice either in the broad sense or in the sense of whether Larkin received a trial in accordance with the rules of law pertaining thereto.

Plaintiff's Appeal from the Devincenzi Judgment on Nonsuit

[6] Devincenzi asserts that it was an independent contractor, that it had completed its work, and that Larkin had accepted the same before the flooding occurred. The general rule is as follows:

"A contractor is not liable for injuries occurring after the performance of the contract and the acceptance of the work by the employer, * * *." 13 Cal.Jur. p. 1059. Devincenzi acknowledges that there are exceptions to this rule, one of which is applicable when the work so performed creates a nuisance per se, citing 27 Am. Jur. 535, § 56, which states: "In other words, a right of action against an independent contractor for injuries to third persons from defects in completed works may be predicated upon the ground that the finished work is a nuisance, * * *." Section 3479 of the Civil Code proscribes "Anything which * * * unlawfully obstructs the free passage or use, in the customary manner, of any * * * street, * * *." A violation of this section constitutes a nuisance per se. Curtis v. Kastner, 220 Cal. 185, 30 P.2d 26; People v. Amdur, 123 Cal.App.2d Supp. 951, 267 P. 2d 445.

In answer to this, Devincenzi argues that section 3479 of the Civil Code does not include drainage of surface waters as being a "use, in the customary manner" of a street. On the contrary, our Supreme Court, in Shaw v. Sebastopol, 159 Cal. 623, 115 P. 213, and Richardson v. City of Eureka, 96 Cal. 443, 31 P. 458, treated the drainage of surface waters over a public street as a use thereof by abutting property owners which could not be unlawfully obstructed.

Devincenzi also contends that the damages sustained by the plaintiff must be the natural result of the filling of Shafter Avenue and that such result must have been reasonably foreseeable. This merely presents a question of fact upon which reasonable minds might differ.

A nonsuit should not have been granted to Devincenzi. The question as to its liability should have been presented to the jury under appropriate instructions.

Plaintiff's Appeal from the Clementina Judgment

[7] Plaintiff's case is based entirely upon the unlawful filling of Shafter Avenue. There is no evidence that Clementina had any part in this. All of its filling was done on Larkin's property. The jury verdict in its favor was the only one that could have been properly returned.

The judgment against Larkin is affirmed; the judgment in favor of Devincenzi is reversed; and the judgment in favor of Clementina is affirmed. Plaintiff is to recover his costs on appeal from Larkin and Devincenzi in equal portions; Clementina is to recover its costs of appeal from plaintiff.

Proceeding upon petition to have children in petitioners' care and custody declared free from parental custody and control. The Superior Court, Solano County, Joseph M. Raines, J., entered order finding the children to be free from parental custody and control, and father appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that, even if father's letters inquiring concerning his children and attempting to arrange to have children visit him while he was in state prison were sufficient to establish that father was making every possible effort to communicate with and visit his children after they had, by juvenile court order, been placed in care and custody of others, fact that husband had admitted offense pertaining to sexual perversion with 15 year old girl was sufficient to make father come within Welfare and Institutions Code provision authorizing the juvenile court to declare father's children free from his custody and control.

Order affirmed.

1. Infants ⇐16.1

Even if father's letters were sufficient to establish that father was making every possible effort to communicate with and visit his children after they had, by juvenile court order, been placed in care and custody of others, fact that father had admitted to an offense pertaining to sexual perversion with 15 year old girl was sufficient to make father come within Welfare and Institutions Code provision authorizing the juvenile court to declare father's children free from his custody and control. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288a; West's Ann.Welfare and Inst.Code, § 701, and (d).

2. Infants ⇐16.15

Even if, in proceeding to free children from parental custody and control, court erred in admitting evidence, admitted without objection, of father's various prior misdemeanors, such error would not warrant reversal of order finding the children to be free from parental custody and control, in view of objecting father's admitted conviction of felony involving sexual perversion with 15 year old girl. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 288a; West's Ann.Welfare and Inst.Code, § 701, and (d).

PEEK, Justice.

Appellant, the father of the three minor children involved in this proceeding, appeals from an order finding said children to be free from parental custody and control. Section 701, Welfare and Institutions Code. The children's mother did not appear in the juvenile court, nor does she appear in this appeal.

The facts show that on May 24, 1952, the father, following a plea of guilty of a violation of section 288a of the Penal Code, was sentenced to San Quentin Penitentiary, and three other counts in the information were dismissed. On May 16, 1952, pursuant to an order of the juvenile court, the children were placed in the care and custody of the petitioners here, John C. and Mildred Cave, husband and wife. The petitioners testified that since April, 1952, they had received no communication from either the father or the mother of the children, nor had the children's parents in any other way sought to contact them.

[1] It is appellant's contention that certain letters sent by himself to his father wherein he inquired concerning the children, and his attempt to arrange to have the children visit him while he was in the state prison at Tracy, were ample evidence of the making of every possible effort to communicate with and visit his children, and hence the contrary findings of the trial court are not sustained by the evidence. Even assuming that the appellant is correct in this regard, he is still confronted with his admitted violation of section 288a, the dismissal of four other counts, all involving similar offenses with the same 15-year-old girl, the resulting loss of his civil rights and the serving of a penitentiary sentence therefor. These facts amply support the finding of the trial court that appellant was a person within the meaning of subsection (d) of section 701, Welfare and Institutions Code.

[2] Appellant finally contends that the court also erred in admitting evidence of various prior misdemeanors. Even if we were to assume that the court erred in this regard, although it should be noted that the evidence went in without objection by counsel, nevertheless such action by the trial court could not be such error as would warrant a reversal of the order in view of the admitted felony conviction and the facts surrounding the same.

The order is affirmed.

Civ. 21711.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 14, 1957.

Hearing Denied March 13, 1957.

Action to renew judgment which had been obtained on note. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, J. F. Moroney, J., rendered judgment for judgment debtor, and judgment creditor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that where note had been given by judgment debtor for amount which he had allegedly misappropriated, and record of original action did not disclose fraud or defalcation, evidence of origin of the indebtedness was admissible to meet debtor's special defense that debt had been discharged in bankruptcy subsequent to judgment, and to show the nondischargeable character of original obligation.

Judgment reversed; appeal from order dismissed.

1. Bankruptcy ⇐426(1)

The acceptance of note from one who procures money by fraud, as evidence of debt thereby created, after fraud has been discovered, does not take the debt out of operation of Bankruptcy Act provision that a discharge in bankruptcy shall release bankrupt from all his provable debts, except such as were created by his fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation or defalcation while acting as an officer or in any fiduciary capacity. Bankr.Act, § 17, sub. a(2, 4), 11 U.S.C.A. § 35, sub. a(2, 4).

2. Bankruptcy ⇐436(2)

In action on note, it is proper to receive evidence with respect to nature of liability represented by note in order to determine whether it is of a character which is dischargeable in bankruptcy. Bankr.Act, § 17, 11 U.S.C.A. § 35.

3. Payment ⇐17

The giving of a note by debtor for amount of debt does not constitute payment unless there is an agreement between parties that it shall be so accepted, and acceptance merely postpones time of payment of original debt until default is made in payment of note.

4. Judgment ⇐713(1)

A judgment does not in all cases, foreclose an investigation into nature of obligation upon which it was obtained.

5. Bankruptcy ⇐436(3)

In action by judgment creditor to renew judgment obtained on note against judgment debtor who claimed debt had been discharged in bankruptcy, evidence established that note had been given and received as evidence of debt growing out of debtor's fraud and defalcation and not as satisfaction thereof. Bankr.Act, § 17, 11 U.S.C.A. § 35.

6. Bankruptcy ⇐436(2)

In action to renew judgment obtained on note which allegedly had been given by judgment debtor for amount which he had misappropriated, where record of original action did not disclose fraud and defalcation, evidence of origin of indebtedness evidenced by note was admissible to meet debtor's special defense that he had been discharged in bankruptcy proceeding subsequent to judgment, and to show nondischargeable character of original obligation. Bankr.Act, § 17, 11 U.S.C.A. § 35.

7. Bankruptcy ⇐426(1)

If liability on note was excepted from provisions of Bankruptcy Act with regard to discharge of debts because note was given for debt arising from fiduciary's fraud and defalcation, judgment obtained on such note would not be dischargeable in bankruptcy. Bankr.Act, § 17, 11 U.S.C.A. § 35.

8. Appeal and Error ⇐110

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment for defendant Charles I. Manning in an action to renew a judgment.

On October 21, 1949 a default judgment for $6,845.52 was entered in favor of plaintiff against defendant on a promissory note. On October 14, 1954 plaintiff filed this action to renew the judgment. The answer does not controvert or put in issue any of the allegations of the complaint except as a special defense it alleges that on November 13, 1951 defendant was adjudged a bankrupt by the United States District Court and on January 3, 1953 he was "discharged from all debts and claims provable by said Acts of Bankruptcy against his estate, and which existed on the said 13th day of November, 1951, excepting only such debts as were then by law excepted from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy"; that the debt and judgment alleged in the complaint was a debt provable against the bankruptcy estate; it was duly and regularly scheduled in the bankruptcy proceedings; plaintiff had notice thereof and had actual knowledge of the commencement and pendency thereof. The evidence was that defendant was adjudge a bankrupt, that he was discharged of all debts except such as were excepted, that the debt was scheduled, and that plaintiff had notice as alleged.

The promissory note on which the original action was brought was executed March 10, 1948 by defendant to Claudette Colbert. At that time defendant was engaged in the insurance brokerage business and writing insurance as a broker for and in behalf of Claudette Colbert. While so acting he received about $5,986.68 from Miss Colbert to be applied by him in payment of accrued premiums on insurance policies for her benefit. Instead of doing so, he secretly appropriated the money to his own use and benefit. He had acted as insurance broker for Miss Colbert for a continuous period of seven or eight years. He handled accident, life, and property insurance for her and advised and counseled her on insurance matters during that time. Miss Colbert relied upon his advice and information with reference to her insurance.

After defendant appropriated the money, Miss Colbert was compelled to and did pay the amount a second time to insurance carriers to cover her accrued premiums. Thereafter defendant gave her his note for the amount of his debt and to prevent any prosecution for his defalcation.

These facts were not controverted. The evidence was received subject to a motion to strike or subject to being disregarded by the court in the event it was not material. A motion to strike was made and denied. The court found the evidence was not in conformity with the pleadings and "the debt and judgment * * * was then and is now a debt provable against the said bankruptcy estate, to wit: a debt and judgment based upon the promissory note of this defendant."

The original action was on the note, and the record does not disclose the fraud or defalcation. The question is whether in the action at bar the nondischargeable character of the original obligation may be shown by evidence dehors the record of the prior action in order to meet the special defense alleged in the answer.

The Bankruptcy Act provides:

"A discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all of his provable debts, whether allowable in full or in part, except such as * * * (2) are liabilities for obtaining money or property by false pretenses or false representations, * * * (4) were created by his fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation or defalcation while acting as an officer or in any fiduciary capacity * * *." 11 U.S.C.A. § 35.
